

Cabrillo Pacific University

College of Law

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

SAN DIEGO

NON CIRCULATING

CALIFORNIA HERBARIUM

Herbarium of the University of California

1915-1916

Herbarium of the University of California

1915-1916

Herbarium of the University of California

1915-1916

Herbarium of the University of California

1915-1916

Herbarium of the University of California

1915-1916

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in PACIFIC REPORTER

123 P.—126 P.

Cite by Volume and Page of the
PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus:
123 P. 191

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY WEST PUBLISHING Co.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 123, Nos. 1-8; Vol. 124, Nos.
1-8; Vol. 125, Nos. 1-5; Vol. 126, Nos. 1-6.

COPYRIGHT, 1956, BY WEST PUBLISHING Co.

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 123-126 P.

P.

	Vol.	Page
Abbott v. Kellogg, App.	123	227
Abner Doble Co.; Jones & Laughlin Steel Co. v., Sup.	123	290
Acme Lumber Co. v. Wessling, App.	126	167
Ætna Indemnity Co. of Hartford, Conn.; Wolf v., Sup.	126	470
Ahlens v. Smiley, Sup.	124	827
Akey; People v., Sup.	124	718
Alderson v. Cutting, Sup.	126	157
Alderson; Mattern v., App.	123	972
Allen's Estate, In re, Sup.	124	237
All Persons; Bailey v., App.	125	939
All Persons; Dahler v., Sup.	124	995
All Persons; Davidson v., App.	124	570
All Persons; Hynes v., App.	125	253
All Persons; Ruland v., App.	125	939
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien upon the Real Property Here- in Described or Any Part Thereof; Vanderbilt v., Sup.	126	158
Almon v. McEvoy, App.	124	874
American Well & Prospecting Co. v. Superior Court of Kern County, App.	126	497
Anderson, Ex parte, App.	123	972
Anderson v. Blean, App.	126	859
Anderson v. Quick, Sup.	126	871
Applestill v. Gary, App.	123	228
Archer v. Lewis, App.	124	859
Arnold; Southern Pac. R. Co. v., Sup.	124	829
Atherton; Fitzimons v., Sup.	124	250
Bacon v. Soule, App.	126	384
Bader; Knobloch v., App.	123	341
Bagley v. City and County of San Francisco, App.	125	931
Bagley v. Devlin, App.	125	939
Bagley v. Lilienthal, App.	125	938
Bailley v. All Persons, App.	125	939
Baker v. Board of Fire Pension Fund Com'rs, App.	123	344
Baldwin; Rimpau v., Sup.	124	1002
Baldwin's Estate, In re, Sup.	123	267
Ballo; People v., App.	125	1081
Bank of Venice v. Hutchinson, App.	125	252
Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co., Sup.	126	351
Bartnett v. Hull, App.	124	885
Bates v. Ferrier, App.	124	889
Baxter v. Baxter, App.	125	359
Beck, Ex parte, Sup.	124	543
Behan; O'Connell v., App.	124	1038
Behymer v. Superior Court, Los Angeles County, App.	123	340
Bekins Van & Storage Co.; Martland v., App.	125	759
Benjamin v. Bogliolio, Sup.	123	801

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Bentel; Hayt v., App.	126	370
Bercovitz; People v., Sup.	126	479
Bernal; Shaw v., Sup.	124	1012
Bernard Co. v. Los Angeles, App.	124	88
Bernardo v. Soderman, App.	124	836
Berthol's Estate, In re, Sup.	125	750
Bigelow v. Board of Sup'rs of Sonoma County, App.	124	554
Black; Knight v., App.	126	512
Blean; Anderson v., App.	126	859
Blodget; Conner v., App.	124	733
Board of Fire Pension Fund Com'rs; Baker v., App.	123	344
Board of Police Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco; Wittman v., App.	125	265
Board of Public Works of City of Los Angeles; Wright v., Sup.	125	353
Board of Regents of University of California; Webster v., Sup.	126	974
Board of Sup'rs of Sonoma County; Bigelow v., App.	124	554
Bogliolio; Benjamin v., Sup.	123	801
Bonnell; Gray v., App.	125	355
Boyd v. Warden, Sup.	124	841
Boyer v. Gelhaus, App.	125	916
Bracken; Shurtleff v., Sup.	124	724
Bradbury v. Higginson, Sup.	123	797
Bramman v. City of Alameda, Sup.	124	243
Bray v. Lowery, Sup.	124	1004
Breeding; People v., App.	126	179
Brett v. S. H. Frank & Co., Sup.	124	437
Bridge v. Kedon, Sup.	126	149
Brosnan; E. Martin & Co. v., App.	123	550
Brown v. Spencer, Sup.	126	493
Buck; California Fruit Exch. v., Sup.	124	824
Buckeye Refining Co. v. Kelly, Sup.	124	536
Bumiller; Pacific Sash & Door Co. v., Sup.	124	230
Burki v. Pleasanton School Dist. of Alameda County, App.	123	546
Burr v. United Railroads of San Francisco, Sup.	126	873
Bryan; San Diego County v., App.	123	347
California Fruit Exch. v. Buck, Sup.	124	824
California Gas & Electric Corp.; Schwartz v., Sup.	125	1044
California Safe Deposit & Trust Co.; People v., App.	124	558
California Safe Deposit & Trust Co.; People v., App.	126	516
California Safe Deposit & Trust Co.; People v., Sup.	126	520
California Telephone & Light Co. v. Jordan, App.	126	598
Callahan v. Marshall, Sup.	126	358
Campbell v. Canty, Sup.	123	266
Cannon; Cassidy v., App.	123	358
Cannon; Cassidy v., Sup.	123	359
Canty; Campbell v., Sup.	123	266
Canty; Johnson v., Sup.	123	263
Canty v. Staley, Sup.	123	252
Carle v. Heller, App.	123	815
Carlin, In re, App.	124	868
Carney; Guthrie v., App.	124	1045
Carpenter v. Grogan, App.	123	538
Carpenter & Biles Mill & Lumber Co.; Title Insurance & Trust Co. v., Sup.	123	247
Carr; Webster v., App.	124	447
Cassidy v. Cannon, App.	123	358
Cassidy v. Cannon, Sup.	123	359

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Chapman v. Zobelein, App.	124	1021
Chatfield; McDermott v., App.	123	539
Christie; Sewell v., Sup.	124	713
Church v. Collins, App.	124	552
Chutuk; People v., App.	124	566
City and County of San Francisco; Bagley v., App.	125	931
City and County of San Francisco v. Hyatt, Sup.	125	751
City of Alameda; Bramman v., Sup.	124	243
City of Hanford; Hanford Gas & Power Co. v., Sup.	124	727
City of Los Angeles; Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corp. v., Sup.	126	594
City of Los Angeles; S. M. Bernard Co. v., App.	124	88
City of Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., Sup.	124	251
City of Pasadena; Sala v., Sup.	124	539
City of Santa Ana v. Santa Ana Valley Irr. Co., Sup.	124	847
City of Santa Cruz v. Southern Pac. R. Co., Sup.	126	362
City of Sonoma; Quartaroli v., App.	123	533
City of Vernon v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corp., App.	125	1084
City Properties Co. v. Jordan, Sup.	126	351
Clark; Hall v., Sup.	125	1047
Clark v. Kelley, Sup.	124	846
Cohrn v. Henderson, App.	124	1037
Collins; Church v., App.	124	552
Cone v. Keil, App.	124	548
Conley; Moore v., Sup.	126	492
Conner v. Blodget, App.	124	733
Continental Building & Loan Ass'n v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, Department No. 1, Sup.	126	476
Corning Irr. Co.; Gallatin v., Sup.	126	864
Coyle; Peck v., App.	125	1073
Cozza, In re, Sup.	126	161
Craycroft v. Superior Court of Kern County, App.	124	1042
Credit Clearance Bureau v. Weary & Alford Co., App.	123	548
Crump; Davis v., Sup.	123	294
Culver v. Newhart, App.	123	975
Curry; H. K. Mulford Co. v., Sup.	125	236
Cuthill v. Peabody, App.	125	926
Cutting; Alderson v., Sup.	126	157
Dahler v. All Persons, Sup.	124	995
Dahlstrom Metallic Door Co.; McLain v., App.	126	391
Darling; Taylor v., App.	125	249
Davidson v. All Persons, App.	124	570
Davis v. Crump, Sup.	123	294
Davis; Lucy v., Sup.	126	490
Dean v. Sedan Milling Co., App.	124	736
Deets v. Hall, Sup.	124	1007
Delger v. Jacobs, App.	124	95
Delger v. Jacobs, App.	125	258
Delhantie; People v., Sup.	125	1066
Deming v. Maas, App.	123	204
Dennis v. Gordon, Sup.	125	1063
Devlin; Bagley v., App.	125	939
Dewing Co. v. Thompson, App.	124	1035
Diller v. Northern California Power Co., Sup.	123	359
Dixon; Walker v., App.	126	171
Doble Co.; Jones & Laughlin Steel Co. v., Sup.	123	290
Doe; McNeill & Co. v., Sup.	125	345

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Dolson; Navajo County Bank v., Sup.	126	153
Dombrowski's Estate, In re, Sup.	125	233
Dondero, Ex parte, App.	124	884
Donohoe v. Wooster, Sup.	124	730
Donovan; Oakland Pav. Co. v., App.	126	388
Dore v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup.	124	817
Douglas; Krotzer v., Sup.	124	722
Douglas Co. v. Moncur, App.	124	1033
Douthitt; Sears v., App.	124	453
Downing v. McGrath, Sup.	124	997
Du Bois v. Padgham, App.	123	207
Earl; People v., App.	124	887
Eberle v. Hubbard, App.	124	454
Edgington v. Superior Court of Yolo County, App.	124	450
Edison Electric Co.; Rich v., App.	123	230
Edmunds v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	123	811
Edward Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co., Sup.	126	351
Edwards; Willcox v., Sup.	123	276
Elliott v. Hudson, App.	124	103
Elliott v. Hudson, Sup.	124	108
Elizalde v. Murphy, Sup.	126	978
E. Martin & Co. v. Brosnan, App.	123	550
Everts' Estate, In re, Sup.	125	1058
Fairbanks; Mossi v., App.	125	1071
Fast v. Young, App.	126	854
Fay v. German General Benev. Soc., Sup.	124	844
Ferrier; Bates v., App.	124	889
Fiddymment v. Johnson, App.	123	342
Fintzelberg; Luscomb v., Sup.	123	247
First Nat. Bank v. Golden, App.	126	493
First Nat. Bank; Otis Elevator Co. v., Sup.	124	704
First Nat. Bank; United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v., App.	123	352
Fitzimons v. Atherton, Sup.	124	250
Fitzpatrick v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., App.	123	209
Fleming v. Law, Sup.	124	1018
Fleming v. Shay, App.	125	761
Fleming's Estate, In re, Sup.	123	284
Flynn v. Manson, App.	126	181
Foerst v. Kelso, Sup.	125	1054
Folger v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup.	124	817
Forbes; La Due v., App.	124	867
Forrester, In re, Sup.	123	283
Fox v. Robinson, App.	123	813
Frank & Co.; Brett v., Sup.	124	437
Freeman; Stanton v., App.	126	377
Freeman; Tognazzini v., App.	123	540
Gallatin v. Corning Irr. Co., Sup.	126	864
Gardner v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, App.	126	501
Garrison v. North Pasadena Land & Water Co., Sup.	124	1009
Gary; Applestill v., App.	123	228
Gelhaus; Boyer v., App.	125	916
German General Benev. Soc.; Fay v., Sup.	124	844
Gesford; McKay v., Sup.	124	1016
Ginocchio; Talbot v., App.	123	223
Glenwood Lumber Co.; Wendling Lumber Co. v., App.	124	734
Golden; First Nat. Bank v., App.	126	498

	Vol.	Page
Goldner v. Spencer, Sup.	125	347
Goldwater v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc., App.	126	861
Goldwater v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc., Sup.	126	863
Goodhart v. Mission Pub. Co., App.	123	210
Goodman v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	126	185
Gordon; Dennis v., Sup.	125	1063
Gordon v. Roberts, Sup.	123	288
Grafton; Smiddy v., Sup.	124	433
Grand Circle, Women of Woodcraft; Poole v., App.	123	349
Gray v. Bonnell, App.	125	355
Gray; Morrissey v., Sup.	124	246
Green; People v., App.	124	871
Green v. Rogers, App.	123	974
Griesemer v. Hammond, App.	123	818
Grogan; Carpenter v., App.	123	538
Guthrie v. Carney, App.	124	1045
Hables; O'Meara v., Sup.	124	1003
Haizlip; Knoch v., Sup.	124	997
Haizlip; Knoch v., Sup.	124	998
Hall v. Clark, Sup.	125	1047
Hall; Deets v., Sup.	124	1007
Hall-Martin Co. v. Hughes, App.	123	617
Hammond; Griesemer v., App.	123	818
Hammond; Reed v., App.	123	346
Hanford Gas & Power Co. v. City of Hanford, Sup.	124	727
Hardy v. Schirmer, Sup.	124	993
Harlan v. Lambert, App.	125	1079
Harlan Douglas Co. v. Muncur, App.	124	1053
Harrison; People v., App.	123	200
Hatch; People v., Sup.	125	907
Haydon; People v., App.	123	1102
Haydon; People v., Sup.	123	1114
Haynes Automobile Co. v. Woodill Auto Co., Sup.	124	717
Hayt v. Bentel, App.	126	370
Healton v. Morrison, Sup.	124	240
Helfrich; Ruggles v., Sup.	123	369
Heller; Carle v., App.	123	815
Helmer v. Parsons, App.	123	356
Hemstreet, Ex parte, App.	123	984
Henderson; Cohn v., App.	124	1037
Henry v. Phillips, Sup.	124	837
Herndon; Parker v., App.	126	183
Herron Co. v. Westside Electric Co., App.	124	455
Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc.; Goldwater v., App.	126	861
Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc.; Goldwater v., Sup.	126	863
Higginson; Bradbury v., Sup.	123	797
H. K. Mulford Co. v. Curry, Sup.	125	236
Holland v. Hotchkiss, Sup.	123	258
Home Real Estate Co. v. Los Angeles Pac. Co., Sup.	126	972
Horne v. Hughes, App.	124	736
Hotchkiss; Holland v., Sup.	123	258
Hotchkiss; Rimmer v., Sup.	123	256
House; Walter G. Reese Co. v., Sup.	124	442
Hubbard; Eberle v., App.	124	454
Hudson; Elliott v., App.	124	103
Hudson; Elliott v., Sup.	124	108

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Hudson v. Seeley Specialties Co., App.	124	1051
Hughes; Horne v., App.	124	736
Hughes; J. F. Hall-Martin Co. v., App.	123	617
Hughes; Martin v., App.	123	617
Hull; Bartnett v., App.	124	885
Husheon v. Kelley, Sup.	124	231
Huston's Estate, In re, Sup.	124	852
Hutchinson; Bank of Venice v., App.	125	252
Hyatt; City and County of San Francisco v., Sup.	125	751
Hyatt; Nolan v., Sup.	124	439
Hynes v. All Persons, App.	125	253
Imperial Land Co.; Meloy v., Sup.	124	712
Interlocking Stone Co. v. Scribner, App.	126	178
Jacobs; Delger v., App.	124	95
Jacobs; Delger v., App.	125	258
J. Dewing Co. v. Thompson, App.	124	1035
Jergins v. Schenck, Sup.	124	426
Jessen v. Peterson, Nelson & Co., App.	123	219
J. F. Hall-Martin Co. v. Hughes, App.	123	617
Johnson v. Canty, Sup.	123	263
Johnson; Fiddymment v., App.	123	342
Johnson; Layne v., App.	124	860
Johnson v. Olson, App.	126	171
Johnson; Semi-Tropic Spiritualists' Ass'n v., Sup.	126	488
Jones v. Lewis, App.	126	853
Jones & Laughlin Steel Co. v. Abner Doble Co., Sup.	123	290
Jordan; California Telephone & Light Co. v., App.	126	598
Jordan; City Properties Co. v., Sup.	126	351
Jordan; Tidewater Southern Ry. Co. v., Sup.	124	716
Jorgensen, Ex parte, App.	124	1055
Joseph Levy Bag Co.; Newhall v., App.	124	875
Karr; Stoeckle v., App.	123	344
Kasch v. Labor Temple Ass'n, App.	123	552
Kearney v. Palmer, App.	123	611
Kearney v. Pierson, App.	123	613
Kedon; Bridge v., Sup.	126	149
Keefe v. Keefe, App.	125	929
Keeling v. Schastey & Vollmer, App.	124	445
Keil; Cone v., App.	124	548
Kellerman; McComber v., Sup.	124	431
Kelley; Clark v., Sup.	124	846
Kelley; Husheon v., Sup.	124	231
Kellogg; Abbott v., App.	123	227
Kellogg; Nelson v., Sup.	123	1115
Kelly; Buckeye Refining Co. v., Sup.	124	536
Kelly; MacMullan v., App.	124	93
Kelso; Foerst v., Sup.	125	1054
Kern v. San Francisco Co., App.	124	862
Kern Valley Bank v. Koehn, App.	125	358
Keystone Consol. Min. Co.; Lynch v., Sup.	126	968
King Land & Improvement Co.; Title Insurance & Trust Co. v., App.	126	372
King Lumber Co. v. Webster, Sup.	124	228
Kinsell v. Thomas, App.	124	220
Knobloch v. Bader, App.	123	341
Knoch v. Haizlip, Sup.	124	997
Knoch v. Haizlip, Sup.	124	998

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Knight v. Black, App.	126	512
Koehn; Kern Valley Bank v., App.	125	358
Krotzer v. Douglas, Sup.	124	722
Labor Temple Ass'n; Kasch v., App.	123	552
La Due v. Forbes, App.	124	867
Lagunitas Water Co. v. Marin County Water Co., Sup.	125	351
Lamb v. Wilke, App.	125	757
Lambert; Harlan v., App.	125	1079
Lapique v. Monroe, App.	125	760
Law; Fleming v., Sup.	124	1018
Layne v. Johnson, App.	124	860
Leahy v. Warden, Sup.	124	825
Levy Bag Co.; Newhall v., App.	124	875
Lewis; Archer v., App.	124	859
Lewis; Jones v., App.	126	853
Lewis; People v., App.	123	232
Lewis; Willcox v., Sup.	123	276
Liggett; People v., App.	123	225
Lilienthal; Bagley v., App.	125	938
Lillard; People v., App.	123	221
Lilly-Brackett Co. v. Sonnemann, Sup.	126	483
Lininger v. San Francisco, V. & N. V. R. Co., App.	123	235
Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, Sup.	126	594
Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corp.; City of Vernon v., App.	125	1084
Los Angeles Pac. Co.; Home Real Estate Co. v., Sup.	126	972
Los Angeles-Pacific Co.; Patton v., App.	123	613
Los Angeles Pac. R. Co.; Schermerhorn v., App.	123	351
Loveland's Estate, In re, Sup.	123	801
Lowery; Bray v., Sup.	124	1004
Loydon; Oliver v., Sup.	124	731
L. Scatena & Co. v. Van Loben Sels, App.	126	187
Lucy v. Davis, Sup.	126	490
Luning; Marsicano v., App.	125	1083
Luscomb v. Fintzelberg, Sup.	123	247
Lynch v. Keystone Consol. Min. Co., Sup.	126	968
Maas; Deming v., App.	123	204
McComber v. Kellerman, Sup.	124	431
McCowen v. Pew, App.	123	191
McCowen v. Pew, App.	123	354
McDermott v. Chatfield, App.	123	539
McDougall; Sacramento Terminal Co. v., App.	126	503
McEvoy; Almon v., App.	124	874
McGrath; Downing v., Sup.	124	997
McKay v. Gesford, Sup.	124	1016
McKenna v. McKenna, Sup.	123	532
McLain v. Dahlstrom Metallic Door Co., App.	126	391
MacMullan v. Kelly, App.	124	93
McMullin, Ex parte, App.	126	368
McNeill & Co. v. Doe, Sup.	125	345
McPike v. Mehrmann, App.	123	549
Mannix v. Wilson, App.	123	981
Manson; Flynn v., App.	126	181
Marin County Water Co.; Lagunitas Water Co. v., Sup.	125	351
Market Street Bank; People v., App.	124	568
Marron v. Marron, App.	125	914
Marshall; Callahan v., Sup.	126	358

	Vol.	Page
Marshall v. Vallejo Commercial Bank, Sup.	126	146
Marsicano v. Luning, App.	125	1083
Martin v. Hughes, App.	123	617
Martin; People v., App.	125	919
Martin v. Pinney, Sup.	126	481
Martin's Estate, In re, Sup.	125	1055
Martin & Co. v. Brosnan, App.	123	550
Martland v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., App.	125	759
Maruyama; People v., App.	125	924
Matsicura; People v., App.	124	882
Mattern v. Alderson, App.	123	972
Matteson & Williamson Mfg. Co.; Oldershaw v., App.	125	263
Maxwell; Olson, Mahoney Lumber Co. v., App.	124	100
Maze, Ex parte, Sup.	125	1135
Megarry v. Megarry, Sup.	125	1050
Mehrmann; McPike v., App.	123	549
Meloy v. Imperial Land Co., Sup.	124	712
Metzler v. Thye, Sup.	124	721
Miles; People v., App.	125	250
Miller, Ex parte, Sup.	124	427
Mission Pub. Co.; Goodhart v., App.	123	210
Mitchell, Ex parte, App.	126	856
Mitchell v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	125	1061
Moncur; Harlan Douglas Co. v., App.	124	1053
Monroe; Lapique v., App.	125	760
Montgomery, Ex parte, Sup.	125	1070
Moore v. Conley, Sup.	126	492
Morgan; Union Lumber Co. v., Sup.	124	228
Morison v. Weik, App.	124	869
Morrissey v. Gray, Sup.	124	246
Morrison; Heaton v., Sup.	124	240
Morrow; Neale v., Sup.	125	1052
Mossi v. Fairbanks, App.	125	1071
Mott v. Scanlan, App.	125	762
Mott; Vincent v., Sup.	125	346
Mousnier v. Taylor, Sup.	125	750
Mulford Co. v. Curry, Sup.	125	236
Murphy; Elizalde v., Sup.	126	978
Murphy; Payne v., App.	123	350
Murphy; San Luis Obispo County v., Sup.	123	808
Nakanishi, Ex parte, App.	126	508
National Lumber Co. v. Wickliffe, App.	125	357
National Surety Co.; Redding Gold & Copper Min. Co. v., App.	123	544
Navajo County Bank v. Dolson, Sup.	126	153
Neale v. Morrow, Sup.	125	1052
Nelson v. Kellogg, Sup.	123	1115
Nelson v. Nelson, App.	123	1099
Nelson v. Sumida, App.	124	1053
Newhall v. Joseph Levy Bag Co., App.	124	875
Newhart; Culver v., App.	123	975
Nolan v. Hyatt, Sup.	124	439
North American Acc. Ins. Co.; Fitzpatrick v., App.	123	209
Northern California Power Co.; Diller v., Sup.	123	359
North Pasadena Land & Water Co.; Garrison v., Sup.	124	1009
Oakland Pav. Co. v. Donovan, App.	126	388

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Oakland Water Front Co.; City of Oakland v., Sup.	124	251
O'Connell v. Behan, App.	124	1038
O'Connell v. United Railroads of San Francisco, App.	124	1022
Oliver v. Loydon, Sup.	124	731
Oliver; Union Collection Co. v., Sup.	124	435
Oldershaw v. Matteson & Williamson Mfg. Co., App.	125	263
Olson; Johnson v., App.	126	171
Olson, Mahoney Lumber Co. v. Maxwell, App.	124	100
Olson's Estate, In re, App.	126	171
O'Meara v. Hables, Sup.	124	1003
Otis Elevator Co. v. First Nat. Bank, Sup.	124	704
Pacific Sash & Door Co. v. Bumiller, Sup.	124	230
Padgham; Du Bois v., App.	123	207
Palmer; Kearney v., App.	123	611
Parker v. Herndon, App.	126	183
Parsons; Helmer v., App.	123	356
Patillo; Republic Iron & Steel Co. v., App.	125	923
Patterson v. Torrey, App.	123	224
Patton v. Los Angeles-Pacific Co., App.	123	613
Paxton; Willcox v., Sup.	123	276
Payne v. Murphy, App.	123	350
Peabody; Cuthill v., App.	125	926
Peacock v. Superior Court in and for Solano County, Sup.	126	976
Peck v. Coyle, App.	125	1073
Peek v. Steinberg, Sup.	124	834
People v. Akey, Sup.	124	718
People v. Ballo, App.	125	1081
People v. Bercovitz, Sup.	126	479
People v. Breeding, App.	126	179
People v. California Safe Deposit & Trust Co., App.	124	558
People v. California Safe Deposit & Trust Co., App.	126	516
People v. California Safe Deposit & Trust Co., Sup.	126	520
People v. Chutuk, App.	124	566
People v. Delhantie, Sup.	125	1066
People v. Earl, App.	124	887
People v. Green, App.	124	871
People v. Harrison, App.	123	200
People v. Hatch, Sup.	125	907
People v. Haydon, App.	123	1102
People v. Haydon, Sup.	123	1114
People v. Lewis, App.	123	232
People v. Liggett, App.	123	225
People v. Lillard, App.	123	221
People v. Market Street Bank, App.	124	568
People v. Martin, App.	125	919
People v. Maruyama, App.	125	924
People v. Matsicura, App.	124	882
People v. Miles, App.	125	250
People v. Rogers, Sup.	126	143
People v. Ross, App.	126	375
People v. Schenone, App.	125	758
People v. Selby Smelting & Lead Co., Sup.	124	692
People v. Selby Smelting & Lead Co., Sup.	124	1135
People v. Watson, App.	126	177
People v. White, App.	126	505
Peterson, Nelson & Co.; Jessen v., App.	123	219

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Pew; McCowen v., App.	123	191
Pew; McCowen v., App.	123	354
Phelps; Witter v., Sup.	126	593
Phelps; Witter v., Sup.	126	594
Phillips; Henry v., Sup.	124	837
Piercy v. Piercy, App.	124	561
Pierson; Kearney v., App.	123	613
Pinney; Martin v., Sup.	126	481
Pleasanton School Dist. of Alameda County; Burki v., App.	123	546
Pollard v. Rebman, Sup.	124	235
Poole v. Grand Circle, Women of Woodcraft, App.	123	349
Potter, Ex parte, two cases, App.	126	1135
Price; Walker v., Sup.	126	482
Proulx v. Sacramento Valley Land Co., App.	126	509
Puterbaugh v. Wadham, Sup.	123	804
Quartaroli v. City of Sonoma, App.	123	533
Quick; Anderson v., Sup.	126	871
Raisch v. Warren, App.	124	95
Randall v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, App.	124	1058
Read; Smiley v., Sup.	126	486
Rebman; Pollard v., Sup.	124	235
Redding Gold & Copper Min. Co. v. National Surety Co., App.	123	544
Reed v. Hammond, App.	123	346
Reese Co. v. House, Sup.	124	442
Republic Iron & Steel Co. v. Patillo, App.	125	923
R. H. Herron Co. v. Westside Electric Co., App.	124	455
Rich v. Edison Electric Co., App.	123	230
Rimmer v. Hotchkiss, Sup.	123	256
Rimpau v. Baldwin, Sup.	124	1002
Riverside Groves & Water Co.; Smith v., App.	124	870
Roberts; Gordon v., Sup.	123	288
Robinson; Fox v., App.	123	813
Robinson; Unkel v., Sup.	126	485
Rogers; Green v., App.	123	974
Rogers; People v., Sup.	126	143
Rogers v. West Riverside 350-Inch Water Co., two cases, App.	124	447
Rollins v. Scribner, App.	126	178
Ronning v. Way, App.	123	615
Ross; People v., App.	126	375
Ruggles v. Helfrich, Sup.	123	369
Ruland v. All Persons, App.	125	939
Russell, Ex parte, Sup.	124	875
Sacramento Terminal Co. v. McDougall, App.	126	503
Sacramento Valley Land Co.; Proulx v., App.	126	509
Sala v. City of Pasadena, Sup.	124	539
San Diego County v. Bryan, App.	123	347
San Francisco Commercial Agency v. Widemann, App.	124	1056
San Francisco Co.; Kern v., App.	124	862
San Francisco, V. & N. V. R. Co.; Lininger v., App.	123	235
San Luis Obispo County v. Murphy, Sup.	123	808
Santa Ana High School Dist. of Orange County v. Talbert, App.	124	874
Santa Ana School Dist. of Orange County v. Talbert, App.	124	872
Santa Ana Valley Irr. Co.; City of Santa Ana v., Sup.	124	847
Scanlan; Mott v., App.	125	762
Seatena & Co. v. Van Loben Sels, App.	126	187
Scharpf v. Union Oil Co. of California, App.	124	864

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Schastey & Vollmer; Keeling v., App.	124	445
Schenck; Jergins v., Sup.	124	426
Schenone; People v., App.	125	758
Schermerhorn v. Los Angeles Pac. R. Co., App.	123	351
Schirmer; Hardy v., Sup.	124	993
Schwartz v. California Gas & Electric Corp., Sup.	125	1044
Scoggan, Ex parte, Sup.	125	1135
Scribner; Interlocking Stone Co. v., App.	126	178
Scribner; Rollins v., App.	126	178
Sears v. Douthitt, App.	124	453
Sedan Milling Co.; Dean v., App.	124	736
Seeley Specialties Co.; Hudson v., App.	124	1051
Selby Smelting & Lead Co.; People v., Sup.	124	692
Selby Smelting & Lead Co.; People v., Sup.	124	1135
Selma Fruit Co.; Stevens v., App.	123	212
Semi-Tropic Spiritualists' Ass'n v. Johnson, Sup.	126	488
Sewell v. Christie, Sup.	124	713
S. H. Frank & Co.; Brett v., Sup.	124	437
Shaw v. Bernal, Sup.	124	1012
Shay; Fleming v., App.	125	761
Shurtleff v. Bracken, Sup.	124	724
Skookum Oil Co. v. Thomas, Sup.	123	363
Slattery, Ex parte, Sup.	124	856
S. M. Bernard Co. v. Los Angeles, App.	124	88
Smiddy v. Grafton, Sup.	124	433
Smiley; Ahlers v., Sup.	124	827
Smiley v. Read, Sup.	126	486
Smith v. Riverside Groves & Water Co., App.	124	870
Smith v. Smith, Sup.	126	475
Smith; Whalen v., Sup.	125	904
Soderman; Bernardo v., App.	124	866
Sonnemann; Lilly-Brackett Co. v., Sup.	126	483
Soule; Bacon v., App.	126	384
Southern Pac. Co.; Dore v., Sup.	124	817
Southern Pac. Co.; Edmunds v., App.	123	811
Southern Pac. Co.; Folger v., Sup.	124	817
Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Arnold, Sup.	124	829
Southern Pac. R. Co.; City of Santa Cruz v., Sup.	126	362
Spangenberg v. Spangenberg, App.	126	379
Spencer; Brown v., Sup.	126	493
Spencer; Goldner v., Sup.	125	347
Spreckels Bros. Commercial Co.; Worley v., Sup.	124	697
Spreckels' Estate, In re, Sup.	123	371
Staley; Canty v., Sup.	123	252
Stanton v. Freeman, App.	126	377
Stanton v. Weldy, App.	126	175
Steinberg; Peek v., Sup.	124	834
Stevens v. Selma Fruit Co., App.	123	212
Stierlen v. Stierlen, App.	124	226
Stierlen v. Stierlen, Sup.	124	228
Stockton Iron Works v. Walters, App.	123	240
Stoeckle v. Karr, App.	123	344
Styles' Estate, In re, Sup.	124	1129
Sumida; Nelson v., App.	124	1053
Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco; Mitchell v., Sup.	125	1061

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Superior Court in and for City & County of San Francisco, Department No.
1; Continental Building Loan Ass'n v., Sup.	126	476
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Goodman v., App.	126	185
Superior Court in and for Solano County; Peacock v., Sup.	126	976
Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Behymer v., App.	123	340
Superior Court of Kern County; American Well & Prospecting Co. v., App.	126	497
Superior Court of Kern County; Craycroft v., App.	124	1042
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Gardner v., App.	126	511
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Randall v., App.	124	1058
Superior Court of Yolo County; Edgington v., App.	124	450
Swan v. Walden, App.	124	857
Talbert; Santa Ana School Dist. of Orange County v., App.	124	872
Talbert; Santa Ana High School Dist. of Orange County v., App.	124	874
Talbot v. Ginocchio, App.	123	223
Taylor v. Darling, App.	125	249
Taylor; Mousnier v., Sup.	125	750
Thomas; Kinsell v., App.	124	220
Thomas; Skookum Oil Co. v., Sup.	123	363
Thompson; J. Dewing Co. v., App.	124	1035
Thye; Metzler v., Sup.	124	721
Tidewater Southern Ry. Co. v. Jordan, Sup.	124	716
Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Carpenter & Biles Mill & Lumber Co., Sup.	123	247
Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. King Land & Improvement Co., App.	126	372
Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Williamson, App.	123	245
Tognazzini v. Freeman, App.	123	540
Torrey; Patterson v., App.	123	224
Union Collection Co. v. Oliver, Sup.	124	435
Union Const. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., Sup.	125	242
Union Lumber Co. v. Morgan, Sup.	124	228
Union Oil Co. of California; Scharpf v., App.	124	864
United Railroads of San Francisco; Burr v., Sup.	126	873
United Railroads of San Francisco; O'Connell v., App.	124	1022
United Railroads of San Francisco; Wagner v., App.	126	186
United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. First Nat. Bank, App.	123	352
Unkel v. Robinson, Sup.	126	485
Upton v. Woman's Club of Kern, App.	124	858
Vallejo Commercial Bank; Marshall v., Sup.	126	146
Vanderbilt v. All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien upon the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Sup.	126	158
Van Loben Sels; L. Scatena & Co. v., App.	126	187
Vincent v. Mott, Sup.	125	346
Wadham; Puterbaugh v., Sup.	123	804
Wagner v. United Railroads of San Francisco, App.	126	186
Walden; Swan v., App.	124	857
Walker v. Dixon, App.	126	171
Walker v. Price, Sup.	126	482
Walter G. Reese Co. v. House, Sup.	124	442
Walters; Stockton Iron Works v., App.	123	240
Warden; Boyd v., Sup.	124	841
Warden; Leahy v., Sup.	124	825
Warren; Raisch v., App.	124	95
Watson; People v., App.	126	177
Way; Ronning v., App.	123	615
Weary & Alford Co.; Credit Clearance Bureau v., App.	123	548
Webster v. Board of Regents of University of California, Sup.	126	974
Webster v. Carr, App.	124	447

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Webster; King Lumber Co. v., Sup.	124	228
Weik; Morison v., App.	124	869
Weldy; Stanton v., App.	126	175
Wendling Lumber Co. v. Glenwood Lumber Co., App.	124	734
Wessling; Acme Lumber Co. v., App.	126	167
Western Pac. Land Co. v. Wilson, App.	125	1076
Western Union Tel. Co.; Union Const. Co. v., Sup.	125	242
West Riverside 350-Inch Water Co.; Rogers v., App.	124	447
Westside Electric Co.; R. H. Herron Co. v., App.	124	455
Whalen v. Smith, Sup.	125	904
White; People v., App.	126	505
Wickland v. Wickland, two cases, App.	126	507
Wickliffe; National Lumber Co. v., App.	125	357
Widemann; San Francisco Commercial Agency v., App.	124	1056
Wilke; Lamb v., App.	125	757
Willcox v. Edwards, Sup.	123	276
Willcox v. Lewis, Sup.	123	276
Willcox v. Paxton, Sup.	123	276
Williamson; Title Insurance & Trust Co. v., App.	123	245
Wilson; Mannix v., App.	123	981
Wilson; Western Pac. Land Co. v., App.	125	1076
Witter v. Phelps, Sup.	126	593
Witter v. Phelps, Sup.	126	594
Wittman v. Board of Police Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco, App.	125	265
Wolf v. Ætna Indemnity Co., of Hartford, Conn., Sup.	126	470
Woman's Club of Kern; Upton v., App.	124	858
Woodill Auto Co.; Haynes Automobile Co. v., Sup.	124	717
Woodruff Co.; Edward Barron Estate Co. v., Sup.	126	351
Woods, Ex parte, App.	123	1135
Wooster; Donohoe v., Sup.	124	730
Worley v. Spreckels Bros. Commercial Co., Sup.	124	697
Wright v. Board of Public Works of City of Los Angeles, Sup.	125	353
Young; Fast v., App.	126	854
Zobelein; Chapman v., App.	124	1021

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

123 PACIFIC REPORTER

18 Cal. App. 302

McCOWEN et al. v. PEW. (Civ. 885.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 21, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 19, 1912.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 115*)—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY.

Where an option merely granted defendant the right to purchase land at a specified price, a cross-complaint by him seeking specific performance did not show that the actual consideration moving plaintiff to give the option was an agreement by defendant to select a certain route and construct a railroad thereon, by alleging that all the facts were known to plaintiff and that the inducement and consideration moving him to contract was the encouragement of the building of said railroad.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. § 373; Dec. Dig. § 115.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1099*)—REVIEW—LAW OF THE CASE—SUBSEQUENT APPEAL.

Where the sufficiency of a cross-complaint, attacked by objection to admitting any evidence under it, was sustained, and affirmed on appeal on sole consideration of the question whether the contract sought to be enforced under the pleadings was contrary to public policy, the decision on appeal was conclusive of the sufficiency of the complaint on a subsequent appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4370-4379; Dec. Dig. § 1099.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1099*)—REVIEW—LAW OF THE CASE—SUBSEQUENT APPEALS.

In an action to quiet title, defendants by cross-complaint sought to enforce a right under an option to purchase, and plaintiff contended that the consideration for such option was an agreement by defendants to secure the location of a railroad on a certain route and was contrary to public policy. On appeal the court decided that, "as to the allegations concerning the consideration and inducement to the granting of the option, it is quite apparent that they were made by the cross-complainant as a foundation for a claim for special damages for the cutting of timber during the life of the option, and for no other purpose, and that nowhere had defendant agreed to select any particular route to the exclusion of any other, nor had they undertaken to do anything." Held determinative against the objection on a subsequent appeal that the pleading setting up the contract did not disclose any legal consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4370-4379; Dec. Dig. § 1099.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1099*)—REVIEW—LAW OF THE CASE—SUBSEQUENT APPEAL.

In a suit to quiet title, in which defendants secured judgment on a cross-complaint seeking specific enforcement of an option to purchase, a reversal, on the sole ground that the trial court erred in the measure of compensation awarded defendants for removal of timber from the lands, was determinative against plaintiffs on a subsequent appeal of the point that there was no acceptance of the option; that objection having been urged on the first appeal but not referred to by the court in its opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4370-4379; Dec. Dig. § 1099.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 18*)—OPTION—ACCEPTANCE.

Where, after plaintiffs granted defendant an option to purchase 1,100 acres of land at $15 per acre, plaintiffs cut timber from the land, an acceptance of the option, with an added condition, "less the loss in value of the timber occasioned by removal," was sufficient under Civ. Code, § 3386, providing that neither party to an obligation can be compelled to specifically perform it unless the other party has performed, "or nearly so, together with full compensation for any want of entire performance."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 23; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 18*)—OPTION—CONSIDERATION—ACCEPTANCE.

After acceptance of an option to purchase land, it did not affect the validity of the contract thereby completed that the option originally was without consideration and might have been withdrawn before acceptance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 23; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by George McCowen and another against J. W. Pew. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 153 Cal. 735, 96 Pac. 893, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 800, 15 Ann. Cas. 630.

H. C. McPike and Robert Duncan, for appellants. Jesse W. Lienthal and James E. Pemberton, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiffs commenced this action for the purpose of securing a decree quieting their title to certain lands described in the complaint and declaring void and of no effect a certain written instrument out of which grows the claim by the defendant of an interest in or right to acquire title to the property so described. To the complaint the defendant filed an answer, wherein he sets forth and reveals the nature of his interest in said property, alleging that it grows out of and is based upon a certain agreement of option between the plaintiffs and the defendant, whereby the owners tendered and offered to the latter the option to purchase, within 12 months from the date of the execution of said agreement, the real property described therein and referred to in the complaint, which said option he accepted. The defendant also filed a cross-complaint setting up said agreement, and, among other things, alleging that, within the time limited by the agreement he, in a written notice delivered to each of the plaintiffs, signified his election to exercise the option granted to him by said agreement to purchase the property referred to therein and that he was ready, willing, and able to pay for said lands, according to the terms of said option, "upon proper compensation to said defendant and deductions from said purchase price" for certain alleged incumbrances on said lands and for the depreciation in the value thereof by reason of the alleged destruction by the plaintiffs, during the life of the option, of certain timber on said property. Upon the averments of the cross-complaint, the defendant asked for a decree specifically enforcing the agreement of sale which was the culmination of the option and its acceptance. Relief was further prayed for as to the issue involving the alleged incumbrances on the lands and the alleged destruction of the timber and the removal of the same from said property. Judgment passed for the defendant, and this appeal is taken by the plaintiffs from said judgment and the order denying them a new trial.

This is the third appeal prosecuted in this cause. The first (McCowen et al. v. Pew, 147 Cal. 299, 81 Pac. 958) involved the sole question whether, full performance of the contract of sale being impossible because of the breach thereof by the vendors in cutting and removing timber from the lands which are the subject of said contract, the compensation to which the vendee was entitled for the depreciation in the value of the property by reason of the cutting and removal of such timber should be based upon the value of the timber so removed at the time the defendant gave notice of his election to exercise the option or upon the value of said timber, if it had remained standing on the land, at the time of the near completion of a railroad with a special view to the construction of which the defendant, so it is alleged, sought and secured the option to purchase said lands. The evidence showed that said railroad was about completed at the time of the trial, and the trial court based its valuation of the timber so removed as of that time, had it then been standing on the land, and found for the defendant accordingly. Upon the ground that the trial court erred in its ruling upon that question, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment and order and returned the cause to the court below for retrial. The second trial of the case resulted in a judgment for the plaintiffs granting them the relief prayed for in their complaint. The defendant appealed from said judgment and the order refusing him a new trial, and the cause was again reversed and remanded for trial de novo. The opinion of the Supreme Court on the last-mentioned appeal is reported in 153 Cal. 735 et seq., 96 Pac. 893, 21 L. R. A. 800, 15 Ann. Cas. 630. The points there urged for a reversal and decided in said opinion will be particularly noticed in connection with the consideration of the points urged here for a reversal of the judgment.

Before proceeding to a consideration of the points made by the appellants, however, it will perhaps be more conformable to an orderly course to briefly recite the facts of this protracted litigation. In doing so, we conceive that we can do no better than to state them in the language of the Supreme Court, in the case reported in 147 Cal. 300, 81 Pac. 962, as follows: "The plaintiffs were the owners of a tract of land containing about 1,160 acres, and on October 16, 1899, they and the defendant Pew executed an agreement whereby they granted to Pew the option, during the ensuing 12 months, to acquire from the plaintiffs the land in question, for the sum of $15 per acre. * * * Between the date of the making of the agreement and October 11, 1900, the plaintiffs cut and removed from about 10 acres of the land in question a large quantity of redwood, pine, and oak timber, the value of which and the particular time at which its value is to be determined is the principal issue in this case. On October 11, 1900, Pew, having received information of the cutting of the timber in question, gave notice in writing to the plaintiffs that he elected to exercise the right to acquire the land covered by the agreement, and offered, upon receiving a good title to the land, to pay for the same at the rate of $15 per acre, less the loss in value of the land occasioned by the removal of the timber by the plaintiffs. There were certain incumbrances on the title, which constituted defects in the title, which were not removed until some time in December following, or about the 1st of January, 1901. The parties could not agree upon the amount to be deducted from the price on account of the removal of the timber; but, subject to the settlement of that question, the plaintiffs were ready to perform their agreement and convey a good title on the 6th of December, 1900. Not being able to agree upon the amount of compensation to be allowed for the timber removed, the plaintiffs claimed that the agreement had been forfeited, and in March, 1901, brought the present action against the defendant to quiet title. Pew filed a cross-complaint, setting out the agreement aforesaid, averring the election to acquire title thereunder by himself and those associated with him, and their purpose in acquiring the lands as aforesaid, and asking that the court enforce specific performance of the contract according to its terms, and allow a deduction from the price as compensation for the loss to him by reason of the timber removed by the plaintiffs prior to the time he gave notice of his election to exercise the option.

The agreement of option, or the part thereof important or specially material to the inquiry here, reads as follows: "Now, therefore, for value received by said party of the first part (plaintiffs) from said party of the second part (defendant), and to induce said party of the second part to undertake the disposition of said property, said party of the first part has granted unto said party of the second part, his representatives and assigns, for the period of twelve months from the date hereof, an exclusive and irrevocable option to acquire from said party of the first part for said party of the second part, or his assigns, or such parties as he may negotiate with, for the sum of fifteen dollars per acre, a good and sufficient title to the property situate in Mendocino county, state of California, and more particularly described as follows:" Then follows a description of the property. Said agreement was signed and executed by both the plaintiffs and the defendant, and was recorded in the office of the county recorder of Mendocino county on the 21st day of September, 1900.

Counsel for the appellants, at the oral argument, expressly abandoned the appeal from the order, thus waiving any alleged errors of law occurring at the trial, and declared that they relied and would rely solely upon the points made upon the appeal from the judgment. We shall, therefore, in the consideration of this appeal, confine ourselves to a review and decision of what is in effect the single proposition, urged in the oral argument with the skill of a master and the vigor that is the offspring only of unfeigned earnestness, submitted here, viz., that the cross-complaint is bad for want of sufficient facts. This postulate is sought to be supported and sustained chiefly by two points; the first of which in the order in which we shall consider them being a direct attack on the sufficiency of the cross-complaint to state a cause of action, and the second involving a direct attack on the findings, which, since in that regard they follow, substantially, the allegations of the cross-complaint, may also be treated as challenging that pleading on the ground that the facts therein stated are not such as to entitle the defendant to the relief demanded thereby and as awarded by the decree.

These points may be stated as follows:

(1) That while, confessedly, the agreement of option contains no language even remotely indicating that the building of the railroad referred to on and over a certain route, or, to state it concretely, over the route from Ukiah to Willits, in preference over other routes which were within the contemplation of the projectors of said road, constituted a consideration moving the plaintiff to grant the option in question to the defendant, yet the averments of the cross-complaint, themselves, disclose that the building of said road along the indicated route was, in point of fact, the consideration supporting said option, and that, further disclosing that said railroad over and along said route was not completed at the time of the exercise by the defendant of his election to purchase the property in dispute in pursuance of said option, the pleading of the defendant, therefore, signally and completely fails to show or set forth a contract for the sale and purchase of the property or a contract whose terms can be specifically enforced. In other words, to state this proposition—the premise and the conclusion therefrom—in the language of learned counsel for the appellant in his oral argument before this court: "The plaintiffs were the owners of a tract of timber land in Mendocino county. The defendant contemplated an extension of the North Pacific Railway, and had under consideration four different routes, one of which ran from Ukiah to Willits. He proposed selecting the line along which he should secure options upon timber lands. With full knowledge of these facts the plaintiff granted him, in consideration of his building on the route from Ukiah to Willits, the right to purchase, at his option, their property within a designated time. When the time was about to expire, the defendant demanded a conveyance. The extension not being built, the plaintiffs refused to convey. That, under these circumstances, the plaintiffs were under no obligation to convey, is a proposition which would seem hardly to require argument. As the building of the road from Ukiah to Willits was the consideration of the right to a conveyance, the road must, of course, be built, before that right could be exercised. If I promise to give you something in consideration of your doing something, surely you may not ask for the thing I am to give until you have done the thing you are to do." (2) That the offer or option granted by the plaintiffs was never accepted, it appearing from the findings "that the offer was to sell at a certain price, and the proposal to buy at a different price." In other words, the contract made is not the one upon which the defendant relies in this action.

There are other objections aimed at the findings and cross-complaint, among which is the one involving the contention that the option granted by the plaintiffs to the defendant was not supported by any consideration.

If, as before suggested, as to the proposition that the contract declared upon is not the contract made, the findings thus assailed do not support the judgment, then, manifestly, the cross-complaint does not and never did state a cause of action, since, as we have seen, the findings so attacked are substantially in the language of that pleading.

Replying to the propositions thus submitted by the appellants, the defendant first contends that the precise question whether the facts alleged in the cross-complaint state a cause of action, or are such as to entitle him to the specific performance of the alleged agreement of sale and purchase, was involved in and decided, adversely to the position of the appellants here, on the appeals in the case of these plaintiffs against the defendant (153 Cal. 735, 96 Pac. 893, 21 L. R. A. [N. S.] 800, 15 Ann. Cas. 630, and 147 Cal. 299, 81 Pac. 958), and that therefore, regardless of whether the court was right or wrong in its construction of the scope and effect of the allegations of the cross-complaint and of the findings referred to, the question of the sufficiency of that pleading is now inhumed beneath the doctrine of res adjudicata, and that said question is, consequently, so far as this action is concerned, no longer open to review.

It is secondly contended that there is nothing either in the language of the written option, the findings, or the allegations of the cross-complaint which furnishes the slightest pretext for the contention that the building of the railroad referred to from Ukiah to Willits or over any other route constituted the consideration or any part thereof inducing the plaintiffs to grant the option or was intended to operate as a condition precedent to the right of the defendant to exercise the option to purchase the lands, or that indicated a different contract from that upon which the defendant declares. As to the latter proposition, the defendant submits that, the plaintiffs themselves having by their own acts changed the condition of the property during the life of the option so that full performance of the agreement on their part could not be had, the defendant was entitled to part performance thereof or performance of so much of the agreement as it was within the power of the plaintiffs to consummate, with compensation for the deficiency. Civ. Code, § 3336. In other words, the contention is that the acceptance of the option by the defendant was an acceptance of the original offer, precisely as it was granted, subject, however, to the latter's right to be compensated by the plaintiffs for a deterioration in the value of the lands occasioned by their own unauthorized acts while the option still subsisted.

It may be just as well to announce, in limine, that our conclusion is that the attack upon the cross-complaint and the findings, as indicated in the foregoing, is without substantial grounds for its justification.

We shall consider the points urged in the order in which they are stated herein and as if both involved, as the first point certainly does, a direct assault upon the sufficiency of the cross-complaint to state a cause of action.

As seen, the cross-complaint avers the execution of the agreement of option, as set out in the complaint, granting to the defendant the exclusive right, for a period of 12 months, to purchase the property therein described. The pleading then proceeds with the following allegations, which constitute the sole fulcrum of the argument addressed to the proposition that the building of the railroad was intended as and was an act prerequisite to the right of the defendant to a conveyance:

"(4) That in the making of said agreement this defendant was not acting in his own interest and behalf, but for others associated with him, who were to construct the railroad hereinafter mentioned, and as to the interest of said persons, although made and taken solely in the name of this defendant, as party of the second part.

"(5) That at the time said agreement and contract was made, this defendant and the persons so associated with him were contemplating and preparing for the building of a railroad from some point on the line of the railway of the San Francisco & North Pacific Railway Company into some portion of Mendocino county, in which timber and wood could be procured in large quantities. That at said time four different locations (or routes) for said proposed railroad were under consideration by them, and it had been determined by them to so build said railroad at some one of the said contemplated locations only, but it had not been decided at which one. That one of the said contemplated locations for said proposed railroad was from Ukiah, northerly to Willits in said county. That the building of said railroad at last-mentioned location would greatly increase the value of the lands hereinbefore described by making the timber thereon accessible to a market; but the building thereof at any one of the other proposed and contemplated locations would not increase the value of these lands. That the selection of a route or location depended largely upon securing options upon timber lands along the line of the proposed railway. That all these facts were well known at the time to plaintiffs, and that the inducements and consideration moving the plaintiffs, and causing them to enter into said contract or agreement, were the encouragement and inducement of the building of said railroad from Ukiah to Willits in preference over said other routes.

"(6) That thereupon and thereafter this defendant, and the persons so associated with him, secured the selection of said route and location for said railroad from Ukiah to Willits in preference to said other routes and locations; and said railroad was thereupon surveyed and laid out and is now in process of construction and being rapidly built and pushed toward completion, and will be built from Ukiah to Willits within a short time; and that the consideration and inducement causing preference to be given to said location thereof was the option given in said contract hereinbefore set forth, giving this defendant the privilege of purchasing said land, and similar options in similar contracts regarding other lands adjacent thereto and in that portion of the county, and said options were all taken and said contracts all entered into solely for the purpose of securing freight for said railroad, and the added valuation that would be given to said lands by the construction of the railroad in excess of the price set in said contracts respectively."

[1] In vain have we prosecuted an examination of the foregoing paragraphs of the cross-complaint to find a single line or even a word which may rationally be interpreted to justify the inference that the actual building of the railroad constituted any part of the consideration moving the plaintiffs to grant the option in question to the defendant. Much less do the averments disclose a direct statement indicating the act of actually building the railroad to have been imposed as a condition precedent to the defendant's right to a conveyance. The nearest approach to an allegation justifying the contention of the plaintiffs in that regard is the following: "That all the facts were well known at the time to plaintiffs, and that the inducements and consideration moving the plaintiffs, and causing them to enter into said contract or agreement was the encouragement and inducement of the building of said railroad from Ukiah to Willits in preference over said other routes." But this allegation, it is plainly apparent, does not say that the defendant agreed to build the railroad, in consideration for the option, or that it would complete its construction within any specified time, but merely declares that the plaintiffs, to encourage and induce the projectors to build the road over said route, were thus moved to enter into the agreement. There is, in fine, nothing in the language of the cross-complaint binding the defendant to do anything with respect to the building and completion of said railroad, or indicating that upon the building and completion of the road rested the right of the defendant to exercise the option to purchase the property.

[2] But we think that this question—the objection to the cross-complaint upon general grounds—has been definitively and conclusively determined by the Supreme Court in the case of McCowen v. Pew, 153 Cal. 735, 96 Pac. 893, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 800, 15 Ann. Cas. 630, the second appeal in this case.

The question of the sufficiency of the cross-complaint on that appeal arose over the ruling by the trial court by which it sustained an objection by plaintiffs to any evidence being received in support of the averments of that pleading on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or defense to the action of plaintiffs.

The sole proposition on which the asserted insufficiency of the cross-complaint was predicated at that trial of the case was, as stated by the Supreme Court in its opinion, "that the contract sought under that pleading to be specifically enforced was contrary to public policy and void." That this was the specific ground of attack on the cross-complaint in that case was assumed by the Supreme Court from the fact only that the briefs and arguments of counsel for the appellants were confined to a discussion of the question whether, as they claimed the cross-complaint revealed to be the fact, "contracts between a landowner and a company for the establishment of the line of road to subserve and promote private and pecuniary advantages of those entering into them are in contravention of such (public) policy and void, because the tendency of all such contracts is to sacrifice the public interest to the selfish private advantage of the contracting parties." In other words, the specific ground upon which it was contended and argued at the hearing of that appeal, on behalf of appellants, that the cross-complaint failed to state a cause of action, was that the allegations of said pleading disclosed that the agreement between the plaintiffs and the defendant was of the nature of one whereby the defendant, acting for the railroad company, agreed with the plaintiffs to preclude said company "from establishing or locating depots or stations on its road at any other than certain localities, or within certain prescribed limits." And this question the court decided in that case, among other things saying that such agreements "are plainly in violation of a clear duty owed by the railroad company to the public, as public agents, to locate their depots and stations where the public wants and necessities demand their establishment," etc.

While it is true that the precise special reason urged in support of the general objection to the cross-complaint at the hearing of that appeal in this case was different from the precise special reason urged in support of the general objection to the pleading here, it is the statement only of an obvious proposition to say that the ultimate question submitted for decision by the court on the former appeal is precisely the same as the ultimate question submitted for determination here, viz.: Does the cross-complaint state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action? Nor, if it may be said that, strictly speaking, the court on the former appeal did not expressly pass upon the specific objection here urged in support of the general objection then interposed and argued against the cross-complaint, can it be maintained that the court did not then decide that that pleading was good as against an objection on general grounds for any reason that might be assigned in support of such objection. The objection to the reception of evidence in support of the allegations of the cross-complaint upon the ground that it failed to state a cause of action was, manifestly, tantamount to an objection thereto upon the same ground through the agency of a general demurrer. It often happens that more than a single reason may be assigned and urged in support of the general objection, in whatsoever form the objection may be raised, that a pleading is bad for paucity of facts. Indeed, the case at bar is a striking illustration of this proposition. And where a pleading is challenged for want of sufficient facts, in whatever form such attack may be garbed, we apprehend it to be the duty of a court of review, and a duty that it will in all cases execute, in the examination of such objection, to take such pleading up by the four corners, thus scrutinize and measure its averments by the full breadth of the objection thus interposed to it, and then decide whether, for the reason or reasons advanced, or for other reasons, not advanced, the general objection that the pleading fails to state a cause of action is well taken. If this were not true, a piecemeal method of attacking a pleading for insufficiency of facts would obtain—a practice which the law does not countenance and which the courts, for the sake of putting an end to litigation, should not encourage. Therefore we affirm that the Supreme Court, having sent the cause back for retrial after a decision against the objection that the cross-complaint here was bad for want of facts, has impliedly if not expressly held that the specific objection here urged against said pleading is groundless.

But we think that it cannot for a moment be doubted that, in its opinion in 153 Cal. 735, 96 Pac. 893, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 800, 15 Ann. Cas. 630, in this case, the court has passed upon and sustained the ability of the cross-complaint to withstand the specific attack made upon it here.

In order to determine the question whether the specific point urged in support of the objection made to the cross-complaint on the second appeal (153 Cal. 735, 96 Pac. 893, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 800, 15 Ann. Cas. 630) on the ground that it set forth no cause of action, viz., that its averments disclosed an illegal, and therefore void, agreement as the basis of the relief asked for therein, the Supreme Court was, in the very nature of the proposition before it, compelled to examine the allegations of said pleading to satisfy itself upon the proposition whether the agreement between the plaintiffs and the defendant came within that class of agreements unlawful and void because in contravention of public policy. In the prosecution of this inquiry, the first proposition that would naturally be examined and solved was whether the cross-complaint, in point of fact, disclosed an agreement of any character whatsoever requiring the railroad to be built before the defendant would become entitled to a conveyance. And the court decided this question in the very beginning, holding, in as clear and explicit language as could well be employed, that the averments of the cross-complaint did not show that the plaintiffs were moved in granting the option by the consideration or promise that the defendant, before being entitled to accept such option, would build the railroad over the line from Ukiah to Willits, or that the defendant bound himself to do anything with regard to the location of the route or the building of the railroad. After stating the proposition upon which the appellants based their contention that the cross-complaint was insufficient to entitle the defendant to the relief demanded by his pleading, and saying that "the only question necessary for consideration is the refusal of the trial court to permit the introduction of any evidence by appellant in support of his cross-complaint," the court, inter alia, said: "We make no question about the rule as contended for by the respondents, but we are satisfied, taking the allegations of the cross-complaint with the other pleadings in the case, which must be considered for that purpose (although it was on the allegations of the cross-complaint alone that the point of invalidity was based) that it does not appear therefrom that in the granting of the option any restriction or limitation was imposed thereby on Pew and his associates, who contemplated building the railroad, as to the selection of a route. * * * As to the allegations concerning the consideration and inducement to the granting of the option, it is quite apparent that they were made by the cross-complaint as a foundation for a claim for special damages for the cutting of the timber during the life of the option, and for no other purpose (McCowen v. Pew, 147 Cal. 299, 81 Pac. 958), while the answer to the cross-complaint denies that any such consideration entered at all. * * * The agreement itself granting the option * * * provides for an option in favor of respondent Pew to purchase the 1,160 acres of timber land at $15 an acre, and recites that the owners (McCowens) desired to dispose of same and 'to have the assistance of said party of the second part (Pew) in so doing without cost to the parties of the first part,' and declares the consideration for the option to be 'for value received, * * * and to induce said party of the second part to undertake the disposition of said land.' On the part of Pew he stipulated 'to use his best endeavors to dispose of said property, either by acquiring same or selling same to others' without cost to the McCowens. These are the only provisions of the contract of option itself. There is nothing therein relative to any conditions or stipulations or restrictions as to any route for a contemplated railroad, nor mention made of any railroad at all. Neither, when we come to an examination of the allegations of the cross-complaint, do we find anything from which it appears that any agreement was made that in consideration of the granting of the option the selection of any particular route was provided for. (Italics ours.) * * * It will be observed that there is nowhere in these allegations any statement that Pew and his associates agreed to select any particular route to the exclusion of any other route, nor, in fact, so far as said allegations are concerned, does it appear therefrom that they undertook to do anything. (Italics ours.) * * * All that appears is that Pew and his associates, for the purpose of securing freight for the railroad they contemplated building, took options upon timber lands in the locality through which the line of said road might be built and such freight received; that certain owners of land, as an inducement to the building of the railroad over one of the four contemplated routes, gave an option upon their lands at a price specified in the option representing the full value of the land and that the only advantage to be secured to the builders of the road (as full value for the land was to be paid) was the obtaining of freight to be carried. * * * In the absence of anything to the contrary in the allegations of the cross-complaint, it must be taken that Pew and his associates were persons contemplating the formation of a railroad corporation, and that the options obtained by Pew were for the benefit of such corporation, and that any inducements operating upon the granting of such options must be taken to have extended to the contemplated railroad itself."

[3] Thus we have quoted in extenso from the opinion of the Supreme Court to show, as the opinion clearly does show, that the very question involved in the present discussion was decided in said opinion by that court, viz., whether the cross-complaint discloses that the consideration or a part of the consideration moving the plaintiffs to grant the option in question to the defendant was a promise or agreement on the part of the latter to secure the location of the route or the building of the railroad from Ukiah to Willits. Disregarding, if we may choose to do so, all the other language of the opinion but the following, and we find the proposition succinctly and conclusively decided: "As to the allegations concerning the consideration and inducement to the granting of the option, it is quite apparent that they were made by the cross-complainant as a foundation for a claim for special damages for the cutting of the timber during the life of the option, and for no other purpose." And that "it will be observed that there is nowhere in these allegations any statement that Pew and his associates agreed to select any particular route to the exclusion of any other route, nor, in fact, as far as said allegations are concerned, does it appear that they undertook to do anything."

If, by the foregoing, the court does not expressly decide that the specific objection here made to the cross-complaint is without merit, then we confess our inability to understand the above language or the import of the decision.

Our conclusion upon the point under consideration is, as must be apparent from what we have said: (1) That nowhere in the cross-complaint is there a single statement or averment which may be held to disclose an agreement that the road should first be built before the defendant's right to a conveyance ripened. There is even not shown, as the Supreme Court declares, an agreement to locate the road over the route from Ukiah from Willits, must less an agreement that the road should be built before the defendant would be authorized to exercise his option. (2) That, assuming that our conclusion as thus stated is erroneous, the decision of the Supreme Court to which we have referred, holding the objection to the cross-complaint on the general ground that it does not state a cause of action not to be good involves the law of the case upon that question and is conclusive as to the parties to this action. And since the findings upon this point follow the averments of the complaint, it therefore follows that the court did not, as is the contention, find that the building of the railroad constituted a prerequisite to the right of the defendant to a conveyance.

What we have said with regard to the law of the case applies with equal pertinency and force to the second point advanced by the appellants.

The proposition is, as we have seen, that the findings disclose a variance, fatal to the judgment, between the option granted by the plaintiffs and the acceptance by the defendant. The finding in this particular, as we have heretofore shown, substantially follows the averments of the cross-complaint. As before suggested, if that finding does not support the judgment for the reason stated, then clearly the cross-complaint has at no time stated a cause of action. The point thus made is, therefore, in effect an attack upon the sufficiency of the cross-complaint to state a cause of action. Although it is strictly correct to say that this precise point was not raised or considered on the second appeal of this case (153 Cal. 735, 96 Pac. 893, 21 L. R. A. [N. S.] 800, 15 Ann. Cas. 630), yet we adhere to what we have already said regarding the effect of that decision upon the question of the sufficiency of the cross-complaint, and hold that thereby that pleading was held to be good as against that objection for any reason that might or could have been suggested in its support. The court, as before stated, remanded the cause for a new trial. Upon what, must we assume? Upon a pleading which, for any reason, stated no cause of action? The questions embrace their own answer. But conceding that there was no implied ruling against the contention of the appellants as to the point now under review in the opinion in 153 Cal. 735, 96 Pac. 893, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 800, 15 Ann. Cas. 630, still there can be left no room for any doubt, after an examination of the opinion in McCowen v. Pew, 147 Cal. 309, 81 Pac. 958 (the first appeal in this case), that this point was presented and argued by counsel and decided by the court adversely to the contention of the appellants here.

The cause, on said appeal, was first heard in department and the judgment and order in favor of the defendant affirmed. In the department opinion it is said: "One of the contentions on the part of the appellants is, as stated by their counsel 'that the option in this case was merely an offer to sell the property, and that in order to make it a valid contract, capable of specific performance, it was necessary for the defendant Pew, within the time set in the option and before its withdrawal, to accept the offer in the exact terms in which it was made. * * * An acceptance of an offer to purchase the property must be unconditional in order to create a contract, and the slightest condition attached to an attempted acceptance of the option prevents an agreement of the parties.' This contention cannot be maintained"—citing Burks v. Davies, 85 Cal. 110, 24 Pac. 613, 20 Am. St. Rep. 213.

[4] The court in banc reversed the department on one point and so sent the cause back for retrial. The single point upon which the reversal was founded was, as we have before shown, that the trial court erred in its adoption of a basis for the admeasurement of compensation to which the defendant claimed to be entitled because of the removal of the timber from the lands. The question now under consideration was not discussed by the court in its opinion rendered in banc, but it was before the court then as it was before the department. Indeed, it was one of the prominent points urged for a reversal at the hearing of that appeal, and the judgment and order having been reversed on another point, without any reference in the opinion to this point, it must be assumed that the court regarded it as possessing no merit, which is equivalent to saying that the court's decision of the question was against the position here of appellants.

[5] But apart from any consideration of the proposition whether the decisions of the Supreme Court heretofore rendered in this case constitute the law of the case upon this question, we are persuaded that the position of the appellants, as a legal proposition, is altogether untenable.

As has appeared, the plaintiffs granted to the defendant the option to purchase, within 12 months, the lands in dispute. During the life of the option, the plaintiffs cut and removed a large quantity of timber from said lands, and thus, by their own acts, changed the condition of the property from that in which they agreed to permit the defendant to buy it, if he so elected within the time granted to him. Within that time, the defendant did elect to exercise his right to purchase the property according to the terms of the option, and in writing so notified the plaintiffs; but, having been informed of the destruction and removal of a large quantity of timber from said lands after the granting of said option, he demanded of the latter compensation therefor commensurate with the depreciation in value that the property had necessarily suffered thereby. The plaintiffs, as we have seen, acquiesced in the acceptance as it was thus made by the defendant. In other words, as the court found, the "plaintiffs made no objection to the notice of acceptance of option, as so given by defendant, or to his offer to perform on his part, and that they had opportunity so to do if any objections they had; and they did forthwith assent and agree to the same and to all propositions made by defendant in said writing." And thus the plaintiffs distinctly recognized the acceptance thus made by the defendant as an acceptance of the identical option which they had granted to him. And, obviously, such acceptance was of the precise offer by the plaintiffs. The option provided that the plaintiffs would grant the defendant the right to purchase, within 12 months, 1,160 acres of land, specifically described in said offer, at the rate of $15 per acre, and the acceptance declared that the defendant would accept the offer and purchase said 1160 acres, so described, at the rate of $15 per acre. Up to this point, it would and could not be doubted that a court of equity would compel specific performance on the part of either of the parties to this contract. But it transpires that the plaintiffs—the owners of the lands and the optioners—through their own deliberate and unauthorized acts, find themselves unable to perform their agreement in full. By their own acts during the life of the option they have lessened the value of the lands which they agreed to allow the defendant to buy at a specified price. Willing for and desirous of a performance of so much of the agreement as the optioners were able to carry out, the optionee added to his acceptance: "You have despoiled the property which you granted me the option to purchase of some of its valuable timber, which was my chief inducement to the securing of said option, and thus have you reduced the value of the lands. Now, I think it is only just and right that, having elected to buy the property on the stipulated terms, I should be compensated for the value of that timber." To which proposition the plaintiffs assented, and thus, it is argued, a conditional contract or a new agreement, entirely independent of and distinct from the proposition involved in the original negotiations, has been introduced and is relied upon by the defendant. Obviously, the inevitable result of this contention, if sustained, would be, to employ an illustration: That A. may agree to grant to B. an option to buy his house and lot at a specified price within a specified time. A. may get rid of the obligation thus imposed upon himself, or, as might in effect strictly be true, arbitrarily rescind or withdraw the option by wrongfully removing the house from the lot during the life of such option and before it had been accepted.

The proposition as thus stated and contended for cannot be upheld. B., it is very true, might justify a refusal on his part, after acceptance, if he accepted the option with no knowledge of the changed condition of the property through the optioner's own fraud, to take the property; but the optioner certainly could not, upon any equitable consideration, refuse to convey upon acceptance by the optionee, with just and proper compensation to the latter for the part of the agreement which he was thus made unable to perform. In other words, the case here comes clearly within the rule of part performance with compensation for the deficiency as enunciated by section 3386 of the Civil Code, supra, which reads: "Neither party to an obligation can be compelled specifically to perform it, unless the other party thereto has performed, or is compelled specifically to perform, everything to which the former is entitled under the same obligation, either completely or nearly so together with full compensation for any want of entire performance."

The rule is thus stated by Prof. Pomeroy, in his work on Equity Jurisprudence (volume 6, § 831): "Where the vendor is unable even substantially to perform his contract, the vendee, at his election, may have specific performance with compensation for the deficiency, on the principle that 'where one party would be foiled at law, but the other may have the reasonable, substantial effect of his contract, compensation shall be admitted.'"

The cases cited by appellants—notably, Clarke v. Burr, 85 Wis. 649, 55 N. W. 401, and Caldwell v. Frazier, 65 Kan. 24, 68 Pac. 1076—deal with a widely different state of facts from that in the case at bar, and are therefore not in point here.

In the first-mentioned case, Clarke granted to Burr an option to purchase a certain piece of land, upon which a sawmill stood. At the time the option was given, the sawmill was insured for $9,500. The mill was destroyed by fire during the life of the option, and thereafter Burr, within the time designated by the option, notified Clarke of his acceptance of the offer to sell, but demanded that the insurance money be credited to him as a part of the purchase price; that is, that he (Burr) was ready to buy the property for a price amounting to the difference between the sum originally agreed upon and the amount of the insurance on the mill. The court held that the "acceptance" by Burr was not an unconditional acceptance, and therefore constituted the proposal of a different contract from that contemplated by the option, and refused to decree specific performance of the alleged contract.

The case of Caldwell v. Frazier, supra, is quite similar as to the essential facts upon which the decision of the controversy hinged to the case of Clarke v. Burr, supra.

There are several conclusive answers to the contention, pressed with vigor, that these cases are applicable to the case at bar. First, it is to be observed, as we have shown, that there was here no conditional acceptance of the offer. The defendant, in other words, did not accept the offer upon the condition that the price stipulated in the option be reduced, but accepted the offer for the precise price at which the plaintiffs therein offered to sell the lands. The demand for an allowance for the inability of plaintiffs to fully complete the contract to convey arising upon the acceptance of the offer was not, manifestly, a proposition to reduce the price for which they offered the lands, but for compensation for the loss which would accrue to the defendant because it became impossible for plaintiffs to convey to the defendant all that they had offered to convey for the stipulated price. Secondly, the plaintiffs expressly acquiesced in the acceptance and treated and recognized said acceptance as of the precise option which they had granted to the defendant, and thus they waived any objection to the acceptance upon the ground that it varied from the terms of the option. Civ. Code, § 1501; Code Civ. Proc. § 2076; Oakland Bank of Sav. v. Applegarth, 67 Cal. 86, 88, 7 Pac. 139, 476; In re Pearsons, 102 Cal. 569, 36 Pac. 934; Royal v. Dennison, 109 Cal. 558, 42 Pac. 39; Kofoed v. Gordon, 122 Cal. 314, 54 Pac. 1115; Latimer v. Capay Valley L. Co., 137 Cal. 286, 70 Pac. 82. Thirdly, and, indeed, the most important of the considerations distinctly differentiating this case from those cited and referred to, the changed condition of the property, as we have seen, was due entirely and solely to the deliberate and unauthorized acts of the plaintiffs themselves during the life of the option, and it is a familiar principle that no one will be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong. As is shown by the illustration above employed, a party will not be permitted arbitrarily, or at his own will, or by his own acts, or without the consent of the other party thereto, to render his contract nugatory. An option agreement, although in its nature unilateral, is as binding upon the part of the optioner as is a bilateral agreement upon the parties thereto. So long as it is supported by a consideration, the optioner can no more capriciously withdraw or rescind it than one of the parties could arbitrarily or without the consent of the other party rescind a bilateral contract.

[6] And this brings us to a consideration of the only one of the several remaining points to which we feel called upon to give special attention in this opinion, viz., that the option was not supported by a consideration. The obvious answer to this proposition is that the option as an option agreement became functus officio at the moment of its acceptance by the defendant. After that event, in other words, it was eliminated from the transaction as an option, and could then serve no purpose except in so far as it disclosed and involved the terms of the bilateral agreement arising, ipso facto, upon its acceptance, and, therefore, whether it was supported by a consideration is now immaterial. If, as a matter of fact, it was unsupported by a consideration (although the court found to the contrary), it was, of course, then a mere nudum pactum, and the plaintiffs could therefore have withdrawn it at any time before its acceptance. Brown v. S. F. Sav. Union, 134 Cal. 448, 452, 66 Pac. 592, and cases therein cited; Mitchel v. Gray, 8 Cal. App. 423, 429, 97 Pac. 160. But, while this is true, the plaintiffs not having withdrawn it, but, on the contrary, treated it as a binding obligation by acquiescing in its acceptance, it was good without a consideration until so withdrawn.

We have now examined the record before us and the points pressed upon us for a reversal with much care and have thus found no reason which would warrant us in disturbing the judgment.

The defendant having appealed from that portion of the judgment allowing the plaintiffs interest on the amount adjudged to be due them for the property in dispute, which said appeal, No. 882, is pending in this court, the judgment appealed from in the case at bar, except that portion relating to such interest, and the order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

18 Cal. App. 288

PEOPLE v. HARRISON. (Cr. 203.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California, Feb. 21, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 19, 1912.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1166½*)—HARMLESS ERROR — IMPANELING — PEREMPTORY CHALLENGES—REVIEW.

Where accused, required, over his objection and contrary to his request that the jury box be filled, to exercise his peremptory challenges while only eight jurors remained in the box after four had been excused following a voir dire examination, was not prejudiced thereby, the ruling was not reversible error, though in impaneling the jury the better practice does not require either party to exercise a peremptory challenge until there are in the box twelve men, adjudged competent by the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3114-3125; Dec. Dig. § 1166½.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1158*)—FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A finding of the trial court on conflicting evidence on the issue of the competency of a juror is conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3061-3066, 3070, 3071, 3074; Dec. Dig. § 1158.*]

3. JURY (§ 103*)—COMPETENCY OF JURORS—EVIDENCE.

A juror who, on his voir dire, stated that, while he would not be prejudiced against accused merely because of failure to testify as a witness, yet he would go into the jury box with the impression that accused should take the stand, and would arrive at a verdict on less evidence for the prosecution than if defendant testified, but who subsequently stated that he would follow the instructions, was competent, under the rule that a juror entertaining an erroneous impression as to a matter of law, subject to removal by instructions, was not disqualified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 461-479; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

4. JURY (§ 103*)—COMPETENCY OF JURORS—EVIDENCE.

A juror who, on his voir dire, stated that what he had heard led him to believe that he could not give accused, at the beginning of the trial, the presumption of innocence, by reason of which he would require less evidence to prove accused's guilt than if he had heard nothing about the case, but who stated that he could follow the instructions and could act impartially, was not disqualified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 461-479; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

5. WITNESSES (§ 40*) — COMPETENCY — PRESUMPTIONS.

A person 15 years old is presumptively competent to testify.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 97, 98; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

6. WITNESSES (§ 40*)—INCOMPETENCY — BURDEN OF PROOF.

A party, to show that a person 15 years old is incompetent to testify on the ground of unsoundness of mind, must show that the witness is wanting in sufficient intelligence to observe, recollect, and communicate with regard to the occurrences pertaining to the matter concerning which he is called to testify; and, in the absence of evidence of want of a sense of moral responsibility, or of any lack on the part of the witness of the recognition of a duty to testify according to her recollections and knowledge, the witness may properly be held competent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 97, 98; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

7. WITNESSES (§ 39*)—APPEAL—RULINGS ON COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES—REVIEW.

Though, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 1, the ruling of the trial court on the competency of a witness, alleged by a party to be incompetent on the ground of mental unsoundness, is reviewable, the determination of the question by the trial court is almost wholly in its discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 96; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

8. WITNESSES (§ 77*) — COMPETENCY — PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

A court, required to determine the condition of mind of a witness at the time of his production for examination, may examine the witness, and from such examination determine the competency of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 195-200; Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

9. TRIAL (§ 50*) — COMPETENCY — QUESTION FOR COURT.

The question of the mental competency of a witness is for the trial court; and it may, in its discretion, excuse the jury while hearing the preliminary testimony on the issue of competency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 122; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

10. WITNESSES (§ 327*)—MENTAL COMPETENCY—DECISION OF COURT—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where the court ruled that a witness was mentally competent to testify, the exclusion of evidence of a prior mental condition of the witness was proper, especially where the evidence related to the mental condition some two years preceding the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1101, 1102; Dec. Dig. § 327.*]

11. WITNESSES (§ 327*)—IMPEACHMENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2051, 2052, prescribing the modes for impeaching a witness, a witness adjudged mentally competent by the court may not be impeached by proof of his mental condition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1101, 1102; Dec. Dig. § 327.*]

12. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 542*)—TESTIMONY OF DECEASED WITNESS—ADMISSIBILITY.

The mere fact that the preliminary examinations of defendant and codefendant, sepaately charged with a like offense, were held at the same time, at which part of the testimony of a witness, since deceased, related to the charge against defendant, and a part concerned the charge against codefendant, did not deprive the prosecution of its right, on the trial of defendant, to introduce, as authorized by Pen. Code, § 686, such parts of the testimony of the deceased witness as constituted competent evidence against defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1232, 1236; Dec. Dig. § 542.*]

13. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL TO GIVE INSTRUCTIONS COVERED BY THE CHARGE GIVEN.

Where the instructions fairly and fully stated the law, it was not error to refuse requested instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Ed Harrison was convicted of statutory rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 13 Cal. App. 555, 110 Pac. 345.

H. T. Miller, J. R. Dorsey, and Thomas Scott, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. Defendant was convicted upon an information charging him with statutory rape. He appeals from the judgment and an order of the court denying his motion for a new trial.

As grounds for reversal, numerous errors are assigned, very few of which, however, merit other than general notice.

[1] In impaneling the jury to try the case, 12 men were called to the jury box, and, following their examination upon voir dire, 4 were excused, upon the ground that they were disqualified. Without calling others to take the place of those so excused, and with the jury box containing only 8 qualified jurors, defendant, over his objection and contrary to his request that the box be filled, was required to exercise his peremptory challenges. In so ruling, it is claimed the court erred. The Code does not specify the particular stage of the proceedings when a peremptory challenge shall be interposed to an objectionable juror, and, so far as we are advised, the Supreme Court has announced no rule applicable to the facts here presented. Under these circumstances, we are not inclined to hold that the court erred particularly as it is not made to appear that defendant was in any wise prejudiced by such ruling. It has been held that in the impaneling of a jury to try a civil action neither party can be required to exercise his peremptory challenges until there shall be found in the box 12 men, whom the court shall adjudge to be competent and qualified jurors. People v. Scoggins, 37 Cal. 679; Taylor v. Western Pac. R. R. Co., 45 Cal. 323, 330. The reasoning of the court given in the latter case in support of the rule is equally applicable in support of a like rule in impaneling a jury in a criminal case; and we think the usual and better practice in criminal cases is to follow the rule there announced. Indeed, such we understand to be the prevailing practice in the courts of this state.

Defendant interposed challenges for cause to Mr. McLees and Mr. Buckmaster, who were called as jurors. Both challenges were denied; whereupon both proposed jurors were excused upon peremptory challenges made by defendant, who, prior to the completion of the jury, exhausted the ten peremptory challenges allowed him. Appellant contends the effect of the ruling, since he was compelled to exercise two of his peremptory challenges in eliminating the two jurors who, it is claimed, should have been excused for cause, was to deprive him of the use of two challenges, thus contracting the number to which he was entitled; and that the alleged error was not cured, notwithstanding the fact that he did not offer to exercise peremptory challenges to which he was not entitled, or otherwise indicate dissatisfaction with the jury, or any member thereof, as it was completed. In support of this contention, he directs our attention to People v. Weil, 40 Cal. 268, and People v. Helm, 152 Cal. 532, 93 Pac. 99, which cases were followed by this court in deciding the case at bar on a former appeal. People v. Harrison, 13 Cal. App. 555, 110 Pac. 345. The Helm Case differs from this, in that it was shown by the record therein that defendant, after exhausting his peremptory challenges, was, by the ruling of the court, compelled to accept a juror whom he had challenged for cause. In its opinion, however, the court said: "It makes no difference in this respect that no challenges for cause were interposed by defendant to any jurors called to the box after the exhaustion of his peremptory challenges had been forced by the improper rulings of the court upon his challenges for cause. It may often happen that a juror most obnoxious to a defendant may successfully pass examination upon his voir dire. That examination may disclose no ground for the interposition of a challenge for cause. Yet there may be some reason known to the defendant which would make it most prejudicial to him that the juror should be retained. Even more, the right to exercise peremptory challenges is absolute. Such a challenge may be exercised upon the mere whim or caprice of defendant, so that again we say that any rulings of a court which compel a defendant to exhaust his peremptory challenges and force him to accept jurors after his challenges have been so exhausted become the proper subject of review." As against what was there said, we are confronted by the decision in the case of People v. Schafer, 119 Pac. 920. If the challenges for cause interposed to McLees and Buckmaster were erroneously denied, and defendant exhausted his peremp-tory challenges in relieving himself of these and other objectionable jurors before the jury was complete, all of which was done in this case, then, under the former decision on appeal in the case at bar (People v. Harrison, supra), the ruling was prejudicial error, subject to review without interposing challenges for cause to jurors thereafter called to the box, or other expression of dissatisfaction with the jury. Under the rule, however, announced in this later case, alleged error in denying a challenge for cause is not subject to review under the circumstances here shown, unless it be made to further appear that defendant in some appropriate manner expressed his dissatisfaction with the jury as completed. Following this case, we might dismiss the discussion by stating that, notwithstanding the fact that defendant exhausted his peremptory challenges in getting rid of jurors who should have been excused for cause, the record fails to disclose facts entitling him to a review of the alleged error. Inasmuch, however, as what was said by this court on the former appeal was well calculated to have misled counsel as to the steps necessary to be taken in order to obtain a review of the alleged error, and the question arising as to whether or not that decision as to the point involved does not constitute the rule of procedure in the subsequent trial, as to which fact, however, the justices of this court are unable to agree, we deem it proper to pass upon the alleged error of the court in denying the challenges for cause.

[2, 3] The objection to the qualification of the proposed juror Buckmaster was based upon the fact that on his voir dire examination he stated that, while he would not be prejudiced against defendant's case if he failed to take the stand as a witness, and that such failure would not, in his mind, relieve the prosecution of establishing defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, nevertheless he felt that he should take the stand, and if accepted as a juror he would go into the box with that impression, and would arrive at a verdict on less evidence for the prosecution than if defendant was a witness in his own behalf. Not only does it appear that there was a conflict in the evidence, upon which the finding of the court must be deemed conclusive (People v. Riggins, 159 Cal. 113, 112 Pac. 862), but the witness further stated on cross-examination that, notwithstanding his feeling, if the court instructed him that it was the right of the defendant not to go on the witness stand, and that the fact of his refusal to testify should not be considered in reaching a verdict, he would and could without difficulty follow such instruction. The fact that the juror entertained an erroneous impression as to a matter of law, subject to removal by an instruction of the court, did not disqualify him, particularly when it was made to appear that as to such question he would be guided by the court's instructions.

[4] The evidence as to the state of mind of Mr. McLees was likewise conflicting. While he had talked to two or three persons, not jurors or witnesses, about the case, such persons did not pretend to state to him any of the particulars or facts regarding the same, or attempt to give him any of the details thereof, and he entertained no opinion or impression as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and his condition of mind was such that he would be willing to be tried by a juror feeling as he did. He further testified that "what he had heard here" (presumably at the trial) led him to believe that he could not clothe the defendant, at the inception of the trial, with the presumption of innocence, by reason whereof he stated it would require less evidence to prove defendant's guilt than if he had heard nothing about the case; that, notwithstanding such impression, he was quite certain that he could follow the instructions of the court as to the law which should govern the case, and, if accepted as a juror, he would do so, and was of opinion that he could act impartially and fairly in the case. As said in discussing the qualification of Buckmaster, the evidence is not only conflicting, but any impression existing in the mind of the proposed juror was due to an erroneous idea with reference to the presumption of innocence with which the law clothes a defendant at the inception of his trial, and as to which the juror stated he would be guided by the instructions of the court.

[5, 6] Defendant objected to the prosecutrix, Ruth Florence Sturtevant, testifying, upon the ground that she was of unsound mind, and, as a witness, therefore incompetent under the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 1880, Code of Civil Procedure. A preliminary examination was had, from which the jury, over defendant's objection, was excluded, and at which hearing a physician was called by defendant as an expert witness, and whose testimony tended to show that the prosecutrix was of unsound mind, in that, according to his opinion, she had not sufficient mentality to record events in her memory and correctly and truthfully relate and recount them. After the giving of his testimony, the witness herself, over defendant's objection, was examined upon her voir dire, after which the court determined that she was competent. Error is predicated upon each of these rulings. The witness was 15 years of age and, under the law, presumed to be competent. It devolved upon defendant to prove her incompetent. In order to do this, it must be made to appear by the record that the witness was wanting in sufficient intelligence to observe, recollect, and communicate with regard to occurrences pertaining to the matter concerning which she was called to testify. The law, however, does not undertake to fix any standard of intelligence or capacity in this regard, but leaves its determination almost wholly to the discretion of the trial court. The testimony of the witness upon the preliminary examination, as disclosed by the record, shows that she possessed capacity mentally to understand the nature of questions put to her and give intelligent answers thereto. This contradicts the opinion entertained by the physician. There is no evidence tending to show a want of a sense of moral responsibility, or any lack on the part of the witness of a recognition of a duty to make her answers correspond to her recollection and knowledge of the events as to which she was called upon to testify; hence the existence of this element of competency must be presumed.

[7] While the ruling of the court upon an objection to the competency of a witness, made under subdivision 1 of section 1880, Code of Civil Procedure, is subject to review, and in this respect differs from like rulings upon objections to the competency of children under 10 years of age (subdivision 2, § 1880, supra), which rulings are not reviewable, nevertheless, from the nature of the case and the fact that the law fixes no standard whereby to measure the competency of a witness alleged to be of unsound mind, the determination of the question is almost wholly in the discretion of the trial judge. Wigmore on Evidence, § 496. Indeed, we have been unable to find any decision where such ruling has been disturbed.

[8] While appellant claims that the court erred in permitting an examination of the witness upon voir dire, he cites no authorities in support of the proposition. It seems clear to us that such an examination affords the very best evidence upon which to determine the question. The degree or kind of imbecility might be such as to render a witness wholly incompetent to testify upon one subject, and at the same time fully competent to testify as to another matter. Moreover, the question to be determined is the condition of mind of the witness "at the time of his production for examination," which would seem to imply an examination of the witness himself.

[9] The determination of the question of the competency of the witness was a matter solely for the trial judge. "Whether there be any evidence or not is a question for the judge; whether it is sufficient evidence is a question for the jury." Thompson on Trials, vol. 1, § 318. The jury were in no wise concerned with the question of its competency; hence the court, in the exercise of its discretion, very properly excluded it from the hearing of the evidence required in the determination of a question purely of law. "Everything having a tendency to prejudice or influence a jury in their deliberations, which is not legally admissible in evidence on the trial of the cause, should be, so far as possible, kept from coming to their knowledge during the trial." Thompson on Trials

vol. 1, § 687. We find nothing in the authorities cited by appellant wherein the courts have gone further than to hold that the examination must be made in public and in the presence of the accused.

[10, 11] After the court had ruled that the prosecuting witness was competent to testify, and after her testimony had been received, defendant, as a part of his case, called a physician as a witness, by whom he proposed to show the condition of the girl's mind as he found it at a period some two years preceding the time when she was produced as a witness. The court sustained an objection to the proffered evidence, and error is predicated upon this ruling. The declared purpose of the evidence was to show that the prosecutrix was incompetent some two years prior to the time when she testified. In no event could the proffered evidence be received. The court had properly ruled upon the competency of the witness attacked; moreover, the evidence offered by defendant did not relate to the question of her mental condition at the time when she testified, but to a period long anterior thereto. Neither could it be admitted for the purpose of impeachment, for the reason that it is not one of the modes prescribed by statute (sections 2051, 2052, Code Civ. Proc.) for impeaching a witness.

[12] Upon proof of the death of a witness who had testified at the preliminary examination, a transcript of his testimony, in so far as it was pertinent and related to the charge against defendant, was received in evidence. It appears that defendant and one Webb Edwards were each separately charged with a like offense, committed upon the prosecutrix about the same time and under the same surroundings. By stipulation, it was agreed that the preliminary examination in both cases should be held at the same time and together, and that the evidence introduced should be considered as evidence in each case. The mere fact that the preliminary examinations were held at the same time, at which a part of the evidence given by the deceased witness related to the charge against Edwards, and a part thereof was concerning the offense charged against defendant herein, did not deprive the prosecution of its right, under section 686, Penal Code, to introduce such parts of the deposition as constituted competent evidence upon the trial of defendant.

Numerous errors are predicated upon the rulings of the court in admitting evidence of what appear to be isolated and immaterial facts. In support of this contention, defendant directs our attention to People v. Edwards, 13 Cal. App. 551, 110 Pac. 342, the judgment and order in which case were reversed, upon the ground of the admission of evidence relating to incidents and transactions connected with an offense with which the defendant in that case was not charged. It was said there that "the major portion of the record is taken up with an account of a rape committed by the male companion of defendant upon the prosecuting witness." In that respect, this transcript presents an entirely different case. We find no error in the rulings of the court in admitting evidence which, upon this record, could prejudice the rights of defendant.

[13] The court refused to give several instructions requested by defendant, the subject-matter of some of which had been covered by instructions elsewhere given. An examination of these rulings discloses no ground for complaint. The jury was fully and fairly instructed as to the law which should govern their consideration of the evidence in arriving at a verdict.

Mindful of the gravity of the offense charged and the severity of the judgment resulting from defendant's conviction, we have fully and carefully examined other alleged errors presented, but are unable to discover wherein any of the rulings complained of could by any possibility have prejudiced the substantial rights of defendant.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

I concur: JAMES, J.

ALLEN, P. J. I concur in the judgment. The record disclosing no reviewable error in denying the challenge of jurors for cause renders unnecessary any discussion of the question which would be involved, had the action of the trial court resulted in restricting defendant's right of peremptory challenge conferred by statute.

(18 Cal. App. 330)

DEMING et al. v. MAAS et al. (Civ. 897.)
(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 23, 1912.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 45*)—EVIDENCE OF SURETYSHIP.

Evidence, in an action against a lessee and the surety on a bond given to secure payment of the rent, held to sustain a finding that the surety intended to, and did, bind himself personally as surety on the bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

2. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 161*)—ACTIONS AGAINST SURETY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—MODIFICATION OF CONTRACT.

Evidence, in an action against a lessee and his surety on a bond for payment of rent, held to sustain a finding that the surety personally assented to the modification of the lease so as not to be discharged as surety.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 439-441; Dec. Dig. § 161.*]

3. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 101*)—RELEASE OF SURETY—ALTERATION OF OBLIGATION.

A surety is released from liability by any material alteration of the contract made without his consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 169-180; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 416*)—REPRESENTATION—SURETYSHIP—ALTERATION OF OBLIGATION—CONSENT.

Where defendant owned all but 5 of the 1,000 shares of the corporation whose name was signed to a surety bond securing the payment of rent to plaintiff under a lease to another, the 5 shares being owned by the directors merely to enable them to qualify as such, and defendant really intended to be bound on the bond, the written consent of the corporation through defendant to change the terms of the lease bound defendant as surety; defendant virtually being the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1623-1625; Dec. Dig. § 416.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by Mary A. Deming and another against Louis Maas and Joseph Herrscher. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a motion for a new trial, Herrscher appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. P. Sweeney, for appellant. Gavin McNab and Bronte M. Aikins, for respondents.

HART, J. The plaintiffs brought this action against the defendants to recover the sum of $525 for rent alleged to be due said plaintiffs. The action was tried by the court, without a jury, and the plaintiffs were given judgment in the sum of $575.31. From said judgment and the order denying him a new trial, the defendant Herrscher prosecutes this appeal.

The action is founded on a certain bond, of which more hereafter. It appears from the complaint that on or about the 25th day of March, 1907, by a written lease, bearing date March 23, 1907, the plaintiffs demised and delivered into the possession of the defendant Maas certain premises situated in the city of San Francisco, for a period of five years from the 1st day of April, 1907, at the total rent or sum of $14,000, payable in advance in equal monthly payments. At the same time, and as a part of the same transaction, the defendant Herrscher executed and delivered to the plaintiffs a bond, "conditioned, among other things, upon the payment of all rents and sums of money as set forth in said lease." On the 11th day of December, 1907, the terms of the lease above mentioned were so modified as that the rent was reduced for the year beginning with the 15th day of December, 1907, to the total sum of $2,100, etc. The complaint alleges that the defendant Herrscher assented to said alteration of said lease. The bond referred to was signed and executed by Louis Maas and "Jos. Herrscher & Co." The agreement modifying or altering the terms of the lease, as indicated, was subscribed and executed by the plaintiffs and "For Jos. Herrscher Co., Inc., Jos. Herrscher." This action having been instituted against Jos. Herrscher, individually, the amended complaint thus explains the circumstances under which the appellant came to subscribe to the bond a name implying such subscription to be that of a partnership, and to the agreement, modifying the terms of the lease, signed a name implying that such subscription was that of a corporation: "That said Joseph Herrscher subscribed the said bond in the form and manner following, to wit, 'Jos. Herrscher & Co.,' and that the said signature 'Jos. Herrscher & Co.' was then and there the individual trade-name, firm, and style of said Joseph Herrscher, and was appropriated and used by him exclusively as such trade-name, firm, and style, and that he signed the said bond in the form and manner aforesaid with the intention of binding himself by such signature, and that it was mutually understood by and between the plaintiffs and the said Herrscher that he and he alone was intended to be designated by such trade-name, firm, and style, and that plaintiffs signed and delivered the said lease upon the faith of such mutual understanding; and that said Herrscher at the time of signing said bond well knew that plaintiffs so understood said signature by said Herrscher, and said Herrscher well knew at the time of the delivery of said lease that the plaintiffs delivered the said lease upon the faith of such mutual understanding. That 'Jos. Herrscher Co., Inc.,' is and at all times herein referred to was a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California; and that said Herrscher at all of said times owned and held, and now owns and holds, the entire capital stock of said corporation, except five shares thereof, which said five shares are held in the names of the directors of such corporation as qualifying shares merely to qualify them holders thereof as directors of said corporation." The answer denies that "Joseph Herrscher & Co. was at any time the individual trade-name, firm, and style of said Joseph Herrscher, or that he signed the said bond with the intention of binding himself by such signature," and denies that Herrscher, "as surety, or otherwise, assented to the alteration in said lease." The court found that "said Joseph Herrscher subscribed the said bond in the form and manner following: 'Jos. Herrscher & Co.,' and that the said signature, 'Jos. Herrscher & Co.,' was then and there the individual trade-name, firm, and style of said Joseph Herrscher, and was appropriated and used by him exclusively as such trade-name, firm, and style, and that he signed the said bond in the form and manner aforesaid with the intention of binding himself by such signature, and that it was mutually understood by and between the plaintiffs and the said Herrscher that he and he alone was intended to be designated by such trade-name, firm, and style, and that plaintiffs signed and delivered said lease upon the faith of such mutual understanding," etc. The court further found that the plaintiffs, at the express request of said Herrscher and without further consideration, agreed to and did reduce the rent reserved in said lease; that said Herrscher, by signing the writing noting the alteration in said lease, as follows, "For Jos. Herrscher Co., Inc., Jos. Herrscher," assented, as surety upon said bond, to the alteration in said lease; that "Jos. Herrscher Co., Inc., is and at all times herein referred to was a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California; and that said Herrscher at all of said times owned and held, and now owns and holds, the entire capital stock of said corporation, except five shares thereof, which said five shares are held in the names of the directors of such corporation as qualifying shares, namely to qualify them holders thereof as directors of said corporation."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1, 2] The contention is that the foregoing findings are not justified by the evidence. In other words, the appellant asserts: (1) That the evidence does not show that Herrscher intended to bind himself by said bond or that he did do so. (2) That if he did thus personally bind himself, there is no evidence which supports the finding that he assented to the modification of the lease, to secure the fulfillment of the terms of which the bond was given.

We are unable to agree with the appellant's contention. The evidence sufficiently supports the findings referred to. The entire transaction seems, indeed, to have been one conducted and consummated between the appellant and the lessors. Maas, it would seem, was only nominally interested in the lease. However that may be, the court was justified in finding from the evidence that Herrscher not only intended to bind himself personally by the bond, but did do so, and later personally assented to a modification of the terms thereof by subscribing to the written instrument containing terms to that effect. And it is quite clear, from all the circumstances of the several transactions, that Earsman, the agent of plaintiffs, who conducted the negotiations on their behalf, was given to understand by Herrscher that his purpose was to bind himself personally as surety for the payment of the rent.

Earsman testified that he first heard of the appellant and not of Maas as the party desiring to lease the premises. He called upon Herrscher, talked with him about the property and the leasing thereof, and then accompanied him to the premises so that he (Herrscher) might inspect the same. Herrscher "was the only man I dealt with in renting this place to Maas," he testified. "I discussed the terms with Herrscher and agreed upon them. He was to be surety for the tenant, Louis Maas, who was an employé of his, and his name was used to fill in. I was told this by Herrscher and Maas. I told them before the execution of the lease and the bond that I would not lease the premises unless a bond was given. I gave the keys to Mr. Herrscher about the end of August." Earsman prepared the lease and the bond, and when he presented the last-mentioned document to Herrscher for his signature, the name of the surety being, so he testified, left blank in the body of the instrument, the latter instructed him to insert in said blank in said bond the name, "Jos. Herrscher & Co." The appellant at one time had a partner, but he told Earsman, at the time of the execution of the bond, that said partner had withdrawn from the firm. After the execution of the bond, Herrscher paid the balance of the rent, $190, for the month of March, 1907; said rent being payable in advance.

The witness Landis, bookkeeper for the Joseph Herrscher Company for five years up to the time of the trial, testified that said company (a corporation) consisted principally of the appellant. There were, he said, 1,000 shares of stock in said company, and all those shares but 5 were owned by Herrscher. The witness himself and 4 others (members of Herrscher's family) each owned a share, having acquired the same for the sole purpose of qualifying them as directors. "I recollect," he further testified, "Mr. Earsman bringing papers to Mr. Herrscher at Church and Market streets." He further stated that, "as bookkeeper for Mr. Herrscher, he received the rents from the building (on the premises in question) after they were collected and credited them on the books. Mr. Maas was in Mr. Herrscher's employ at that time as salesman."

Maas, the nominal lessee, testifying as a witness for appellant, declared: "I was an employé of Joseph Herrscher at that time (referring to the time of the making of the lease and bond). I signed that document (the lease) at the request of Mr. Herrscher. * * * My interest at first was this: I negotiated for the lease with the consent that Mr. Herrscher would go on my bonds. I was not to have any interest in the premises more than my rental interest in it—that is, in subrenting the premises. I was not to receive anything from that in addition to my salary as working for Herrscher. I was to receive no share in the profits. * * * I never received any rents. Mr. Herrscher negotiated for the reduction of the original rent asked. * * * Mr. Herrscher was the one who decided the terms of the contract with regard to the amount of rent and with regard to everything I left it entirely to Mr. Herrscher."

The appellant testified that "there is a corporation in which I am interested, known as 'Jos. Herrscher & Co.' That was in existence at the time this lease and bond were executed. Nothing was said about the corporation going on the bond. When the lease and bond were presented to me with the name 'Jos. Herrscher & Co.' written in, I called Mr. Earsman's attention to that fact. He said that the lease (bond?) was already made out

'Jos. Herrscher & Co.'—never mind—for me to sign exactly as he had written it out on top, which I did, signed it exactly as he told me to sign it. There was no such firm as Joseph Herrscher & Co. in existence."

The foregoing statement of the evidence, in substance, is, we think, sufficient to show that the court was justified in not only finding that the appellant intended to bind himself personally to the obligations of the bond, but that he did do so, and, further, that he not only personally assented to a modification of the terms of the lease, but that such alteration was brought about solely through his own negotiations with plaintiffs.

If any doubt could arise from the testimony produced by plaintiffs upon the question whether appellant intended to and did personally bind himself on the bond, that doubt is certainly removed by his own admissions. He testified, as seen, that nothing was said about the corporation going on the bond and that there was no partnership known as "Jos. Herrscher & Co." in existence when the transaction took place. He signed the bond in the name of a partnership which had no existence, but in doing so signed his own name. The circumstances under which he subscribed that name to the bond clearly disclose his intention, for had he intended to thus bind the corporation and not himself in his individual capacity, he would undoubtedly have so announced and refused to subscribe either his individual name or that of a partnership having no existence when the instrument was submitted to him for his signature and execution. At least this would have been the natural and sensible course of a sensible and honest business man having no intention of binding himself as an individual and who was acting in good faith in the transaction. Another circumstance of potent significance bearing upon the question of his intention is the fact, not disputed, that he was interested in the lease—indeed, if not in reality the sole lessee, he was a joint lessee with Maas. It is quite reasonable to suppose from this fact that he would be perfectly willing and, in truth, intended to bind himself personally for the rent reserved in a lease in which he was more vitally interested than any other person, except, perhaps, the lessors. But the very fact itself that he signed the bond is sufficient to bind him, whatever may have been his intention, notwithstanding that in signing the bond he unnecessarily added the words "& Co." to his own name. If, as he testified, there was no partnership in existence by the name of "Joseph Herrscher & Co." then the words thus added to his name as subscribed to the bond were superfluous and surplusage, are perfectly meaningless and without legal or any significance as so employed, and can therefore in no way operate to release him from personal liability on the bond.

Nor, under the evidence, can the plea that, because the instrument changing the terms of the lease was subscribed by the appellant as "Jos. Herrscher Co., Inc.," he successfully set up in support of the position that he did not personally assent to such modification.

[3] No one will dispute the very obvious proposition that a guarantor is released from liability by any material alteration of the terms of the contract guaranteed, where such alteration is made without his consent.

[4] But we think that it appears very clearly from the evidence that Herrscher consented to the change in the terms of the lease involved here. In the first place, it is to be noted, in this connection, that the proof shows that Herrscher was himself, practically, the corporation. He owned all but 5 of the 1,000 shares of stock for which the corporation was capitalized, and the shares thus otherwise owned had been given or transferred to the holders thereof for the single purpose of completing the machinery essential to the operation of the corporation. Under these circumstances, the subscription of the corporation's name to the writing effecting the alteration in the terms of the lease was at one and the same time both the act of the corporation and his act as an individual. Being practically owner of all the stock, he was virtually the corporation itself, or, as the cases put it, the corporation was his "corporate double." Relley v. Campbell, 134 Cal. 175, 66 Pac. 220; Rutz v. Obeary, 15 Cal. App. 436, 115 Pac. 67.

That, in point of fact, the appellant did personally consent to the modification of the lease, is a proposition that offers no possible pretext for debate. Maas testified, as we have shown, that Herrscher was the person most vitally interested in the lease. In fact, Maas said that he himself had no real interest in the lease and that Herrscher was the actual lessee. The latter addressed a letter (over the signature of the corporation, or, to speak more accurately, over his corporate name) to the agent of the lessors, asking for a reduction of the rent, and eventually, after further negotiations, succeeded in having the rent lowered. For the corporation he signed the agreement changing the lease in that regard. Manifestly, under these circumstances, it would be absurd to say that, as the corporation, he consented to the alteration, but that, as an individual, he did not. In other words, he was himself, to borrow a colloquialism, the "body, breeches, and soul" of the corporation, that is, the two were so inseparably linked together that the corporation could do no business or perform no act within the scope of its authority without such business or such act being solely for and that of Herrscher himself, and, having, as seen, personally conducted all the negotiations for himself as the corporation, it would certainly involve a palpable as well as a ridiculous solecism, in the irresistible logic of the situation as it is disclosed by the circumstances presented here, to say that both he and the corporation did not at one and the same time, as one and the same act, agree to a modification of the lease that would and did result in lessening, in a ratio equal to the extent of the reduction of the rent, the burden of his or its (in whatever gender it may please him to say that he assumed the obligation) liability on the bond guaranteeing the payment of the stipulated rent.

But we need consider the evidence in detail in this opinion no further. It is sufficient to say, generally, in concluding upon the question whether the findings essential to the support of the judgment are justified by the evidence, that the record is pregnant with circumstances and statements, to some of which we have not specifically adverted here, showing very clearly that the appellant personally executed the bond, personally assented to the alteration of the lease, and is therefore personally compellable under the obligation so assumed to execute, and make good the indemnity for which he thus became personally responsible.

It is further objected that the court committed error seriously prejudicing the rights of the appellant by admitting in evidence the bond to which the name of "Joseph Herrscher & Co." was subscribed and the written instrument modifying the lease, whereby the rent was reduced. The objection to these documents was based upon the general grounds that they were irrelevant, immaterial and incompetent. The court made no mistake in receiving these instruments in evidence, as must be apparent from the conclusion at which we have arrived as to their legal effect upon the parties to this action.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

18 Cal. App. 298

DU BOIS et al. v. PADGHAM. (Civ. 871.)
(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
California. Feb. 21, 1912.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 230*)—SALE OF INTEREST BY PARTNER TO COPARTNER—CONTRACT TO REFRAIN FROM SIMILAR BUSINESS—VALIDITY.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1673-1675, authorizing a seller of the good will of his business to agree to refrain from carrying on a similar business within a specified county, city, or part thereof, and providing that partners may, on dissolution, agree that none of them will carry on a similar business within the same city or town where the firm business has been transacted, a partner selling his interest in a firm transacting business in a city he may contract to refrain from carrying on a similar business in the city or town, but a restriction of his right to carry on business may not extend to additional territory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 477½; Dec. Dig. § 230.*]

2. PARTNERSHIP (§ 242*)—SALE OF PARTNER'S INTEREST—COMPETITION—COMPLAINT.

A complaint in an action for a breach of contract binding a partner selling his interest in a firm not to engage in similar business, which alleges that the firm published a directory in a city in which its office was located, and also directories in other places in the county, and that the partner entered into the publication of a directory in the county and solicited advertising therefor, and in the same field where plaintiffs were engaged in a similar business, and were exercising the good will purchased from the partner, does not state a cause of action, though the contract is construed to bind the partner not to engage in such business within the city, since there is no allegation that he has entered into such business in such city.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 500-508; Dec. Dig. § 242.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 34*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

A pleading must be construed most strongly against the pleader.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 66-75; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

4. PARTNERSHIP (§ 242*)—SALE BY PARTNER OF INTEREST IN FIRM—CONTRACT NOT TO ENGAGE IN SIMILAR BUSINESS—ACTIONS—PARTIES.

Where a partner sold his interest in a firm to the copartner, and agreed not to engage in a similar business, and the copartner subsequently sold such interest to a third person, the copartner and the third person were proper parties plaintiff in an action against the partner for damages for breach of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 500-508; Dec. Dig. § 242.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by Cecil Du Bois and another against L. H. Padgham. From a judgment for defendant rendered on sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Dick Foye Harding and R. P. Congdon, for appellants. Scarborough & Forgy, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The court sustained defendant's demurrer to the second amended complaint, interposed upon the grounds of failure to state a cause of action, misjoinder of parties, and uncertainty therein; and, plaintiffs declining to further amend their complaint, judgment was rendered against them, from which they appeal upon the judgment roll.

The complaint shows that Du Bois and defendant were copartners in the business of publishing a directory in the city of Santa Ana, in Orange county, their office and location of business being in the Rossmore Hotel building in said city; that the business so conducted consisted of the "preparation of matter for the issuance, publication, distribution, and sale of a certain book and publication known as the directory of the city of Santa Ana, and other and similar publications in other places in Orange county, including the sale of said book and books, and the soliciting of persons and corporations for professional cards, business advertisements, and any and all forms of advertising matter, and the receiving of remuneration for the space occupied in said publications thereby; and that the principal value of said business was, and its principal asset consisted of, the good will thereof;" that on January 11, 1910, defendant, in consideration of $250 paid to him by Du Bois, sold his interest in the business to the latter, and executed an agreement as follows: "For value received, I hereby transfer to Cecil Du Bois all my right, title and interest in the directory and advertising business, now being conducted in the Rossmore Hotel building, the said Cecil Du Bois to assume all indebtedness and contracts for advertising. I, L. H. Padgham, agree to not enter into the publishing of directories in Orange county, unless said Cecil Du Bois abandons the business, or sells out to me or a partner of mine." On February 21, 1910, Du Bois sold and transferred to Thurston, his coplaintiff, a "one-half interest in all of said property formerly transferred to him by said L. H. Padgham, including an undivided one-half interest in the good will of said business"; that thereafter, as copartners, up to the time of the filing of the complaint, they conducted the same; that on or about February 15, 1910, which was before commencing the action, defendant, in violation of the terms of said agreement, "entered into the publication of a directory in said Orange county, and then and there and since has solicited advertising therefor" in the same territory where plaintiffs were likewise engaged, all to the damage of plaintiffs in the sum of $300.

[1] Section 1673, Civil Code, provides that every contract whereby one is restrained from exercising a lawful business is void, unless made pursuant to the provisions of sections 1674 and 1675 of said Code. At the time of the purchase by Du Bois, he and the defendant were copartners in the business. The right of a partner to make a contract in restraint of business is limited by the provisions of section 1675, which provides: "Partners may, upon or in anticipation of a dissolution of the partnership, agree that none of them will carry on a similar business within the same city or town where the partnership business has been transacted, or within a specified part thereof." The sale necessarily worked a dissolution of the partnership, and was, therefore, made in anticipation of such dissolution. While under section 1674, Civil Code, one other than a copartner may, where he sells the good will of a business, make a valid agreement to refrain from carrying on a similar business to that sold within a specified county or city, the territorial limits as to which a partner may by contract so restrict himself is, under section 1675, limited to a city or town. The restriction as to one must not exceed the territorial limits of the county, whereas as to the other it must not exceed the territorial limits of a city or town.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[2] Defendant's contract was not limited to any city or town, but by its terms he agreed not to enter into a business similar to that sold in Orange county. Even if it be conceded that, in order to render it valid, the contract should be limited in territorial extent to the city of Santa Ana (which question we do not decide), it does not appear from the complaint that defendant committed a breach of the contract by publishing any directories in the city of Santa Ana, it being alleged he "entered into the publication of a directory in said Orange county, and solicited advertising therefor, and in the same field and territory where plaintiffs were engaged in a similar business, and were exercising the good will purchased from said defendant as aforesaid." Such allegation is wholly consistent with the fact that such publication was made and advertising therefor solicited in other parts of the county than the city of Santa Ana, the exclusive right to all of which territory, as against defendant, plaintiffs claimed under the terms of the contract.

[3] A pleading must be construed most strongly against the pleader, and so construed, the complaint fails to state a cause of action. Any other view than that here expressed would render the complaint clearly uncertain; so that whichever theory be adopted the conclusion of the trial court was correct.

[4] Thurston was a proper party plaintiff. Johnston v. Blanchard, 116 Pac. 973.

It is unnecessary to discuss other points presented, further than to state that the affirmation of the judgment renders it unnecessary to pass upon respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal.

The motion is therefore dismissed, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

18 Cal. App. 264

FITZPATRICK v. NORTH AMERICAN ACCIDENT INS. CO. (Civ. 908.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 16, 1912.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 622*)—LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—VALIDITY OF PROVISION.

An unambiguous provision in an accident insurance policy requiring actions on the policy to be brought within one year after the accident is valid, and bars an action brought 13 months after an accident causing death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1544-1556; Dec. Dig. § 622.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 623*)—LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ESTOPPEL.

An insurer is not estopped from relying on a provision of the policy limiting the time within which to bring action on the ground that it caused the delay, where it has merely insisted on a strict compliance with the requirements of the policy, as to the time for furnishing proofs of death, where the proofs were made within the time required leaving ample time within which to bring the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1543, 1551-1553; Dec. Dig. § 623.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Millie Fitzpatrick against the North American Accident Insurance Company. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George Ingraham, for appellant. J. Rollin Fitch, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action upon a policy of accident insurance issued by the defendant on May 13, 1908, in favor of Roger Fitzpatrick, the husband of plaintiff. On January 23, 1909, the insured died as the result of injuries received on the 18th day of January, 1909. The defendant refused payment, and the plaintiff commenced her suit to recover on the policy on February 16, 1910, nearly 13 months from the date of the receipt of the injury resulting in the death of the insured.

The policy (which is attached to the complaint and made a part thereof) provides that the defendant shall be notified in writing, within 10 days, of any injury to the insured covered by the policy; that proof of claim must be made within 2 months after the death or end of the disability; and that suit thereon must be brought within 12 months from the date of the accident. To the complaint setting forth the facts of the case defendant interposed a general demurrer, which was sustained on the ground that the cause of action was barred by reason of the suit not having been commenced within the time prescribed in the policy, namely, within 12 months from the date of the accident. This appeal is prosecuted from the judgment entered upon the sustaining of the demurrer.

[1] The action of the trial court must be upheld. It is a settled rule that clauses in policies of insurance, limiting the time in which actions may be commenced thereon to a time shorter than that prescribed by the statute of limitations, are valid. 4 Joyce on Insurance, § 3181; Tebbetts v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 155 Cal. 137, 99 Pac. 501. The provision in this policy limiting the time within which suit might be brought is free from ambiguity; and it must be held that the action, having been commenced nearly 13 months after the occurrence of the accident, was under the express terms of the policy too late.

The authorities supporting this view are numerous. The latest judicial expression on the subject in this state is to be found in the case of Tebbetts v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., supra. There the policy provided that proof of death of the insured must be furnished the company within two months after its occurrence, and that legal proceedings for recovery under the policy might not be brought before the expiration of three months from the date of filing proofs at the company's office, nor brought at all unless begun within six months from the time of death. There the Supreme Court held (Mr. Justice Henshaw writing the opinion) that the demurrer interposed to the complaint was properly sustained, observing: "The general rule, supported by the great weight of authority, is that a condition in a policy of insurance, providing that no recovery shall be had thereon unless suit be brought within a given time, is valid, if the time limited be in itself not unreasonable." Later on in the opinion the court further said: "The six months' period was not itself unreasonable. It began to run from the date of the death, and was not affected by the provision that legal proceedings could not be brought before the expiration of three months from the date of filing proofs." In addition to the authorities there cited, see Garido v. American Central Ins. Co. of St. Louis (Cal. Sup.) 8 Pac. 512; Kettenring v. N. W. Masonic Aid Ass'n (C. C.) 96 Fed. 177; Provident Fund v. Howell, 110 Ala. 508, 18 So. 311; Paul v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 186 Mass. 413, 71 N. E. 801, 104 Am. St. Rep. 594; Travelers' Insurance Co. v. Cal. Insurance Co., 1 N. D. 151, 45 N. W. 703, 8 L. R. A. 769.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[2] If the company had been guilty of bad faith, or such conduct as rendered it impossible to comply with the provisions of the policy before the time limited for bringing suit had expired, it would be estopped from relying thereon. 4 Joyce on Insurance, § 3220. But merely exacting a strict compliance by plaintiff with the requirements of the policy as to when proof of death should be made is no ground for charging the insurer with causing delay when, as in this case, the necessary proofs were made within the time limited therefor in the policy, and there yet remained ample time in which the insured could bring his action. There is therefore no element of estoppel available to the appellant.

Case v. Sun Ins. Co., 83 Cal. 473, 23 Pac. 534, 8 L. R. A. 48, cited by appellant, is not in conflict with this view. There the policy provided that any action thereunder must be brought within twelve months next after the occurrence of a fire, and no adjusted claim was payable until 60 days after full completion by the assured of all requirements contained in the policy. In that case it was alleged and proved that a strict compliance with all the requirements of the policy was exacted by the company, and that the assured complying therewith as rapidly as he could was unable to do so fully until nearly 14 months after the fire. This certainly was, in the language of Hart v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 86 Wis. 77, 56 N. W. 332, 21 L. R. A. 743, 39 Am. St. Rep. 877, "a clear case of estoppel. The company by its own act had postponed the time when a cause of action accrued until after the limitation had run, and should be clearly denied the right to rely upon the limitation."

The plaintiff in the case at bar had ample time after the right accrued within which to bring the action on the policy, and no equitable circumstance is pleaded to take the case out of the operation of the limitation clause.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

18 Cal. App. 394

GOODHART v. MISSION PUB. CO.
(Civ. 1,028.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 29, 1912. Rehearing Denied March 30, 1912.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 138*)—ILLEGALITY—PARTICIPANT IN FRAUD.

The agents of the publisher of a newspaper who had offered prizes to young women who would secure the largest number of votes through a subscription contest represented to plaintiff, who was a contestant, that they knew how many votes the other contestants had; that they had secured all the votes they could, and that the payment of $300 by plaintiff would give her enough votes to win the first prize; that, if necessary, they would deliver enough votes for her to insure her such prize, and that, if she did not secure the first prize, the money would be returned. On faith of these representations, she paid the $300. Such representations as to the standing of the other contestants were false, and the votes secured by plaintiff by such payment were not sufficient to insure her the first prize. Held, it not appearing that the terms of the contract imposed secrecy on the publishers, that the transaction so far as the representations as to the standing of the other contestants and the promise to refund the money were concerned was not a fraud on the other contestants, justifying a denial of a recovery for the false representations, and, since the damage to plaintiff was caused by such representations as to the other contestants' standings, it was immaterial whether the agreement to deliver enough votes to insure plaintiff winning the first prize was a fraud on the other contestants or not.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 681-700; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 102*)—VALIDITY—LEGALITY.

Before relief may be denied, because of the unlawful nature of a contract whereby some rule of public policy is claimed to have been violated, it must clearly appear that the case comes within that class, and that the agreement of the parties was tainted by improper motives.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 462-467; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; F. E. Densmore, Judge.

Action by Louise May Goodhart against the Mission Publishing Company. From a judgment for defendant on special findings of the jury, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Miguel Estudillo, for appellant. H. L. Carnahan, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment entered in favor of defendant. Upon the trial of the case by a jury, verdict in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $300 was returned, together with findings on special questions of fact submitted by the court. Defendant thereafter moved for judgment in its favor on the special findings, which motion was granted, and the judgment appealed from was then entered.

Plaintiff alleged in her complaint that in October, 1909, the Mission Publishing Company of Riverside, being the publishers of the Morning Mission and the Riverside Enterprise, offered prizes to young women who would secure the largest number of votes through a subscription contest; that the prizes were of different value and seven in number; that the defendant represented that the contest would be conducted in a fair and honest manner; that it was not so conducted; that on or about the 13th day of November, 1909, and during the course of the contest, defendant, through its agents, stated to plaintiff that they knew how many votes the other contestants had, and also that they knew that the other contestants had done everything that possibly could be done; that neither of them had any more money to pay to the defendant for more votes, and that the payment of $300 by plaintiff to defendant would give plaintiff 600,000 more votes than the highest contestant. It was further alleged that the agents and employes of defendant were sharp and shrewd men, and that plaintiff was a young girl, 18 years of age, inexperienced, and that the representations last mentioned were made with intent to deceive and defraud her, and that she was deceived thereby and induced to pay to the defendant the sum of $300; that in truth at the time said representations were made the highest contestant did have then over and above all of the votes which plaintiff was entitled to, including the 600,000 votes to be secured by the payment of $300, more than 200,000 votes, and that three of the other contestants also had more votes than plaintiff had, notwithstanding the payment of the $300 and the votes awarded to her therefor. The prayer was for damages in the sum of $500. Defendant, after specifically denying the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, alleged that all of the representations as charged by the complaint were made by the employes of defendant, but that such employes were not authorized or empowered to make any such representations; and, further, that said employes had guaranteed that plaintiff would get the first prize, that, in the event she did not so secure it, defendant would repay to her the sum of $300. It was admitted by the answer that the defendant had received the sum of $300. Upon the case being given to the jury, four special issues of fact were submitted for determination, all of which were answered in the affirmative by the jury. The substance of all of the questions is fairly expressed in the first thereof which is as follows: "Did the agent or employe of defendant make the following representations to plaintiff, to wit: That if she, the plaintiff, would deliver $300 in cash to defendant, it would guarantee her that she would be awarded the Ford automobile; that the defendant, its agents and employes, knew how many votes the other contestants, to wit, Leona Jeffreys and Marguerite Peters, had, and also knew that the other contestants, Leona Jeffreys and Marguerite Peters, had done everything that could possibly be done, and that neither of them had any more money to pay defendant; that the payment of $300 would give 600,000 more votes than the highest contestant, to wit, than said Leona Jeffreys; that the defendant would guarantee that the plaintiff would get the first prize, and, if necessary for that purpose, would deliver enough votes to plaintiff to insure her the first prize, and that, in the event that she did not secure the first prize, the defendant would repay the plaintiff the sum of $300?" One of the questions of fact contained the added interrogatory as to whether plaintiff had delivered the money to defendant because of her reliance upon the statements and assurances of defendant's employes that, if she would pay the $300, they would guarantee that she would get the first prize, and, if necessary for that purpose, would deliver enough votes to her to insure her the first prize, and that, in the event she did not secure the first prize, defendant would repay her the sum of $300.

[1] The ground upon which defendant based its motion for judgment on the facts as found on the special questions submitted was that these facts showed that the agreement between plaintiff and defendant's agents was a fraud upon other contestants, and that courts would not enforce the contract because of considerations of public policy. It nowhere appeared in the record that by any of the terms of the so-called popular contest any secrecy was imposed upon any of the contestants, or upon the publishers of the newspapers, as to the number of votes which any contestant might have to her credit at any time. In the published notice of the prize contest it was recited that count of the votes would be printed on Thursday and Sunday of each week of all votes turned into the office up to and including the preceding evening. The fraudulent representations complained of which induced plaintiff to part with her $300 were made about a week before the contest closed. As to whether defendant's agents at any time had information regarding the condition of the vote as to any or all of the contestants, which they were bound not to disclose, can only be surmised, for it does not affirmatively appear in the record. If public announcement of the count was made as scheduled, then there would have been complete notice to all persons who might care to read it, every three days, of the vote tally as it then stood. In so far as the representation of the number of votes which the other contestants had at the time plaintiff was induced to pay over her money is to be considered, that representation, if it had then expressed the truth, would not have worked any fraud as against the other contestants; but it nevertheless was one which plaintiff might well have relied upon to her damage. Neither would that portion of the alleged agreement, wherein defendant's agents promised that if plaintiff failed to secure the first prize they would refund to her her money, be in fraud of the rights of any of the other contestants, keeping in mind the suggestions which we have just made with reference to the question last discussed. To our minds, the further element which appears to have entered into that agreement, to wit, that, in the event plaintiff had not enough votes to secure her the first prize, defendant, "if necessary for that purpose, would deliver enough votes to plaintiff to insure her the first prize," may be rejected from consideration. As determined by the special findings, the damage accrued to plaintiff by reason of the false representations made to her as to the condition of the vote at the time she paid to defendant the $300. If the facts as to the count at that time were as represented, then the additional votes which plaintiff secured by the payment of her money would have won for her the first prize in the contest. Any of the contestants would have had the privilege no doubt of paying in a like or greater sum of money and purchasing votes of an equal amount or more than those purchased by the plaintiff, and it appears to have been altogether within the rules of the contest that votes could be so secured by any of the contestants or their friends; the money so paid being credited on account of the subscription price of the newspapers. From all that appears in the record, it would seem that the plaintiff, a young girl, acted in entire good faith, without any intention of doing otherwise than to secure for herself votes in a manner which was alike available to any of the other contestants. The defendant admitted that it received all of her money, and, admitting the falsity of the representations upon which it was secured, has sought to withhold the refunding of plaintiff's property through the claim that the contract as made contravenes the public policy of the law. It is but fair to say, however, that from the record there can be gathered enough to show that defendant was deceived and misled by its own agents who had charge of the subscription contest, and that, except for the acts of such agents, its conduct cannot be said to bear the imputation of fraudulent dealing. It was alleged on behalf of defendant that the agents who secured from plaintiff the $300 were not acting within the limits of their authority when they made the representations to plaintiff as charged. This question was settled adversely to defendant by the verdict of the jury, and is not open to review on this appeal. We think that the special findings of the jury were not inconsistent with the general verdict returned, and that the court erred in granting the motion of defendant.

[2] Before relief may be denied because of the unlawful nature of a contract, whereby some rule of public policy is claimed to have been violated, it must appear clearly that the case comes within that class, and that the agreement of the parties in its essential obligations is tainted from improper motives. To our minds the case as it is exhibited by this record is not one of that kind.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

=====

18 Cal. App. 242

STEVENS v. SELMA FRUIT CO., Inc.
(Civ. 880.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 15, 1912.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 399*) — OFFICERS — AUTHORITY—GENERAL MANAGER.

The general manager of a commercial corporation has authority to do anything which is ordinarily necessary to accomplish the principal purposes of the corporate organization, unless his authority is restricted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1084, 1085; Dec. Dig. § 399.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 399*) — OFFICERS — AUTHORITY—ESTOPPEL TO DENY.

Where a corporate officer is held out to have power to do all acts essential to the ordinary conduct of the corporate business, a third person will not be permitted to suffer from his acts on the ground that he did not, in fact, have such authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1588, 1602-1610; Dec. Dig. § 399.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 426*)—ACTS OF OFFICERS —RATIFICATION.

The board of directors of a commercial corporation must be presumed to have had knowledge that its general manager executed promissory notes under the corporate seal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1596, 1702-1704, 1708, 1710-1716; Dec. Dig. § 426.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 399*) — OFFICERS — AUTHORITY—EXECUTION OF NOTES.

A resolution of the board of directors of a commercial corporation gave a manager authority to employ and discharge labor in the business, purchase its necessary supplies, and sell its products, and "generally to conduct the affairs of the corporation subject to the direction of the president of this board," and ordered that all contracts for the purchase or sale of fruit, in which the corporation dealt, should be approved by the president and manager, and that the authority of the president should be exercised "over and through the manager so long as said manager shall properly conduct said business and corporation." Held, that the resolution gave the manager authority to execute promissory notes for the corporation where the necessities of its business required it.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1588, 1602-1610; Dec. Dig. § 399.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 426*)—ACTS OF OFFICERS—RATIFICATION OF UNAUTHORIZED ACT.

The act of the manager of a corporation in executing a note, if unauthorized, was ratified by the president, who had authority to execute it, authorizing such manager to pay the note as a corporate liability.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1596, 1702-1704, 1708, 1710-1716; Dec. Dig. § 426.*]

6. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 493*)—CONSIDERATION—NECESSITY.

The burden was upon the maker of a promissory note when sued thereon to show the want of consideration, since a sufficient consideration is presumed; Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 21, and Civ. Code, §§ 1614, 1615, in effect so providing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1652-1662; Dec. Dig. § 493.*]

7. CORPORATIONS (§ 579*)—REORGANIZATION—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

A contract by a fruit packing company to sell its business to defendant recited the intention to sell the business and good will of the company, and all contracts for supplies in connection with "said business" and contracts for the purchase of about 100 tons of raisins, and that the purchaser was instructed to make arrangements to "immediately take over the business" of the selling company, and that the "business of said" selling company should be continued by it, under its present organization on behalf of the corporation to be formed for purchasing, and that the selling company should continue to operate the business until the new corporation was formally organized and took over the business for its own account, and all business contracted after the date of the agreement should be subject to the approval of the committee for forming the new corporation. Held, that the buyer agreed to assume all of the contracts of the selling company, including an existing contract by it for the purchase of raisins.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2313-2318; Dec. Dig. § 579.*]

8. CORPORATIONS (§ 579*)—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action on a note given by defendant corporation for raisins, which defendant's predecessor contracted to purchase from plaintiff, evidence held to sustain a finding that defendant assumed the contract for the purchase of the raisins as made by its predecessor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2313-2318; Dec. Dig. § 579.*]

9. CORPORATIONS (§ 426*)—RIGHT OF ACTION.

When plaintiff demanded a settlement from defendant company for raisins agreed to be sold to its predecessor, defendant's manager asked plaintiff to take the corporation's note for the amount because it needed money, which was done, and he used the money in the course of his business. Held that, even if defendant did not act for plaintiff in selling the raisins, having used the money which its manager received, defendant would be liable therefor to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1596, 1702-1704, 1708, 1710-1716; Dec. Dig. § 426.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by E. M. Stevens against the Selma Fruit Company, Incorporated. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

M. K. Harris and N. C. Coldwell, for appellant. M. G. Gallaher, Everts & Ewing, and S. L. Strother, for respondent.

HART, J. The complaint in this action counts upon two causes of action, viz.: (1) Upon a promissory note for the sum of $2,902.55, payable 100 days after the date of its execution, October 5, 1908, together with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, said note, so it is alleged, having been made and delivered by the defendant to E. M. Stevens & Son, a copartnership; (2) upon an account stated on the 5th day of October, 1908, by and between said copartnership, E. M. Stevens & Son, and the defendant, Selma Fruit Company, Incorporated, "for a balance due for moneys received by said defendant for said E. M. Stevens & Son on account of raisins sold by and through said defendant, less charges for brokerage, discount, and packing charges, upon the statement of which said account it appeared that the said defendant was indebted to the said E. M. Stevens & Son in the sum of $2,902.55." The transactions culminating in the execution and delivery of the promissory note and the rendering of the stated account are alleged to have taken place at the same time, and that both the note and the stated account involve the same indebtedness. It appears from the complaint that antecedently to the institution of this action R. E. Stevens, one of the copartners, assigned to plaintiff, E. M. Stevens, all his right and interest in and to said promissory note and the stated account, and that the plaintiff is the owner and holder of both said note and of said account. Judgment is asked for in the sum of $2,902.55 and interest on said sum from the date of the execution and delivery of said note.

The answer first denies generally the averments of the complaint as to the first cause of action, and then sets up the plea that the promissory note therein declared upon was "executed and delivered without any consideration." The allegations of the second count of the complaint are denied, and, additionally, and by way of a special defense, it is charged that the alleged account and the promise to pay the same were stated and made by T. H. Elliott, the manager of the defendant, under a mistaken belief that the transactions as to which said account was stated were had and conducted between said copartnership and this defendant; whereas, so it is alleged, said transactions were had between said E. M. Stevens & Son and Selma Fruit Company, a corporation, of which more will be learned in the course of this opinion, and that defendant was not concerned or connected with said transactions. Judgment passed for the plaintiff in the sum evidenced by the note and accrued interest. This appeal is by the defendant from said judgment and the order denying it a new trial.

A full and accurate statement of the facts leading to this action is embodied in the brief of the respondent, and we deem it convenient to adopt said statement as a recital of the facts in this opinion:

"The Selma Fruit Company was, during all the times mentioned in the complaint, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the state of California, and from January, 1908, until the 1st day of August, 1908, the said Selma Fruit Company owned and operated a packing house in the town of Selma, county of Fresno, state of California, and was engaged in the business of buying, packing and selling raisins, both upon its own account and for others. It also appears that during the winter months of 1908, and after the 1st of January, 1908, E. M. Stevens & Son delivered certain raisins to the warehouse of said Selma Fruit Company and for which weigh tags were duly issued to E. M. Stevens & Son. It further appears from the evidence that on the 9th day of April, 1908, said Selma Fruit Company took up the weigh tags for said raisins and issued to said E. M. Stevens & Son a warehouse receipt for the raisins so delivered to said company, being the same raisins represented by the weigh tags theretofore delivered to E. M. Stevens & Son and at that time taken up by said company. The said Selma Fruit Company was instructed by said E. M. Stevens & Son to receive offers for said raisins and submit any offers received by said company for said raisins to said E. M. Stevens & Son. About July 8, 1908, Jas. R. Baker & Co., of Chicago, offered to buy from said Selma Fruit Company raisins, which offer was submitted to said E. M. Stevens & Son and by them approved. On July 17, 1908, said Selma Fruit Company and one T. H. Elliott entered into an agreement to sell to certain parties certain patent applications of said T. H. Elliott, together with all of the property, real and personal, packing house, business, and good will of said Selma Fruit Company, the purchaser of said property purchasing the same for a corporation thereafter to be formed.

"The purchasers of said property constituted a committee whose business it was to procure said property and business and to form a corporation for the purpose of taking over all of said properties and business and to carry on the business of buying and selling and dealing in fruits and raisins and conducting a general packing business. On August

1, 1908, said committee entered into a contract with said Selma Fruit Company and said T. H. Elliott in pursuance of said original agreement of purchase in which it was agreed that the business referred to should be conducted by the Selma Fruit Company under its then organization commencing August 1, 1908, for and on behalf of said corporation to be formed by said committee. 'Said Selma Fruit Company shall continue to operate said business until said new corporation shall be formally organized and shall by formal resolution take over the operating of said business for its own account. All the contracts made by Selma Fruit Company for the delivery of dried fruit and raisins by growers on and after August 1, 1908, shall be carried out by said Selma Fruit Company, for and on behalf of said new corporation.'

"Said Selma Fruit Company conducted the business in which it had theretofore been engaged from and after August 1, 1908, for and on behalf of the new corporation to be organized, and a new corporation was organized in pursuance of the agreements of said committee and by formal resolution passed by the unanimous vote of the stockholders at the meeting of stockholders of said new corporation, the Selma Fruit Company, Incorporated, on September 5, 1908, all of the work of said organizing committee was ratified and approved, said committee having made a full report to said stockholders' meeting, and all said properties and business of said Selma Fruit Company together with all said patent applications of said T. H. Elliott, including all trade-marks and brands belonging to said business had been formally taken over by the board of directors of said Selma Fruit Company, Incorporated, at a meeting thereof held August 17, 1908. By act of the board of directors of the Selma Fruit Company, Incorporated, and by unanimous vote of the stockholders of said Selma Fruit Company, Incorporated, all of the work of said committee of organization was duly ratified and all of the business of the Selma Fruit Company was taken over as of August 1, 1908, from which time it was operated by the Selma Fruit Company for and on behalf of the Selma Fruit Company, Incorporated, being under the advice and control of said committee, until the time of the formal resolution of the new company taking over the business, after which the business was operated and controlled by the new corporation, Selma Fruit Company, Incorporated, for and on its own behalf.

"The raisins delivered by said E. M. Stevens & Son were held from and after August 1, 1908, until about the middle of September, 1908, at which time they were shipped to Jas. R. Baker & Co., with other raisins with which they had been mingled after being stemmed and seeded, and the Selma Fruit Company, Incorporated, received the money paid for all said raisins of E. M. Stevens & Son, for which said Selma Fruit Company, Incorporated, by its secretary and manager, rendered a stated account and executed and delivered to E. M. Stevens & Son a promissory note of said Selma Fruit Company, Incorporated, for the balance found due on said stated account."

The court found, among other things, that the defendant is a corporation engaged in the business of selling, packing, shipping and dealing in dried fruits and raisins, in the town of Selma, Fresno county; that during the months of August and September, 1908, said E. M. Stevens & Son owned and had stored in the warehouse of the defendant certain raisins, and that, in the month of September, 1908, the "defendant sold, shipped, and delivered said raisins and received the purchase price and all the proceeds of said sale of said raisins, and appropriated all the said money to its own use and that said sale and delivery of said raisins and the receipt of the proceeds thereof were by and with the consent of said E. M. Stevens & Son"; that on the 5th day of October, 1908, the defendant and said E. M. Stevens & Son had an accounting between themselves, "and account was duly stated between defendant and said E. M. Stevens & Son, and it was found by said account stated that defendant owed said E. M. Stevens & Son the sum of $2,902.55, and defendant then and there agreed to pay to said E. M. Stevens & Son said sum of $2,902.55 so found due to said E. M. Stevens & Son from defendant, and said E. M. Stevens & Son then and there agreed with defendant that said sum of $2,902.55 was the balance due said E. M. Stevens & Son from defendant, and defendant agreed to pay said sum of $2,902.55 to said E. M. Stevens & Son, with interest thereon, at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum until paid"; that "said T. H. Elliott, as the manager of defendant, acted for and on behalf of defendant in stating said account between said defendant and said E. M. Stevens & Son, and said T. H. Elliott and defendant had full knowledge of the account between defendant and said E. M. Stevens & Son, and said account was not stated by mistake of said T. H. Elliott, or any other person, or of defendant, but said account was stated with full knowledge of all the facts at the hand and in the possession of defendant and its said manager and fully known to defendant and said manager"; that the net proceeds from the sale of said raisins of E. M. Stevens & Son constituted the consideration of the promissory note set out in the complaint; and that "said note was duly executed by defendant under its corporate seal."

The findings above referred to, based principally upon the testimony of T. H. Elliott, are challenged upon the ground that the evidence does not sustain them, and the conclusion of law therefrom and the judgment are attacked upon every conceivable ground of which anything like a plausible assault could well be predicated.

The crux of the whole controversy, as it is argued and submitted here, is immured within the proposition whether T. H. Elliott, the manager of the defendant, was, as such manager, clothed with authority to make the stated account and execute the note counted upon in the complaint for and on behalf of the defendant.

After the creation and organization of the new corporation (the defendant), T. H. Elliott was duly appointed as the manager thereof. By resolution or motion duly entered in the minutes of the meetings of the board of directors, the latter vested in the manager the authority "to employ and discharge the necessary labor in and about the packing house of the corporation, to conduct the packing operations, to purchase the necessary supplies and to buy and sell the goods and products in which the corporation intends to deal, and generally to conduct the affairs of the corporation, subject to the direction of the president, and this board." It was further ordered by the board of directors that "all contracts for the purchase or sale of dried fruit or raisins, or other products or merchandise to be dealt in by the corporation, or for packing material or supplies, be approved by both the president and the manager." The following is also a part of the order or resolution of the board, entered upon its minutes, relative to the powers of the manager and president: "The president of this corporation is hereby requested and instructed to visit the packing house, at some time during every working day, during the active operations of the house, and to carefully oversee such operations in a general way, to require all contracts of purchase or sale as per previous resolution to be submitted to him for his approval, and generally to consult with and direct the manager in the conduct of the business of the corporation, it being understood that the immediate direction of said operations is in the hands of the manager and orders and directions regarding same shall be issued by him except in the event of flagrant abuse or neglect of such authority by said manager, and that the authority of the president shall be exercised over and through the manager so long as said manager shall properly conduct said business and operations." There is in the record before us no evidence from which it appears that any particular officer of the defendant was specifically authorized by the board of directors to execute promissory notes for and on its behalf. The very nature of commercial corporations, of which the defendant is a type, requires that the authority to transact their usual or ordinary business affairs shall be vested in some one or more persons.

[1] A corporation is an artificial person, and, where it is organized for commercial purposes, its president or general manager or whoever may be given immediate direction or control of its affairs is its agent, empowered, unless expressly restricted to the performance of certain specified acts, to do anything which naturally and ordinarily has to be done to carry out its paramount purposes; and where authority to do some particular act, which is included within the ordinary affairs of such a corporation, is not specifically given to any particular officer, and the performance of which is not specifically inhibited to the person authorized to manage its affairs generally, the intention of the board of directors to confer upon the person or officer in whom is vested the immediate direction or control or management of the affairs of such corporation to perform such particular act will be inferred from the general authority so given.

[2] And where, as was clearly the case here, an officer of a corporation is held out by such corporation to be possessed of power to perform all acts involved in its ordinary or usual business, the law will not permit third parties to suffer from such acts of such officer by the plea of the corporation that the ostensible authority of such officer was not in fact conferred upon him. McKiernan v. Lenzen, 56 Cal. 61; Phillips v. Campbell, 43 N. Y. 271; Seeley v. San Jose Independent Mill & Lumber Co., 59 Cal. 22, 24; Bank of Healdsburg v. Bailhache, 65 Cal. 327, 332, 4 Pac. 106; Jennings v. Bank of California, 79 Cal. 323, 328, 21 Pac. 852, 5 L. R. A. 233, 12 Am. St. Rep. 145; Greig v. Rioridan, 99 Cal. 316, 323, 33 Pac. 913; Bates v. Coronado Beach Co., 109 Cal. 160, 162, 41 Pac. 855; Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Enright, 127 Cal. 669, 672, 60 Pac. 439, 49 L. R. A. 647; Siebe v. Hendy M. Works, 86 Cal. 390, 392, 25 Pac. 14. In the case at bar, Elliott, the secretary and manager, testified that he had, as such officer of the defendant, executed, under the seal of the corporation, and as the acts of the corporation, other promissory notes, and his authority to do so never was questioned by the board of directors or president.

[3] Of these acts by the manager the board of directors must be presumed to have had knowledge. In Martin v. Webb, 110 U. S. 7, 3 Sup. Ct. 428, 28 L. Ed. 49, the United States Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Harlan, said: "That which they ought, by proper diligence, to have known as to the general course of business in the bank, they may be presumed to have known in any contest between the corporation and those who are justified by the circumstances in dealing with its officers upon the basis of that course of business." See, also, Carpy v. Dowdell et al., 115 Cal. 677, 47 Pac. 695. It is further said in the Martin v. Webb Case that the authority of a particular officer of a corporation to do a particular act for and in the name of such corporation, where the authority to do such act is not expressly conferred, may be inferred from the general manner in which, for a period sufficiently long to establish a settled course of business, he has been allowed, without interference, to conduct the affairs of such corporation. In other words, his authority may be by parol, and collected from circumstances.

In Bank of Healdsburg v. Bailhache; supra, it is said: "While the authority of all officers or agents of a corporation must be limited to such modes of binding the corporation as result from the nature of the duties and the powers conferred upon them, yet when the corporation itself holds out to the public that its officers or agents have authority to act according to the general usage, practice, and course of its business, the acts of such agents within the scope of such usage, practice, and course of business will be binding upon the corporation in favor of third persons possessing no knowledge to the contrary." No one can read the evidence in this record and reasonably arrive at any other conclusion than that the defendant held out to the public that its manager, Elliott, had full power to do all things embraced within the ordinary and usual course of its business, including the very common practice, when necessary, of executing promissory notes.

[4] But we think that a fair, just, and reasonable construction of the above-noted order or resolution of the board of directors defining the powers of the secretary and manager must include therein the authority to execute promissory notes for the corporation where the exigencies of its business require such transactions. Counsel for appellant argue, however, that the general language of the first part of said order which reads, "and generally to conduct the affairs of the corporation, subject to direction of the president and this board," necessarily implies a limitation of the power of the manager to the exercise of the specific authority previously given—that is to say, that, he having been clothed with power to do certain specified acts with relation to the affairs of the corporation, the general language referred to means that he is to have general power only to do the acts specifically designated. But, even if it be granted that counsel are correct in their contention that the general power thus given is to be confined in its exercise to those matters as to which specific authority is conferred, or, in other words, does not have the effect of enlarging the authority of the manager or extending it beyond that with which he is specifically vested, still in our opinion the language of the order specifying the powers of the manager is broad enough to include the authority to execute, when the exigencies of the corporation's business require it, promissory notes for the corporation and thus and thereby to bind it. The order provides, it will be noted, that the manager may "buy and sell the goods and products in which the corporation intends to deal," and it will not be disputed that, in the absence of an express negating of such authority, the power in the manager to buy goods in which the corporation deals for the corporation implies and carries with it the power to pay for the goods from the latter's funds, or includes the authority to buy on credit, and to do such a usual thing as to give the note of the corporation as evidence of its obligation to pay. Siebe v. Hendy M. Works, supra, and cases therein cited. But throughout the entire order or resolution of the board of directors purporting to outline the duties and define the authority of the manager it is plainly manifest that the intention was to vest that officer with full power to transact the ordinary business of the corporation and to that end to do all things and perform all acts necessary to the execution of the general commercial purposes of the defendant. It will be observed that the authority of the president is supervisory only over the manager. All contracts of purchase or sale must be, it is true, submitted by the manager to the president for the latter's approval, but it is expressly provided that the immediate direction of the operation of the business shall be vested in the manager. The latter is clothed with all the authority of the president, "so long as said manager shall properly conduct said business and operations." By this provision, it is clear that it was intended to give full authority to the manager to perform all such acts as were required to be performed in the ordinary or usual course of the corporation's business. The president no doubt possesses authority superior to that of the manager. As to all corporations, the board of directors possess the ultimate power over their affairs, but it is true as to all corporations, as it is here, that, where to a particular officer or person is committed the immediate direction of their affairs, his act, within the scope of his authority, and arising in the transaction of the ordinary and usual business of the corporation, will be binding upon the corporation, unless such act has been expressly inhibited to him under such circumstances as that the public or those having business with the corporation ought to know of the inhibition.

[5] But, even if it be conceded that the rendering of the stated account and the making of the note for the corporation involved an act in excess of the sphere of Elliott's authority as manager it is nevertheless true that the fact stands undisputed in the record that the president, whose authority to execute promissory notes for the corporation is not and cannot be questioned, authorized Elliott to pay the note, as a liability of the corporation, upon its maturity, thereby ratifying the act of the manager in executing the note and thus fully recognizing the propriety of that act as one among those within the authority of the manager to perform.

[6] But it is contended that the note is unsupported by a consideration. It was, of course, incumbent upon the defendant to show a want of consideration; the presumption being that a promissory note was given for a sufficient consideration. Section 1963, subd. 21, Code Civ. Proc.; sections 1614 and 1615, Civ. Code; Schallard v. Eel River Navigation Co., 70 Cal. 144, 146, 11 Pac. 590; Vica Valley & Clear Lake Railroad v. Mansfield, 84 Cal. 560, 565, 24 Pac. 145; Underhill v. Santa Barbara Co., 93 Cal. 300, 314, 28 Pac. 1049; Burnett v. Lyford, 93 Cal. 114, 117, 28 Pac. 855; Mills v. Boyle Mining Co., 132 Cal. 95, 97, 64 Pac. 122; Keating v. Morrissey, 6 Cal. App. 163, 91 Pac. 677. As we have seen, the defendant not only challenges the authority of Elliott, as manager, to make the note in question, but denies his right as such manager to render the stated account upon which the note was executed and delivered to Stevens & Son, and, moreover, denies that the liability upon the transaction as to which the account was stated and the note given existed against the defendant. The claim is, in other words, that the obligation or debt for which the note was given was not the obligation or debt of the defendant, but that of Selma Fruit Company—the old corporation. The purpose of the proof addressed to this point was to show, of course, that the note was given without a consideration.

[7] But we think that the evidence very plainly discloses that the defendant, by agreement, not only absorbed the old corporation, Selma Fruit Company, including all its property, but assumed the fulfillment of all its uncompleted contracts and the satisfaction of all its outstanding obligations, including the transaction upon which this action is founded. The facts as to the formation of the new corporation and the arrangement with the old company have already been told in a general way and are undisputed. The question upon which the parties differ is as to the intention or scope and effect of the understanding and arrangement of said parties in the premises as evidenced by the written agreement between the committee, appointed from the subscribers to the capital stock of the proposed new corporation to prepare for the formation of the latter, and the old corporation. This agreement is not in obscure or doubtful language, and clearly exhibits, we think, the extent to which it was intended that the new corporation was to be bound in the matter of the burdens and contracts of the corporation to whose business and properties it succeeded.

After explaining that Selma Fruit Company and T. H. Elliott agreed to "sell to certain parties four certain patent applications of T. H. Elliott, and lots, packing houses, machinery, etc., and the good will of Selma Fruit Company," all packing material and supplies on hand and all contracts for supplies in connection with said business, and contracts for the purchase of about one hundred tons of raisins, etc., and that said company was instructed to make arrangements "to immediately take over the business of the Selma Fruit Company," etc., said agreement provides, inter alia, " * * * That the *business of said Selma Fruit Company, etc., * * * shall be continued by said Selma Fruit Company, under its present organization, commencing Aug. 1st, 1908, for and on behalf of said corporation so to be formed by said committee. Said Selma Fruit Company shall continue to operate said business until said new corporation shall be formally organized and shall by formal resolution take over the operating of said business for its own account."*

It appears to us that nothing could be clearer than that, by the foregoing language of said agreement, it was intended and understood that the proposed new corporation, the specific and avowed purpose of which was to succeed to the business of the old company, should not only take over all the properties of the old corporation, but assume all its obligations and contracts. The fact that the old corporation was authorized and empowered to proceed with the transaction of the business in which it was and had been engaged for and on behalf of the proposed new corporation and to so continue "until said new corporation shall be formally organized and shall by formal resolution take over the operating of said business for its own account" leaves open no other construction of the scope of the agreement. And, as if to emphasize the intention as thus gathered, the agreement proceeds: "All business contracted on and after August 1st, 1908, (the date of the agreement) shall be subject to the consideration and approval of the parties of the second part." In other words, all business for which contracts had been made by the old company prior to the execution of the agreement is not subject to the consideration and approval of the committee (parties of the second part), since such contracts have already been considered, approved, and accepted and the company has bound itself to carry them out; while that business for which contracts may be made subsequently to the making of the agreement must first be approved by said committee, since after that date the operation of the business of Selma Fruit Company by the latter is not for and on account of said company but for and on account of its proposed successor, the defendant herein.

[8] In short, the transaction from which this action arises was pending and existed as and involved one of the obligations of the old company at the time of the execution of the agreement referred to. The old company was in that transaction acting as a broker for the copartnership. The raisins were in the possession of the old company at the time of the making of said agreement, and an offer to purchase the raisins had been made and accepted. Now, even if it may be said that it is not clear from the language of the agreement itself that the defendant intended to assume and did in fact assume the relation to Stevens & Son, as to the raisins involved in the transaction, which was sustained to the copartnership by the predecessor of the defendant, we think that such relation is nevertheless clearly and conclusively established by the fact that the defendant, after it was formed and organized and took over all the properties and the business of the old company, shipped the raisins of Stevens & Son to the Chicago buyer, and received the money from said buyer in payment thereof.

Moreover, no question was raised by the defendant of the relation it sustained to the copartnership at the time the account between it and Stevens & Son was stated and its note given as evidence of the amount ascertained to be due on said account. The president knew of the circumstance of the rendering of the account by Elliott in his capacity as manager, knew that, in lieu of turning over the money received for the raisins to Stevens & Son, Elliott made and delivered to them the note of the defendant for the amount so received, and indeed, as seen, subsequently recognized and ratified the manager's action in the matter as the action of the defendant by ordering the note to be paid.

No ground, it seems to us, exists for doubting that the findings are amply supported, and much less can it be doubted that the judgment is absolutely just. Indeed, the complaint, so far as the cause of action on the promissory note is concerned, could and should be sustained solely upon the theory that the defendant borrowed from Stevens & Son the money for which the note in question was given and without regard to the question whether the money so borrowed constituted the proceeds of a sale of the raisins or whether said raisins were sold either by Selma Fruit Company or by the defendant. It cannot be doubted that Elliott, either as an individual or as the agent of the defendant, received the sum of money specified in the note for Stevens & Son on account of the sale of the latter's raisins. He declared that the money was forwarded by the purchaser of the raisins to the defendant, and that the latter received said money for Stevens & Son.

[9] But, however that may be, there is one very important and vital fact which appears to be unquestionably established by his testimony (and upon this point he is not contradicted), and that is that, when Stevens & Son demanded a settlement and the sum of money due the copartnership was determined, he (Elliott), acting in his capacity as manager of the defendant, asked them to take the corporation's note for the amount for the term of 100 days, saying that the defendant needed the use of the money. Stevens & Son consented to the proposition and accepted the note. It is not disputed that the corporation needed the money and used it for its purposes. To the contrary, the only evidence in the record addressed to that point discloses that the corporation did need the money and used it in the course of its business operations. Now, conceding that the defendant did not act for Stevens & Son in the handling and sale of their raisins, and that it did not receive the money from Stevens & Son from the purchaser of the raisins, but that Selma Fruit Company conducted the transaction and that Elliott, as an individual, received the money after the absorption of the old company by the defendant, and yet no one will have the temerity to gainsay the very obvious proposition that, having borrowed the money and executed its promissory note as evidence of the liability or obligation, the defendant must be held for the extinguishment of such obligation. In such case, the question whether the defendant acted as broker for Stevens & Son in the sale of the raisins would, manifestly, be immaterial.

The contention that plaintiff is not owner of the account and note is without merit. Both plaintiff and his son, R. E. Stevens, testified that they constituted the copartnership of E. M. Stevens & Son, and that R. E. Stevens, prior to the commencement of this action, assigned and transferred to his father, the plaintiff, all his interest in the account and note in question. It is argued, however, that, in order to vest the sole ownership of the account and note in the plaintiff, it was necessary that the assignment should have been made by the copartnership. We know of no rule or reason against the right of one partner to assign his interest in the copartnership or in the property or contracts of the copartnership to another partner.

We have not attempted to notice all the points, of which there is a great variety, urged by the appellant against the decision of this controversy. Nor have we followed, or deemed it necessary to follow, the ramifications of the ingenious arguments offered in support of those points. We conceive it to be enough to say that neither the points nor the arguments, the latter monuments to the genius and zeal of counsel, have appealed to us as possessing sufficient force to molest in the slightest measure a judgment that plainly appears to our minds to be not only just but in all respects legally impregnable.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

18 Cal. App. 349

JESSEN v. PETERSON, NELSON & CO.
(Civ. 923.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 26, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 26, 1912.)

1. TRIAL (§ 395*)—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY. While ordinarily the trial court should find the ultimate fact in issue, it is sufficient to sustain the judgment if probative facts are found from which the ultimate fact must be conclusively inferred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 927-934, 939; Dec. Dig. § 395.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 256*)—FINDINGS TO SUPPORT—SUFFICIENCY.

The complaint in a personal injury action claimed $2,310 for damages, and specifically stated that $2,000 was for the injuries, and $310 for medical attendance. The court's finding specifically stated that plaintiff had expended $122.50 for medical attendance, but did not state the amount to which she was entitled for the injuries, but the single conclusion of law stated that "plaintiff is entitled to judgment against the defendant in the sum of $1,000." Held, that the findings supported the judgment for $1,000, though the fact findings did not state the amount to which plaintiff was entitled for the personal injuries, since that could be ascertained by deducting the amount specifically found as medical expenses from the amount found for plaintiff in the conclusion of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 446-454; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 330*)—INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS—LINE OF EMPLOYMENT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

If an employé is intrusted with the possession and operation of a vehicle with permission to use it at will in the employer's business, the employer is responsible for personal injuries resulting from its negligent use by the employé without proving that he was engaged in executing any particular business of the employer at the time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1270-1272; Dec. Dig. § 330.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 302*)—SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.

That an employé was acting within the general scope of his employment, and the injury resulted from his negligence, is sufficient to charge the employer with responsibility for the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1217-1221, 1225, 1229; Dec. Dig. § 302.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 330*)—INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—LINE OF EMPLOYMENT.

Evidence in an action against a corporation for personal injuries from the negligent handling of a buggy belonging to defendant held to sustain a finding that the horse and buggy were wholly in defendant's control and possession, through its employé, the driver, at the time of the accident.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1270-1272; Dec. Dig. § 330.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge. Action by Millie Jessen (formerly Millie Ring) against Peterson, Nelson & Co. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

N. A. Dorn, for appellant. W. M. Cannon and S. W. Molkenbuhr, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. In this action the plaintiff recovered a judgment against the defendant for the sum of $1,000, as damages for personal injuries, alleged to have been caused by the negligent and reckless driving of a horse and vehicle owned by the defendant and which, at the time of the accident, was being used in the business of the defendant and under the control of one of its agents. The plaintiff's complaint alleged damages to her as the result of the accident, aggregating the sum of $2,310. Of this amount $2,000 was claimed for injuries to plaintiff's person, and $310 was alleged to have been expended by her for nursing, medicines, and surgical attendance.

The answer of the defendant specifically denied the existence of the damages pleaded, and upon the issue thus raised the trial court found for the plaintiff to the extent of $122.50 for money expended in medical attendance, but omitted in its findings of fact to designate the specific amount in which the plaintiff was damaged on account of personal injuries. The court did find however:

"(1) That the plaintiff, at the time of the commencement of this action, was a feme sole. That since the said action was commenced plaintiff married. * * *

"(3) That on the 12th day of October, 1907, a horse and buggy owned by the defendant corporation, and wholly in the possession and under the control of said defendant corporation, was being driven along, over, and upon Market street, a public highway and street in the city and county of San Francisco, and when at or near the junction of the following named public streets in the city and county of San Francisco, to wit, Jones, Market, and McAllister streets, the defendant corporation handled, managed, and drove said horse and buggy in such a careless, negligent, reckless, and fast manner as to cause the defendant's buggy to strike the plaintiff and violently throw her to the ground, and thereafter drag her for some distance, thereby bruising her body and breaking her right leg."

With the exception of the omission heretofore noted, the trial court found specifically in favor of the plaintiff upon every material issue in the case, and from the findings as a whole deduced the single conclusion of law "that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against the defendant in the sum of $1,000."

The action was tried by the lower court without a jury, and this appeal is from the judgment and an order denying the defendant a new trial.

It is now insisted upon behalf of the defendant that the findings upon the issue of damages do not support the judgment because of the neglect of the trial court to specifically designate in the findings of fact the amount in which the plaintiff was damaged by reason of the injuries alleged and found to have been inflicted upon her person. Undoubtedly it was the duty of the trial court to find upon all of the material issues raised by the pleadings, and the judgment in the present case could not be upheld if it were true, as defendant claims, that there was an utter failure to find the facts of a material issue upon which a finding, had one been made, would not necessarily have been adverse to the defendant.

[1] Ordinarily it is necessary to the validity and sufficiency of findings that the trial court find the ultimate fact in issue, or such probative facts as will enable the court to declare that the ultimate fact necessarily results therefrom; but, where probative facts are found from which the existence of the ultimate fact must be conclusively inferred, the finding is sufficient, and a judgment based thereon will be sustained. Coveny v. Hale, 49 Cal. 556; Smith v. Acker, 52 Cal. 219; Mott v. Ewing, 90 Cal. 231, 27 Pac. 194; Alhambra Water Co. v. Richardson, 72 Cal. 598, 14 Pac. 379.

[2] In the case at bar the probative facts upon which rested the allegations of plaintiff's personal injuries were fully found in her favor, and it necessarily follows from those facts that she must have suffered damage to her person in some amount which, although not specifically stated in the findings of fact, can be readily ascertained by deducting the amount of money found to have been expended by her for medical attendance from the total amount which the court, in its conclusions of law, declared would compensate for all damages sustained by her as the result of the defendant's negligence. The trial court's declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment for $1,000 as the result of the damages inflicted by defendant was in effect a finding of the ultimate fact that the plaintiff had been damaged to that amount, and its mere presence in the conclusions of law rather than in the findings of fact, where it belonged, and should have been placed, did not detract from or destroy its efficacy as a finding of fact. So construed and read in conjunction with the preceding probative facts found by the court it is sufficient to support the judgment upon the issue of damages. Jones v. Clark, 42 Cal. 192; Breuner v. Insurance Co., 51 Cal. 107, 21 Am. Rep. 703; Edwards v. Sonoma Valley Bank, 59 Cal. 148; Bath v. Valdez, 70 Cal. 355, 11 Pac. 724; Foot v. Murphy, 72 Cal. 105, 13 Pac. 162; Burton v. Burton, 79 Cal. 494, 21 Pac. 847; Millard v. Legion, etc., 81 Cal. 342, 22 Pac. 864; McCray v. Burr, 125 Cal. 636, 58 Pac. 203.

The further point is made that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings in this: That the evidence offered and received in support of plaintiff's case falls short of showing that the person in charge of the horse and buggy was at the time of the accident in any wise occupied in the performance of any duty relating to the business of the defendant. Neither the purpose for which the defendant was incorporated nor its business are definitely stated in the record before us, but it may be fairly inferred from the evidence upon the whole case that the defendant at the time of the accident was engaged in general contracting and construction work in the city and county of San Francisco. It was an admitted fact in the case that the horse and buggy belonged to the corporation defendant, and that the driver, Charles Nilson, "was an officer of the defendant who had the right to operate the buggy." Nilson was the vice president of the defendant and testified as a witness in its behalf. Upon his cross-examination it developed that in the performance of his duties as vice president he "had no regular hours whatsoever; that he had to go around all over the city sometimes; had to go out to the park and Richmond, where the corporation was working at the time; had to go everywhere and see that the work was all right." From this it would appear that, in addition to being vice-president of the defendant, Nilson was also the general superintendent of its work, and that in the performance of his duties he was granted a roving commission which permitted him to look after the business of the defendant at the times and in the manner which best suited his own convenience.

[3] It is the accepted rule in this and other jurisdictions that where an employé is intrusted with the possession and operation of a vehicle with permission to use it at his discretion in the business of the employer, the latter will be held responsible in damages for injuries inflicted upon the person of another resulting from the negligence of the employé in the use and operation of the vehicle; and in such a case it is not necessary for the person seeking damages to prove that at the time of the injuries the employé was engaged in executing any particular business or specific command of his principal.

[4] That the employé at the time of the commission of the tort was acting within the general scope of his employment, and that the injury occurred as the result of his negligence, is all that need be shown in order to charge his employer with liability for such injury. Mulvehill v. Bates, 31 Minn. 364, 17 N. W. 959, 47 Am. Rep. 796; Rahn v. Singer Mfg. Co. (C. C.) 26 Fed. 913; Riordan v. Gas Consumers' Ass'n, 4 Cal. App. 646, 88 Pac. 809.

[5] This being so, it is clear in the present case that the testimony of Nilson, coupled with the admitted fact that the defendant was the owner of the horse and buggy, and had conferred upon Nilson the right of using the same in its business, sufficiently supports the trial court's finding that the horse and buggy were owned by the defendant, and "wholly in the possession and under the control of the defendant" at the time of the accident.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

18 Cal. App. 343

PEOPLE v. LILLARD. (Cr. 226.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 24, 1912.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 72*)—JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE.

If accused saw decedent running at night-time through a street, and heard persons pursuing him, crying, "Stop him!" "Catch him!" "He did it!" "He is the robber!" and ordered decedent three or four times to stop, and decedent continued his flight, accused had reasonable cause to believe that decedent had committed a felony, so as to justify him in killing decedent, if reasonably necessary in order to stop and arrest him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 95; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 823*)—INSTRUCTIONS—HARMFUL ERROR—PREJUDICIAL EFFECT.

While an instruction in a prosecution for homicide, committed while accused was pursuing decedent to arrest him for a supposed felony, that to warrant a private citizen in making an arrest without a warrant there must exist a state of facts which would lead one of ordinary prudence to believe that the person was guilty, might of itself have misled the jury into believing that the question of probable cause was one of fact in the case, when the uncontroverted evidence showed that probable cause for making the arrest on a felony charge actually existed, it was not necessarily prejudicial, where the court also instructed, as a matter of law, that there was probable cause for making the arrest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1992–1995, 3158; Dec. Dig. § 823.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 561*)—EVIDENCE—CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE.

Criminal negligence in killing a man must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1267; Dec. Dig. § 561.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 242*)—EVIDENCE—CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE.

Evidence, in a prosecution for killing decedent while pursuing him under the belief that he had committed a felony, held not to show criminal negligence in killing decedent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 505; Dec. Dig. § 242.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Joseph Lillard was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed.

Thomas Scott, Fred J. Spring, and J. R. Dorsey, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ALLEN, P. J. Defendant was informed against by the district attorney of the county of Kern for the crime of murder. Under a plea of not guilty, trial was had by a jury, which by its verdict found defendant guilty of manslaughter. By the judgment of the court, he was sentenced to the penitentiary for a term of 10 years. From this judgment, defendant appeals.

The undisputed facts presented by the record are these: About the 20th of January, 1911, one Rosa Brown, a prostitute, living in what is known as the tenderloin district of Bakersfield, was attacked in her house by deceased, who assaulted her with the evident intent of robbery, knocking her to the floor, and when the woman began to scream "Murder!" and "Police!" deceased ran from the house. The woman continued her screams of "Stop thief!" "Murder!" "Police!" and these cries were taken up by a crowd upon the streets. Deceased continued to run down the street, when defendant, who was a bartender in a saloon located in the same red light district, hearing the woman's cries, and, seeing the man running and the crowd following thereafter, and believing that a crime had been committed, and that the fleeing man was the criminal, took a pistol, which was lying upon a shelf behind the bar, and ran into the street, joining in the pursuit. The defendant seemed to be in the lead of the crowd, and deceased paid no attention to the demands to stop, and about the time he was reaching a dark place in the street, when at a distance of about 40 feet or more ahead of defendant, defendant fired a shot, from the effects of which deceased's death ensued. Immediately after firing the shot, a police officer and others came up, and defendant told them that the man was "lying over there," pointing to the place where the deceased was lying, and said, "I got him." Whether this last statement was voluntarily made, or was in response to a question of the police officer, is not clear. Defendant, however, said to the police officer: "If I am wanted, I will be at the Bowling Alley Saloon." He immediately returned to the saloon, replaced the weapon on the shelf, and a few minutes thereafter the officers came in and arrested him. There is and can be no question from the record that a felony had been committed; that the deceased had committed the felony; that the defendant had reason to believe and did believe these facts; and that he pursued the deceased with the intent to capture him, and for no other purpose. The defendant had no acquaintance with the woman who was the victim of the attempted highway robbery, no acquaintance with the deceased, and no fact even suggesting in the most remote degree any motive on the part of defendant, other than a lawful one of apprehending a felon, is to be found in the record.

[1, 2] The court very properly charged the jury that if the defendant saw the deceased running at night, and heard persons crying out, "Stop him!" "Catch him!" "He did it!" "He is the robber!" and the deceased being ordered by defendant three or four times to stop, and he refused to do so and continued his flight, then the defendant had reasonable cause to believe the deceased had committed a felony. The jury were further instructed that a private person may arrest, without a warrant, one who has committed a felony, if he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it, and that an arrest may be made by a peace officer or by a private person. Further, that such peace officer or private person, in making the arrest, may use such force as is necessary to arrest the felon, even to the extent of killing him when in flight. Further, that to warrant a private citizen in making an arrest without a warrant there must exist a state of facts that would lead a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe or entertain an honest and strong suspicion that the person is guilty. This last instruction, in view of the uncontradicted evidence establishing probable cause, might, if standing alone, have misled the jury through the suggestion that the question of probable cause, under such circumstances, was one of fact; but, considering such instruction with the first instruction given, which was to the effect that from the evidence, as a matter of law, probable cause for making the arrest existed, we can see no prejudice necessarily resulting. The only question of fact presented to the jury related to the matter of criminal negligence.

[3, 4] A careful examination of the record fails to disclose any evidence tending to establish criminal negligence, a fact which must be established beyond a reasonable doubt, in order to warrant conviction. Section 197 of our Penal Code provides that homicide is justifiable when necessarily committed in attempting, by lawful ways and means, to apprehend any person for any felony committed. Wharton on Homicide declares the rule, and quotes abundant authority in its support: "Even a private person is justified in killing a fleeing felon, who cannot otherwise be taken, if he can prove that the person is actually guilty of the felony." Section 492. We are of opinion that the uncontradicted evidence in this case fails to establish, beyond a reasonable doubt, or otherwise, criminal negligence upon the part of the defendant. If officers and citizens are to be punished for an effort to suppress crime and to bring to justice those who commit offenses against the law, it is but offering a premium for crime. The facts appearing in the record that the woman attacked was a prostitute, and that defendant was a bartender, have no signification. Whatever may have been their employment in life, they were and are entitled to the same protection of life and liberty as other citizens; and the defendant, regardless of such occupation, possessed the same right as any other private citizen to apprehend the deceased, who had been guilty of a felony.

We are of opinion, therefore, that there is no evidence in this case warranting the defendant's conviction and supporting the judgment, and the judgment is reversed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

18 Cal. App. 390

TALBOT et al. v. GINOCCHIO. (Civ. 955.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 29, 1912.)

1. NEGLIGENCE (§ 142*)—FINDING OF ULTIMATE FACT.

The finding, in an action for negligent collision of a team, that it was being driven carelessly and negligently, is of an ultimate fact, and not one on a mixed question of law and fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 400-403; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 705*)—USE OF STREETS—COLLISION OF TEAM WITH PEDESTRIAN—NEGLIGENCE.

A finding of negligence, in the collision of a team with a pedestrian on a crossing, is justified by evidence that it was on the wrong side of the street, being driven without notice of the injured person, and its speed increased just as she was passing in front of it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1515-1517; Dec. Dig. § 705.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 705*)—USE OF STREET—COLLISION OF TEAM WITH PEDESTRIAN—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A finding of want of contributory negligence of a pedestrian, with whom a team collided on a crossing, is warranted by evidence that she was at the proper place, twice looked to see if danger threatened, and believed that she should safely cross, and that she could and would have done so, but for the driver increasing his speed just before the collision, which was while she was in the act of stepping on the curb.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1515-1517; Dec. Dig. § 705.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Della Talbot and husband against A. Ginocchio. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edwin T. McMurray, for appellant. Dudley Sales, for respondents.

HALL, J. Plaintiffs brought this action to recover damages for personal injuries received by plaintiff Della Talbot from the negligence of defendant, committed by a servant of defendant in driving a team against the person of said plaintiff. The cause was tried by the court, without a jury, and resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in the sum of $350. From this judgment, and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, an appeal was in due time taken to this court.

[1] It is urged that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment, in that, as it is claimed, the "finding that 'the servant and employé of defendant in charge of said horse and wagon was driving the same carelessly and negligently' is a finding upon a mixed question of law and fact." Appellant cites no authority in support of this assertion. In an action to recover damages resulting from the negligence of the defendant, "a general allegation of negligence upon the part of defendant is sufficient." In such a case, "the negligence is the ultimate fact to be pleaded, and is not a legal conclusion." House v. Meyer, 100 Cal. 592, 35 Pac. 308. The finding in question is of an ultimate fact, and is unobjectionable.

[2] The main and only other contention of appellant is that the evidence does not show that appellant's employé was guilty of any negligence in driving the team that struck plaintiff, but that she was guilty of contributory negligence that resulted in her injuries.

There is ample evidence in the record tending to establish the following as the essential facts in the case: Upon the day in question, plaintiff Mrs. Talbot, with her friend, Mrs. Leahey, at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, approached Point Lobos avenue from the north along the east side of Third avenue. Upon reaching the northerly side of Point Lobos avenue, the two ladies turned and crossed to the westerly side of Third avenue over the crossing upon the northerly side of Point Lobos avenue. Upon reaching the westerly side of Third avenue, they started to cross Point Lobos avenue from the north to the south side thereof over the crossing at the westerly side of Third avenue. As they stepped from the sidewalk to the roadway or street proper, they, especially Mrs. Talbot, looked up and down Point Lobos avenue to ascertain whether any cars or other vehicles were approaching, and saw the appellant's team approaching at a walk or slow jog, westerly, along the northerly side of Point Lobos avenue, between the northerly car track upon said avenue and the northerly curb line thereof, and just approaching the east line of Third avenue. Deeming that she could cross in perfect safety—as, indeed, she undoubtedly could, if the team had continued in its then course and pace—Mrs. Talbot and her friend continued their way across Point Lobos avenue along the usual path or crossing. Just before getting across the avenue, plaintiff again observed the team, and saw that it had changed its course and was crossing to the southerly side of Point Lobos avenue, within the lines of Third avenue, as if to pass to the south along Third avenue. Plaintiff, still apprehending no danger, continued in her course, and just as she was stepping to the southerly curb of Point Lobos avenue, following Mrs. Leahey, who was in advance, she was struck by the pole or shaft of the wagon and thrown to the ground and injured. There is testimony, given by Mrs. Leahey, that as the horse neared plaintiff its speed was increased. The driver of the horse and wagon testified that he did not see the ladies until his horse was within about five feet of them, at which time he also said they were on his southerly side. He was driving to the stable of his employer situate on the southerly side of Point Lobos avenue, about 75 feet westerly from Third avenue.

From the foregoing résumé of the facts, which find support in the evidence in the record most favorable to the respondents, we do not think that it can be doubted but that the trial court was justified in finding that the servant of defendant was guilty of negligence in the driving of the horse and wagon. It is manifest from his own testimony that as he swung across Point Lobos avenue from the north to the south side thereof, and approached the crossing at the westerly line of Third avenue, he gave little heed to what might be in front of him. He did not see the ladies until they had reached a point to the south of his path—in other words, not until they had substantially passed in front of his horse; for, notwithstanding that he says they were crossing from the south, there can be no doubt but they were crossing from the north to the south side of the street when the accident occurred. The court might well believe from the evidence that the driver was improperly upon the left-hand side of the road, and that he increased, or allowed an increase of, the speed of his team as the ladies were practically passing in front of his team, and but a few feet away.

Under the rule that when the evidence is conflicting, or when reasonable men might differ as to the inference which ought to be drawn from the undisputed or proven facts, the question of negligence or contributory negligence is one of fact for the jury or trial court, and is not one of law (Davies v. Oceanic Steamship Co., 89 Cal. 280, 26 Pac. 827; Redington v. Postal Tel. Co., 107 Cal. 317, 40 Pac. 432, 48 Am. St. Rep. 132; Wikberg v. Olson, 138 Cal. 479, 71 Pac. 511), we certainly cannot say that the court was not justified in finding that appellant's servant was guilty of negligence in driving the team, and that such negligence caused the injury to plaintiff.

[3] Under the same rule, we cannot say that the finding that plaintiff was not guilty of any contributory negligence is not supported by the evidence. She was crossing at the proper place, twice looked to see if danger threatened, believed that she could safely cross, and the court may well have believed that she could and would have crossed in safety, except that the driver increased the speed of his team just preceding the collision. As it was, she was only struck just as she was in the act of stepping to the curb. See McKernan v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co., filed May 17, 1911, 16 Cal. App. 280, 116 Pac. 677, and Clark v. Bennett, 123 Cal. 278, 55 Pac. 908.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

18 Cal. App. 346

PATTERSON v. TORREY. (Civ. 1,054.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 24, 1912. Rehearing Denied March 25, 1912; Denied by Supreme Court April 24, 1912.)

BROKERS (§ 43*)—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

The instrument relied on as authority to sell property stated, "At your request I will give you the price wanted for my house," giving the price, and continued, "I will accept in exchange Mr. M.'s home on either proposition at a valuation" named, "balance in cash," and was signed by defendant. Held, that the instrument, merely fixing the price at which defendant would sell was insufficient as a contract employing plaintiff to sell defendant's home for a commission; Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, making an agreement employing a broker to sell real estate for a commission invalid, unless in writing and signed by the party to be charged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 43.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by John L. Patterson against Clarence T. Torrey. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Watkins & Blodget, for appellant. Murphy & Poplin and Trusten P. Dyer, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action by real estate broker to recover commissions for negotiating a sale and exchange of real property, valued at $20,000. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

It appears from the allegations of the complaint and findings of the court that defendant, after making an unsuccessful attempt to negotiate an exchange of his property with one Charles H. McFarland, signed and delivered to plaintiff a writing, as follows: "Mr. Patterson: At your request, I will give you the price wanted for my house 2659 Ellendale place. For the place bare of all hangings and draperies—$20,000 00/xx. For the place including hangings and draperies, window curtains and etc., $23,500.00. I will accept in exchange Mr. McFarland's home on either proposition at a valuation of $8,000-00/xx. Balance cash. [Signed] C. T. Torrey." And thereupon, as alleged and found by the court, requested plaintiff to see Mr. McFarland in regard to making the exchange. As requested by defendant, plaintiff saw McFarland, and procured from him an acceptance of the offer made by defendant to plaintiff, in accordance with which the sale and exchange was consummated.

While upon the record there can be no doubt as to the fact that plaintiff performed valuable services at defendant's oral request, nevertheless the law is too well settled to admit of controversy that there can be no recovery of compensation therefor, in the absence of some note or memorandum in writing, subscribed by the defendant, whereby plaintiff was employed or authorized to negotiate the sale or exchange. Subdivision 6, § 1624, Civ. Code. The writing does not purport to be other than a statement fixing the price at which defendant was willing to sell his property, and expressing his willingness to accept McFarland's home at a valuation of $8,000 in part payment of the price so fixed. It is impossible to construe the instrument as constituting an employment of plaintiff by defendant, or conferring upon him any authority to negotiate a sale or exchange for a compensation or commission. While the court finds that the instrument was made and delivered by defendant "for the purpose of authorizing the plaintiff, as such real estate broker, to make such sale and exchange of said property of defendant with said Charles H. McFarland, for commission, on the terms and price specified by defendant," nevertheless such purpose is wholly inconsistent with the plain import of the language used by the parties. The naked act of an owner of real estate in fixing a price at which he is willing to sell or exchange the same, given in writing at the request of a broker, does not constitute an employment of such broker by the owner, or bind him to pay the broker a commission for making a sale of the property.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

For the reason that the record discloses no employment of plaintiff evidenced by writing, under which defendant, either directly or by implication, agreed to pay him a compensation for his services, the judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

18 Cal. App. 367

PEOPLE v. LIGGETT. (Cr. 173.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 26, 1912.)

1. WITNESSES (§ 388*)—IMPEACHMENT—FOUNDATION.

Evidence as to whether the parents of prosecuting witness told a witness for the state that she must testify against accused at the preliminary examination was immaterial, though her testimony at the trial that accused did not admit his guilt contradicted her testimony at the preliminary examination; the testimony at the preliminary examination not being before the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1233-1242; Dec. Dig. § 388.*]

2. RAPE (§ 43*)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence by a physician as to whether prosecuting witness was suffering from a venereal infection was admissible as tending to show sexual intercourse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 62, 65; Dec. Dig. § 43.*]

3. RAPE (§ 40*)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—REPUTATION FOR CHASTITY.

Evidence as to prosecutrix's reputation for chastity was immaterial in a prosecution for raping a 12 year old girl on about July 20, 1911, as was evidence that some person other than accused had intercourse with her within a year prior to August 4, 1911, though a physician testified that there was evidence of venereal infection in prosecutrix.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 55-59, 64; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

4. RAPE (§ 59*)—INSTRUCTION.

Where, in a prosecution for rape of a child 12 years of age, prosecuting witness testified to the criminal act, it was not error to instruct the jury to render a verdict of guilty if they believed the prosecuting witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 88-100; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

John Liggett was convicted of rape, and from the judgment of conviction and an order denying a motion for a new trial he appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of rape alleged to have been committed about the 20th day of July, 1911, on a child of the age of 12 years, and was sentenced to serve 20 years in the Folsom penitentiary. Defendant appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is claimed that the verdict of guilty rested on the testimony of the prosecuting witness and upon the testimony of her father and mother as to what occurred at a conference with the defendant about August 4th, following the alleged crime. The girl's testimony was direct and unmistakably established the charge, if believed by the jury, which we must assume it was. On August 4, 1911, the parents of the girl, having had their suspicions aroused of defendant's guilt, called him to account in the girl's presence and in the presence of one Mrs. Slaughter. These witnesses do not agree in all particulars as to what then occurred, but there was testimony of what took place at this interview with the defendant which justified the jury in believing that he admitted his guilt. This testimony, together with that of the prosecuting witness, amply supported the verdict. Some errors are claimed to have occurred in the rulings of the court to defendant's prejudice, which will be noticed.

At the interview with defendant, above referred to, Mrs. Slaughter was present. Called as a witness for the people, she testified that defendant, when charged with the crime, denied it. When asked whether he at any time during the conversation acknowledged that "he had anything to do with the child," she answered, "Well, I don't remember just exactly that he did." Some further examination of the witness showed to the satisfaction of the court that the district attorney was surprised by her answers, and permitted him to call her attention to her testimony at the preliminary examination at which she testified that defendant admitted his guilt. The court ruled that this testimony could not be used as evidence in the trial, but might be used to show that the district attorney was surprised by the answers of the witness, and could be used for purposes of impeachment. Counsel for defendant then asked some questions of the witness concerning what she said to him, previous to the trial, about this same interview with defendant, and whether she did not then say to counsel that defendant denied his guilt. It is not quite clear from the record whether or not counsel was laying the ground for the impeachment of the witness or desired to get her statement made out of court in the record. The court called counsel's attention to her testimony in which she had testified that defendant denied his guilt. Counsel then said: "If that is understood, all right."

[1] The question put to the witness on cross-examination as to whether the parents of the prosecuting witness had not told her when she went to the preliminary examination she must testify against defendant was immaterial. The testimony given at the preliminary was not before the jury.

[2] Witness Dr. Miller was called by the people, and testified that he believed intercourse had been effected. He was asked if he discovered that the child was suffering from any disease. Defendant objected as immaterial and incompetent; that there is no issue involving the disease of the prosecuting witness, and there is no evidence that defendant ever had a disease. The court ruled that it was admissible for the same reason that absence of the hymen was shown; that is, as a circumstance tending to show intercourse. The witness answered that "there were evidences of venereal infection. We think the evidence was admissible.

[3] In this connection defendant calls attention to the testimony of a character witness, Mr. Pringle, who testified as to the reputation of the prosecuting witness for truth, honesty, and integrity, that it was bad. He was asked her reputation for chastity, to which the district attorney objected. Counsel for defendant urged that the testimony of Dr. Miller opened the way to this testimony; that defendant could now show that some other person "has done that act." "The Court: It does not make any difference whether the child was a moral or immoral child. It does not make any difference what her character was. If she was under the age of 16 years, and this defendant had intercourse with her, he violated the law. It does not make any difference whether she was a pure child or not. She may have been as immoral as it is possible for a child to be. That does not excuse him for doing it. Mr. Carlin: If he is guilty. The Court: Yes; I assume that he is not guilty. I have a right to assume that. It is no excuse for any one doing it, however. A man cannot justify himself for doing this crime by showing that the girl was immoral or impure. Mr. Carlin: Couldn't he show that probably some one else had done it? The Court: No; that does not give the defendant a right to do it. Mr. Carlin: We might show that some one else might have done it. Cannot we now account for the conditions which Dr. Miller found outside of this man? We want to account for that. Well, all right. (Exception.) We will offer to prove that some person or persons, not the defendant, within a year prior to the 4th day of August, 1911, had sexual intercourse with Mabel Millard. The Court: I assume that there had been evidence introduced on that question. The doctor's testimony went to prove that, that she had been tampered with. Mr. Carlin: But we offer to prove now that it was some one else, and not the defendant, that did it. The Court: You cannot prove that. Mr. Carlin: All right, take the witness. (Exception). The Court: You can prove that he did not do it, but you cannot prove that some one else did it." We perceive no error in the rulings. In People v. Currie, 14 Cal. App. 67, 111 Pac. 108, relied on by defendant, the prosecuting witness had testified that the defendant had sexual intercourse with her on a particular date, and that she gave birth to a healthy, perfectly formed child on a particular date, about eight months after the alleged assault on her. Pregnancy had been shown by the prosecution as evidence of defendant's guilt. It was held error not to allow evidence of her sexual relations with other men to test the truthfulness of this damaging fact of pregnancy. The reputation of the prosecutrix for chastity was immaterial as she was under the age of consent. The colloquy between counsel and the court as to what proof might be made in rebuttal of any inference that defendant was responsible for the diseased condition found by Dr. Miller does not raise the question of the admissibility of such rebuttal evidence. Counsel did not offer any evidence or state that he could produce evidence that this venereal condition was or might have been produced by some person other than defendant. His offer was "that some person or persons, not the defendant, within a year prior to the 4th day of August, 1911, had sexual intercourse with Mabel Millard." Such evidence was inadmissible.

[4] Error is claimed in giving the following instruction: "While it is the law that the testimony of the prosecuting witness should be carefully scanned, still this does not mean that such evidence is never sufficient to convict; and, if you believe the prosecuting witness, it is your duty to render a verdict of guilty. By the law of this state a female child under the age of 16 years is incapable of giving legal consent to an act of sexual intercourse, so that every act of carnal connection with such a child by one not her husband will constitute the crime of rape, whether with or without the consent of such child, and in this case, if you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant had sexual connection with the prosecuting witness on or about July 20, 1911, as alleged in the information and that at the time she was under the age of 16 years and not the wife of the defendant, then the defendant is guilty of rape, and the jury should so find." Defendant calls attention to the following paragraph: "And, if you believe the prosecuting witness, it is your duty to render a verdict of guilty"—as the basis of his objection, for the reason that it "singles out a particular witness," citing People v. Fernandez, 4 Cal. App. 314, 87 Pac. 1112; People v. Johnson, 106 Cal. 294, 39 Pac. 622; People v. Barker, 137 Cal. 557, 70 Pac. 617. The cases cited were instances of assault with intent to commit rape. There the question of intent with which the assault was made was the material element in the cases, and it was held that the court had no right "to put a state of facts to the jury which would bar them from finding the intent to be other than that charged by the information." Said the Court: "The defendant may have done all the things charged against him by the evidence of the prosecutrix, and still have been possessed of no intent to commit rape." People v. Johnson, supra. In the case here the act of copulation constituted the offense, and the intent with which the defendant committed the act is immaterial. The prosecuting witness testified to the act, and, if the jury believed her, his guilt must necessarily follow. There was therefore no error in the instruction.

The only remaining alleged error pointed out is the refusal of the court to give the defendant's proposed instruction on reasonable doubt. It was refused "because elsewhere given." The instruction given embodies most of the definition of reasonable doubt found in the oft-approved instruction given by Chief Justice Shaw. It also contains some explanatory comments or an elucidation which the learned trial judge conceived proper to aid the jury in their effort to comprehend Judge Shaw's definition. Defendant complains that: "The jury was by the instruction practically lectured upon the subject, and warned that they should be very careful about this reasonable doubt. In fact, they were practically told that our old friend 'reasonable doubt' is but a figment of the imagination, and not to be taken seriously. * * * Without intending to be facetious before this honorable court, we wish to say that it reads like an assault upon an old, a revered, and a valued friend." The Supreme Court has given many cautionary signals warning trial courts against attempting elaborate improvements on a definition which has met with universal approval needing no explanation. We have carefully examined the instruction in question, and, while we do not think it an improvement on the oft-given instruction, we find nothing in it to justify the reversal of the cause.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

18 Cal. App. 429

ABBOTT v. KELLOGG et al. (Civ. 1,038.)
(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 1, 1912. Rehearing Denied April 29, 1912.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 291*)—UNLAWFUL DETAINER—TERMINATION OF TENANCY AT WILL.

The 30 days' notice provided by Civ. Code, § 789, for terminating a tenancy at will, not being essential where the tenant disclaims the tenancy, it is not necessary in such case as a condition precedent to an action of forcible detainer under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1217-1269; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

2. APPEARANCE (§ 24*)—WAIVER OF DEFECTS IN PROCESS.

Defendant, treating the action as in ejectment, having appeared, demurred, and answered without question as to the time required in the summons so to do, waived the sufficiency of the summons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appearance, Cent. Dig. §§ 118-143; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 105*)—FORFEITURE OF CONTRACT—LIABILITY FOR USE AND OCCUPATION.

The value of the use and occupation of premises by one after forfeiture of his rights under his executory contract of purchase, under which he entered, is recoverable of him as damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 183-187; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; John G. Covert, Judge.

Action by O. L. Abbott against H. E. Kellogg and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. R. McQuiddy, for appellants. O. L. Abbott, in pro. per.

ALLEN, P. J. The facts are these: That on or about the 3d day of December, 1906, one Mallory and H. E. Kellogg, defendant, entered into a written agreement for the purchase and sale of real property in Kings county, under which agreement it was provided that a certain note should be paid on or before October 1, 1909; that certain interest upon other notes should be paid on or before such date; that Kellogg should pay all taxes and charges assessed against the property, as well as water taxes levied, on or before such date—time being made of the essence of the contract. It was further agreed that, if the second party should be in default in the performance of any of the terms and provisions of the agreement, his rights should be at an end, and, that if allowed to remain upon said premises thereafter, he should hold and occupy as tenant of the said Mallory. Possession of the premises was given at the time of the execution of the agreement. Kellogg made default in each and all of the obligations of the contract imposed upon him to be performed on or before the 1st day of October, 1909, and on the 5th day of October following, Mallory gave notice to him that his rights were forfeited under the contract, and that he (Mallory) was going to sell his right to said property. After such notice to Kellogg, Mallory sold the premises to plaintiff, who demanded possession thereof, which was refused, and Kellogg and Carl Witzke, holding under him, continued in possession. Accordingly, on October 18, 1909, Abbott made written demand for the surrender of possession and occupancy of the premises, and, upon defendant's failure and refusal to surrender possession within three days thereafter, this action was brought to recover possession. Defendant by his answer denied the seisin and right of possession of plaintiff, and averred an equitable ownership by him in the premises, disclaiming the title of the landlord and of his own relation as tenant. The trial court found the allegations of the complaint to be true, and those allegations touching want of ownership in plaintiff, and the denial of tenancy by defendant, to be untrue, found the valuation of the use and occupation of the premises, after notice, to be $120, and by its decree put plaintiff in possession, and gave judgment for $120 rent. Defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] Under the allegations of the complaint, and from the express provisions of the contract, defendant, after his default in the performance of the covenants of the agreement, became a tenant at will of Mallory. Being such tenant at will, under section 789, Civil Code, 30 days' notice to remove from the premises within a period of not less than one month was essential to terminate the tenancy; and, under section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure, when one continues in possession, or by subtenant, of the property, or any part thereof, after the expiration of the term for which it is let, without permission of his landlord, or the successor in estate of his landlord, if any there be, and if the tenancy be one at will, and has been terminated by notice as prescribed in the Civil Code, the action of forcible detainer lies; and the three days' notice to quit after the termination of the tenancy is sufficient to entitle the landlord or owner to maintain an action in unlawful detainer. It is insisted by appellants that this action in unlawful detainer does not lie, because it affirmatively appears that the 30 days' notice provided by the Civil Code to terminate a tenancy at will was not given. "The defendant's answer expressly makes this denial of title and holding the possession as tenant, or that plaintiff was entitled to the possession. The effect of this denial was to make the defendant a trespasser. He was not entitled to notice to quit." McCarthy v. Brown, 113 Cal. 19, 45 Pac. 14. The 30 days' notice to quit not being essential in terminating the tenancy where the same is disclaimed by the tenant, it was not necessary to establish the same, in order to give plaintiff the rights guaranteed by section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or the right to maintain an action in ejectment, in each of which actions the superior court had jurisdiction; and its judgment being correct will not be disturbed, if its jurisdiction to render the same under the pleadings is established.

[2] Treating the action as one in ejectment, defendant appeared, demurred, and answered without question as to the time required in the summons so to do, and is not in a position to question the sufficiency of the summons, under the circumstances of the case.

[3] While the entry of defendant was lawful and not for any definite term, or with any liability for rent (Pomeroy v. Bell, 118 Cal. 637, 50 Pac. 683), nevertheless the value of the use and occupation of the premises for the period of possession after forfeiture was recoverable as damages; and the amount thereof, found by the court under the issues presented, will be assumed to be correct, nothing to the contrary appearing.

All matters involved in the forfeiture on account of the nonperformance of the conditions of the contract upon the defendant's part have been settled and determined adversely to defendant by our Supreme Court in Kellogg v. Mallory, 119 Pac. 937. It is unnecessary to review the rulings of the court with reference to such matters in this proceeding.

We see no merit in the claim of error in denying a new trial on account of the newly discovered evidence disclosed by the affidavits.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

18 Cal. App. 385

APPLESTILL v. GARY, County Auditor.
(Civ. 1,072.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
California. Feb. 27, 1912.)

1. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 29*)—SALARIES—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

When a sheriff was elected for Imperial county on November 8, 1910, it was in class 36½, under Pol. Code, § 4265a, and that section and section 4300b, fixed the compensation for sheriffs of counties of that class at $5,000 a year, with all mileage allowed by law. Act approved February 28, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 96), reclassified the several counties according to population, for the purpose of compensating the officers, and placed Imperial county in class 36. And act approved May 1, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1265), fixed the compensation of sheriffs in counties of that class at $5,000 a year, with all the commissions, fees, and mileage for serving papers without the county, and, in addition thereto, provided that such sheriff should appoint an undersheriff at a salary of $1,500 a year, and a court deputy at a salary of $900 a year; and section 3 of the act made it to take effect immediately. Held, that the provision making the act to take effect immediately could not be construed as a legislative declaration that the act did not work an increase in the compensation of sheriffs of counties in class 36, on the theory that otherwise the act would apply to incumbents in office and increase their salaries, contrary to Const. art. 11, § 9, but, in so far as the act did not show on its face whether it increased the salaries of incumbents, it would be construed as only applying to sheriffs thereafter elected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. § 46; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

2. OFFICERS (§ 100*) — SALARIES — INCREASE DURING TERM.

If a statute changes the compensation of a county officer in such a way that it cannot be determined whether it in fact increases the compensation, a declaration therein that it does not increase an incumbent's compensation would be conclusive of that fact, so that it would be applicable to incumbents when effective, whether at once or within 60 days.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. §§ 152-157; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by C. M. Applestill against W. D. Gary, as Auditor of the County of Imperial. From an order issuing a peremptory writ of mandate, defendant appeals. Order reversed, with directions to deny application.

Phil D. Swing, Dist. Atty., for appellant.
Conkling & Brown, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeal from an order issuing a peremptory writ of mandate, commanding defendant, as auditor of Imperial county, to issue to plaintiff his warrant upon the county treasurer for the sum of $70.16, claimed to be due petitioner as salary for the month of May, 1911, as deputy sheriff of said county, to which office he had been appointed on May 3, 1911, by Mobley Meadows, sheriff of Imperial county.

[1] When Meadows was elected sheriff, on November 8, 1910, Imperial county was in class 36½. Section 4265a, Pol. Code. The compensation fixed by law for the sheriffs of such counties was the sum of $5,000 and all mileage now allowed by law. Sections 4265a and 4300b, Pol. Code. By act approved February 28, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 96), the several counties of the state were reclassified according to population, for the purpose of regulating the compensation of officers. As so classified, Imperial county was declared to be a county of the thirty-sixth class, and by an act of the Legislature, approved May 1, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1265), the compensation of the sheriff in the counties of such class was fixed at $5,000 per annum and all commissions, fees, and mileage for the service of papers and process issued without his county; in addition to which, it was provided that he should have an undersheriff at a salary of $1,500 per annum, and a court deputy at a salary of $900 per annum, both of whom should be appointed by the sheriff, and the salaries of whom were made a charge upon the county treasury.

Respondent concedes that, if, upon a comparison of the two acts, it appears that the change in compensation effects an increase thereof then to apply it to an incumbent would be obnoxious to section 9, art. 11, of the Constitution. If no change other than the allowance of deputies had been made, such fact, under the decision in Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 601, 28 Pac. S34, 29 Pac. 1092, 16 L. R. A. 161, would constitute an increase in compensation. Whether the salaries of deputies and the amount of fees and commissions on business arising outside his county, allowed in lieu of mileage on county business, and of which he is deprived, effected an increase in compensation cannot be determined by a comparison of the two acts. It is therefore insisted that, inasmuch as it does not appear that the effect of the amendment was to increase the compensation, and since the Legislature has, by section 3 of the act, declared it should take effect immediately, which, as to the compensation of sheriffs of counties of the thirty-sixth class, it could not do, except upon the hypothesis that the Legislature had determined it did not cause an increase, a conclusive presumption arises that, by reason of such urgency clause alone it did so determine, and thereby expressed an intent that the change should operate upon incumbents; that, in the absence of the existence of such fact, the declaration would not have been made.

[2] There is no doubt, we think, that, where an act changes the compensation of a county officer, the mode being such that it cannot be determined by a comparison whether such act does or does not result in an increase thereof, a declaration therein by the Legislature that it does not increase the incumbent's compensation would be conclusive of the fact so declared, and the act would be applicable to incumbents when the law went into effect, whether at the expiration of 60 days from its passage, or immediately by virtue of an urgency clause. Such appears to have been the opinion of the Supreme Court expressed by Angellotti, J., in Crockett v. Mathews, 157 Cal. 157, 106 Pac. 575, where the Legislature, in changing the compensation of officers, declared that, "except as to subdivisions 13 and 15, this act [St. 1909, p. 324, § 1] shall not take effect until the expiration of the present term of officers hereinabove enumerated." These subdivisions related to justices of the peace and constables, as to whom it was held the act changing their compensation took effect and became operative 60 days after its passage; there being no earlier date fixed. The only question, therefore, is whether the declaration that "this act shall take effect immediately" should be construed as a declaration to the effect that it did not constitute an increase, and should immediately apply to the incumbents of offices whose compensation was so changed.

The facts of the case at bar are almost identical with those involved in that of Smith v. Mathews, 155 Cal. 752, 103 Pac. 199, and the opinion there rendered must be deemed decisive of the points raised in this case. The subject of the amendatory act (Stats. of Cal. 1911, p. 1262) is the amendment of both section 4236, Political Code, relating to counties of the seventh class, and section 4265, Political Code, relating to counties of the thirty-sixth class. That the result of the amendment is to increase the compensation of some of the county officers mentioned therein is clearly disclosed by comparison. As to such officers, section 9, art. 11, of the Constitution, presents an insurmountable barrier to the act taking immediate effect, in the sense of being operative as to such officers. Clearly it was not the intent of the Legislature to increase the compensation of such officials, in violation of the Constitution, by merely declaring that the act should take effect immediately. Without such declaration, it would take effect in 60 days; hence such provision, as said by Beatty, C. J., is a false quantity in the consideration of the question. "Since the clause putting the statute into immediate effect clearly does not mean all that it says, it falls short of its literal import. If it was not intended to put in immediate operation provisions raising salaries, upon what ground are we to hold that it was intended to have immediate operation in those instances where it changes the compensation attached to an office, without disclosing whether the change effects an increase or reduction, and where, as far as the court can see, it is as likely to be an increase as a reduction? If in one case the old law continues to operate, why not in the other?" Smith v. Mathews, supra. Like the case from which we have just quoted, the urgency clause may be accounted for by the fact that the act in question (subdivision 17 of section 4236, Pol. Code) gives the board of supervisors power to authorize incumbents to employ special clerical help at a compensation to be fixed by such board, when deemed necessary to bring the work of the office down to date, in case of neglect in that regard by the incumbent's predecessor. This provision is entirely independent of the provisions changing the salaries of officers. In our opinion, the true construction of the act "is to treat all its provisions alike, and, knowing that such of them as increase salaries could have been intended to apply only to officers elected subsequent to the amendment, to conclude, in the absence of express and specific declaration to the contrary, that other amendments which may or may not have the effect of increasing compensation were likewise intended to operate only in favor of or against officers to be thereafter elected." The mere declaration that the act should take effect immediately cannot, under the facts presented, if in any case, be construed as a declaration on the part of the Legislature that no increase results from the change, and that it shall apply immediately to the present incumbents. In the absence of such declaration, quoting from the concurring opinion in the Smith Case, "it is to be inferred that an increase was contemplated, and that it was intended to apply prospectively only."

The order granting the peremptory writ is reversed, with instructions to the court to make an order denying petitioner's application.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

18 Cal. App. 354

RICH v. EDISON ELECTRIC CO.

(Civ. 1,018.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 26, 1912.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 407*)—EMPLOYMENT OF PHYSICIAN—COMPENSATION—WHO LIABLE.

Plaintiff, who was a surgeon and the owner of a hospital, rendered valuable services to a person, injured by coming in contact with defendant's electric wires. After such services, a doctor retained by defendant, for the purpose of looking after injured employes, and who was authorized to make arrangements for their care in outside towns when injuries occurred, arrived and directed the hospital authorities to give the patient every possible care. Later the assistant to defendant's president and general manager told the hospital authorities to take every care of the patient, and that defendant would see to their compensation. Held, that the defendant was liable for the hospital charges; it being sufficient that the patient was injured through its instrumentalities, and that its officers or agents with ostensible authority directed the hospital authorities to care for him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1615-1619; Dec. Dig. § 407.*]

2. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS (§ 13*)—EMPLOYMENT—RIGHT TO COMPENSATION—WHO LIABLE.

The defendant was not liable, however, for the surgical services, rendered before any orders were given by the defendant's agent, without proof that the injuries were caused by its negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Cent. Dig. §§ 18-20; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

3. STIPULATIONS (§ 14*)—CONSTRUCTION.

A stipulation in the record of a subsequent action that an action for personal injuries was settled and dismissed by the payment by defendant of a specified amount does not establish defendant's legal liability for the injuries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Stipulations, Cent. Dig. §§ 24-37; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by Helen May Rich, executrix of the estate of C. L. Rich, deceased, against the Edison Electric Company. From a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and remanded for new trial.

H. H. Trowbridge, for appellant. Williams & Rutan, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. There is evidence in the record tending to show the following facts: On the 26th of September, 1908, one E. H. Lapier received serious injuries at a water plant belonging to the Fullerton Domestic Water Company, of which company he was an employé; that the injury was occasioned by coming in contact with certain electric wires supplying electric current to the pumping plant, which wires were the property of the defendant, and were under the control of one Boone, an employé of defendant. Upon the occurrence of the injury, Boone called plaintiff to the scene, and upon plaintiff's arrival Lapier was immediately taken to a hospital at Fullerton, owned by plaintiff, and plaintiff, a skillful surgeon, immediately proceeded, with the assistance of other surgeons, to amputate a leg, and to perform other operations necessary for the preservation of the life of Lapier. About the time these operations were concluded, nothing remaining to be done, except to apply some dressings, one Dr. Stinchfield, acting at the time as or for the chief surgeon of defendant, arrived upon the scene, made a cursory examination of the injured man's condition, recommended that certain things be done, and directed the hospital authorities to give the patient every possible care. This was done at great expense and trouble to the hospital authorities, the services for which were reasonably worth $397, $70 of which was subsequently paid by check forwarded by A. L. Selig, assistant to the president and general manager of defendant, in the letter inclosing which check was a statement by said Selig that the payment was on account of the Edison Electric Company. Within a day or two after the injury to Lapier, Selig had told the hospital authorities to take every care of the patient, and that defendant would see to their compensation. The surgical services in connection with the amputation, and which were rendered before the representative of the general manager or chief surgeon of defendant arrived upon the scene, were necessary for the preservation of the life of the patient, and were well worth $1,000. Plaintiff, after a refusal upon the part of defendant to pay the bill, brought this action to recover the sum of $1,400, including the surgical services and the hospital charges. The case was tried by a jury, and a verdict returned against defendant for $827. From the judgment rendered thereon, the defendant appeals under the alternative method, and presents a transcript of all of the testimony offered or received, together with all rulings and instructions had during the progress of the trial.

[1] There is evidence in the record ample in support of the verdict as to the hospital charges. It matters not whether any legal or moral obligation rested upon defendant to care for this injured man; it is sufficient that his injury was occasioned through instrumentalities employed by the defendant, and that officers and agents of defendant with ostensible authority directed the hospital authorities to continue the service. The evidence is undisputed that a medical department of defendant, under the charge of Stinchfield, was maintained, by authority of the corporation, for the purpose of looking after persons who were injured on the system, and that the chief surgeon had been authorized to make arrangements for their care in outside towns, when injuries occurred. In addition to this, Selig was assistant to the president of the company, who was also its general manager, with authority to look after the interests of the company where special attention could not be given by the general manager at the time; and it must follow that, where he acted in the line of his employment, he was the representative of the general manager, and in an emergency of the kind here presented possessed the authority, in behalf of the company, to look after this injured man, even though technically no liability attached to the company on account of the injury. The rule, to our mind, is well established that even subordinate employés of a corporation, who, under ordinary circumstances, are not empowered to bind the corporation by contract, nevertheless possess power, where an urgent necessity exists for immediate employment by reason of injuries incident to the operations of the corporation, to employ medical help to alleviate the condition of persons so injured; and we are of opinion that the plaintiff in this case had the right to assume that these representatives of the heads of their respective departments possessed the authority which they assumed; and, it appearing that the general manager of the company had knowledge of the conditions, and took no action personally in the premises, his acquiescence and that of the corporation must be presumed.

[2, 3] A different question, however, is presented as to the surgical services performed before any instructions were given by the officers of the corporation. It may be true that, had the record disclosed the fact that the injury to Lapier was occasioned through the negligence of the defendant company, from which would arise a legal obligation imposed by law (section 1714, Civ. Code), and surgical services were rendered to save the life of an injured one, thereby lessening the damages which would thereafter result to the corporation in the event of the death, the corporation would not be heard to say that such services, rendered for its benefit, were unauthorized, and thus avoid payment. But an examination of the record in this case fails to disclose that any legal liability existed on the part of defendant corporation by reason of this injury. It is true that a stipulation is found in the record to the effect that the injured man brought suit against the company, and that subsequently the same was settled and dismissed through the payment of $4,500. The mere settlement of an action for damages brought against a defendant does not of itself establish the matters involved in the question of legal liability. It may be, and often is, the case that actions of this character are settled and dismissed, where no liability exists; other considerations entering into the transaction. We think that, if the negligence of defendant occasioned the injury in this case, it should have been established, in order that it might be made to appear that plaintiff performed a duty devolving by law upon defendant, and for which, in equity and good conscience, he should be compensated. For aught that appears in this record, the surgical services were voluntarily performed, and that no legal duty rested upon defendant corporation to compensate him therefor. The verdict in this case, under the evidence, then, being much in excess of what we regard as a proper verdict, and which of necessity must have included a portion of the services rendered without instructions, should be reversed.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

(18 Cal. App. 359)

PEOPLE v. LEWIS. (Cr. 169.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 26, 1912.)

1. RAPE (§ 62*)—PROSECUTION—APPEAL—CONCLUSIVENESS OF VERDICT.

The obvious and inherent improbabilities of prosecutrix's uncorroborated testimony must clearly appear before the appellate court will set aside a conviction of rape.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 103, 104; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

2. RAPE (§ 51*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE. Evidence held to sustain a conviction for rape.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 71-77; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

3. RAPE (§ 59*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

The court refused to charge that one may be convicted of rape upon the uncorroborated testimony of a prosecutrix, but, if her testimony was not sustained by the facts and circumstances corroborating it, the jury should proceed with great caution, as, "in the absence of corroborating testimony, it is dangerous to find a verdict of guilty," and also refused to charge that the testimony of children should be received with great caution, especially when they were of tender years, and the events related happened long previous to the time of testifying. The court instructed that the jury were the sole judges of the weight of the evidence, and, in determining what weight to give the evidence of the prosecuting witness, the jury should consider her appearance on the stand, apparent interest, if any, her age and manner of testifying, and, in the light of her testimony and of all the other evidence, should give to her testimony such weight as they thought it was entitled to, and further instructed that in considering her testimony the jury should consider all of the surrounding circumstances, the place of the alleged crime as well as those at the time of and immediately after the offense. Held, that the instructions contained a sufficient caution as to convicting on prosecutrix's uncorroborated evidence, so that accused was not prejudiced by the refusal of his requested charges.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 88-100; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 822*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CONSTRUING TOGETHER.

All of the instructions should be considered together in determining the impression they were calculated to convey to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1990, 1991, 1994, 1995, 3158; Dec. Dig. § 822.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 823*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT—SUFFICIENCY.

An instruction in a rape case that, if the jury believed the prosecutrix, they could convict on her evidence alone, was not erroneous for not requiring a belief beyond a reasonable doubt, where the jury were elsewhere clearly instructed that every fact essential to the offense should be proved beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty; it not being necessary that the qualification should be repeated in every instruction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1992-1995, 3158; Dec. Dig. § 823.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Norton, Judge.

Elvi Lewis was convicted of statutory rape, and he appeals from the judgment of conviction and an order denying a motion for a new trial. Affirmed.

Ben Berry, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was accused by information, tried by a jury, and convicted of the crime of rape committed on April 17, 1911, upon a child under the age of 16. He appeals from the judgment of conviction, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The verdict was: "Guilty of rape as charged. We recommend him to the mercy of the court." He was sentenced to imprisonment for 10 years. The defendant being unable to employ counsel, the court appointed Mr. Ben Berry as his attorney, who conducted the defense at the trial with zeal and ability and is prosecuting this appeal with apparent belief in the innocence of his client.

The prosecutrix is defendant's stepchild and at the time of the alleged offense was of the age of 13 years. Defendant was then and had long been afflicted with weak and inflamed eyes, nearly blind, and deprived of one leg, and was at times under treatment by a physician, although the evidence did not show lack of copulative capacity. He was living in Stockton with his mother, Mrs. Sarah Lewis, and his married sister, Mrs. Turner, and three younger brothers and sisters, before his marriage with the mother of the prosecutrix, Mrs. Emily Hamilton, then a widow. The mother and her child had lived in Lodi, and in the early part of 1909 moved to Stockton and took up their residence with Mrs. Lewis, defendant's mother. Both Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Hamilton were working women, sometimes going out to families, and at other times doing washing at home for patrons. The prosecutrix went to public school with the other children. In September, 1909, defendant married Mrs. Hamilton while living in the family of his mother, Mrs. Sarah Lewis, and not long after moved to a house at a place called "the homestead," in another part of the city of Stockton. This was a house of three rooms, one of which was a kitchen, where there was also a bed. It was at this house and on this kitchen bed that the particular act is alleged to have occurred. Part of the time, prior to April 17, 1911, a Mrs. Johnson lived with the family at the homestead. The child, Angie, attended public school not far distant. Both Mrs. Lewis, defendant's wife, and Mrs. Johnson, while living with the family, worked out generally, but not always, on alternate days, one remaining at home to do the work. Mrs. Johnson was not living with them in April, 1911. The story told by the child involves the conduct of defendant while living at his mother's house, both before and after his marriage, as also in the house at the homestead. The verdict has no foundation other than the testimony of the prosecutrix, which is not corroborated by any circumstance or fact, except it be the result of the examination made by witness, Dr. Miller, and by him only to the extent of appearances, not necessary to mention, known by physicians to indicate sexual intercourse with some one. This fact, as corroborating evidence pointing to defendant, lost its force by admitted conduct of the prosecutrix with other persons. Counsel urge with earnestness that the verdict based upon the uncorroborated testimony of his accuser and upon a narrative of facts in itself unbelievable was the result of passion and prejudice, and was without substantial justification. The prosecutrix was permitted, without objection, to lay bare her life both on the examination in chief and on her cross-examination at the time she lived in Lodi, then but 10 or 11 years old, until the date of the particular act, in 1911, selected by the prosecuting attorney. The record shows that it was with great difficulty the witness was brought to the point of telling her story, and then only after much urging by the prosecuting attorney and intimations by the court that she must answer the questions or render herself liable to punishment. Apparently her hesitation was not from a sense of shame or delicacy of feeling or failure to understand the questions or from fear, and yet the substantial facts finally came out only in answer to leading questions in which the prosecuting attorney himself narrated the circumstances in their sequence and the witness answered "yes" or "no" as the question seemed to require. According to the testimony of the witness given at the preliminary, defendant's intercourse with her commenced six or seven months before his marriage to her mother and was kept up twice a week, on Mondays and Saturdays; that before that time he had conducted himself with her in a lascivious manner; that after his marriage he continued this intercourse twice a week up to April, 1911; at the trial she reduced the frequency of intercourse at Mrs. Sarah Lewis' house, before defendant's marriage, to once a month, but adhered to her statement that it had continued twice a week most of the time after his marriage and for six or seven months prior to April, 1911, at the homestead; that it occurred in every instance in the home where they were living at the time, at Mrs. Sarah Lewis' house, where six or eight people were living, young and old, and at the homestead where, at least, a considerable part of the time, Mrs. Johnson lived with the family; that the days were chosen, Mondays and Wednesdays, when her mother went out to work. She testified that she had once, while living in the Lewis house on Washington street and before the marriage of defendant, accused one Masterson of having intercourse with her, and she immediately told her mother of the fact. Some investigation followed, and she afterwards retracted and the investigation ceased. It appeared, also, that she had been approached by certain boys and certain suggestions were made to her by at least two other men, of all which she promptly told her mother. There seemed to be no lack of confidence between mother and child, and yet she admitted she never told her mother of defendant's advances either at the early stage of his alleged relations nor at any other time, although they were continued unintermittently for over two years. When asked why she did not tell her mother she answered: "I don't know." It was not until her conduct with certain boys with whom she associated led to her being taken before the juvenile court that she divulged her relations with defendant. There was no evidence that defendant had ever been seen in a compromising situation with the child; or that he had ever been seen to show her any affectionate or loving attention or she any towards him; indeed, on the contrary, she admitted that he had corrected her and at times restrained her from going to places he thought improper for her, though she said she bore him no ill will. The mother of the witness and the adult persons who had lived in the same house with defendant, at his mother's and at the homestead, testified that they never saw or heard of any act of impropriety of defendant towards this child. The story of the particular act, as brought out in the manner above stated, was that it occurred on Monday, April 17, 1911, in the kitchen; that her mother got up that morning, leaving her husband in bed, and about 8 o'clock went away to work; that witness was working in the kitchen, and defendant asked her to come to bed with him, which she did. The details of this incident as assented to by the witness, in response to the questions as put to her, are unprintable, and disclose a condition of mind in the participants which should shock the sensibility of persons not abnormally depraved. Her mother testified that her husband got up from the bed where they had been sleeping about the time she did on that April morning; that he went to the barn to do some work about making a chicken house and she went with him, and while there called to her daughter to bring some tool that was needed. Defendant told the same story. The prosecuting witness was asked if defendant had not called to her on that morning to bring this tool and her answer was she did not remember. This was Easter Monday and was by this circumstance fixed in the memory of all these witnesses. If the mother's testimony was true, the story told by her daughter was false—both could not be true. It need hardly be added that defendant as a witness denied ever having had sexual intercourse with this child. His testimony, generally consistent, while disclosing under a severe cross-examination no circumstance in any wise corroborating the story of his step-daughter, was not calculated to make a favorable impression on the jury, but in the testimony of the mother there is, on the face of the record, nothing calculated to discredit her. Believing in her husband's innocence, it was natural that she would shield him so far as she could, and it was for the jury to judge how far this motive would lead her in an effort to save him.

In many respects the case presents to our minds the most perplexing problem on the question of the sufficiency of the evidence we have ever encountered in this class of crimes. It would seem almost incredible that the defendant could, in the midst of the surroundings disclosed, have kept up this almost unbroken, this frequent illicit cohabitation with this child for this long period of time, and no one have observed a single incriminating circumstance tending to corroborate her story. And yet it is shown that she early developed puberty; that she had a natural tendency to indulge her sexual passion, and showed no special aversion to improper advances; that there was opportunity notwithstanding the fact, strongly urged, of the many persons in the household; that on the witness stand she displayed no such weakness of mind as to arouse doubt of her fully understanding the gravity of the occasion and the consequences likely to follow to defendant from her testimony. Nor did she, under a very searching cross-examination, show malice towards the defendant or any motive to shield any other person by falsely fixing her relations with others upon him. The court allowed unusual freedom to counsel in his effort to penetrate and discredit the circumstances of this child's life and her relations with defendant as narrated by her. Her manner and deportment on the witness stand, her apparent intelligence and appreciation of what she was saying and its consequences, are tests of her truthfulness of which the reviewing court is deprived. We must assume, in the absence of something in the record upon which to base a contrary opinion, that the jury reached a verdict with full realization of their sworn duty, free from passion and prejudice. We must also assume that the learned trial judge was satisfied with the verdict or he would have granted the motion for a new trial.

[1] Cases have occurred—some are cited—where the appellate court has felt itself constrained, in the interest of justice, to override the conclusions of jury and trial court, but such cases are rare, and occur only where the uncorroborated testimony of the complaining witness is so obviously and so inherently improbable as to leave the court no recourse, without self-stultification, except to reverse the judgment. But this obvious and inherent improbability must, however, very plainly appear before the reviewing court should assume the functions of the trial jury.

In People v. Kuches, 120 Cal. 569, 52 Pac. 1003, the court said: "By denying the motion for a new trial the learned judge of the court below has manifested his satisfaction with its sufficiency (the sufficiency of the evidence). His opportunity to form a correct conclusion upon the weight and effect of the evidence was far better than ours, and his conclusion cannot be disturbed." See, also, People v. Benc, 130 Cal. 168, 62 Pac. 404; People v. Logan, 123 Cal. 414, 56 Pac. 56.

[2] As above intimated, we must find in the record full justification for believing that the verdict was the expression of passion and prejudice, rather than deliberate judgment, before we should interfere. We cannot say that such a condition is here shown.

[3] It is claimed that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction: "You are instructed that in the crime of rape a person may be convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix, but you are instructed that, should you find that the testimony of the prosecutrix is not sustained by facts and circumstances corroborating it, you should proceed in your deliberations with great caution, as in the absence of corroborating testimony it is dangerous to find a verdict of guilty."

The following instruction was requested by defendant and refused by the court: "The testimony of children should be received with great caution, and this is especially the case when the children are of tender years and the events they are relating happened a long time previous to the time they are on the stand." The court instructed the jury as follows: "The court instructs you that you are the sole judges of the weight of the testimony which has been introduced before you, and that in determining what weight to give the testimony of the prosecuting witness in this case you should take into consideration her appearance while on the stand, her apparent interest, or lack of interest in the proceedings, if any appear, her age and her manner of testifying, and in the light of all her testimony, and of all other evidence in the case, you should give her testimony such weight, and only such weight, as you think under all the circumstances it is entitled to. In the consideration of the testimony of the prosecuting witness, you should take into consideration all of the facts and circumstances surrounding the place where the crime is alleged to have been committed, and you should consider all the facts and circumstances at the time and immediately after the offense is charged to have been committed in determining the weight of her testimony and the reasonableness of her story, as tending to show to your minds the credit to be given the same."

[4] Just what effect on the verdict it would have for the court to tell the jury that it would be "dangerous to find a verdict of guilty" is difficult to conjecture. It is quite certain that the tendency of such a caution would be to greatly weaken the instruction, concededly correct, that the jury may convict on the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix. To tell the jury that to do this "would be dangerous" would, we think, be an unwarranted suggestion to come from the court. As to the other instruction, the record shows that the trial occurred in June and the offense charged occurred in the previous month of April. The events narrated did not happen a long time previous to the trial, as the instruction assumes. The instructions given by the court, it seems to us, were sufficiently cautionary and admonitory, and defendant was not prejudiced by the refusal complained of. The court instructed the jury as follows: "The direct evidence of one witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient for the proof of any fact, except perjury and treason. If the jury believe the prosecutrix, they can convict on her evidence alone. While it is true that the charge of rape is easily made and difficult to defend, yet, if you are convinced from all the facts and circumstances in evidence that the defendant is guilty, then it is your duty to so find." The court also instructed the jury that, before they could find the defendant guilty, they "must find that each and every fact essential to the establishment of his guilt has been proven beyond all reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty." The jury were given the usual definition of reasonable doubt.

[5] The above instructions were followed by the instructions first above considered, and all of them should be taken together in any fair attempt to understand their true significance and meaning and the impression they were calculated to make on the jury.

Appellant selects for his criticism the following: "If the jury believe the prosecutrix, they can convict on her evidence alone." The objection made is that, under such an instruction, "it was not necessary that the jury should believe the testimony of the prosecuting witness beyond a reasonable doubt in order to find the defendant guilty as charged." The jury were clearly instructed that every fact essential to the establishment of the charge should be proved beyond all reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty. It was not necessary that this phraseology should be used in every instruction. We must presume that the jury understood from the instructions given them that they were not at liberty to believe the prosecuting witness unless convinced of the truth of her statements beyond a reasonable doubt. If they did thus believe her, they could not have done otherwise than convict the defendant, for it was upon her uncorroborated testimony alone that conviction was based.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

18 Cal. App. 411

LININGER v. SAN FRANCISCO, V. & N. V. R. CO. (Civ. 909.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 29, 1912.)

1. STREET RAILROADS (§ 75*)—ELECTRIC CARS—EQUIPMENT AND OPERATION.

Civ. Code, § 486, providing that a bell weighing 20 pounds must be placed upon each locomotive engine and rung at crossings, does not apply to electric cars.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 155; Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

2. STATUTES (§§ 174, 175*)—CONSTRUCTION.

To determine whether a subject falls within the general description of a statute, resort must be had to the words used, the context, the object in view, and the evils intended to be remedied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 164, 165; Dec. Dig. §§ 174, 175.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 11*)—EVIDENTIARY MATTERS.

A city ordinance regulating the movement of trains through the city was evidentiary matter not required to be pleaded, and hence was properly stricken from a complaint for injuries by a street car at a street crossing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 31; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

4. STREET RAILROADS (§ 74*)—ORDINANCE—CONSTRUCTION—SPEED OF CARS.

Under the rule that an ordinance open to two constructions will be given that construction most consistent with sound public policy, an ordinance regulating the speed of cars "within one thousand feet of any drawbridge" means "within one thousand feet when approaching any drawbridge."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 154; Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

5. NEGLIGENCE (§ 93*)—IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE.

Where one was injured by a collision between a street car and an automobile in which she was riding as a guest without any control over the driver, the street car company could not set up the negligence of the automobile driver to relieve it from liability for its own negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 147-150; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

6. STREET RAILROADS (§ 114*)—COLLISION AT STREET CROSSING—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In an action for personal injuries from a collision between an electric car and an automobile in which the plaintiff was riding as a guest, evidence held to show that at the time of the accident the car was going at an excessive speed without the warning the law requires, and to raise a reasonable inference that such negligence was the proximate contributing cause of the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 239; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 927*)—REVIEW—MOTION FOR NONSUIT.

On review of the granting of a nonsuit, all evidence in favor of the plaintiff must be taken as true, and evidence contradictory thereto disregarded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2912, 2917, 3748, 4024; Dec. Dig. § 927.*]

8. STREET RAILROADS (§ 84*)—COLLISION AT STREET CROSSING—EXCESSIVE SPEED—SPEED ORDINANCE.

To run a car over a crossing at speed in excess of that limited by statute or ordinance is negligence per se.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

9. STREET RAILROADS (§ 90*)—OPERATION—NEGLIGENCE—SPEED.

Regardless of any city ordinance, where an electric car is being run over eight miles per hour when it collides with an automobile at a crossing in the business section of the city, the railroad company is negligent; the speed being such as an ordinarily prudent man, under the circumstances, would deem dangerous to others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 190-192; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

10. STREET RAILROADS (§ 81*)—OPERATION—WARNING.

A motorman in charge of an electric car approaching a public crossing should give all reasonable warning of the approach of the car, although there is no statute or ordinance requiring it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 172-177; Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Harriet Lininger against the San Francisco, Vallejo & Napa Valley Railroad Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Clarence N. Riggins, for appellant. John T. York, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was for damages for personal injuries as the result of a collision between one of defendant's electric cars and an automobile in which plaintiff was riding as a guest.

[1] Certain portions of the complaint were stricken out, on motion of defendant, and a nonsuit was granted at the close of plaintiff's evidence. The complaint was constructed upon the theory that section 486 of the Civil Code applies to electric cars, and the ruling of the court upon the motion to strike out involved that consideration. The section was enacted in 1872 and provides that "A bell, of at least twenty pounds weight, must be placed on each locomotive engine, and be rung at a distance of at least eighty rods from the place where the railroad crosses any street, road or highway, and be kept ringing until it has crossed such street, road or highway; or a steam whistle must be attached, and be sounded, except in cities, at the like distance, and be kept sounding at intervals until it has crossed the same, under a penalty of one hundred dollars for every neglect. * * * The corporation is also liable for all damages sustained by any person, and caused by its locomotives, train or cars, when the provisions of this section are not complied with." Electric cars were not in existence, and it does not appear that they were contemplated, at the time this law was passed. It could therefore hardly be said that they could have been in the mind of the Legislature, but rather that the legislative intent was to require such a bell to be used upon the "locomotive engine" that, 40 years ago, was familiar in transportation history. It may be said, also, that the alternative provision in reference to the "steam whistle" is significant in this connection as indicative of the legislative intent to confine the application of the law to "steam locomotives." Of course, the absence of actual intention to make the provision applicable to electric cars may not be conclusive of the question, but it is, manifestly, an important consideration. The subject received careful attention in San Francisco, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, 142 Cal. 222, 75 Pac. 575, wherein the question concerned the application to street railroads of a provision in the Constitution in reference to "railroads," etc. Through Mr. Justice Shaw, the court said: "There was therefore clearly an absence of actual intention in using the phrase 'railroads operated in more than one county' to make a provision which also should apply to street railroads, if, peradventure, in the future one should come within the description. If the word 'railroads' is to be extended so as to include street railroads, it is not because of the actual intention of those who framed and adopted the Constitution to give the word that meaning, but because of the rule of law that where a provision is made by law for a certain class of subjects, and thereafter a new but similar subject is created, coming within the general description, and within the particular purpose and object of the law, it is to be considered as having been intended to be included within the original description. Thus, for illustration, a statute which imposes a penalty for 'feloniously driving any sort of carriage' was held to include and apply to bicycles, although at the time the statute was adopted bicycles had not yet come into existence. Taylor v. Goodwin, L. R. 42 B. D. 228."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes.

[2] To determine whether the subject falls within the general description, resort must be had, as stated in the Scott Case, supra, to the "words used, the context, the object in view, and the evils that were intended to be remedied." It is contended by appellant that the words used, "locomotive engine," are comprehensive enough to include the vehicle involved herein consisting of a locomotive and passenger car combined in one. It may be conceded that the description of the car given by one of the witnesses brings it within the scope of the definition of the words, "locomotive engine," quoted from Webster's New International Dictionary of 1910; but when we consider the object to be accomplished by the statute and the evil intended to be remedied, we are satisfied that it would be unreasonable to give it the interpretation contended for by appellant. It is, no doubt, true that the purpose of the Code section is the protection of the public. The Legislature intended that the danger of accidents at railroad crossings should be obviated as far as practicable. To subvert a public need in this respect, the provision in question was enacted. But in consequence of the comparatively recent important development in the industrial application of electricity, we have this new and better motive power requiring a peculiar mechanical contrivance for the purpose of transportation, and it is found that the steel gong and the compressed air "whistle" are the simplest and most effective devices for giving warning at the approach to a crossing. To require a 20-pound bell to be installed in an electric car would impose an unnecessary burden upon the owner and—what is more important—would not inure to the safety or benefit of the public. There is no reason why, therefore, the provision in question should be extended, beyond the obvious intention of the Legislature, to include the situation that confronts us here. Some cases are cited to the point by both parties, but we deem it unnecessary to review them in detail. They involve somewhat different circumstances.

In Fallon v. West End St. Ry. Co., 171 Mass. 249, 50 N. E. 536, however, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts says: "But we think that by the words 'locomotive engine or train upon a railroad' must be understood a railroad and locomotive engines and trains operated and run, or originally intended to be operated and run, in some manner and to some extent by steam. This, undoubtedly, was the sense in which the words were used by the Legislature when the statute was enacted; and we do not feel justified now in giving to them the broad construction for which the plaintiff contends."

[3] We think there was no error in striking from the complaint the ordinance regulating the movement of trains through the city. It constituted evidentiary matter, and it was not necessary to plead it. Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co., 154 Cal. 663, 98 Pac. 1063, 16 Ann. Cas. 1061.

[4] A portion of ordinance 460 of said city provides that "no person shall run or propel any railroad car, locomotive, hand car, or any train of cars, or any trolley car, in the city of Napa, at a greater rate of speed than four miles per hour within one thousand feet of any drawbridge." The trial court construed this to mean "within one thousand feet when approaching any drawbridge." We think this is the rational view of the provision. In its enactment the legislative body had in mind the crossing of a drawbridge by a train of cars and the peril that is incident thereto. In the construction of the ordinance, to ascertain the legislative intent, regard must be had not simply to the exact phraseology, but to the general tenor and scope of the legislative scheme embodied in the statute. Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 118 Cal. 189, 50 Pac. 277. "If the act is susceptible of two constructions, one leading inevitably to mischief or absurdity and the other consistent with justice, sound sense, and wise policy, the former shall be rejected and the latter adopted." In re Mitchell, 120 Cal. 386, 52 Pac. 800. As stated by respondent: "Section 460 requires a more restricted rate of speed when the car or train is within 1,000 feet of any drawbridge, than when it is passing through any other portions of the city, and while the drawbridge and the distance of 1,000 feet on either side of it may be in the most sparsely settled portion of the city, and might be located wholly without the congested traffic centers, and indeed while the track might be wholly located on private rights of way and be not crossed by any highway or other grade crossings, yet if the construction sought to be given it were to prevail, the city council intended to limit the speed for 2,000 feet, without any reason whatever therefor. Such an ordinance would be void. Burg v. Chicago, etc., R. R. Co., 90 Iowa, 106 [57 N. W. 680, 48 Am. St. Rep. 419]; Erison v. Chicago, etc., R. R. Co., 45 Minn. 370 [48 N. W. 6, 11 L. R. A. 434]; Meyers v. Chicago, etc., R. R. Co., 57 Iowa, 555 [10 N. W. 896, 42 Am. St. Rep. 50]."

It is matter of common knowledge that, more or less frequently, frightful accidents occur at these crossings in consequence of the draw being open, and it was to minimize this peril that the ordinance was passed. The trial court's construction of the provision is the only reasonable one, as we view it, and it is consistent with the best interests of the public.

Another more serious question remains to be considered. As to the law of negligence involved in the case, there seems to be no serious controversy between the parties. It cannot be maintained from the evidence that the plaintiff herself is chargeable with contributory negligence. As already stated, she was the guest of other parties and she had no control over the driver of the automobile. She was not aware of the approach of the car until it was too late for her to escape. But if there were a conflict in the evidence as to this, we would, of course, on the appeal from the judgment of nonsuit, be required to give full credit to every circumstance in her favor. Among other things, she testified that she sat on "the left back seat," that she knew nothing "about the running or management of automobiles," that she had never been in Napa before, that she knew nothing about the streets or location of the car lines, that she did not remember of either seeing or hearing defendant's car, that during the entire ride she said nothing to the driver in reference to the manner of driving the automobile, and she could not recall the immediate circumstances surrounding the accident.

[5] The only other theory upon which the order granting the motion for a nonsuit can be justified is that all of the evidence shows that the accident was due totally to the negligence of Mr. Wisecarver, the owner and chauffeur of the automobile. It is not sufficient, manifestly, that the evidence may disclose that his negligence contributed to the accident, as his want of care cannot be imputed to plaintiff. In this respect the law admittedly is, as stated by the Supreme Court of the United States, in Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 366, 16 Sup. Ct. 391, 29 L. Ed. 652. There the party injured hired a public hack, but there is no difference in principle between that case and this. Through Mr. Justice Field the court said: "A person who hires a public hack and gives the driver directions as to the place to which he wishes to be conveyed, but exercises no other control over the conduct of the driver, is not responsible for his acts or negligence, nor prevented from recovering against a railroad company for injuries suffered from a collision of its train with the hack, caused by the negligence of both the managers of the train and of the driver." It must be true, as stated therein, that "responsibility cannot, within any recognized rules of law, be fastened upon one who has in no way interfered with and controlled in the matter causing the injury. From the simple fact of hiring the carriage or riding in it no such liability can arise. The party hiring or riding must have some way co-operated in producing the injury complained of before he incurs any liability for it."

[6, 7] But it is not denied that this is the law. This feature of the case may therefore be dismissed from further consideration. The vital inquiry remaining is: Does the record contain any evidence from which a rational inference may be drawn that the negligence of respondent contributed to the accident? We think this must unquestionably be answered in the affirmative. The law as to a nonsuit has been so frequently declared as to hardly need repetition. It is fully considered by this court in Re Daly's Estate, 15 Cal. App. 329, 114 Pac. 787. Nowhere, probably, has the rule been stated more strongly than in the Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 82 Pac. 252. The gist of it is that all the evidence in favor of the one resisting the motion must be taken as true, and if contradictory evidence has been given it must be disregarded. In the application of this rule to the evidence we must bear in mind that there are two features involved in the consideration of the question of respondent's negligence. These relate to the speed with which the car was traveling and the presence or absence of any warning given as the car approached the crossing.

[8, 9] An ordinance of the city limits the speed within the corporate limits to the rate of eight miles an hour. "Where a train is run at a crossing at a rate of speed in excess of that limited by statute or ordinance, it is in most jurisdictions negligence per se." 33 Cyc. 976. That is the law in this state. James v. Oakland Traction Co., 10 Cal. App. 799, 103 Pac. 1082. But, regardless of the ordinance, it was clearly the duty of defendant to use ordinary care in the operation of its cars for the purpose of avoiding injury to others and not to run them at a rate of speed which an ordinarily careful man would deem dangerous to others. 33 Cyc. 971. The accident occurred in a business section of the city and at a point where vehicles were frequently crossing the railroad and danger of collision was naturally to be apprehended. If there is any evidence, therefore, that the car was approaching the crossing at a rate of speed in excess of eight miles per hour, it would be a justifiable inference that defendant was negligent.

[10] As to the second point, it is not disputed that the law is as stated in 33 Cyc. 956, as follows: "It is the common-law duty of those in charge of a train of cars, for nonperformance of which the railroad company is responsible, when approaching a public crossing, to give notice of the approach by all reasonable warnings, such as by blowing a whistle, ringing a bell, signal lights, or by such other devices as may be sufficient to give timely warning to travelers of their approach, so as to afford time for all approaching to stop in a place of safety."

* * * This duty to give timely warning exists, notwithstanding there is no statute or ordinance requiring it." There is evidence in the record, which cannot be ignored, of negligence on the part of the railroad company in each of these respects. Without segregating it as to these two features, we proceed to exhibit a portion of said evidence. It was shown by the testimony of the general superintendent that the company required its cars to be run according to a certain schedule or time-table calling for a speed of more than 9 miles an hour if they traveled continuously. With a proper allowance for stops, it is a fair inference that this schedule would demand a speed of 11 miles or more. Robert Woods, who was near the scene of the accident, testified that the car came down the street at the rate of "about 11 or 12 miles an hour and the automobile was going about 8 or 10 miles an hour"; that he did not hear any alarm bell at any time from the time the car started at Main street until after the accident, except he thought he heard the bell just at the moment of collision, believing that it was caused by "a mud fender or wheel or something" striking the bell. Mabel Smith also testified that "the car was coming pretty fast" and she did not hear any alarm. Charles Steere was asked the question, "Did you hear any noise at all?" and he answered: "Nothing only the rumble of the car. I think if the bell had rung, from where I was standing I could have heard it. I don't think there was any bell rung at all, because if there was I would have heard it, because I was within 5, I guess, or 10 feet of the corner." Other witnesses testified to the same effect, but we will not quote any further except to give a part of the testimony of C. L. Wisecarver, the driver of the automobile. He said he approached the railroad at the rate of 8 or 10 miles an hour; that the defendant's car when he first saw it was six or seven feet from the corner; that he did not hear any bell; that he was about 25 or 30 feet from the railroad track when he first saw the car; that when he saw the car he didn't think he could stop, he had new tires and was afraid that they wouldn't hold, that he "would slide across onto the track in front of the car," and therefore he put on speed and tried "to get across the track in front of the car." In judging of his conduct we must, of course, view the situation as it appeared to him. Being suddenly put into peril "without having sufficient time to consider all the circumstances, he is excusable for omitting some precautions, or making an immediate choice under this disturbing influence, although if his mind had been clear he ought to have done otherwise." Schneider v. Market St. Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 482, 66 Pac. 734. But, as already seen, his negligence is not attributable to plaintiff, and, as far as this appeal is concerned, we may admit that he was negligent, and the result will not be affected in the least.

Indulging, therefore, as we must, every favorable inference fairly deducible from the strongest showing made by plaintiff, we must hold as established facts that at the time of the accident defendant was operating its car at an excessive rate of speed and without giving the warning, as it approached the crossing, that the law exacts. From these premises it is at least a rational conclusion that the negligence of defendant constituted a proximate contributory cause of the injury to plaintiff. In other words, giving full credit to the showing made by plaintiff, it is not an unreasonable inference that the injury to appellant was a natural and probable consequence of the wrongful act of the railroad company, and that if the negligence of the driver of the automobile may be regarded as precipitating the disaster, this latter should not be regarded as the sole, independent, but conjointly with the continuous negligence of respondent, as the concurring cause of the accident. Pastene v. Adams, 49 Cal. 87; Tompkins v. Clay St. Ry. Co., 66 Cal. 163, 4 Pac. 1165; Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co., 158 Cal. 499, 111 Pac. 534, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134. As we view it, therefore, the question of defendant's liability should have been submitted to the jury.

It is needless to add that if upon the same evidence the case had been submitted and decided by the jury in favor of defendant, or if a verdict in favor of plaintiff had been set aside by the court, we could not say that the decision was unsupported; but, in view of the well-established rule in reference to a motion for a nonsuit, we can see no escape from the conclusion that the case was improperly withdrawn from the jury.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(18 Cal. App. 373)

STOCKTON IRON WORKS v. WALTERS.
(Civ. 905.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 26, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 867*)—REVIEW—SCOPE—ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL.

Questions as to the sufficiency of the complaint, rulings on demurrers, sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment, the striking out of counterclaims and portions of the answer, and the refusal of leave to amend, cannot be considered upon an appeal from an order denying a new trial, but only such matters can be considered as have made grounds upon which the superior court is authorized to grant or deny the motion; nor does Code Civ. Proc. § 670, as amended by St. 1907, p. 720, making certain orders part of the judgment roll, enlarge the scope of an appeal from an order denying the motion for new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3476-3486; Dec. Dig. § 867.*]

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 1½, * New vol. 9, Key No. Series)—“TRIAL.”

“Trial,” as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 656, declaring that a new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by jury or court, refers to an investigation of the issues of fact raised by the pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7095-7103; vol. 8, p. 7821.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1032*)—HARMLESS ERROR—RULING ON APPLICATION TO AMEND—BURDEN OF SHOWING PREJUDICE.

The denial of leave to file an amended answer and counterclaim, where defendant does not suggest why he desires to amend or that he could improve his answer by amendment, is not reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4047-4051; Dec. Dig. § 1032.*]

4. SALES (§ 181*)—ACTION FOR PRICE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action to recover the contract price of a steel shaft for marine use, defended on the ground that such shaft was defective and imperfect, held sufficient to sustain a finding that the alleged defect did not impair the strength or usefulness of the shaft.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 473-491; Dec. Dig. § 181.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 321*)—DELIBERATIONS OF JURY RETIRING FROM COURTROOM.

After the jury came into court with a request for instructions as to interest, counsel waived any interest, and the court instructed that they might exclude that question. The foreman on inquiry stated that it was not necessary to return to the jury room, and after a short pause the jury rendered its verdict for the amount claimed without interest. Held that, as the jury had reached a conclusion except as to the item of interest before coming into the courtroom, it was competent, on the waiver of that question, for the jury to return their verdict without retiring from the courtroom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 760-763; Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 76*)—OBJECTIONS—TIME FOR OBJECTION.

An objection to the admission of evidence, not made until the witness has answered, cannot be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 172, 183-190, 237; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

7. WITNESSES (§ 240*)—EXAMINATION—LEADING QUESTION.

In an action for the contract price of a shaft for a vessel, where the principal issue was whether the shaft as delivered met the requirements of the contract, a question to plaintiff's witness whether the shaft on delivery was in the condition required by the contract was objectionable as leading.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 795, 837-839, 841-845; Dec. Dig. § 240.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1048*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Error in admitting the answer to a leading question on the principal issue in the case was without prejudice, where such issue was afterwards gone into fully by both parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4140-4145, 4151, 4158-4160; Dec. Dig. § 1048.*]

9. SALES (§ 358*)—ACTION FOR PRICE—EVIDENCE.

In an action for the contract price of a shaft which plaintiff had contracted to “furnish,” it was immaterial whether plaintiff informed defendant that he had contracted with a third person to make the shaft.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1049-1055; Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

10. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINIONS—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action for the contract price of a shaft for a vessel, in which the defense was that the shaft was defective, and the court ruled that the declarations of defendant's captain and engineer, who were not experts, were not admissible, a question to plaintiff's president whether the captain and engineer, at the time the declarations were made, had informed him that the shaft was not fit for the use for which it had been ordered, was objectionable as an attempt to get before the jury an opinion which neither the captain nor the engineer were qualified to give.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2149-2185; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

11. EVIDENCE (§ 513*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—SUBJECTS OF EXPERT TESTIMONY—MACHINERY.

Expert knowledge is necessary to qualify a witness to give an opinion upon the safety of a shaft ordered and made for use upon a vessel, and claimed to be defective by reason of a “pipe” or hollow at one end.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2317-2318; Dec. Dig. § 513.*]

12. EVIDENCE (§ 114*)—RELEVANCY—FACTS IN ISSUE—SPECULATIVE MATTERS.

In an action to recover the contract price of a shaft ordered for a vessel, where the defense was that the shaft was defective, a question as to what effect the breaking of the shaft would have on the steamer was properly excluded; the effect being dependent on so many other circumstances that the answer would have been purely speculative.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 125-132; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

13. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—RIGHT TO COMPLAIN—ERROR FAVORABLE TO PARTY OBJECTING.

An appellant cannot complain of the admission of evidence favorable to himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4052-4062; Dec. Dig. § 1033.*]

14. WITNESSES (§ 329*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—TESTING MEMORY.

Much latitude is permitted in testing the recollection of a witness as to what took place

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes at a conversation between himself and a third person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1104, 1105; Dec. Dig. § 329.*]

15. WITNESSES (§ 248*)—EXAMINATION—RESPONSIVENESS OF ANSWERS.

Answers of a witness not responsive to the questions put to him are properly stricken out.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 861-863; Dec. Dig. § 248.*]

16. EVIDENCE (§ 397*) — PAROL EVIDENCE—TERMS OF WRITTEN CONTRACT.

Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary the terms of a written contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1756-1765; Dec. Dig. § 397.*]

17. SALES (§ 358*)—ACTION FOR PRICE—EVIDENCE—MATERIALITY.

In an action for the contract price of a shaft for a vessel furnished to defendant, evidence as to defendant's ability to pay for the shaft at any time was immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1049-1055; Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

18. SALES (§ 358*)—ACTION FOR PRICE—EVIDENCE—MATERIALITY.

In an action for the contract price of a shaft furnished for use upon defendant's vessel, defended on the ground that it was defective, evidence as to whether defendant had entered into a new contract with any one for a shaft was immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1049-1055; Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

19. EVIDENCE (§ 539*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY OF EXPERT.

In an action for the contract price of an engine shaft for a vessel, defended on the ground that it was defective, a witness, who had qualified as an expert foundryman in making shafts, was qualified to testify as to whether the condition of the shaft was an unusual one.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2349-2352; Dec. Dig. § 539.*]

20. SALES (§ 181*)—ACTION FOR PRICE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for the contract price of an engine shaft for a vessel, defended on the ground that it was unfit for such use, in which the evidence on that issue was conflicting, the burden of proving such issue was on the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 473-491; Dec. Dig. § 181.*]

21. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 103*)—AUTHORITY.

In an action for the contract price of an engine shaft for defendant's vessel, an instruction that statements by plaintiff's representatives at the time they met defendant's captain, in the absence of defendant and in the absence of the captain's authority to act for him, could not be received as going to the establishment of any agreement between the parties, touching a new shaft or any guaranty concerning it, was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 278-293, 353-359, 367; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Norton, Judge.

Action by the Stockton Iron Works against Benjamin Walters. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur L. Levinsky, for appellant. C. W. Miller and R. C. Minor, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action brought by plaintiff against defendant to recover the sum of $1,460, alleged to be owing for work performed and materials furnished in the repairing of a steamer called the "H. E. Wright." In his amended answer defendant admitted that plaintiff performed certain work and furnished certain materials, but denied that they were for the "repair of said steamer H. E. Wright," but alleges that plaintiff entered into an agreement with defendant whereby plaintiff agreed to construct and place in said steamer a certain steel shaft and its necessary attachments (describing them), "which said shaft was to be a first-class shaft and in a perfect condition, and fit for the purposes for which it was ordered, * * * for the sum of $1,460"; that prior to the placing of said shaft in said steamer defendant discovered that the said shaft "was not in first-class and perfect condition, but, on the contrary, said shaft was improperly made, and the same was defective, and had a serious flaw and defect therein" (particularly describing it), by reason of which it was "not reasonably fit for the purposes for which it was ordered and to be used" and defendant refused to accept said shaft; that plaintiff then and there agreed to make a new shaft, "perfect and first-class, in the place and stead of said imperfect and defective shaft, and requested defendant to temporarily receive the said defective shaft and its attachments, and to use the same until a new, first-class and perfect shaft and its attachments could be made and placed in said steamer"; that, relying on said promise and not otherwise, "defendant received said shaft temporarily and until said new shaft could be made; that at said time plaintiff guaranteed defendant against all loss or damage he might suffer by his use of said imperfect shaft," while it was making for him a new and perfect shaft; that thereafter defendant demanded of plaintiff a new and perfect shaft in place of said defective shaft, but plaintiff refused and ever since has refused to comply with defendant's said demand. Defendant admitted that no part of said $1,460 or alleged interest has been paid, but denied that the whole or any part thereof is now due or owing from defendant to plaintiff. Paragraph 7 of the amended answer is a denial that the said shaft "was of the value of $1,460, or any other sum of money whatsoever, or at all, by reason of its imperfect condition and by reason of the said defect aforesaid." Paragraph 8 is an offer or tender of said shaft to plaintiff and a demand that plaintiff "detach and strip said shaft from the wheel and every part and portion of said steamer" and remove the same therefrom "without damage or injury to said steamer." These two paragraphs were, on motion of plaintiff, stricken out of the answer. Defendant, by way of counterclaim, set up a somewhat similar state of facts and claimed damages by reason thereof. On motion of plaintiff this counterclaim was stricken out. The damages claimed rest upon plaintiff's alleged violation of its agreement to furnish defendant a shaft free from the alleged imperfections. It was claimed by plaintiff at the trial, and admitted by defendant, that the materials and labor referred to in the complaint and answer were furnished pursuant to the following offer and acceptance, which appeared in evidence but were not specifically pleaded: "May 1, 1909. Captain Walters, Steamer H. E. Wright, Stockton, Calif.—Dear Sir: We will furnish you with one 8" hammered steel shaft completely machined with two new forged steel cranks (and divers other fittings as part of said shaft, and not necessary to be enumerated) complete, delivered on our wharf for the sum of $1,460. [Signed] Stockton Iron Works." Defendant replied May 3, 1909, as follows: "We hereby accept your proposal of May 1st for one hammered steel shaft complete and you may proceed to get this shaft out at once. [Signed] Benj. Walters." The cause was tried by a jury, and plaintiff had the verdict for the sum of $1,460, without interest, and judgment passed for plaintiff accordingly. Defendant appeals from the order denying his motion for a new trial on bill of exceptions.

[1, 2] 1. Appellant claims that the court erred in striking out his counterclaim and portions of his answer and also in refusing his application for leave to amend. Respondent makes the point that, there being no appeal from the judgment, the rulings of the court cannot be reviewed, citing Spence v. Scott, 97 Cal. 181, 31 Pac. 52, 939; Sutton v. Stephan, 101 Cal. 547, 36 Pac. 106; Mock v. Santa Rosa, 126 Cal. 330, 58 Pac. 826. In each of those cases the appeal was on the judgment roll without a statement or bill of exceptions. The record showed in each case a motion to strike out portions of defendant's answer and the rulings thereon. The court held that the proceedings formed no part of the judgment roll, and, there being no bill of exceptions or statement, the rulings could not be reviewed. We have here, however, the judgment roll and bill of exceptions in both of which the proceedings on the motion are set forth, and it is contended by appellant that the cases cited do not apply. Section 670, Code of Civil Procedure, was amended in 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 720), making "all orders striking out any pleading in whole or in part" part of the judgment roll. But the amendment does not enlarge the scope of the appeal from the order denying a motion for new trial. Questions relating to the sufficiency of the complaint, rulings upon demurrers, and sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment cannot be considered upon an appeal from an order denying a new trial. Great Western Gold M. Co. v. Chambers, 153 Cal. 307, 95 Pac. 151. Only such matters can be considered as are made grounds upon which the superior court is authorized to grant or deny the motion. Crescent, etc., Co. v. United Upholsterers, 153 Cal. 433, 95 Pac. 871. "A new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by a jury, court or referee." Code Civ. Proc. § 656. It is pointed out in Hayne on New Trial, Revised Edition, p. 5 et seq., that the statutory definition consists of several elements: (1) That a new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact; (2) that the re-examination of the issue of fact must be in the same court; (3) that the re-examination of the issue of fact must take place after a new trial and decision. The author says: "The word 'trial,' as used in the definition under consideration, refers to an investigation of the issues of fact raised by the pleadings." The granting of a motion to strike out parts or all of a pleading is not one of the grounds for new trial. Code Civ. Proc. § 657. Since "all orders striking out any pleading in whole or in part" (Code Civ. Proc. § 670) are part of the judgment roll, it would seem no longer necessary to present the matter by bill of exceptions, as was the case when such orders formed no part of the judgment roll (cases supra); but however this may be, we are satisfied that such orders can only be reviewed on appeal from the judgment.

[3] 2. Defendant complains that he was denied leave to file a second amended answer and counterclaim. The request was made upon the granting of a motion to strike out and the overruling of defendant's demurrer to the complaint. Defendant did not, at the trial, nor does he now, suggest why he desired to amend his answer nor show that he could improve it by amendment. In short, no injury is made to appear by the ruling.

[4] 3. It is urged that the verdict was contrary to the evidence. As is quite often the case, appellant rests his argument largely on testimony adduced in support of his theory, ignoring the fact that this testimony was in conflict with that submitted by the plaintiff or, if not in conflict, might have been discredited by the jury. We cannot undertake a full review of the evidence, making, as it does, a somewhat voluminous record. Briefly stated, there was evidence that when the shaft was delivered at plaintiff's wharf and after it had been put on timbers aboard the steamer, defendant discovered in it what he regarded as a serious defect, impairing its strength and safety, and refused to accept it. This defect consisted in what is technically called a "pipe"—a small hole in the center of the end of the shaft, "where the crank is shrunk on," which was explored with a wire about the size of a knitting needle or ordinary hairpin to the depth of nearly nine inches. A wire of the size of a 20-penny wire nail was inserted about 5½ inches. There was considerable discussion between defendant and his engineer and representatives of plaintiff as to the effect of this blemish, which resulted in defendant's installing the shaft. He claims that he consented upon the conditions set forth in his answer. As to just what representations were made there is much conflict. There was evidence that defendant was given assurances that the shaft was not weakened by this defect, that it was fit and would do the work it was intended for, that plaintiff would guarantee it for a year, and that if after trial for a reasonable time it proved unfit plaintiff would replace it with a new one. Defendant attempted to show that plaintiff conceded the unfitness of the shaft and promised unconditionally to replace it with a new one, but plaintiff's witnesses denied this and testified that no such admission and no such promise was made. Witnesses for the plaintiff, who showed their qualifications as experts, testified that this so-called "pipe" had no appreciable effect on the shaft to weaken it or impair its usefulness or length of service. Witness Pennington testified: "I have had a lot of experience in these things, what is a good and what is not a good shaft. I have made shafts that go to sea, and for vessels that are inland shafts, such as the steamer H. E. Wright. I saw the shaft here in the steamer H. E. Wright in Stockton. I consider the shaft was in perfect condition. Of course, there was in one end what we call a 'pipe,' probably caused by lapping from drawing out the end of the shaft. This pipe I don't think a particle of detriment to the shaft. I thought the shaft was a perfect shaft for the work it was intended for." He was asked the difference between a pipe and a crack, and answered: "Well, a crack is something on the surface; this was something in the center of the shaft that may have been caused by the hammer." He testified that this was not an unusual condition and "did not impair its usefulness at all for the purposes for which it was intended." There was much testimony of like import. It appeared that the shaft had been in constant use for about 16 months at the time of the trial and it showed no indications of weakness. We think there was sufficient evidence to justify the verdict.

[5] 4. Some time after the case had been given to the jury, they came into the courtroom, and, on being asked if they had agreed upon a verdict, the foreman answered: "Not exactly, your honor. We want instruction in regard to the interest, whether the jury could cut out the interest, or have anything to do with the interest. The printed instruction says interest from a certain date." The court replied that all it could do was to call attention to the instructions. Counsel for plaintiff thereupon waived the interest, and, with consent of both parties, the court instructed the jury orally that, inasmuch as interest had been waived in open court, "if the jury see fit they may cut the interest out of the verdict." The court then asked the jury if they desired to return to the jury room. The foreman answered, "I don't think it would be necessary." After "a short pause," the jury passed up the verdict for the sum of $1,460 without interest, and on being polled answered that it was their verdict. The error now claimed is that the verdict was rendered "without retiring from the courtroom to find a verdict." Apparently the jury had reached a conclusion before coming into the courtroom except as to the item of interest, and when plaintiff waived that item, as it had a right to do, it was competent for the jury to return their verdict without retiring from the courtroom. Besides, defendant has not shown, inferentially or otherwise, that he was injured by the conduct of the jury. Apparently he profited by the alleged error.

5. Defendant assigns 50 or more errors in rulings upon the evidence. Some of these are given scant notice by counsel; many of them are mere references to pages of the transcript and the number of the exception there shown, with no explanatory statement in the brief. Others appear to be particularly relied upon, and such of these latter as seem to call for comment will be noticed.

[6-8] Witness Tretheway, president of plaintiff company, was asked whether the articles, at the time of delivery at plaintiff's wharf, were "in the condition required by the proposal and offer of acceptance." He answered, "Yes," after which defendant objected as leading, suggestive, and a conclusion. The court allowed the answer to stand. The objection should have been sustained if it had been made in time, and the answer should have been stricken out if defendant had asked to have it done. The principal issue involved the condition of the shaft at the time of its delivery and whether it met the requirements of the proposal and acceptance. But this whole subject was later gone into very fully by both sides and in great detail. We think the error was without prejudice.

[9] 6. It appeared that plaintiff contracted with Pennington & Co., of San Francisco, to forge the shaft. On cross-examination Tretheway was asked if he informed defendant of this fact, and, on objection of plaintiff as immaterial, the court so ruled. Plaintiff's offer was to "furnish" a shaft such as was described, not personally to manufacture it. The fact was immaterial.

[10] 7. Tretheway had testified, on cross-examination, that his foreman had informed him that objection was made to the shaft; that he sent for Pennington (one of the firm of Pennington & Co.), and they together went on board the vessel where the shaft then was and there met her engineer and Capt. Curry, her commander; that they tried to convince Capt. Curry and the engineer that the shaft was in every way suitable for the work. "Q. Then the engineer and Capt. Curry had, before or at that time, informed you the shaft was not fit for the purposes for which it had been ordered?" The court sustained plaintiff's objection to the question. It appeared that defendant was not present at this meeting with Curry and the engineer. The court had previously ruled that what was done by the parties present could be shown, but that the declarations made in the absence of defendant were not admissible, and defendant declined to be bound by what was said in his absence. Plaintiff objected because neither the engineer nor Curry had qualified as experts and the question was calculated to get from them by indirection what they could not testify to directly. The tendency of the question was to get before the jury an opinion which neither Curry nor the engineer was qualified to give.

[11] 8. The question was asked by defendant of witness Burnett, who was an engineer of experience, but did not show expert knowledge of shafts, whether this particular shaft was "a safe or unsafe shaft." Defendant admitted that witness was not an expert but contended that expert knowledge was not necessary to qualify the witness to give an opinion upon the safety of this shaft. We do not agree with defendant in this contention. It is argued that later on the court allowed plaintiff to submit expert testimony by witness Burns, who, it is alleged, admitted that he was not an expert. Of course, any subsequent error of the court cannot affect the question now before us. It seems, however, that the court, after Burns was examined as to his qualifications, held that he was qualified to give an opinion as to the effect a so-called "pipe" would have on such a shaft as is in question.

[12] 9. Defendant's witness Purington was asked what effect would this shaft have upon the steamer if it should break. An objection by plaintiff was sustained. Purington had never worked a shaft on a steamboat, though he had expert knowledge in making shafts and could and did testify as to the effect a "pipe" would have in a shaft. We cannot see that any answer he might have made would meet any issue in the case. The effect which the breaking of the shaft might have would depend upon so many other facts that any answer would be purely speculative. There was no issue as to the damage which might result from the breaking of the shaft.

[13] 10. On cross-examination this witness was allowed to answer certain questions put by plaintiff as to whether after a year's use any defect in the shaft would be likely to develop itself. Defendant objected on the ground that the witness had not qualified except to a limited extent as an expert. The answers were favorable to defendant, and hence he was not injured.

[14] 11. The cross-examination of defendant's witness Curry, as to what Pennington said when he and Tretheway met Curry on the steamer, was fairly within the rule which permits much latitude in testing the recollection of the witness as to what took place on the occasion referred to.

[15] 12. Witness Donaher was defendant's engineer who was present when Pennington and Tretheway went aboard the steamer to examine the shaft. He was one of the class of witnesses, frequently met with, who wander at will and volunteer irresponsible answers. In his cross-examination by plaintiff he several times exhibited this disposition, and, on motion of plaintiff, his answers were stricken out. We discover no error in these instances. On redirect, an objection to a leading question was sustained. No error is apparent. His answer: "We had a defective shaft, and always expected and looked for it to break; even when I would go to bed I would think about it"—was properly stricken out.

[16] 13. Defendant was called as a witness and was asked to state what changes, if any, were made in the contract at the time it was signed. The court properly refused to allow the terms of the written contract to be varied by parol.

[17] 14. Evidence of defendant's ability to pay for the shaft at any time was immaterial. His ability was not questioned; it was rather his disposition to pay.

[18] 15. Whether or not defendant had entered into a new contract with any one for a shaft was not material.

16. Witness Gavigan, for plaintiff in rebuttal, was foreman of plaintiff's works and was quite fully examined as to his expert knowledge and capacity to judge of the effect this "pipe" would have and whether it weakened the shaft. The court admitted his testimony and we cannot say that its ruling was error.

[19] 17. Witness Pennington was called in rebuttal by plaintiff and was asked whether the condition under which he found the shaft was an unusual condition and, over defendant's objection, answered: "Not at all. In my judgment it did not impair its usefulness at all for the purpose for which it was intended." He had qualified as an expert foundryman in making shafts and was qualified to testify as to whether the condition of this shaft was an unusual one.

We think it safe to say that the evidence which went to the jury, taken in its entirety, fairly presented the theories of the respective parties and was free from prejudicial error. Defendant presented his defense with zeal and ability and, it seems to us, was given every reasonable opportunity to place before the jury every material fact at his command. Nor can we discover that plaintiff was permitted to sustain its case by evidence not legally admissible or, at least, which was erroneously admitted to defendant's prejudice.

[20] 18. The court instructed the jury that, if they believed from the evidence that the articles were furnished under the written offer of plaintiff and written acceptance of defendant, then "these two papers constitute a contract between the parties, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount sued for herein, unless your minds are satisfied by a preponderance of the evidence that the said articles were not reasonably fit for the purposes intended." The court charged the jury that "a person who sells machinery manufactured by him is held by law to impliedly warrant such machinery to be reasonably fit for the purpose for which it was intended," and that "there is no legal requirement that such machinery should be perfect, unless it be so expressly agreed between the buyer and seller"; and, further, that "all that is required, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, is that such machinery is reasonably fit for the purpose for which it is intended." Also, that "an imperfection in such machinery that does not render it reasonably unfit for the use for which it was intended will be insufficient to justify the refusal of the buyer of such machinery to accept and pay for the same, and in this case, if you find from the evidence that the machinery sold by plaintiff to defendant was reasonably fit for the purposes for which it was intended, then you must find for the plaintiff." Defendant complains that, under these instructions, he was compelled, by a preponderance of the evidence, to show that the shaft was not reasonably fit and that when he showed that there was an imperfection the burden at once shifted to plaintiff to show, by preponderance of the evidence, that the shaft was reasonably fit for the purposes for which it was intended. It is also claimed as error in instructing the jury that, unless expressly so agreed, there was no legal requirement of plaintiff to furnish a perfect shaft; defendant claiming that under section 1768 of the Civil Code, it was plaintiff's duty to furnish a "perfect" shaft. Defendant made the alleged imperfection in the shaft the subject of his defense in his answer, and his evidence was directed in a large degree to that issue. It was met by plaintiff in rebuttal, and it seems to us that the court did not, although it might properly have done so, instruct the jury that the burden of proof on this issue was on defendant. The court correctly stated the duty of plaintiff, as provided by section 1770 of the Civil Code; that is, that it must appear that the machinery was reasonably fit for the purpose for which it was intended. On the issue raised by defendant the jury were instructed to be guided by the preponderance of the evidence, as to which there was much conflict. In modifying one of defendant's proposed instructions, which was framed in view of section 1778, Civil Code, to make it conform to the rule stated in section 1770 of the same Code, the court did not err.

[21] The court did not err in instructing the jury that statements made by Pennington and Tretheway, at the time they met Capt.

Curry on the steamer, "cannot be received as going to the establishment of any agreement between the parties touching a new shaft or any guaranty or promise concerning it." Defendant was not present, and no one there at the time had any authority to speak or act for him in the making of any contract. The court did not take the evidence away from the jury any further than this.

The instructions, taken as a whole, fairly and correctly, we think, presented all the issues raised by the pleadings.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

(18 Cal. App. 324)

TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. v. WILLIAMSON et al. (Civ. 867.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 23, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 23, 1912.)

1. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 86*)—VALIDITY OF ASSIGNMENT.

A contractor erected a building under an agreement that a trust company should retain part of the contract price for 35 days after notice of completion at the expiration of which time, if no liens were filed, it was to pay over the balance to the contractor. After notice of completion was given, but before 35 days had elapsed, the contractor gave an order to a materialman directing the trust company to pay over the balance to him. Held that, despite lack of notice to the owner, this order operated as a valid assignment and defeated any right sought to be gained by a later attachment of the funds with the trust company, for the rights under a contract, save those of personal services, may be assigned without notice to the debtor, except that a creditor cannot, without the consent of his debtor, require by assignment payment to be made to divers persons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 152-154; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

2. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 50*)—VALIDITY—FORM OF ASSIGNMENT.

No express words are necessary to constitute an equitable assignment of a debt, and so an order upon one who holds the money of another operates as an assignment where it is intended as such by the creditor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 99-105; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

3. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 41*)—VALIDITY.

Where the owner of property upon which a building was being constructed deposited the purchase money with a trust company, with directions to pay it over to the contractor after the lapse of a certain time, an order by the contractor directing the trust company to pay over the money to the contractor's assignee is not invalid because addressed to the trust company, instead of the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 76-77; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Interpleader by the Title Insurance & Trust Company against F. B. Williamson, E. S. Williams, trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of F. B. Williamson, the Carpenter & Biles Mill & Lumber Company, and the San Pedro Lumber Company and others. From a judgment for the Carpenter & Biles Mill & Lumber Company, the San Pedro Lumber Company appeals. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied by Supreme Court (123 Pac. 247).

O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin and E. B. Coil, for appellant. Sheldon Borden and George H. Moore, for respondent Carpenter & Biles Mill & Lumber Co.

JAMES, J. [1] The defendant San Pedro Lumber Company, a corporation, appeals from the judgment entered in this action, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. In the year 1907, defendant Williamson, as contractor, erected a house for S. H. Dunham and wife. The contract price was to be paid in installments, and the amount in money was deposited with the plaintiff corporation, which was instructed to act as the agent of the Dunhams in the distribution thereof. Such amount of money as might be in the hands of the agent of the Dunhams upon the completion of the house was to be retained for a period of 35 days after notice of completion had been filed, at the expiration of which time, if no liens were filed against the structure, plaintiff was directed to pay over the remaining balance of the money to the contractor, Williamson. Notice of completion of the building was filed on or about the 1st day of November, 1907, and there then remained in the hands of plaintiff, and which it was required to pay over to Williamson, in the event no liens were filed, the sum of $450. Williamson was then indebted to respondent Carpenter & Biles Mill & Lumber Company in a sum of money exceeding $450 for material furnished, a portion of which, at least, was used in constructing the Dunham house. He made a written order upon the plaintiff to pay the amount of the last payment provided to be paid to him to the Carpenter & Biles Company. This order was presented to plaintiff, and the bearer was told, at the office of the former, that the order should be signed by the Dunhams. The order was taken away, and was not returned until the 11th day of December thereafter. The 35 days ensuing subsequent to the filing of notice of the completion of the building expired on the 9th day of December, 1907. On the 10th day of December, 1907, one day before the order of the Carpenter & Biles Company was returned to plaintiff, appellant, which was then a judgment creditor of the contractor Williamson in an amount in excess of $300, caused a levy to be made under a writ of execution against the interest of Williamson in the fund of money held by plaintiff. These conflicting claims having arisen affecting the $450 held by it, the plaintiff brought this action in order to have it determined which of the defendants was entitled to the money. The trial court held that, the order given to the Carpenter & Biles Company having been executed and delivered prior to the date of the levy made under the writ of execution, an assignment of the debt was worked thereby, and gave judgment in favor of the respondent last named. On this appeal the only parties in contest are the appellant and respondent Carpenter & Biles Mill & Lumber Company. It is contended on behalf of appellant that the order given by Williamson did not operate as an assignment of the fund, nor change title thereto in any respect, and that, at the time attachment thereof was attempted to be made under the execution, Williamson was the owner of the money or credit, and that appellant by the service of the process mentioned acquired a right to have the money paid over for its benefit. At the time the order was given the building had been fully completed. Williamson, as contractor, had earned the right to have paid to him the full amount of the contract price, and he was then entitled to receive it all, except that payment was to be withheld for 35 days after notice of completion was filed, in order that the time within which liens might be perfected against the property of the Dunhams should have expired. The debt, therefore, to our minds, was one which was the subject of assignment, and that, too, without the consent of the Dunhams. Williamson had the right to assign the whole of the balance of indebtedness due to him from the Dunhams, although he could not have divided that balance into fractional amounts and make an assignment of the same in such a manner. It is a general rule of contracts that the benefits thereof, where they do not involve the expenditure of personal effort or services, are the subject of assignment without the consent of the debtor being first obtained, with the reservation, however, that the creditor in such a case cannot, without the consent of his debtor, require by assignment payment to be made to divers persons; in other words, the assignment in such case must be made of the full amount due.

The purported assignment in this case answers fully these requirements, and, if it sufficiently appears from the writing and in testimony that the intention was of Williamson at the time he executed the order to transfer all right to the $450 to respondent Carpenter & Biles Company, then this assignment, having been made on a day prior to the time when levy was attempted to be made under appellant's execution, left the plaintiff without any money in its hands belonging to Williamson to which appellant's levy might attach. The following decisions are in point: Curtner v. Lyndon, 123 Cal. 35, 60 Pac. 462, and the general subject, with digest of various cases, as found in Donohoe-Kelly Banking Co. v. S. P. Co. et al., 138 Cal. 183, 71 Pac. 93, 94 Am. St. Rep. 28.

[2] It cannot be said from the testimony as it is set out in the bill of exceptions that it was not the intent of Williamson and the Carpenter & Biles Company that an assignment should be made of the $450 at the time the order was executed. Williamson testified, in effect, that his intention was to transfer his right and title to the money, and the Carpenter & Biles Company at all times insisted that they were entitled to it. It is very clear from the circumstances surrounding the transaction that, had the money been paid over to the Carpenter & Biles Company, Williamson would have had no legal right to demand that the same be delivered by that company to him or diverted in any way from its possession. As it was said in McIntyre v. Hauser, 131 Cal. 11, 63 Pac. 69: "In order to constitute an equitable assignment of a debt, no express words to that effect are necessary. If from the entire transaction it clearly appears that the intention of the parties was to pass title to the chose in action, then an assignment will be held to have taken place." See, also, Lawrence Nat. Bank v. Kowalsky, 105 Cal. 41, 38 Pac. 517.

[3] As we view the case, it is not material that the order was addressed to the plaintiff, instead of to the Dunhams, with whom the building contract was made. The plaintiff was the duly authorized agent of the Dunhams for the purpose of holding the fund and making payment of the contract price to Williamson, and we can see no good reason why an order addressed to an executive agent, as this plaintiff was, should not be sufficient and binding. Aside from this, as to whether the assignment was in fact made or not, as has been before noted, depended, not upon the question of notice to the debtor, but upon the intention of the alleged assignor and assignee. No questions are here involved as to any damage resulting to a debtor who has paid his debt without notice of assignment made by his creditor.

Upon the record as it is shown, we are of opinion that the findings made by the trial court must be sustained.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

18 Cal. App. 324

TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. v. CARPENTER & BILES MILL & LUMBER CO.
et al. (L. A. 2,800.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 23, 1912.)

BANKS AND BANKING (§ 315*)—TRUST COMPANY—DEPOSIT—NOTICE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where the balance due under a contract was deposited with a trust company which was to pay it over at the expiration of a certain time, it was the agent of the debtor, and notice to it of an assignment of the fund was sufficient notice to the debtor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 1219-1221; Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

In Bank. Interpleader by the Title Insurance & Trust Company against the Carpenter & Biles Mill & Lumber Company and the San Pedro Lumber Company and others. The Court of Appeal affirmed a judgment for the first-named defendant (123 Pac. 245), and the second petitions to transfer the cause to the Supreme Court for rehearing. Petition denied.

O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin, and E. B. Coil, for plaintiff. Sheldon Borden and George H. Moore, for defendant Carpenter & Biles Mill & Lumber Co.

PER CURIAM. The petition to transfer this cause to the Supreme Court for rehearing is denied.

We do not think it was necessary to say, as intimated by the District Court of Appeal, that the assignment to the Carpenter & Biles Company would be good against a levy made upon the fund after the assignment and before notice thereof to the debtors, the Dunhams. But, if such notice to the debtors was necessary to make the assignment good against a subsequent execution or attachment levy, the notice given to the plaintiff, who was the trustee and holder of the fund and agent of the Dunhams to pay it to Williamson or to his assignee as the case might be, was a sufficient notice to the debtor, and operated to perfect the transfer of the title to the fund.

162 Cal. 433

LUSCOMB et al. v. FINTZELBERG et al.
(L. A. 2,745.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1912.)

1. WILLS (§ 705*) — ACTION TO CONSTRUCT — CONCLUSIVENESS OF DECREE.

Where a decree of distribution construing a will was not appealed from, the rights of the parties were foreclosed by the decree, and could not thereafter be determined by other construction of the will itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1682; Dec. Dig. § 705.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 315*) — DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE — DETERMINATION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1666, providing that the superior court in proceedings for the administration of estates shall determine on final distribution the persons and the proportions or parts to which each shall be entitled, where a will purported to create a trust of the residue of testator's property after the termination of the widow's life estate, the court on final distribution must determine whether the trust was valid and to declare the terms thereof, and select the trustees and make distribution to them, as well as determine what other persons had rights in the distributable property of the estate, and the nature of their interests.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1298-1314; Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 315*) — DECREE FOR DISTRIBUTION — COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A decree of distribution is conclusive as to the rights of heirs, legatees, and devisees, unless corrected on appeal, and is not subject to collateral attack or to be impeached by resort to the terms of the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1298-1314; Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

4. WILLS (§ 616*)—CONSTRUCTION—LIFE ESTATE—LIMITATION—"FOR HER OWN USE."

Testator devised to his wife all his property, to have and to hold, sell, lease, and otherwise dispose of for her own use during her life, with power to dispose of the household fixtures and personal property by will, and all property remaining at her death to be distributed in a specified manner. The decree of distribution distributed the property to the widow for the term of her natural life, with power to sell and convey the same in fee as she might see fit "for her own use" with remainder over. Held, that the widow was only entitled by the words "for her own use" to sell the property for her personal use, and maintenance during life, and she only acquired a life estate subject to a valid limitation over.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1418-1430; Dec. Dig. § 616.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, p. 2864.]

5. WILLS (§ 616*)—CONSTRUCTION—LIFE ESTATE—LIMITATION OVER.

Where a life estate only is expressly given to the first taker with power of disposition of the property for a certain purpose with a devise over, the life estate is not enlarged into either a fee or an absolute right of property, and the limitation is valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1418-1430; Dec. Dig. § 616.*]

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 430*)—ASSETS—WHAT CONSTITUTE.

Testatrix by a decree of distribution of her husband's estate was awarded the residue for life with power to sell for her own use, but all the property remaining at her death was to be distributed to two persons in trust to distribute the same to certain designated persons under her husband's will. Held, that immediately on the widow's death all that remained of the property, whether in the specific form in which it had been distributed to her, or in any changed condition, with the increase, immediately vested in the trustees, and was no part of the widow's estate, so that an action was properly brought by them against the widow's executors individually, and not in their representative capacity, to recover the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1683-1688; Dec. Dig. § 430.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by C. E. Luscomb and another, as executors and trustees of the estate of Charles J. Fox, deceased, against Theodore Fintzelberg and another. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Luce, Sloane & Luce and Wright, Schoonover & Winnek, for appellants. John B. Mannix and E. S. Torrance, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment entered against them after a trial of the cause. The only points raised by the appellants are based upon their demurrer to the complaint which was overruled.

The complaint alleged: That Charles J. Fox died on September 21, 1898, a resident of San Diego county, in this state, leaving a will which was duly admitted to probate and letters testamentary issued to the plaintiffs herein. The said will provided that: "After paying all my just debts and liabilities, I bequeath and devise to my beloved wife, Susie Staples Fox, all my property, real and personal, of every description, to have and to hold, sell, lease and otherwise dispose of for her own use and behoof during her life. And my said wife may by will dispose of all household furniture, books, fixtures and other personal belonging, as she may desire, notwithstanding these may have been bequeathed by me. All of my property remaining at her death shall be distributed as follows." (Here follows specific legacies of personal property owned by decedent at his death.) It is then provided that: "All the remainder of my property, real and personal, shall be converted into money as soon as in the judgment of my executors can be judiciously done, and divided into four equal portions and distributed as follows: One portion to the brother of my said wife before mentioned, residing in San Francisco, California; one portion to my old friend and former business associate, Niles Meriwether, residing No. 14 Talbot St., Memphis, Tenn., or his legal heirs; one portion to the children of my late sisters, to wit: Mrs. James King, Charles F. Clark, Arthur G. Clark, and William S. Clark, share and share alike; one portion to my brother, Arthur G. Fox, residing in Marshall, Mich., in trust to be equally divided between his children, share and share alike." That in due course of administration all the personal property immediately above referred to and specifically bequeathed was set apart by the court to the widow of deceased, and thereby withdrawn from administration. That on December 8, 1899, a decree of distribution was entered distributing the residue of the estate then remaining in the hands of the said executors as follows: "To Susie Staples Fox, the widow of said testator, for the term of her natural life, with power to sell and convey the same in fee, as she might see fit, for her own use, and all of said property remaining at her death to the plaintiffs, C. E. Luscomb and F. W. Stewart, in trust, to convert the same into money as soon as in their judgment the same could be advantageously done, and to divide the proceeds thereof into four equal portions to be paid and distributed by them as follows, to wit: One of such portions to Alpheus D. Staples, of San Francisco, California; one of such portions to Niles Meriwether, of Memphis, Tennessee, or his legal heirs; one of such portions to the children of the late sister of said Charles J. Fox, deceased, to wit: Mrs. James King, Charles F. Clark, Arthur G. Clark and William S. Clark, share and share alike, and one of such portions to Arthur G. Fox, brother of said Charles J. Fox, deceased, in trust to be equally divided between his children, share and share alike."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

The complaint then describes particularly the personal and real property of the estate (consisting principally of real property) contained in the decree of distribution, possession of which was delivered to said Susie Staples Fox under said decree on December 9, 1899; that on December 11, 1899, by decree of court the plaintiffs were discharged from their trust as such executors; that on August 29, 1901, said Susie Staples Fox married George S. Watson, who died December 21, 1905; that she died April 2, 1907, leaving a will, which was thereafter duly admitted to probate, the defendants herein being named as her executors, and to whom letters testamentary were duly issued; that on November 6, 1908, by order of court, plaintiffs herein were again appointed the executors of the will of said Charles J. Fox, and letters testamentary were again issued to them; that said Susie Staples Fox and Charles J. Fox were married in February, 1897, she being his second wife; that there was no issue of said marriage and neither of them leaving any children; that all the property so distributed as aforesaid was owned by said Charles J. Fox prior to his marriage and was his separate property, his wife having no property when she married him nor any at the time of her death, other than her interest in said residue of her said deceased husband's estate under said decree of distribution; that she was of simple, frugal, and economical habits, and after the death of her said husband, Charles J. Fox, her expenditures for her own use did not exceed the sum of $100 per month for all proper purposes of her living and comfort up to the time of her decease.

The complaint then proceeds to allege that, after she came in possession of said property, she converted and transferred nearly all of said residue of said estate and received the avails and proceeds thereof, exceeding in amount the sum of $50,000, a large portion of which avails and profits remained unconsumed and unexpended at the time of her death; that defendants on their appointment as executors of her will took possession of all the residue of said estate distributed to her and all such avails and profits, which included among other property, the nature of which was unknown to plaintiffs, deposits in various banks, aggregating $7,861.50, and three promissory notes for $10,000 each particularly described in the complaint, and which were secured by mortgage; that plaintiffs are entitled to the possession of all the property, avails, and profits of the estate of Charles J. Fox, deceased, remaining at the time of the death of said Susie Staples Fox Watson which were distributed to her for the term of her natural life, and prior to the bringing of the action demanded of said defendants possession thereof and an accounting respecting such property, and defendants have refused either to deliver said property or account therefor.

The prayer was for a judgment that plaintiffs are entitled to the possession of all the property, avails, and profits of the estate of Charles J. Fox distributed to said Susie Staples Fox for the term of her natural life remaining at the time of her death; that defendants be declared to hold said property, avails, and profits in trust for plaintiffs; and that defendants disclose, account for, and deliver to plaintiffs all of said property, together with the avails and proceeds.

A demurrer, general and special, was interposed by defendants and overruled, and the only points made on this appeal, as we have already stated, are addressed to the correctness of that ruling.

The questions which appellants assert are the principal ones for consideration, in reviewing the ruling on the demurrer, relate to whether a valid trust, or a valid limitation over under the decree of distribution, was created under the will of C. J. Fox. In that regard it is insisted that the trust which the will purported to create was invalid because (following the argument of appellants), in order to constitute a valid trust, there must be among other essentials, a reasonable certainty in the subject-matter of the trust; that the devise of the property is to the widow for life with absolute power of disposal; that the trust attempted to be created applies to the "property remaining at her death," which may be all the property taken by her in the first instance, or a less quantity, or none at all, depending on the use by her of the power of disposition and hence there is no certainty as to the subject-matter of the trust and it is invalid for that reason. In addition it is claimed—and this is the particular point to which counsel for appellants address themselves—that under the will the widow of deceased is given an absolute power of disposition of the property taken by her, and that, notwithstanding the use of the words "for her own use and behoof during her life," such power of absolute disposition given her by the will had the effect of vesting her with an estate in fee, and the limitation over by way of a devise in trust, or otherwise, is void as repugnant to such estate in fee. This last point, as we understand the argument of counsel for appellants, is also made under the decree of distribution; the claim being that in legal effect the distribution to her of the property was absolute, and, as to the real property, vested her with an estate in fee.

[1] But, as far as these points are addressed to the provisions and terms of the will itself, any construction of that instrument in this action is foreclosed by the decree of distribution, and the rights of the parties must be measured solely by a consideration of that decree. If it were conceded (which, of course, it is not) that the construction of the terms of the will for which appellants now contend is the construction which should have been given by the superior court in the distribution of the estate of Fox, the proper and appointed time for the widow to have insisted on a distribution of the property to her absolutely, on the theory that the trust was invalid for uncertainty, or void for repugnancy, was upon the hearing for distribution, and, if the construction of the will was adverse to her contention, to have had it corrected on a direct attack on appeal from the decree of distribution.

[2] Under our system, it is the province and duty of the superior court in its jurisdiction over the administration of estates to determine on final distribution the "persons and the proportions or parts to which each shall be entitled." Section 1666, Code Civ. Proc. It was necessary, therefore, for the court, as an incident to this duty, to determine whether or not a valid trust had been created by the testator Fox. It could not make complete distribution unless it passed upon that question. It was equally within the jurisdiction of the court, and its duty, to determine and declare in the decree the scope and terms of such trust as it found valid; to select the trustees and to make distribution to them of the trust property, as well as to determine what other persons had legal or equitable rights to the distributable property of the estate, and the extent and nature of their interests.

[3] Having jurisdiction to determine these matters on distribution, when the decree does so determine them, although the determination may be incorrect, it is conclusive as to the rights of heirs, legatees, and devisees unless corrected on appeal. It is not subject to collateral attack or to be impeached by resort to the terms of the will. The rights of the parties must thereafter be determined by resort to the decree of distribution alone as a final and conclusive adjudication of the testamentary disposition which the deceased made of his property.

This is so well settled by a uniform current of authority as to render further particular discussion unnecessary. Estate of Hinckley, 58 Cal. 457; Daly v. Pennie, 86 Cal. 552, 25 Pac. 67, 21 Am. St. Rep. 61; Morffew v. S. F. & S. R. R. Co., 107 Cal. 587, 40 Pac. 810; William Hill Co. v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 359, 48 Pac. 323; Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 131, 51 Pac. 44; Goldtree v. Allison, 119 Cal. 344, 51 Pac. 561; Goad v. Montgomery, 119 Cal. 552, 51 Pac. 681, 63 Am. St. Rep. 145; Estate of Trescony, 119 Cal. 568, 51 Pac. 951; Keating v. Smith, 154 Cal. 186, 97 Pac. 300; Taylor v. McCowen, 154 Cal. 798, 99 Pac. 351; Estate of Learned, 156 Cal. 309, 104 Pac. 315; Hardy v. Mayhew, 158 Cal. 95, 110 Pac. 113, 139 Am. St. Rep. 73. Under these authorities, the appellants are precluded from making an attack on the decreed of distribution. It is conclusive on the validity of the trust and that the widow was entitled to take the property distributed to her for use only during her life. In most of the cases cited the attack was just such a one as appellants here attempt to make. It was insisted that certain trusts declared in the will were invalid for various reasons, and should have been disregarded in the distribution of the estates and were to be disregarded notwithstanding their validity was established by the decree, and necessarily it was sought to impeach the decree of distribution by resort to the will. In some of the cases it was conceded that the trusts created by the will were invalid, but it appeared that distribution had been made upon the theory that they were valid. In all of them, however, as the decree of distribution had become final, it was held that the validity of the trust, the power of the trustees, and the extent of their title was conclusively determined by the decree of distribution, and not subject to collateral attack by resort to the will.

The only case relied on by appellants in support of their claim is McCloud v. Hewlett, 135 Cal. 361, 67 Pac. 333. But this decides nothing in conflict with the authorities cited above, nor does it question the correctness of the doctrine announced in them. In the case cited the decree of distribution entirely failed to state the purpose of the trust, which is one of the essentials to a valid trust, and resort being had to the will in aid of the decree, as might be done (Goad v. Montgomery, supra), it was found that the will itself created no trust; hence the decree of distribution, in as far as it attempted to raise a trust, was a nullity. Here, however, the decree on its face declares a trust valid as to its purpose and certain and definite in its terms, and hence is conclusive against any attempt to resort to the will to impeach or disturb the decree in that respect.

[4] As to the point that in legal effect, under the decree of distribution, absolute title to the property was vested in the widow. The doctrine under which appellants assert this claim and seeks to have it applied to the decree of distribution is that where a devise (using this term as applied to the decree of distribution) is accompanied by an unlimited power of disposal of an estate given to the devisee, to be exercised in any manner the devisee may see fit, a limitation over is void, as being repugnant to the principal devise, which by virtue of the absolute power of disposition vested in the devisee the estate absolutely.

Numerous cases are relied on by appellant in support of this doctrine, but they need not be cited, nor even particularly discussed, because that rule and the authorities apply to a devise cast in very different terms from the devise we are considering here. In many of the cases relied on there was a general devise of the estate to the first taker, with an absolute power of disposal and a limitation over, and it was held that the limitation over was repugnant to the general devise and void. In others there was language used by the testator which might indicate an intent to create a life estate, but, as there was an absolute power of disposition given and no limitation over, it was held that the devisee took the estate in fee. In some (clearly not applicable) the devise to the first taker was absolute in terms, followed by trust provisions of a precatory nature, or by words of recommendation, or desire as to contingent remainders. In none of the cases cited, as we construe them, is it held, where the estate of the first taker is in terms expressly defined to be a life estate, with a power of disposition annexed, to be exercised for a specific purpose only, with a limitation over, that the power of disposition enlarges the life estate into a fee.

Here there is no general devise to the widow, nor any language indefinite or indeterminate as to the quantity of estate she took. By the express terms of the decree it is defined to be an estate for life. While she is given a power of disposition of the property in fee, it is not a power of disposition with an unqualified right to the use of the proceeds for any and all purposes, but for the particular purpose that the proceeds may be devoted by her "for her own use"; such use meaning, of course, personal use by her for her support, comfort, and maintenance during life. There is also an express limitation over of "all of said property remaining at her death."

[5] The authorities are uniform to the effect that where such are the terms of a devise—a life estate only being expressly given to the first taker, with power of disposition of the property for a certain purpose, with a devise over—the life estate is not enlarged into either a fee or an absolute right of property, and a limitation over will be good. In the case of Hardy v. Mayhew, supra, which involved the construction of the terms of a decree of distribution in several respects similar to that involved here, it is said: "The distinction between the case of an intended gift of an absolute title to one with an attempted gift over of simply 'what remains unexpended' by the donee at the time of his death, where the gift over is void because in derogation of the absolute fee given the first taker, and the case of a gift of a life estate with a power of disposition for a particular purpose only, with an express gift over of what remains unused for such purpose, is recognized by all the authorities." After citing and quoting from authorities, the court proceeds as follows: "It appears to be settled by the overwhelming weight of authority that the mere fact that the first taker is invested with the power to dispose of or consume the whole of the property for certain purposes does not invest him with the absolute ownership thereof and render the gift over void, where, taking the whole instrument together, it is concluded that the intent was to give only an estate for life, with limited power of disposal or consumption." Counsel for appellants claim that, in considering the validity of a devise over, a distinction is to be made between a devise which gives the use and disposition during life of personal property only, as in Hardy v. Mayhew, and the devise here, which applies to real property in which a life estate is given with power of disposition of the fee.

We are referred to no authority by counsel which makes any such distinction. On the contrary, it is said in 2 Underhill on Wills, § 687: "If it is clearly apparent that the testator intended that he (the life tenant) should take only a life estate, and the property is to be used for his support and maintenance, his interest, at least where real property is concerned, will be confined to that, though he will have power of disposition over the fee and a right to use the proceeds during his life for his support or for other purposes intended by the testator." Also 4 Kent's Com. (18th Ed.) p. 371. No such distinction either is made in the following cases, among numerous others which might be cited, sustaining the validity of a devise over of the remainder of the estate devised after the death of the first taker who is given a life interest and a life estate in both personal and real property, with full power of disposition thereof during life for his personal comfort, maintenance, and support: Douglass v. Sharp, 52 Ark. 113, 12 S. W. 202; Steiff v. Seibert, 128 Iowa, 746, 105 N. W. 328, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1186; Hamlin v. U. S. Express Co., 107 Ill. 443; McCullough's Adm'r v. Anderson, 90 Ky. 126, 13 S. W. 353, 7 L. R. A. 836; Pennock v. Pennock, L. R. 13 Eq. 144; Herring v. Barrow, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 144; Richards v. Morrison, 101 Me. 424, 64 Atl. 768; Welsh v. Woodbury, 144 Mass. 542, 11 N. E. 762; McMillan v. Farrow, 141 Mo. 55, 41 S. W. 890; Parker v. Travers, 74 N. J. Eq. 812, 71 Atl. 612; Terry v. St. Stephens, etc., 79 App. Div. 527, 81 N. Y. Supp. 119; Kennedy v. Kennedy, 159 Pa. 327, 28 Atl. 241; In re Tilton, 21 R. I. 426, 44 Atl. 223.

[6] It is insisted further in this action that the defendants as they hold the property as executors of the estate of Mrs. Fox Watson should have been sued as such, and not as individuals. But the property remaining on her death constituted no part of her estate. She had no interest therein which she could dispose of by will or to which her heirs would have succeeded in case she had died intestate. She had but a life estate in the property, with power of disposition for a specific purpose, namely, "for her own use." Immediately on her death all that remained of the property, whether in the specific form in which it had been distributed to her, or in any changed condition, the result of sale, exchange, investment, or the like, with the increase, accumulations, and profits, plaintiffs were immediately entitled to have possession of, and to maintain an action to recover it from the defendants. While the latter were the executors of the will of Mrs. Fox and on her death took possession of the property here involved, it was their duty, on demand of the plaintiffs, to deliver it to them. It was not property of the estate of their testatrix, nor as her personal representatives were they entitled to hold it, and the suit was properly brought against them in their individual capacities. The general rule is thus stated in 18 Cyc. 884: "If a personal representative takes property not belonging to the estate, he has no right to it in his representative capacity. His refusal to restore it to the rightful owner renders him individually liable, and he cannot be sued in his representative capacity for his individual tort. A personal representative is liable in his individual capacity, even though the property has passed from the possession of the decedent into his possession." "Property which the testatrix in her lifetime held in trust, or in which she had merely a life interest, are not assets of her estate, and no act of her executor as to such property will render him or his sureties liable upon his bond." Probate Court v. Williams, 30 R. I. 144, 73 Atl. 388, 19 Ann. Cas. 554; In re Stuart's Will, 115 Wis. 294, 91 N. W. 688; Nickals v. Stanley, 146 Cal. 724, 81 Pac. 117; Hardy v. Mayhew, 158 Cal. 95, 110 Pac. 113, 139 Am. St. Rep. 73.

Several other objections were raised by special demurrer, relating principally to defect in parties defendant, nonjoinder or misjoinder of parties. We do not think these points have any merit, and hence do not discuss them.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

(162 Cal. 379)

CANTY v. STALEY. (S. F. 5,196.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 20, 1911.)

On Rehearing, March 25, 1912.)

1. TAXATION (§ 549*)—DELINQUENT TAXES—COSTS.

Since improvements are classified as real estate by Pol. Code, § 3617, and though, under section 3627, they are assessable separately from the land, a tax collector is entitled to only one fee, and not two fees, of 50 cents against delinquent land containing improvements, under section 3770, requiring him to collect 50 cents on each lot and on each assessment of personality.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1043-1050; Dec. Dig. § 549.*]

2. WORDS AND PHRASES—"LOT," "PIECE," AND "PARCEL."

The words "lot," "piece," and "parcel" apply peculiarly to the land itself, and are never employed to describe improvements.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4239-4245; vol. 8, p. 7710; vol. 6, pp. 5166, 5167; vol. 6, p. 5377.]

3. TAXATION (§ 667*)—DELINQUENT TAXES—SALES—VALIDITY.

A sale for delinquent taxes in excess of the amount authorized by law is void, if the excess equals the smallest fractional coin authorized by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1350; Dec. Dig. § 667.*]

4. TAXATION (§ 795*)—TAX SALES—VOIDANCE—RETURN OF PAYMENTS—NECESSITY.

To defeat a suit to quiet title, plaintiff claiming under void tax deeds, it was unnecessary for defendant to tender plaintiff's expenditures or interest thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1577; Dec. Dig. § 795.*]

On Rehearing.

5. TAXATION (§ 679*)—TAX SALE—NOTICE—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Pol. Code, § 3897, as amended by Act March 1, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 31), effective May 1, 1905, which requires notice of a proposed sale by the state of land bought at tax sale to be given by mail, notice of a sale on May 5, 1905, given by publication, was insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1361-1362; Dec. Dig. § 679.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 397*)—FINDINGS—NECESSITY.

In a suit wherein defendant's title was quieted against plaintiff's tax deeds, it was unnecessary to find on an issue of tender to plaintiff of his expenditures, where there was no evidence of expenditures.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 940-945; Dec. Dig. § 397.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Consolidated actions by D. J. Canty against W. S. Staley. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Stanton L. Carter, Carter & Carter, and Royle A. Carter, for appellant. Frank Kauke, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff, asserting title under tax deeds, sued to quiet his title to two parcels of land in Fresno county. Defendants answered, and the two actions were consolidated and tried together. At the trial it was admitted "that the title to the real property described in each of the complaints was, at the time of the commencement of each of said actions, vested in each of the defendants therein named, respectively, * * * unless the same had been divested by the tax sales and proceedings under which plaintiff claims title; and that subsequent to the commencement of this action the defendant, W. S. Staley, who has been substituted as defendant in each of said actions in place of said William H. Hersperger and Samuel Hersperger, acquired from said William H. Hersperger and Samuel Hersperger all the right, title, and interest in and to said real property which said William H. Hersperger and Samuel Hersperger had or held at the time of the commencement of said actions, in, and to said real property described in the complaints in said two actions." Judgment in each case was entered in favor of the defendant Staley. The District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District handed down a decision reversing the judgments, but the prayer of the petition for rehearing was granted by this court. In the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, two main points were considered; one being the description of the property in the tax deed and the other being the amount for which the land was sold to the state. The court held that the description was sufficient, and that the property was sold for the exact amount provided by law. We agree with the district court upon the first point, but hold a different view in regard to the other.

The recitals in both tax deeds are the same. From them we find that each piece of property was assessed for $225. The amount of the tax levied on each parcel was $3.37 and the costs and charges since accrued amount, according to the recital of each deed, to $2.42; the selling price being $5.79. Defendant at the trial objected to the introduction of each of the deeds upon the ground, among others, that: "It affirmatively appears from the deed itself that the sale was for excessive amount. It appears therefrom that the tax levied, or computed, was $3.37, and that the costs and charges accrued are set forth as $2.42, whereas the costs, penalties, and charges on a tax levy of $3.37 could not be more than 91 cents, making a total of only $4.28." Before the court had ruled upon said objection, plaintiff offered in evidence the delinquent assessment roll for the appropriate year, showing the assessed value of the land as $200, of the improvements as $25, and the tax and costs amounting to $5.79, itemized as follows:

Special school tax.....	$ 99
Tax on personal property and half of real estate	1 69
Fifteen per cent. additional on first installment	25
Five per cent. additional on first installment	09
Tax on remaining half of real estate....	1 68
Five per cent. tax on remaining half of real estate.....	09
Costs	1 00

Total amount delinquent tax and cost $5 79

The court sustained the objection to both the deeds and to the delinquent assessment roll. Respondent's position with reference to the deeds was that, rejecting the fractions of a cent as provided in section 3731 of the Political Code, each installment of the tax would be $1.68. On the first installment there would be a penalty of 15 per cent. amounting to 25 cents, and thereafter there would accrue a penalty of 5 per cent. on both installments, or 5 per cent. of $3.37 amounting to 16 cents. Section 3756, Pol. Code. Adding to this the sum of 50 cents chargeable under section 3770 of the Political Code, the entire penalty and charges, according to respondent, would be 91 cents, which added to $3.37 would amount to $4.28, instead of $5.79. Therefore, according to respondent, the sale was for an amount $1.51 in excess of that lawfully chargeable. The District Court of Appeal held that, as the statute requires no statement in the deed of the amount of the tax (Pol. Code, § 3787), resort may be had to the delinquent tax list. But respondent contends that, even conceding the admissibility of the delinquent tax list, the property was sold for an excessive amount. The District Court of Appeal upon that subject said: "The only controversy that can arise is in reference to the $1 charged as costs. We must assume, of course, that the special school tax of 99 cents was legally levied. The amount of the costs depends upon the proper construction of said section 3770 of the Political Code. Respondent takes the position that the charge should have been only 50 cents as there was but one piece of real estate and no personal property assessed. The assessor, though, is required to assess real estate and the improvements thereon separately, and the auditor in his statement must show them in separate columns (section 3738, Pol. Code), and they so appear upon the delinquent list. Whether these improvements are to be regarded as personal property or a part of the realty, we think it is clear, within the contemplation of the statute, that the assessment must be considered as of two parcels of real or one of real and one of personal property. Since the two entries are required to be made, the tax collector, as we view it, is entitled to 50 cents for each. The property would seem, therefore, to have been sold for the exact amount provided by law. In dismissing the subject, we must say that the uniform practice, as shown by the records in the state controller's office, is to charge 50 cents for the entry of the improvements, and we have no doubt it is justified."

[1] We are unable to agree with this construction of section 3770 of the Political Code. By said section it is provided that "the tax collector must collect, in addition to the taxes due on a delinquent list, together with the penalties for delinquency, fifty cents on each lot, piece or parcel of land separately assessed and on each assessment of personal property." It is clear that improvements are not personalty. They are expressly classified as "real estate" (Pol. Code, § 3617); and, while they are to be assessed separately from the land (Pol. Code, § 3627), they must be assessed against the particular section, lot, or tract of land upon which they are located. Technically, then, the land and the improvements are in one sense two parcels of real property, but this does not justify a charge of 50 cents against each by the assessor because section 3770 of the Political Code authorizes that charge upon "each lot, piece or tract of land separated assessed." There is nothing either in the section itself or in the use of the words "land" and "real estate" in that part of the Political Code relating to taxation which justifies the conclusion that the word

"land" was here intended to be used interchangeably with the term "real estate."

[2] The words "lot," "piece," and "parcel" apply peculiarly to the land itself and are never employed to describe improvements. That a separate column must be used for the valuation of improvements does not justify the additional charge. It requires two entries to show the division of the tax into installments, yet no extra charge is permitted for that clerical labor. While this additional imposition for the assessment of improvements may be customarily noted by assessors, as indicated by the District Court of Appeal, we cannot let that fact distort the plain, simple English of the statute making the charge of 50 cents applicable to each subdivision of land separately assessed. Each of the respondent's two lots of land was therefore sold for at least 50 cents in excess of the proper amount. Respondent contends that the charge of 5 per cent. on each of the installments should have been 8 cents instead of 9 cents, and that the excess therefore amounts to 52 cents. In either view of the matter, whether we hold that the property was sold for 50 cents or 52 cents above the price authorized by law, we must find, under the decisions of this court, that the excessive charge invalidated the transaction, and that the deeds and delinquent tax list were therefore properly denied admission in evidence by the trial court.

[3] This court has consistently held that, where a sale for delinquent taxes is in excess of the amount authorized by law, the party claiming by virtue of said sale can acquire no rights thereunder. Miller v. Williams, 135 Cal. 184, 67 Pac. 788; Treadwell v. Patterson, 51 Cal. 638; Boston Tunnel Co. v. McKenzie, 67 Cal. 489, 8 Pac. 22; Axtell v. Gerlach, 67 Cal. 483, 8 Pac. 34; Knox v. Higby, 76 Cal. 267, 18 Pac. 381; Simmons v. McCarthy, 118 Cal. 625, 50 Pac. 761; Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 235; Warden v. Broome, 9 Cal. App. 174, 98 Pac. 252. In these cases the rule stated in Treadwell v. Patterson has been uniformly sustained. In that case the court adopted the language of Judge Cooley in his work on Taxation (page 344), as follows: "A sale for anything more than is lawfully chargeable is a sale without jurisdiction and therefore void." And the court also said: "In such cases the maxim, 'De minimis non curat lex,' does not apply, except in a limited sense. The rule, as established by the authorities, is that, if the excess be as much as the smallest fractional coin authorized by law, the sale is void." Glidden v. Chase, 35 Me. 90 [56 Am. Dec. 390]; Thayer v. Mayo, 34 Me. 139; Grosvenor v. Chesley, 48 Me. 369; Boyd v. Moore, 5 Mass. 365; Pickett v. Breckenridge, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 297 [33 Am. Dec. 745]; Chenery v. Stevens, 97 Mass. 77." If anything in Flannigan v. Towle, 8 Cal. App. 230, 96 Pac. 507, seems to be opposed to the views here expressed, that case is, to that extent, overruled.

It is but fair to the learned District Court of Appeal of the Third District to state that in the case of Rimmer v. Hotchkiss, Civ. No. 759, in which the court's final opinion was filed March 15, 1911, the same interpretation of section 3770 of the Political Code as that which we have adopted was set forth by Mr. Presiding Justice Chipman, speaking for the court. In that case the appellant's contention was that a charge of $1.50 was proper for the separate assessments of the land, personal property, and improvements—that is, 50 cents for each item—and it was held that: "There is no ground for holding 'improvements' to be personal property. Section 3617, subd. 4, Political Code, expressly classifies 'improvements' as included in the term 'real estate,' and section 3650 of the same Code requires the assessor 'to prepare an assessment book * * * in which must be listed all property, within the county, under the appropriate head: * * * (2) Land, * * * and the improvements thereon. * * * The improvements to be assessed against the particular section, tract or lot of land upon which they are located.' The fact that they must be separately assessed, as required by section 3627, does not authorize a penalty of 50 cents to be charged under section 3770, for that section authorizes such penalty only 'on each lot, piece or tract of land separately assessed, and on each assessment of personal property.' It would be unreasonable to hold that the language thus used means that 'improvements,' apart from the land, constitute 'a lot, piece, or tract of land.' In the case of Warden v. Broome, supra, the assessment showed but two assessments, one of the land and one of the improvements. 'The costs to be added' were held to be 50 cents, and not for an additional 50 cents. If appellants' contention be correct, the additional 50 cents in that case could have been upheld. The decision impliedly holds that the penalty of 50 cents, under section 3770, cannot be imposed for nonpayment of the tax on improvements."

[4] Appellant contends that the trial court committed error in failing to find upon defendant's allegation of a tender of repayment to the former of all amounts expended by him in the attempted purchase of the title from the state, together with interest on said expenditures. Such a finding would have been immaterial. In this case it was the plaintiff who challenged the title of defendant and it was admitted that unless divested by the tax deeds the title to the property was in the latter. In such cases the maxim "He who seeks equity must do equity" does not apply, for it is doubtful whether a suit of this kind brought under the Code to test appellant's asserted title is an action in equity. Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 238. But, whether we consider it an action in equity or not, nothing can be said to be due from respondent to appellant in view of the fact that the tax sale is void. The payment made to the state was purely voluntary, was not authorized by respondent, and the maxim caveat emptor should be applied with all emphasis. As was said in Greenwood v. Adams, 80 Cal. 78, 21 Pac. 1135: "The defendants offered in evidence the deed made to them during the trial, but on objection of plaintiff it was excluded. No copy of the deed is found in the bill of exceptions, but it is urged that this and all the other rulings complained of were erroneous, because, when defendants purchased the land at the tax sales, the lien of the state vested in them, and could only be divested by a repayment of the purchase money, and that they were entitled to have the amount so paid out repaid before any decree could be entered against them. We fail to see any force in this point. Parties who purchase property at tax sales acquire the title to the property if all the proceedings for the levy of the taxes and the sale are regular and in strict conformity to law; but, if not so, they acquire no rights to the property which either a court of law or equity can enforce." See, also, Dranga v. Rowe, 127 Cal. 509, 59 Pac. 944; Clark v. San Diego, 144 Cal. 361, 77 Pac. 973; Paine v. Germantown Trust Co., 136 Fed. 527, 69 C. C. A. 303; Mitchell v. Minnequa Town Co., 41 Colo. 368, 92 Pac. 678; I. & D. Land Co. v. Barnes County, 6 N. D. 601, 72 N. W. 1019.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

On Rehearing.

ANGELLOTTI, J. These are appeals from the judgments in favor of defendants, and from the orders denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial in two actions to quiet plaintiff's alleged title to two parcels of land in Fresno county, which actions were consolidated and tried together.

Plaintiff asserted title under certain tax proceedings based on assessments for state and county taxes for the year 1894, culminating in deeds from the state to plaintiff for the property involved. These alleged proceedings were set forth in plaintiff's complaints. The answers of the defendants sufficiently denied the allegations of plaintiff's complaints to present the questions we shall discuss. They also contained allegations on the subject of an attempted tender, made after the commencement of the action, to plaintiff, of the amount alleged by plaintiff to have been expended by him in connection with his attempted purchases from the state, but the trial court made no finding thereon, no evidence having been introduced in regard thereto, so far as the record shows.

Judgment was given in each case denying plaintiff any relief, and decreeing defendant to be the owner of the property involved and quieting his title thereto as against plaintiff. It was stipulated at the trial "that the title to the real property described in each of the complaints was, at the time of the commencement of each of said actions, vested in each of the defendants therein named, respectively, * * * unless the same had been divested by the tax sales and proceedings under which plaintiff claims title."

[5] In the matter of the attempted sales by the state, the facts present the same question that was decided in the recent case of Buck v. Canty, 121 Pac. 924. Such sales were made on May 5, 1905, the day noticed therefor in the published notice, four days after the legislative act of the year 1905, approved March 1, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 31), amending section 3897, Political Code, so as to require notice of such proposed sale by the state to be given by mailing a copy of the notice "to the party to whom the land was last assessed next before the sale if such address be known" went into effect. The deeds from the state affirmatively showed that the only notice of such sales that was in fact given was the notice by publication in a newspaper, and there is no pretense that any other notice was given. If we assume that evidence aliunde would have been admissible in support of the deeds to show that notice by mailing was in fact given, it still remains that no such evidence was offered. For the reason stated in the opinion in Buck v. Canty, supra, it must be held that the ruling of the trial court refusing to admit in evidence the deeds from the state, based on such sales, one of the specified objections to which was the want of proof of such notice by mail, was correct. Without valid deeds from the state, plaintiff showed no title or interest whatsoever in the land.

[6] In view of what we have said, it is unnecessary to consider any of the numerous other points made in the briefs of learned counsel for plaintiff, save the single one relating to the failure of the trial court to find upon the allegations of the answers relative to tender. As to this, it is sufficient to say that a finding upon this matter would have been altogether immaterial, in view of the conditions shown by the record. There is no evidence tending to show that plaintiff ever expended any sum whatever in this matter, and nothing to indicate that he offered any evidence in this behalf. The allegations in that regard in the complaints were squarely denied by the answers, and the trial court found against plaintiff's allegations. The burden of proof being on plaintiff to show such payments and no evidence at all being introduced on the question, the findings of the trial court thereon cannot be held to be without legal support. Under these circumstances, it is entirely im-material whether the defendant made any tender of the amounts claimed to have been expended by plaintiff. A finding against the allegations of such tenders could not affect the judgment. We therefore are not here concerned with any question as to the right of a purchaser from the state at a sale of land made by the state on account of unpaid taxes to insist that as a condition precedent to the granting of equitable relief to the owner on account of some defect in the tax proceedings, he shall be reimbursed the amounts expended by him.

The judgments and orders denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

162 Cal. 385

RIMMER v. HOTCHKISS et al. (S. F. 5,404.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1912.)

1. TAXATION (§ 788*) — TAX DEEDS — RECIPIENTS.

The recitals of a tax deed to the state cannot be looked to for evidence of the amount of taxes, costs, and charges actually due.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1555, 1557, 1559–1569; Dec. Dig. § 788.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 549*)—DELINQUENT TAXES—CHARGES.

Pol. Code, § 3770, which requires a tax collector to collect, in addition to the taxes due on a delinquent list, together with the penalties, "fifty cents on each lot, piece, or tract of land separately assessed and on each assessment of personal property," does not authorize a separate 50-cent charge on account of improvements.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1043–1050; Dec. Dig. § 549.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 667*)—TAX DEEDS—VALIDITY—EXCESSIVE CHARGES.

A tax deed is invalid where the amount for which the land was sold includes an unauthorized charge of 50 cents as a separate charge on account of improvements.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1350; Dec. Dig. § 667.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by Otis E. Rimmer against W. J. Hotchkiss and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Carter & Carter and Royle A. Carter, for appellants. Frank Kauke, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought by him to quiet his alleged title to two parcels of land in Fresno county, and from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial.

The complaint contained simply the general allegations appropriate in an action to quiet title to land. The answer of defendants denied these allegations, and alleged ownership in fee in them by virtue of certain alleged tax sales to the state and an alleged sale by the state to one R. M. Barthold, their predecessor in title. They asked for a decree adjudicating their ownership of the property, and "such other and further relief as is meet and proper, and agreeable to equity." The trial court found that each and all of the allegations of the complaint are true, and that each and all of the denials and allegations of the answer are untrue, and gave judgment decreeing plaintiff to be the absolute owner of the land, free and clear of any claim of defendants.

Evidence introduced by plaintiff was sufficient to show that he is the absolute owner of the property, unless his title "is affected or divested by tax sales or purported tax sales and proceedings under which defendants claim title."

The property consisted of two parcels of land, one assessed for the year 1895 to Elizabeth Hurst, the other assessed for the same year to W. W. Hurst. Defendants offered in evidence two deeds from the tax collector to the state of California, each dated July 8, 1901, purporting to be based on sales of said land to the state made July 3, 1896, for the taxes delinquent on such assessment. Objection was made to each deed on the ground, among others, that the sale to the state was for an excessive amount. The trial court sustained the objection to the deed based on the Elizabeth Hurst assessment, and overruled it in the case of the deed based on the W. W. Hurst assessment. Defendant also offered two deeds from the state to R. M. Barthold, dated April 15, 1905, purporting to convey said lands to said Barthold in pursuance of sales made by the tax collector at public auction. The trial court sustained the objection to the deed of the Elizabeth Hurst land, and overruled the objection to the deed of the W. W. Hurst land. In rebuttal the plaintiff then showed by the assessment roll of the county, the assessment of the lands involved for the year 1895, and the taxes levied thereon. The assessment of W. W. Hurst was one of land, the improvements thereon, and various items of personal property. The tax shown was on personal property and half of real estate $10.06, on remaining half of real estate $3.91, a total of $13.97. The deed to the state specified that the costs and charges which had accrued at the time of the sale to the state amounted to the further sum of $3.71, making a total of $17.68, which was stated in the deed to the state as the amount for which the land was sold to the state. Pol. Code, § 3785, as it stood at the time of the making of the deed, and which required a statement in the deed of the amount for which the property was sold. The assessment of Elizabeth Hurst was also one of land, the improvements thereon, and various items of personal property. The tax shown was on personal property and half of real estate $5.91, on remaining half of real estate $3.08, a total of $8.99. The deed to the state specified that the costs and charges which had accrued at the time of the sale to the state amounted to the further sum of $2.84, making a total of $11.83, which was stated in the deed to the state as the amount for which the land was sold to the state.

[1, 2] We cannot look to the recitals in the deeds to the state for evidence of the amount of taxes, costs, and charges actually due. See Campbell v. Shafer, L. A. No. 2,598, 121 Pac. 737. There was, therefore, nothing in either deed to show that the sale to the state was for an excessive amount, or, in other words, that the amount named therein as the amount for which the property was sold to the state was in excess of the actual amount due for taxes, costs and charges. Campbell v. Shafer, supra. The trial court was correct in its ruling admitting the deed of the W. W. Hurst land, and erred in its ruling excluding the deed to the Elizabeth Hurst land. But, if the latter deed had been admitted in evidence, it could not have properly affected the result as to the question of title. Each deed was required by law to show the amount for which the property was sold to the state, and, as we have said, the W. W. Hurst deed showed $17.68 as such amount, and the Elizabeth Hurst deed showed $11.83 as such amount. From the evidence afforded by the assessment roll we are able to ascertain whether either or both of said amounts were excessive, for the costs and charges authorized are all expressly prescribed by law. Consideration of this evidence and of the provisions of our statute relative to costs and charges demonstrates that the amount was excessive in each case by at least 50 cents, unless, under the provisions of section 3770, Pol. Code, providing that "the tax collector must collect, in addition to the taxes due on the delinquent list, together with the penalties for delinquency, fifty cents on each lot, piece, or tract of land, separately assessed, and on each assessment of personal property," the tax collector was authorized to collect $1.50 in each case in addition to the taxes due and the penalties for delinquency, instead of $1 which admittedly he was entitled to charge and collect, 50 cents on the land and 50 cents on the personal property.

The precise question presented is whether a separate 50-cent charge was authorized on account of the improvements assessed in each case. This exact question was presented to this court in Canty v. Staley, 123 Pac. 252, and the majority of the court decided that no such charge was authorized under such circumstances as exist in this case. Referring to the claim made in that case in support of such a charge, the court, through Mr. Justice Melvin, said: "We are unable to agree with this construction of section 3770 of the Political Code. By said section it is provided that 'the tax collector must collect, in addition to the taxes due on the delinquent list, together with the penalties for delinquency, fifty cents on each lot, piece, or tract of land separately assessed and on each assessment of personal property.' It is clear that improvements are not personalty. They are expressly classified as 'real estate' (Pol. Code, § 3617), and, while they are to be assessed separately from the land (Pol. Code, § 3627), they must be assessed against the particular section, lot, or tract of land upon which they are located. Technically, then, the land and the improvements are, in one sense, two parcels of real property, but this does not justify a charge of 50 cents against each by the assessor because section 3770 of the Political Code authorizes that charge upon 'each lot, piece, or tract of land separately assessed.' There is nothing either in the section itself or in the use of the words 'land' and 'real estate' in that part of the Political Code relating to taxation which justifies the conclusion that the word 'land' was here intended to be used interchangeably with the term 'real estate.' The words 'lot,' 'piece,' and 'tract' apply peculiarly to the land itself, and are never employed to describe improvements. That a separate column must be used for the valuation of improvements does not justify the additional charge. It requires two entries to show the division of the tax into installments, yet no extra charge is permitted for that clerical labor. While this additional imposition for the assessment of improvements may be customarily noted by assessors, * * * we cannot let that fact distort the plain, simple English of the statute making the charge of 50 cents applicable to each subdivision of land separately assessed. Each of the respondent's two lots of land was therefore sold for at least 50 cents in excess of the proper amount." While a rehearing was granted in that case, it was not because of any doubt as to the correctness of the views above quoted, and the justices participating therein are of the opinion that the same correctly state the law on this question.

[3] It follows that it must be held that the amounts for which the two parcels of land were declared to be sold to the state and the amounts specified in the deeds as the sums for which they were so sold were excessive by at least 50 cents in each case. The effect of a sale to the state for an excessive amount is also declared in the opinion in Canty v. Staley, supra, as follows: "In either view of the matter, whether we hold that the property was sold for 50 cents or 52 cents above the price authorized by law, we must find, under the decisions of this court, that the excessive charge invalidated the transaction, and that the deeds and delinquent tax list were therefore properly denied admission in evidence by the trial court. This court has consistently held that, where a sale for delinquent taxes is in excess of the amount authorized by law, the party claiming by virtue of said sale can acquire no rights thereunder"—citing cases. As to this, it is to be said that the rehearing was not granted on account of any doubt as to the correctness of these views, and that the justices who participated therein are of the opinion that it correctly states the law. It follows that the sale to the state was void as to each parcel of land, and that defendants have acquired no interest in the land by reason of the attempted deeds of the state to their predecessor in title which are based thereon.

Upon the question of the right of the defendants to be reimbursed on account of money expended by their predecessor in title, the facts are substantially the same as those stated in the opinion in Buck v. Canty, 121 Pac. 924, as modified February 21, 1912. Upon the authority of that case, it must be held that the failure of the trial court to provide for reimbursement does not warrant a reversal.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

162 Cal. 366

HOLLAND v. HOTCHKISS et al.
(S. F. 5,710.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1912.)

1. TAXATION (§ 750*)—TAX SALES—VALIDITY—WANT OF NOTICE.

Under Pol. Code, § 3785, as amended by St. 1891, p. 134, which required 30 days' notice to the owner of land before applying for a tax deed, deeds by a tax collector to the state, made November 1, 1898, and July 18, 1899, respectively, and deeds from the state thereunder, made April 14, 1905, were void where such notice was not given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1497; Dec. Dig. § 750.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 610*)—TAX SALES—CANCELLATION—PREREQUISITES—REIMBURSEMENT OF PURCHASER.

Where a property owner applies for equitable relief against the public authorities, as, for example, to restrain proceedings for the collection or enforcement of taxes assessed against it, or to enjoin the execution of a tax deed, or to cancel a lien or charge for taxes, of record against his land, and it appears that all or some part of the tax charged is justly and equitably due from the plaintiff, or chargeable upon the land, he must, as a condition of obtaining such relief, first pay or offer to pay the amount justly due, or he must be required to do so before the relief to which he shows himself entitled is given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1244; Dec. Dig. § 610.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 734*)—TAX SALES—VALIDITY.

A tax sale is invalidated by any material irregularity in the assessment or in the subsequent proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1470-1473; Dec. Dig. § 734.*]

4. TAXATION (§ 819*)—INVALID TAX SALES—CAVEAT EMPTOR.

The rule of caveat emptor will be strictly applied against a tax sale purchaser who sues for possession of the land, or to recover the tax paid as money paid to the owner's use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1619, 1620; Dec. Dig. § 819.*]

5. TAXATION (§ 800*)—TAX SALES—CANCELLATION—REIMBURSEMENT OF PURCHASER.

One seeking relief in equity or under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, against an invalid tax deed, should be required to repay to the tax purchaser or his grantee or assignee, as a condition precedent to relief, the taxes, penalties, interest, and costs justly chargeable on the land and paid by the purchaser at the sale, or afterwards upon the faith of it, with legal interest from the time of such payment, less any rents received by the purchaser in possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1586; Dec. Dig. § 800.*]

6. TAXATION (§ 800*)—INVALID TAX SALES—CANCELLATION—REIMBURSEMENT OF PURCHASER.

Reimbursement to a tax sale purchaser for his outlay on cancellation of the sale can be secured by requiring the repayment to be made or deposited before judgment, or by inserting in the judgment a clause that it shall not take effect until such repayment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1586; Dec. Dig. § 800.*]

7. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 36*)—SUFFICIENCY.

An officer's certificate that a grantor "acknowledged to me" the execution of the deed is not bad on account of the words "to me," though they were not contained in the statutory form then in force.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 181, 182, 184-198, 221-223; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

8. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 57*)—ACKNOWLEDGMENT IN OTHER STATES—VALIDITY.

The provision of Civ. Code, § 1189, making the certificate of the clerk of a court of record of the county where a foreign acknowledgment is made, to the effect that the acknowledgment was taken according to the laws of the place where it was made, sufficient proof of such conformity, applies only to certificates of acknowledgment which do not show acknowledgment good under the local statutes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. § 264; Dec. Dig. § 57;* Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1572.]

9. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 36*)—ACKNOWLEDGMENT IN OTHER STATES—VALIDITY.

A foreign acknowledgment to a deed, reciting that the grantor "appeared before me, being personally known to me to be the same person described in and who executed the foregoing instrument, and acknowledged that he signed and sealed the same as his free and voluntary act and deed for the uses and purposes therein mentioned," sufficiently conforms to the form prescribed by Civ. Code, § 1189.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 181, 182, 184-198, 221-223; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

10. TAXATION (§ 800*)—TAX SALES—CANCELLATION—REIMBURSEMENT OF PURCHASER—TENDER.

The sufficiency of the amount tendered to a tax sale purchaser as reimbursement on cancellation of a tax sale is important only upon the question of the stoppage of interest and the imposition of costs, which in such cases is largely discretionary with the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1586; Dec. Dig. § 800.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by W. G. Holland against W. J. Hotchkiss and another. From a judgment for plaintiff from orders refusing a new trial, and to vacate the judgment and render a different judgment on the findings, defendants appeal. Judgment vacated, order denying new trial reversed, and cause remanded.

Carter & Carter, for appellants. Geo. Cosgrave and Frank Kauke, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to quiet title and determine adverse claims to a section of land. The plaintiff proved a title derived from the United States. The defendant Hotchkiss claims title solely under two deeds from the state of California to one Barthold, executed by the county tax collector of Fresno county, purporting to be made in pursuance of sales and deeds to the state for delinquent taxes. Barthold afterward conveyed the land to Hotchkiss. The defendant Canty claims a right to purchase from Hotchkiss the undivided one-half of the land.

The judgment of the court below was that the plaintiff is the owner of the land, and that his title thereto be quieted as against the defendants, that the defendants have no right, title, or interest in the land, and that they be enjoined from asserting any title, claim, or equity thereto. It further adjudged that the plaintiff be required to pay to the defendant Hotchkiss within 30 days the sum of $327.58. That sum is the amount, without interest, of the sums paid by Hotchkiss and Barthold to the state as purchase money and for taxes on the land accruing after the sale to the state. Plaintiff alleged a tender thereof by him before suit, and refusal by defendant to accept the money. Hotchkiss set up these payments in his answer, and asked that, if plaintiff was adjudged the owner, the judgment for him "be made upon the condition" that he repay these sums, with interest, to the said Hotchkiss. The judgment was not made conditional, nor was Hotchkiss given interest on the money paid, or any lien upon the land for the sum the judgment requires plaintiff to pay to him. Hotchkiss and Canty appeal from the judgment, also from an order refusing a new trial, and from an order denying their motion to vacate the judgment and render a different judgment upon the findings.

[1] The original tax sales upon which the defendants' claim rests were made in 1893 and 1894. That for the north half of the section was in July, 1893; that for the south half in July, 1894. At these respective dates the law provided that, if property sold for delinquent taxes was not redeemed within the time allowed by law, no deed could be made to the purchaser in pursuance of such sale, unless the purchaser had, 30 days before applying for such deed, given notice to the owner or occupant of the land of the amount due and the time when he would apply for the deed. Pol. Code, § 3785; St. 1891, p. 134. The deed by the tax collector to the state for the north half of the section was made on November 1, 1898; that for the south half was made on July 18, 1899. The deeds from the state to Barthold, based on these tax sales and deeds to the state were made on April 14, 1905. The notice required by section 3785, as aforesaid, was not given in either case. The failure to give these notices makes the deeds of the tax collector to the state and his subsequent deeds, based thereon, on behalf of the state to Barthold, inoperative and void. They conveyed no title. This proposition was fully considered and decided in Johnson v. Taylor, 150 Cal. 201, 88 Pac. 903, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 818, 119 Am. St. Rep. 181. See, also, King v. Samuel, 7 Cal. App. 63, 93 Pac. 391; Wetherbee v. Johnston, 10 Cal. App. 264, 101 Pac. 802. The appellants concede this. Their principal point is that as successor of the purchaser at the tax sales Hotchkiss is entitled not only to reimbursement of the sums paid by him and Barthold in discharge of taxes regularly levied and assessed against the land and which had become valid liens thereon, but also to interest thereon from the respective dates of such payments, and that the repayment thereof should have been enforced before judgment, or at least that it should have been made a condition precedent to the taking effect of the judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The question is whether the rule that he who seeks equity must do equity applies to suits in equity to set aside a tax sale or tax deed, or to suits under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure in which a judgment for the plaintiff will, in effect, cancel or annul such sale or deed. The decisions on the subject in this state are inconsistent. The same point is involved in several other cases filed of even date herewith. We therefore deem it proper to consider the question at some length.

[2] It is now firmly settled by our decisions that where a property owner applies for equitable relief against the public authorities, as, for example, to restrain proceedings for the collection or enforcement of taxes assessed against it, or to enjoin the execution of a tax deed or to cancel a lien or charge for taxes, of record against his land, and it appears that all or some part of the tax charged is justly and equitably due from the plaintiff, or chargeable upon the land, he must, as a condition of obtaining such relief, first pay or offer to pay the amount justly due, or he must be required to do so before the relief to which he shows himself entitled is given. Couts v. Cornell, 147 Cal. 560, 82 Pac. 194, 109 Am. St. Rep. 168, and cases there cited; Grant v. Cornell, 147 Cal. 565, 82 Pac. 193, 109 Am. St. Rep. 173; Trippet v. State, 149 Cal. 530, 86 Pac. 1084, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1210; Savings, etc., Soc. v. Burke, 151 Cal. 616, 91 Pac. 504; San Diego, etc., Co. v. Cornell, 151 Cal. 198, 200, 90 Pac. 1130.

The rule applicable in suits by a property owner against the purchaser at a tax sale, or his grantee or assignee, to quiet title, or to cancel the certificate of sale or the deed thereon, or a suit against such parties, under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to determine the adverse claim, is not so well established. In some such cases the application of the rule has been denied, in others it has been limited, and in still others the rule has been enforced.

The question first arose in Hibernia Soc. v. Ordway, 38 Cal. 679, a suit to foreclose a mortgage. The defendant Anderson held a tax title, and in virtue thereof had obtained judgment against the mortgagors, in ejectment, for possession. The tax title was held invalid because of irregularities in the sale. The court said: "That where the tax is valid, but the sale irregular, equity will not cancel the tax deed at the suit of the owner of the land without a tender of the taxes to the purchaser, is not denied." Such relief was there denied because Anderson had fraudulently conspired with the two mortgagors to hold the tax title for them in order thereby to bar the mortgage lien, thus violating the other maxim that equity will not relieve one who does not come into court with clean hands.

In Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 233, the defendant claimed under a tax deed which was void because the state tax for the year 1863, included in the charge for which it was sold, was wholly unauthorized. He also claimed under a tax sale for taxes of 1875 which was invalid because the sale was for a sum greater than the legal charges. The action was brought to determine adverse claims, under section 738, Code of Civil Procedure. The court declined to say whether or not this was an action in equity, but, conceding that it was, said: "If the sale is absolutely void, the payment of the tax by the purchaser stands on the footing of a voluntary payment, not made at the request of the owner of the land, and which he is under no obligation to refund. If the tax sale was not void, but only irregular in some respects, and if the owner should go into equity to cancel the sale, and to compel a purchaser in good faith to surrender the evidences of his title, it is possible that the court would not grant relief except on condition that the purchase money was refunded. But that would be a very different case from the present." It is somewhat difficult to understand this reasoning.

[3] No proposition is better settled than this, that proceedings to sell property for taxes are to be strictly followed, and that, if there is any material irregularity in the assessment or in the subsequent proceedings, the sale, and the certificate and deed based thereon, are absolutely void. In view of this principle, the phrase, "if the tax sale was not void, but merely irregular in some respects," seems meaningless in the connection in which it is used. If there is no material irregularity, the grantee in the tax deed will have the title, and cannot, nor need he, ask reimbursement. If there is a material irregularity, his deed is void. The only explanation is that the court was referring to cases where the tax itself was void, so that, in point of law, the land had not been relieved of any burden by the tax sale. In that case, this was true of only a part of the tax in question. The remark seems to have no application except to that part.

Greenwood v. Adams, 80 Cal. 74, 21 Pac. 1134, denies the right to repayment or to a conditional judgment, in these words: "Parties who purchase property at tax sales acquire the title to the property if all the proceedings for the levy of the taxes and the sale are regular and in strict conformity to law; but if not so, they acquire no rights to the property which either a court of law or equity can enforce." (Italics ours.) The sale in question was void because of an irregularity in the assessment; the owner not having been properly named therein. In Kittle v. Bellegarde, 86 Cal. 556, 25 Pac. 55, the judgment canceling a street assessment sale, but not directing reimbursement to the purchaser for money paid, was affirmed, but the equity rule aforesaid was not discussed or mentioned, and it appears that the assessment upon which the sale was made was utterly void. Dranga v. Rowe, 127 Cal. 506, 59 Pac. 944, was a suit against the city of San Diego and others to quiet title. The city answered separately, alleging a lien for taxes assessed upon the property, and praying that no judgment be made quieting plaintiff's title, except on condition that the tax be paid. The city was the sole appellant. It was held that the tax was void. The opinion then states that the appellant claims reimbursement under the equity rule, as if the purpose was to discuss and decide the point. But it then decides the case by affirming the judgment, without further mention of the question. It decides the case, but does not decide the question except by implication. It may be added that the appeal presented a case against the city alone and the decision is directly in the teeth of Couts v. Cornell and the other like cases first above cited, and it must now be considered as overruled by those cases.

The last decision of this court on the precise point is Ellis v. Witmer, 134 Cal. 249, 66 Pac. 301. Witmer had bought a lot at a sale by the city treasurer to satisfy a bond issued upon a street assessment. The owners sued Witmer and the treasurer to cancel the certificate, and restrain the execution of a deed thereon to Witmer. It was held that the assessment and bond were valid, but that the sale was void. The judgment was reversed because the plaintiffs had not offered to pay the amount due on the bond, and because the court below had not inserted such condition in the judgment. The court said that the plaintiffs "cannot successfully invoke the assistance of a court of equity against the irregularities in the sale complained of, unless on the condition of paying what is due from them."

There are two decisions on the subject by the District Court of Appeal of the Third District. In the first—Flanagan v. Towle, 8 Cal. App. 229, 93 Pac. 507—the court quoted and followed the rule as stated in Ellis v. Witmer, supra. In the other case—Hotchkiss v. Hansberger, 15 Cal. App. 603, 115 Pac. 957—that court overruled Flanagan v. Towle and followed the decision of the Supreme Court in Greenwood v. Adams, supra. It distinguished Couts v. Cornell and other similar cases, including Ellis v. Witmer, by the statement that they were suits against public officials where some tax was justly owing to the state or city, apparently failing to observe that Ellis v. Witmer was a suit against a purchaser and the city treasurer, and that the assessment was owing to the purchaser, and not to the city.

[4] The confusion thus apparent seems to have arisen from the failure to observe the difference between the cases where the tax purchaser is the actor and those in which relief in equity is sought against him. If the purchaser, claiming title under his tax deed, sues for possession of the land, or if, perceiving that the deed is invalid, he sues the owner to recover the tax paid, as money paid to his use, the general rule is that he cannot prevail, that the rule of caveat emptor will be strictly applied against him, that a proceeding to assess and collect taxes creates no contract by the owner to pay the tax assessed, and that the law will not imply a contract by the owner to refund such tax to one who has paid the same upon a tax sale which is void, and this is true in cases where the tax was legally assessed but the proceedings to sell defective, as well as where the assessment, itself, is unauthorized and void, or where the tax had been previously paid. Mr. Pomeroy says: "In the first place, the rule only applies where a party is appealing as actor to a court of equity in order to obtain some equitable relief. * * * The rule may apply, and under its operation an equitable right may be secured or an equitable relief awarded to the defendant which could not be obtained by him in any other manner—that is, which a court of equity, in conformity with its settled methods, either would not, or could not, have secured or conferred or awarded by its decree in a suit brought for that purpose by him as the plaintiff." 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 386. The doctrine is thus stated in

Cooley on Taxation: "The rule of caveat emptor applies to tax purchasers. The purchaser at a tax sale will therefore lose what he had paid if his deed is subject to fatal infirmity. This is the rule unless the statute recognizes an equity in him and provides for it. * * * Unless the statute in terms gives it, the purchaser will have no lien on the land for the sum paid on the purchase." Pom. Eq. Jur. p. 1017. The author here speaks concerning rights which the purchaser can enforce by action, not of limitations in equity upon the right of the owner to sue for a cancellation of the sale or deed. As to the latter, he says: "In vacating a tax or a sale for taxes as a cloud upon title, it is proper to require the complainant to pay any sum that is either a legal or an equitable charge against him, and which will be affected by the decree. And this will be required, although an action against him for such sum would be barred by the statute of limitations. If the tax were wholly illegal in its essentials, of course, no such requirement could be made, for it would not be supported by any equity." 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. p. 1455. And further: "As in removing cloud, he who seeks relief against a tax deed must pay or offer to pay whatever taxes, interest, costs, etc., are justly chargeable against the land, and payment will be required by the decree; otherwise, where the taxes were absolutely void." 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. p. 1458. These we consider accurate statements of the true rule. A large number of cases are cited in the footnotes. We have not deemed it necessary to examine them all. The following will be found to support the text: Farwell v. Harding, 96 Ill. 32; Gage v. Nichols, 112 Ill. 269; Phelps v. Harding, 87 Ill. 445; Barnett v. Cline, 60 Ill. 205; Adams v. Castle, 30 Conn. 404; Lancaster v. Du Hadway, 97 Ind. 566; Morrison v. Jacoby, 114 Ind. 84, 14 N. E. 546, 15 N. E. 806; Montgomery v. Trumbo, 126 Ind. 332, 26 N. E. 54; Peckham v. Millikan, 99 Ind. 355; Knox v. Dunn, 22 Kan. 683; Brown v. Finley, 51 Neb. 468, 71 N. W. 34; Dillon v. Merriam, 22 Neb. 152, 34 N. W. 344; Wood v. Helmer, 10 Neb. 65, 4 N. W. 968; Boeck v. Merriam, 10 Neb. 201, 4 N. W. 962; Powers v. Bank, 15 N. D. 469, 109 N. W. 361; Lohr v. George, 65 W. Va. 249, 64 S. E. 609; Toothman v. Courtney, 62 W. Va. 185, 58 S. E. 915. We have found no well-considered case to the contrary. For statements of the general rule that "he who seeks equity must do equity," see 1 Story, Eq. Jur. (13th Ed.) § 64e; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 385, 388.

[5] In view of this weight of authority and the inconsistency of our own cases on the subject, the decisions which deny the applications of the rule to tax cases should be deemed overruled, and the correct principle declared. Where the owner comes into equity asking equitable relief to remove or cancel a tax deed or sale as a cloud upon his title, or to obtain a judgment which, in effect, will invalidate such sale or deed, the court should refuse any relief except upon the condition that he first repay to the tax purchaser, or his grantee or assignee, the taxes, penalties, interest, and costs justly chargeable upon the land and which the purchaser has paid at the sale, or afterward upon the faith of it, with legal interest from the time of such payment, less rents received, if any, if the purchaser has been in possession.

Respondent suggests that this rule is applicable only in suits which, under the division of actions between courts of law and equity formerly prevailing in England, would have been cognizable only in equity, that an action to determine adverse claims under section 738, Code of Civil Procedure, being an action authorized by statute, is an action at law, in which the equity rule cannot be enforced. It is sufficient to say on this point that the decisions hold that the rule applies in such actions to the same extent as in suits of the character formerly cognizable in equity to remove a cloud or cancel an instrument. Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 60, 25 Pac. 249; Hancock v. Plummer, 66 Cal. 338, 5 Pac. 514; Brandt v. Wheaton, 52 Cal. 433.

[6] It will be observed from the statements of the rule above given that the defendant who has removed incumbrances or paid claims which the plaintiff ought justly to repay to him as a condition of obtaining the equitable relief sought by the suit is entitled to interest on the sums so paid, and to have the repayment secured to him in some manner. This may be done either by requiring such repayment to be made or deposited in court before giving the judgment, or by inserting in the judgment a clause that it shall not take effect until such repayment be made. The judgment in the present case did not do either. The latter mode may properly be adopted in cases where the defendant is directed by the judgment to do something himself, as to execute a prescribed deed, or release, or where the judgment directs the officers of the court to cancel a deed or enter satisfaction of a lien of record, as and for the defendant in case he refuses. But in cases where the judgment declares and adjudges the title outright the more convenient and effective method is to require restitution to be made by the plaintiff before or at the time of rendering the judgment. The defendant Hotchkiss was entitled to a judgment allowing interest in addition to the principal and by inserting a clause which would have made his claim for restitution effectual and the judgment conditional and dependent upon reimbursement to him.

[7] Appellant makes the further objection that the plaintiff's evidence did not show that the title to the land was vested in him. This objection is based on alleged defects in the certificates of acknowledgment of two deeds comprising a part of plaintiff's chain of title. The objections are without merit. In one of the deeds the officer certified that the grantor "acknowledged to me" the execution of the deed. The statutory form for such certificates in force at that time did not contain the words "to me." The effect is the same and variation is immaterial.

[8, 9] The other deed was acknowledged before a notary public of the state of Washington. Our law authorizes a notary of another state to take acknowledgments of deeds conveying lands within this state. Civ. Code, § 1182, subd. 4. Section 1189 of the Civil Code provides that an acknowledgment taken without the state in the manner provided by the law where it is made is good in this state. It further provides that the certificate of the clerk of a court of record of the county where such foreign acknowledgment is made, to the effect that such acknowledgment was taken in accordance with the laws of the place where it was made, is sufficient proof of such conformity. Compliance with this formality was not made in the case of this deed. The provision of section 1189 in regard to certificates of the clerk is applicable only to cases where the certificate of acknowledgment does not show an acknowledgment which would be good under our own statutes. If it would be good here, and the officer is one authorized by our statutes to take proof of acknowledgments without the state, no certificate from the clerk of the other state is required. The notary certified that the grantor "appeared before me, being personally known to me to be the same person described in and who executed the foregoing instrument and acknowledged that he signed and sealed the same as his free and voluntary act and deed for the uses and purposes therein mentioned." As acknowledgment seldom succeeds, or even accompanies, actual delivery to the grantee, it is clear the word "executed" in the statutory form prescribed (Civ. Code, § 1189) should not be construed to include such actual delivery. But the words used, taken altogether, mean substantially the same thing as the word "execution" and the certificate is sufficient. Jamison v. Jamison, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 457, 31 Am. Dec. 536; McIntire v. Board, 5 Bin. (Pa.) 296, 6 Am. Dec. 417; Hall v. Thompson, 1 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 443, 489; Davar v. Cardwell, 27 Ind. 478; Woodruff v. Garner, 27 Ind. 4, 89 Am. Dec. 477. Substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient, and, if the words used are equivalent in meaning to those prescribed, the certificate is good. Reed v. Bank of Ukiah, 148 Cal. 96, 82 Pac. 845; Duckworth v. Watsonville, etc., Co., 150 Cal. 534, 89 Pac. 338. The fact that it also certified to the sealing of the instrument does not vitiate the acknowledgment, although such sealing is unnecessary in this state.

[10] There are no other points requiring notice. The record shows the amounts paid by the defendant as taxes on the lands to be $327.58. This does not include interest.

It includes payments of taxes accruing after the sales, amounting to $134.80, but the dates of these payments do not appear, and the interest accrued thereon cannot be computed. Enough appears, however, to show that the amount tendered by the plaintiff did not cover the principal and interest of the purchase money and the subsequent taxes paid by defendant and his grantor. This is important only upon the question of the stoppage of interest (Civ. Code, § 1504; Leet v. Armbruster, 143 Cal. 668, 77 Pac. 653), and the question of the imposition of costs, which, in such cases rests largely in the discretion of the trial court (Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 282). A new trial will be necessary, but it should be limited to the inquiry as to the amount of the payments made by Hotchkiss and Barthold and interest thereon, to which defendant is entitled before judgment quieting plaintiff's title is made. All other facts involved in the case were fully tried and found by the court, and the evidence shows that as to them no other result should follow. The court, upon rendering judgment, will, of course, again consider the question who should pay the costs of suit in the trial court, and may take additional evidence on that point.

The judgment is vacated, and the order denying a new trial is reversed, so far as the question of the amounts paid by the defendant and his grantor and interest, the deposit of the same in court, and the right to recover costs of suit are concerned. The cause is remanded for a new trial of these issues alone. The findings on all other issues are to stand. The court below is directed, after determining these questions, to proceed with the case, and to render judgment in accordance with this opinion.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

(162 Cal. 391)

JOHNSON v. CANTY. (S. F. 5,733.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1912.)

1. TAXATION (§ 788*)—TAX DEEDS—VALIDITY—EVIDENCE.

One relying on a tax deed that can be issued only after notice to the owner is bound to establish the giving of such notice as part of his proof of title; the deed itself not being even prima facie proof that the notice was given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1555, 1557, 1559-1569; Dec. Dig. § 788.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 750*)—TAX DEEDS—NOTICE TO PURCHASER—NECESSITY.

A deed executed to a state for delinquent tax lands is void if 30 days' notice in writing to the owner of intention to apply for the deed was not given, as required by a then existing law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1497; Dec. Dig. § 750.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 679*)—TAX SALES—PURCHASE BY STATE AND RESALE—VALIDITY—NOTICE TO OWNER.

A deed from the state under a sale by a tax collector of lands purchased by the state at delinquent tax sale is void where the sale was made May 5, 1905, where notice of the sale was not given by mail as required by Pol. Code, § 3897, as amended by Act March 1, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 31), effective May 1, 1905.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1361, 1362; Dec. Dig. § 679.*]

4. COURTS (§ 35*)—PROBATE COURTS—PRESUMPTION OF REGULARITY.

The same presumption exists in favor of the acts of the superior court when exercising its probate jurisdiction as in ordinary litigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 140, 141, 145; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

5. JUDGMENT (§ 495*)—PROBATE COURTS—PROCEEDINGS—PRESUMPTION OF REGULARITY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1704, 1706, 1719, which require a certified copy of a decree of distribution to be recorded, and provide that from such filing notice of the contents is imparted, and under section 1704, which provides that a probate order or decree need not recite the facts or performance of acts upon which jurisdiction depends, a decree of distribution affords presumptive evidence of the court's jurisdiction to render it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 933, 934; Dec. Dig. § 495.*]

6. TAXATION (§ 829*)—TAX SALES—CANCELLATION—REIMBURSEMENT OF PURCHASER.

On cancellation of an invalid tax sale, the purchaser is not entitled to reimbursement for a survey of the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1643, 1644; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

7. TAXATION (§ 739*)—TAX SALES—CANCELLATION—CHARGE AGAINST PURCHASER.

On cancellation of an invalid tax sale, the purchaser is chargeable with net profits received from the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1476, 1477; Dec. Dig. § 739.*]

8. TAXATION (§ 814*)—TAX SALES—CANCELLATION—JUDGMENT.

A judgment canceling an invalid tax sale should have awarded the purchaser absolute reimbursement for his proper charges, it being improper to provide for return of the money to plaintiff if not accepted by the purchaser within 30 days.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1612, 1613; Dec. Dig. § 814.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by J. K. Johnson against D. J. Canty. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed in part and remanded, with directions.

Carter & Carter and William A. Barnhill, for appellant. Frank Kauke and Geo. Cosgrave, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial in an action brought by plaintiff to quiet his alleged title to certain lands in Fresno county. The action was commenced May 12, 1909. The complaint contained, in addition to the general allegations ordinarily used in such complaints, allegations substantially as follows: On May 7, 1909, plaintiff tendered and offered to pay to defendant $150 and such further sums as defendant may have expended in the matter of the payment of taxes and other incumbrances on said land, with interest thereon, demanding at the same time that defendant release the land from his alleged claim thereto, or in any appropriate form or manner quitclaim the same to plaintiff, offering to pay the reasonable costs and charges for making such release or quitclaim. Defendant refused to accept such money so offered in satisfaction of his claim. Plaintiff offers to pay any such sum as the court may find should be paid. The defendant by his answer denied plaintiff's claim of ownership, denied that he had no interest in the land and denied the alleged tender, but admitted that he refused to release his claim. He further set up the tax proceedings under which he claimed, and alleged himself to be owner of the land by virtue thereof. He asked for a decree quieting his alleged title against plaintiff.

The trial court found all the allegations of the complaint to be true and all the allegations of the answer and cross-complaint to be untrue. It further found in response to the allegations of tender, etc., that "prior to" May 7, 1909, defendant expended by reason of taxes and purported taxes, etc., the sum of $168.75, and had received as income from the products of the land $52.35, leaving the sum of $116.40 which had not been repaid to him, but all of which was offered and tendered by plaintiff on May 7, 1909. Plaintiff, in compliance with the views expressed by the trial court to that effect in its conclusions of law, having deposited said sum of $116.40 with the clerk of the court for defendant, judgment was given in favor of plaintiff, reciting said deposit, and decreeing that plaintiff is the owner of the property, that defendant has no interest therein, and that defendant be enjoined from asserting any interest therein. It was further ordered therein that said sum of $116.40 be paid to defendant upon his accepting the same and giving a receipt therefor in full payment of any claim by reason of the said expenditures by him, and that, in the event that said money is not accepted and receipted for within 30 days from date, the right of the defendant to said sum shall cease upon the expiration of said 30 days, and the same shall be returned to plaintiff. This judgment was given and entered on November 30, 1909, and the appeal from the judgment was taken May 28, 1910.

[1, 2] Upon the trial, plaintiff, having introduced his evidence tending to show absolute title in himself, and the tender alleged in his complaint and defendant's refusal thereof, rested. Defendant thereupon attempted to establish title under his alleged tax proceedings. He offered in evidence two purported deeds to the state, one dated July 18, 1899, based upon a sale made to the state in the year 1894 for the taxes for the year 1893, and one dated February 1, 1896, based upon a sale made to the state in the year 1886 for the taxes for the year 1885. At the date of the respective sales to the state shown by these deeds, namely, July 3, 1894, and March 9, 1886, a statute of this state required as a condition precedent to the execution of a deed to the purchaser that the purchaser must give to the owner of the property 30 days' notice in writing of his intended application for a deed on account of the sale to him, and make proof of such service to the tax collector, and that no deed "shall be issued by the tax collector" to the purchaser in the absence of such proof. No evidence was offered in connection with these deeds to show that any such notice was given by the purchaser (the state) to the owner before the execution of the deeds, and no pretense is made that any such notice was ever given. It is settled that one relying on a tax deed that can be issued only after the giving of such notice is bound to establish the giving of the notice as a part of his proof of title, and that the deed itself is not even prima facie proof that the notice was given. Miller v. Miller, 96 Cal. 376, 31 Pac. 247, 31 Am. St. Rep. 229; Reed v. Lyon, 96 Cal. 501, 31 Pac. 619. That the giving of such notice was essential in the case of these deeds, because the law in force at the time of the respective sales required it, even though the state was the purchaser, is settled by Johnson v. Taylor, 150 Cal. 201, 88 Pac. 903, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 818, 119 Am. St. Rep. 181, where the whole matter is exhaustively discussed. The trial court sustained the objections interposed to the deeds, one of which was the want of proof of such notice. In view of what we have said, the ruling was correct.

[3] Defendant also offered in evidence a deed from the state of California to himself based upon a sale made by the tax collector on May 5, 1905, under authorization from the state controller. As in Buck v. Canty, 121 Pac. 924, and Canty v. Staley, S. F. No. 5,196, 123 Pac. 252 (this day filed), no showing was made as to the giving of such notice by mail as was required by section 3897, Political Code, as amended March 1, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 31); the deed affirmatively showing that the only notice given was the notice by publication in a newspaper. Objection to the introduction of such deed was sustained by the trial court, one of the specific grounds of objection being the want of proof of such notice by mail. Upon the authority of the cases last cited, it must be held that the objection was properly sustained.

[4, 5] The property involved was originally the property of one Lucio M. Tewksbury, under whom plaintiff claimed as a successor in title. A link in plaintiff's chain of title was the decree of distribution in the matter of the estate of said Tewksbury, who died intestate, made by the superior court of Alameda county, Cal., on August 10, 1886. To show this, plaintiff offered in evidence a certified copy of such decree, to which defendant objected on various grounds, the only one warranting notice being that there was no showing that the court had acquired jurisdiction of the estate. The trial court overruled the objection, and this ruling is assigned as error. It is well settled in this state that the same presumption exists in favor of the acts of the superior court done in the exercise of its probate jurisdiction, as exists in favor of its acts in ordinary litigation between parties. It is provided by our statute that it is to be presumed "that a court or judge acting as such * * * was acting in the lawful exercise of his jurisdiction." Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 16. It is to be borne in mind that we have no statute prescribing, as in the ordinary action, what papers shall constitute "the judgment roll" or "record" of a judgment or order in probate proceedings in the courts of this state. We can see no good reason why a decree like the one received in evidence in this matter should not be held to afford presumptive evidence of the jurisdiction of the court to render it. In Estate of Schandoney, 133 Cal. 387, 65 Pac. 877, this court applied the presumption above stated in a guardianship proceeding, quoting Freeman on Judgments, § 124, as follows: "Nothing shall be intended to be out of the jurisdiction of the superior court but that which expressly appears to be so. Hence, though the existence of any jurisdictional fact may not be affirmed upon the record, it will be presumed upon a collateral attack that the court, if of general jurisdiction, acted correctly and with due authority, and its judgment will be as valid as though every fact necessary to jurisdiction affirmatively appeared." See, also, Estate of Eikerenkotter, 126 Cal. 54, 58 Pac. 370. It is expressly provided by our statute that a certified copy of a decree of distribution must be recorded in the county recorder's office (Code Civ. Proc. § 1719), and that from the time of such filing notice is imparted to all persons of the contents thereof (Code Civ. Proc. § 1706). It thus appears to have been contemplated that the decree itself should afford evidence of the transmission of the title of deceased. It is expressly provided by section 1704, Code of Civil Procedure: "Orders and decrees made by the court, or a judge thereof, in probate proceedings, need not recite the existence of facts, or the performance of acts, upon which the jurisdiction of the court or judge may depend, but it shall only be necessary that they contain the matters ordered or adjudged, except as otherwise provided in this title. All orders and decrees of the court or judge must be entered at length in the minute book of the court." It is not questioned, of course, that a judicial record of this state may be proved by the production of a copy thereof, "certified by the clerk or other person having the legal custody thereof." Code Civ. Proc. § 1905.

There is no other matter requiring notice, save such questions as are presented regarding the reimbursement of defendant for moneys expended by him. The question what rule should be applied in such matters has been fully and exhaustively discussed in the opinion of this court in Holland v. Hotchkiss (S. F. No. 5,710) 123 Pac. 258 (this day filed), and it will only be necessary to apply the rules there laid down to the facts of this case.

[6, 7] The evidence sufficiently supports the finding that defendant has paid out only $168.75 on account of matters for which he could equitably claim reimbursement as a condition precedent to plaintiff's having a decree quieting his title. This excludes $75 testified by defendant to have been paid for a survey of the land, for which, of course, he was not entitled to be reimbursed. It includes, according to defendant's own testimony, interest on the money paid by him to the state for the property to the date of the tender, May 7, 1909. There were no data upon which to found a conclusion as to the time of the other expenditures, $30.53 and $32.59, and consequently no foundation for the allowance of interest on such payments. The evidence was also sufficient to support the conclusion that defendant had received $52.35 net profits from the land, which should be deducted from the $168.75. The conclusion that plaintiff should reimburse defendant to the extent of $116.40 was therefore correct.

[8] In view of what we have said, the judgment was correct, except in so far as it provided for the return to the plaintiff of the $116.40 deposited with the clerk of the court for the defendant, if not accepted by the defendant within 30 days. The money should have been awarded absolutely to defendant, without condition of any kind. We cannot determine from the record whether this money has been returned to the plaintiff as required by the judgment, because of non-acceptance by the defendant. The judgment should have concluded with the words: "It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said sum of $116.40, which has been deposited and is now in the possession of the clerk of this court, be paid over to the defendant."

It is ordered that the judgment be reversed, with directions to the trial court (1) in the event that the $116.40 deposited with the clerk of the court for defendant is still under the control of the clerk to give a new judgment in the precise terms of the original judgment, with the exception of all that part thereof that follows the paragraph thereof last above quoted; (2) in the event that said $116.40 has been returned to plaintiff, to require plaintiff as a condition precedent to the entry of judgment in his favor to again pay said sum to the clerk of the court for defendant, and, if plaintiff fails to make such payment within 30 days after order requiring him to do so is made, to dismiss this action, but, if he makes such payment within said time, to thereupon enter the judgment, in the form already above prescribed.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed. Appellant shall not recover his costs of appeal.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

(162 Cal. 382)

CAMPBELL v. CANTY. (S. F. 5,341.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1912.)

1. TAXATION (§ 679*)—TAX DEEDS—RESALE BY STATE—NOTICE—SUFFICIENCY.

A deed from the state made May 5, 1905, covering lands deeded to the state for delinquent taxes, July 3, 1902, is invalid, where notice of such sale and deed was not given as required by Pol. Code, § 3897, as amended by Act March 1, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 31), effective May 1, 1905.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1361, 1362; Dec. Dig. § 679.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 395*)—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY.

A finding that all the allegations of the complaint are true, and that all the allegations of the answer are untrue, is equivalent to a specific finding as to each allegation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 927-934, 939; Dec. Dig. § 395.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1071*)—HARMLESS ERROR—FINDINGS.

A judgment for plaintiff in a suit to quiet title is not subject to reversal for error in findings, where the tax deed relied upon by defendant is void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4234-4239; Dec. Dig. § 1071.*]

4. TAXATION (§ 814*)—TAX DEEDS—CANCELLATION—REIMBURSEMENT OF PURCHASER.

The rule that one who seeks equity must do equity applies to suits in equity to set aside a tax sale or tax deed, and to suits under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, in which judgment for plaintiff will in effect annul or cancel such sale or deed, and hence a judgment of cancellation without first requiring plaintiff to repay or pay into court for defendant the sum paid by him upon a tax sale with interest from the date of payment, was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1612, 1613; Dec. Dig. § 814.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1151*)—DISPOSITION OF CAUSE—MODIFICATION.

A judgment canceling a tax deed will not be reversed for error in failing to require plaintiff to repay to defendant $6.15, being the amount paid by him for the land with interest, where plaintiff consents to a modification of the judgment on the Supreme Court deciding that repayment should have been awarded, and where the question of reimbursement was an unimportant incident of the appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4498-4506; Dec. Dig. § 1151.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Mary Campbell against D. J. Canty. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Royle A. Carter, William A. Barnhill, and Carter & Carter, for appellant. Geo. Cosgrave and Frank Kauke, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The complaint states a cause of action in the ordinary form under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure to determine adverse claims to 160 acres of land in Fresno county, alleging that plaintiff is the owner, and that defendant asserts a claim thereto without right. The answer denies the allegations of the complaint, and alleges that the defendant is the owner under and by virtue of a sale and deed to the state for delinquent taxes and a subsequent sale and deed by the state to the defendant in pursuance of the tax sale. The court found that the plaintiff was the owner of the land, and gave judgment for her quieting her title, unconditionally, and for costs of suit.

[1] The validity of the sale to the state for the delinquent taxes need not be considered. It was made on July 3, 1897. The deed to the state in pursuance thereof was made on July 3, 1902. Upon the authority of the decision of this court in Buck v. Canty, S. F. No. 5340, decided February 10, 1912 (121 Pac. 924), the sale and deed from the state to the defendant are obviously invalid. This sale and deed were made on May 5, 1905, by the tax collector of the county, in pursuance of notices previously given in accordance with the law in force prior to the enactment of the amendment of March 1, 1905, to section 3897 of the Political Code (St. 1905, p. 31). That amendment took effect five days before the sale, the notices given did not comply with its requirements, and for the reasons given in Buck v. Canty the sale was unauthorized by the law in force at the time it was made and is consequently void. The decision of the court below that the defendant had no title to the land was therefore correct.

[2, 3] In addition to the allegations of ownership in plaintiff, the complaint avers that the defendant claims to have paid taxes on the land and to have a lien thereon for the sum paid, and that the plaintiff, on March 25, 1908, and before suit, had tendered defendant $50 in satisfaction of said claim, which defendant refused. The answer admits the tender and refusal. The findings are in the general form that all the allegations of the complaint are true and all the allegations of the answer untrue. This is the equivalent of a specific finding as to each allegation of the answer as well as those of the complaint. They are contrary to the evidence so far as the averments in the answer regarding the sale for taxes to the state and the sale and deed to the defendant by the state, in pursuance of the tax sale, are concerned. But as the deed from the state to the defendant is void, as matter of law, for the reason above stated, the inconsistency does not call for a reversal of the judgment or order.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[4] The defendant makes the objection that the court below should have required the plaintiff first to repay, or pay into court for the defendant, the sum paid by him upon the tax sale, with interest from the date of payment, or should have declared the same a lien on the land in favor of the defendant. The amount paid was $5.11, which, with interest from May 5, 1905, to the time of the aforesaid tender, amounts to $6.15. The question is whether the rule that he who seeks equity must do equity applies to suits by the landowner in equity to set aside a tax sale or tax deed, or to suits under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure in which a judgment for plaintiff, will, in effect, annul or cancel such sale or deed. The same question is fully considered and decided in Holland v. Hotchkiss and Canty (S. F. No. 5,710) 123 Pac. 258, this day decided. We there decide that the rule applies to actions of this character by the owner and that repayment of the taxes, penalties, and costs paid and interest thereon to the purchaser or his successor must be offered or required before, or as a condition of, the judgment in favor of the owner. Upon the authority of that case, we hold that the court erred in failing to require this repayment or to make adequate provision for it in the judgment.

[5] It is plain that this relief was not the main object of the appeal, or more than a rather unimportant incident of it. The plaintiff in her brief consents to a modification of the judgment by the Supreme Court, in the event that it should reach the conclusion that repayment should have been awarded to the defendant. Technically, upon the record, a new trial might be necessary, for, although the tender is admitted, the payment is denied, and the court below by its general method of drawing the findings has declared that the payment was not made. This is directly contrary to the evidence and to the admissions of the plaintiff. Doubtless it was an inadvertence. The sum involved is too small to justify a new trial, or the imposition of costs upon the respondent, or any further litigation between the parties concerning it, if it can be avoided. In these circumstances we think the better way to dispose of the case is to accept the offer of plaintiff to a modification of the judgment. As the defendant neither in the court below nor at any time offered to accept the money tendered, he should not have costs of appeal.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment of the court below be modified by adding thereto the following: "This judgment is made upon the express condition, anything hereinbefore said to the contrary notwithstanding, that the plaintiff shall pay to the defendant, or deposit in court to be paid to defendant on demand, the sum of $6.15, the same to be in satisfaction of all claim of the defendant under and by virtue of the sum paid by him at the sale of said land to him by the tax collector of Fresno county for the state of California, and in satisfaction of the taxes for which said land was sold to the state by said tax collector on July 3, 1897, and until such payment is made this judgment shall have no force in favor of said plaintiff." And, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed, without costs against the respondent.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

162 Cal. 471

In re BALDWIN'S ESTATE. (L. A. 2,925.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1912. Rehearing Denied April 29, 1912.)

1. TRIAL (§ 168*)—DIRECTION OF VERDICT—WHEN AUTHORIZED.

A directed verdict is proper when, on the whole evidence, the court would be compelled to set a contrary verdict aside as unsupported by evidence, and to warrant a directed verdict it is not necessary that there should be an absence of conflict in the evidence; but if there is a conflict it may not be a substantial one.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 341, 376-380; Dec. Dig. § 168.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 927*)—JUDGMENT ON DIRECTED VERDICT—REVIEW OF EVIDENCE.

A party appealing from an adverse judgment on a directed verdict is entitled to every reasonable inference which can be drawn from the substantial evidence in his favor; but evidence, to be substantial, must be credible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2912, 2917, 3748, 4024; Dec. Dig. § 927.*]

3. MARRIAGE (§ 22*)—COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

The common-law rule that, where a man and woman lived together as husband and wife and held themselves out as husband and wife, and by their conduct to each other and to the world established an unquestioned repute that they were married, a presumption that they were married arose, obtained in California before the Codes, and is recognized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 30, declaring that it is a disputable presumption that a man and woman deporting themselves as husband and wife have entered into a lawful contract of marriage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. § 16; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

4. MARRIAGE (§ 40*)—COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE—PRESUMPTIONS—EVIDENCE.

The presumption of marriage arising at common law and recognized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 30, from proof of repute and cohabitation, is disputable; and where it conflicts with a higher presumption, such as the presumption of innocence, where a charge of bigamy is based on a marriage resting on cohabitation and repute, it falls.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. §§ 58-69, 79; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

5. MARRIAGE (§ 22*)—COMMON LAW—REPUTE—COHABITATION.

The repute and cohabitation necessary at common law to create a presumption of marriage must be uniform and general, and cannot be established, except by open and undoubted acts of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. § 16; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

6. MARRIAGE (§ 22*)—MUTUAL AGREEMENT—STATUTES.

Civ. Code, § 55, declaring that marriage is a personal relation arising out of a civil contract, but consent alone will not constitute a marriage, and it must be followed by a mutual admission of marital rights, does not modify the requirements of the common-law rule that the repute and cohabitation necessary to create a presumption of marriage must be uniform, general, and open, and there must be evidence that the parties assumed the relation of husband and wife, treating each other as married, and so conducting themselves as to have full repute among their friends and associates to be married.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. § 16; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4390-4398; vol. 8, p. 7717.]

7. MARRIAGE (§ 50*)—MUTUAL AGREEMENT—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held not to establish a marriage by mutual agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. §§ 79-89; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Elias J. Baldwin, deceased. From a decree denying the petition of Beatrice Anita Baldwin, otherwise known as Beatrice Anita Turnbull, for partial distribution, she appeals. Affirmed.

Isadore B. Dockweiler and Hutton & Wilhams (Walter B. Grant and Walter L. McCorkle, of counsel), for appellant. Bradner W. Lee, Gavin McNab, Henry T. Gage, W. I. Foley, Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher, Garrett W. McEnerney, and Hull McClaughry (James L. Robison and Walter Rothchild, of counsel), for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Elias J. Baldwin died, leaving a vast estate, which is in process of administration in the probate court of the county of Los Angeles. Beatrice Anita Baldwin, otherwise known as Beatrice Anita Turnbull, appeared by her guardian (she at that time being a minor, though she has since attained her majority) and petitioned for partial distribution of the estate to her as a pretermitted child of deceased. Civ. Code, § 1307. A jury was impaneled to try the issues presented by this petition and the opposition thereto filed by the admitted heirs at law, and, after the taking of voluminous testimony, the trial judge withdrew the cause from the consideration of the jury, and directed the jury to return a verdict for the contestants, stating the reason therefor to be that, "as matter of law, the evidence in this case falls far short of the requirements necessary to constitute a marriage."

[1] The conditions under which the course pursued by the court in this instance is held to be proper are defined by a series of uniform decisions of this court, to which it will be sufficient to make reference. The doctrine of scintilla of evidence is rejected, as it is by the courts of the United States. Comrs of Marion County v. Clark, 94 U. S. 278, 24 L. Ed. 59. A directed verdict is proper, unless there be substantial evidence tending to prove in favor of plaintiff all the controverted facts necessary to establish his case. In other words, a directed verdict is proper whenever, upon the whole evidence, the judge would be compelled to set a contrary verdict aside as unsupported by the evidence. To warrant a court in directing a verdict, it is not necessary that there should be an absence of conflict in the evidence; but, if there be a conflict, it must not be a substantial one. To the support of these incontrovertible declarations of the law, we need do no more than cite Lacey v. Porter, 103 Cal. 597, 37 Pac. 635; Davis v. Cal. St. R. R. Co., 105 Cal. 131, 38 Pac. 647; O'Connor v. Witherby, 111 Cal. 523, 44 Pac. 227; Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. Thompson, 117 Cal. 594, 49 Pac. 714; White v. Warren, 120 Cal. 322, 49 Pac. 129, 52 Pac. 723; Estate of Morey, 147 Cal. 495, 82 Pac. 57; Estate of Chevallier, 159 Cal. 161, 113 Pac. 130.

Appellant's position and contention are the following: Her mother was married to Elias J. Baldwin. The marriage was null in law, illegal and void, by reason of the fact that at the time it was contracted or entered into Elias J. Baldwin was the husband of a living wife, to whom he had been joined by a solemnized marriage (Civ. Code, § 61). As the issue of this marriage null in law, she is the legitimate offspring of Elias J. Baldwin under the rule of section 1387, Civil Code, which declares that "the issue of all marriages null in law, or dissolved by divorce, are legitimate." She is a pretermitted child of Baldwin, entitled to share in his estate, notwithstanding the disposition of that estate made by his will. Civ. Code, § 1307. Essential to the consideration of the evidence which must be had is section 55 of the Civil Code, which, at the time of the asserted marriage between Elias J. Baldwin and appellant's mother, Lillian A. Ashley, read as follows: "Marriage is a personal relation arising out of a civil contract to which the consent of parties capable of making it is necessary. Consent alone will not constitute marriage. It must be followed by a solemnization or by a mutual assumption of marital rights, duties or obligations." Admittedly the asserted marriage between Baldwin and the mother of this appellant was not solemnized. It is said to have been a marriage entered into by mutual consent under a written contract, which consent was followed by a mutual assumption of marital rights, duties, and obligations.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Index.

At the threshold, respondents deny the applicability of this section to the admitted facts in the case. They insist, and challenge a contrary declaration, that there can be and could have been no marriage of any kind when one of the parties to it was incapable of contracting, by virtue of a legal, existing marriage; that in terms section 55 limits the application of its language to "parties capable of making the civil contract" of marriage, and that, under the conceded facts, no marriage ever known to common or statute law could arise; that, when section 61 of the Civil Code declares that a subsequent marriage, contracted under such circumstances, is "illegal and void from the beginning," the word "marriage," as there used, is but a loose, though convenient, way of expressing the true meaning, which is that of a "subsequent attempted marriage." To this appellant makes answer that section 1387, Civil Code, in declaring that the issue of all marriages null in law are legitimate, is designed to meet precisely such a case as the one at bar, and so to relieve the laws of this state from the workings of the unjust rule which would visit the sins of the parents upon the innocent children. And it is said that this view finds support in Graham v. Bennett, 2 Cal. 503; Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 25, 26, 16 Pac. 345; Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 582, 31 Pac. 915, 19 L. R. A. 40; Estate of Gird, 157 Cal. 540, 108 Pac. 499, 137 Am. St. Rep. 131. These considerations, however, may be passed over without determination, and the case considered from the point of view most favorable to appellant; that is to say, the point of view which would hold the provisions of section 1387 of the Civil Code to be applicable to the conditions here admittedly existing. This may be done, we say, without impairment of the rights of any of the litigating parties, because, if there was no marriage in fact between E. J. Baldwin and Lillian A. Ashley, the determination that section 1387 of the Civil Code is applicable to such a marriage as is here asserted would neither injure respondents nor benefit appellant.

We are still further influenced to refrain from this consideration by reason of the fact that, to stop what was becoming a public scandal and a reproach to the state, the Legislature, 17 years ago, amended section 55 to read: "Consent alone will not constitute a marriage; it must be followed by a solemnization authorized by this Code." Wherefore we indulge the not unreasonable hope that this case will prove the last of a most malodorous brood.

[2] And thus we are brought to a consideration of the evidence. This consideration will be had with due regard to the rules of law governing conflicts in evidence, and to the rights of the appellant to receive every reasonable inference which can be drawn from substantial evidence in her favor. But it will also be had with due recognition of the fact that evidence, to be substantial, must be humanly credible.

From the nature of the case, the evidence on behalf of appellant could not be and was not her own. Substantially all of the evidence was that of her mother. That evidence, as the attorneys for appellant view it, establishes the following, which this court is told it is "bound to take as true": Lillian A. Ashley (now by marriage Lillian A. Turnbull) is the mother of appellant. She was born in 1868 in Vermont. Her father owned a small stock farm. He died when she was about 15 years old. She continued to live on the farm with her mother for a few years. She was at all times interested in race horses, and her father received newspapers and magazines devoted to turf matters. She went to Boston to be treated for an injury to her spine, leaving her mother still upon the farm. Her mother died in 1890; the daughter being at that time still in Boston. She was educated, and had taught school in Vermont, and was keenly desirous of further education. She was of puritanical training and temperament. She began an innocent correspondence with the noted millionaire and breeder of race horses, Elias J. Baldwin, in an effort to secure a memento from him of one or another of his famous animals. While in Boston, she was for a time supported, wholly or in part, by a Mr. Balch, a married man and a friend of her deceased father, who paid over to her moneys which he owed for horses which he had purchased from either her father or mother. Mr. Balch's death cut short this source of income, and she became dependent for her living upon her own exertions. She entered the family of a Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, people of refinement, living at Winchester, near Boston, who had lost their only child, a daughter, by death, and who took her in as a companion. As a result of the innocent, though desultory correspondence which she had conducted with Baldwin, whom she had never seen, Baldwin called at the Thompsons' in 1891, was received by Mrs. Thompson and Miss Ashley, and spent a few hours in conversation with them. He invited them both to come to California and visit him, without expense to them, at one or another of his hotels. Miss Ashley was then about 23 years of age, but was ardently desirous of pursuing her studies and acquiring a higher education. Her ambition was to enter Wellesley College. All this was discussed in the conversation at the Thompson home, and Mr. Baldwin spoke of his willingness to aid her in procuring an education, and, indeed, of his willingness to adopt her as his daughter. Baldwin went away, and Miss Ashley continued to write to him often, without receiving letters in response. She spoke in these letters of his "promise to educate her" and of his "promise to adopt her." These letters are the outpourings of an innocent girl's mind. She had been her father's pet, and she desired in the same way, but only in the same way, to become the petted child of Baldwin. No pure-minded person can read these letters which are in evidence and find in them any indicia of immorality or improper motives.

She came to California with a Raymond excursion party and reached Los Angeles. This was on February 20, 1893. She had previously written to Baldwin that she was coming, asking him to meet her at Colton. He did not meet her, but subsequently, while she was in Los Angeles, sent her $25 to make the trip to San Francisco, where he was. She arrived in San Francisco upon the evening of March 2d. She was met by Baldwin, and by him conducted to his hotel, where she was registered by him as "Mrs. Ashton, Boston." She was assigned to rooms above the suite of apartments occupied by Baldwin himself. Baldwin showed her about the hotel and returned with her to her rooms. There they talked about sundry matters, but in particular, about Baldwin's desire that she should permit him to adopt her, and that she should remain in California as his daughter. She knew, or at least believed, that Baldwin was a married man, and knew, or at least believed, that he was the father of grown daughters. Notwithstanding that her letters to Baldwin were filled with expressions of her desire that he should adopt her, she declined his proposal, giving as a reason that she had a beautiful home in the East, and her intention was to return to it to finish her education. (She was at that time over 24 years of age, and had no home in the East, beautiful or otherwise, as she had ceased some time previously to be a member of the Thompson household, and had been living at a hotel.) Baldwin kissed her affectionately that evening upon parting. They spent a part of the next day, March 3d, in driving about the city. Baldwin dined with her that evening in her room, after which they went together to the theater. After the theater, they went to Baldwin's suite of rooms—rooms where Baldwin told her that he lived and made his home. They had champagne at supper, of which they drank moderately. Baldwin was affectionate and kissed her. She having refused to become his adopted daughter, Baldwin asked her finally how she would like to marry an old fellow like him. (He was then 65 years old.) He told her that he was all alone in the world. She had believed up to that moment that he was a married man, and so declared, saying to him, "Why, Mr. Baldwin, I supposed you were married." He informed her that he was legally divorced, and had no one to love him or care for him. He urged an immediate marriage. She demurred. She insisted upon a marriage before a minister or a judicial officer. He "argued" that a marriage paper, made out and signed by the two of them, would be equally binding and just as good. So they "were married there in that way." Baldwin took some hotel stationery, dated it March 3, 1893, and wrote on it: "I, Elias Jackson Baldwin, do take Lillian Alma Ashley to be my lawful wedded wife," and he signed it. And he wrote, "I, Lillian Alma Ashley, do take Elias Jackson Baldwin to be my lawful wedded husband," and he told me to sign it, and I signed it. * * * Then he folded the paper and gave it to me, and he said that was just as good a marriage certificate as any minister could give me; that I was his wife." Miss Ashley had come to San Francisco with a suit case. This suit case, which had contained her personal effects, was in her room on the floor above. For this reason, the bridal night was spent there; Baldwin going to her rooms, carrying his nightrobe. Here the narrative pauses, while we turn to the consideration of the evidence offered by respondents.

Again we repeat that this presentation is in full recognition of the rule governing conflicts of evidence. It is not its purpose to weigh the conflict, where such conflict exists. It is proper, however, to say, that in some instances the testimony of Mrs. Turnbull must be rejected as incredible. In all instances, it is necessary that the evidence be presented to throw light upon the second chapter to which we will shortly come, the chapter that deals with the asserted married relations of these two people; for we are called upon to consider a marriage claimed by appellant to have been effectuated without solemnization, but by a consent, followed by the mutual assumption of marital rights, duties, and obligations. The existence of this marriage is denied; the assumption of the marital rights, duties, and obligations is likewise denied. Wherefore the characters of the two parties to the asserted marriage become an important consideration in determining the real nature of the relationship which existed between them. For, while as has been said, it is contended upon the part of appellant that the evidence establishes that Lillian A. Ashley was a pure, innocent, confiding girl, who yielded to the embraces of Baldwin solely in the belief that she was legally his wife, the contention of respondents in this regard is that she was a designing and mercenary wanton, who had been the mistress of other men, one of whom, at least, she had blackmailed, and that she voluntarily entered into a fugitive and meretricious relationship with Baldwin, thinking nothing of matrimony, but solely of money.

Taking up the life of Miss Ashley in 1889, respondents introduced evidence to show, and contend that they have overwhelmingly shown, the following facts: Miss Ashley lived in Boston in 1889 as the mistress of Wesley P. Balch, a horseman. He died by suicide in November, 1890. Being thus thrown upon her resources, she renewed her letter writing to Baldwin, which she had allowed to flag or lapse. Thus, in March, 1891, she writes to Baldwin: "But when he [Balch] died, and by his own dear hand too, I shall never forget the deep sorrow it has cast over my life. Left alone in a great city, homeless and friendless, no money, no income now. * * * I have led such a carefree dependent loving life, that to find myself dependent upon my own resources and alone, it nearly kills me. * * * It is impossible for me to exist very long unless I have some one to love and who in turn cares very tenderly for me. * * * But somehow I feel that I wish we might mutually agree and you could love and care for me as he did (but he held my property). You would be obliged to care for me with your own property or means, for I have none now. However, I would always be an obedient girl. I should mind you and love you so truly if you would adopt me in this manner as he did. * * * Will you adopt me in this way and care for me with your own money, pay all my bills and love me very fondly in a nice manner? If so, I know I shall be very fond of such a benefactor."

In 1889 she wrote a letter, hereinafter quoted, to Lewis Leach, of the Fair Grounds Association at Fresno, Cal., a man whom, also, she had never met—a respectable elderly man of about 65 years of age. She admits having written this letter and similar letters to other horsemen throughout the United States, whose acquaintance even she had never made. She wrote a similar letter to Baldwin.

"28 Union Park, Boston, Mass. July 10, 1889. Mr. Lewis Leach, My dear Sir. I was born and raised in Vermont, love horses almost to distraction, am 20 years old, will be 21 the 11th of next Nov. am alone in the World, my own mistress and have got to earn my living as am not rich by any means. Saw your name in the Horseman in connection with the great International Running Race, as I want to have a horse loving friend in Cal. to secure me a nice position, also further my interests in various ways so that I can go there in the near future, I have written to you, My Eastern 'Prince,' is Wesley P. Balch, but as I am going to Cal. to live for a while, shall need a 'Count' on the Pacific coast. Now if you are a whole souled Youth with the 'Ducats' good figure, and fair looking face, write me & enclose Photo, and on receipt of same, will tell you more about Yours truly, Miss L. A. Ashley—or 'The Blonde.'"

To Baldwin, after the death of Balch, she wrote numerous letters, from which the following are extracts: "You see I really have not lived in Boston since Mr. Balch died, am 16 miles out with a Widow lady & her dog.

We don't agree very well, and I hate to be dependent upon her, & I wish I could go back in Town and take my pretty apartments in 9 Rutland Sq. again, and because I cannot go (for I have not the ducats), I am unhappy. For I had an income from my property when Mr. B. was alive. I want to tell you all my 'woes' and perhaps you might make me very happy. I guess I should hug you if you was here, and did make me happy. But as long as you are not I can say so, eh. Please write on receipt of this. * * * You said in one of your letters that would try to be my friend and see that I do not want for anything. Please then let me go back to my pretty rooms and girlish carefree life again, for I am so weary of this place. Will you? I will send you a nice letter every week and then when you do come east next summer, you will find a happy Girl to greet you in Boston, Mass. Will you adopt me this way, and care for me with your own money, pay all my bills and Love me very fondly in a nice manner, if so I know I shall be very fond of such a Benefactor. * * * However, by your letters I really believe you to be a Gentleman of Honor, and so nice that I can't help caring for you. The most stubborn wills can be won by love. * * * I have thought that if I were to go back to Town to my Rooms it might not be wise unless I could find some way of accounting for my means of Support for People know I lost my Property by Mr. Balch's death, at least they know it in Rutland Sq. I might find rooms in some other nice Christian family or Perhaps board to some Hotel, or else say I had unearthed a rich Uncle in California, who was going to adopt me when He came East this summer. I will leave you to suggest, and I will always obey you. * * * I have not been myself at all, because am cared for as a little child, not capable of taking care of myself, and no wonder I drank Chloral last April and tried to drown myself. You would do the same or more, if you were only a girl surrounded by a lot of old 'gone by' Society Ladies, who were lecturing you to death by their tongues if they ever saw a Gentleman speak to you, now a spirited girl like I, objects to being always kept down in this way and never have a Gentleman friend, so this time I just run away, and my sole object was to run right to your arms and ask peace and Protection. But my money gave out, and I could not go on without the Ducats, so have waited for you so patiently as my only Hope from being taken back to Boston. * * * Oh if only you could telegraph me the money to come to you. I would be in San Francisco as fast as steam could fetch me. * * * I ran away from Boston Aug. 5th to Hornellsville, N. Y., left there two days later for Richmond, Va., stopped over Sunday in Harrisburg, Pa., staid at the Commonwealth Hotel, told Mr. Russ, the Prop'r that had run away from home, and was going to Richmond, Va., that my funds had given out, etc., but would like to stop over Sunday as I do not believe in travelling on the Sabbath if one can possibly avoid it. I suppose my laughing girlish way won him over, and he asked me if I was running away to meet my Lover to get married. I only laughed, and thought my, if he only knew how the old ladies that support me keep me from having one single lover, he would not be guilty of asking such a question as that. When I came away I done a very naughty thing I realize now, for I told him if I did not send him the money, $450 in three weeks, to charge my Expenses to you. Now am I not a fraud? But my dear old Pet, you see I thought I should have a chance to get to 'Frisco' before then, and with a 'Hug and Kiss' fix it all right with you. But such is life so do not blame me too hard, will you? I enclose the bill to you now. Please write me soon and direct to my own name, No. 9 Rutland Sq. Boston. Send me the ticket or money and I will surely come to you. Lovingly Yours, Lillian A. Ashley."

All this and much more was before she had ever seen Baldwin. Subsequent to his visit at the home of the Thompsons, she wrote as follows: "Hope all your business will go to suit you, and you wont forget me and my Wants again. I shall think of you all the time now and dream of you too I am afraid. I am going in Town to meet a young lady and go shopping in the morning, and Mr. and Mrs. T. will go up to the mountains for three days. Now don't you wish you had stayed. Write soon. With a Hug and Kiss, Lillie. Please write something of your former intentions of adopting me if I pleased you and your wife, etc., make it read nice and write me all the impressions you had of 'Yours truly.' Lovingly Yours, L. A. A."

There are many more similar outpourings of this puritanically innocent mind; but these will suffice as exemplars, and we turn to another of her life phases. In May, 1892, she met Colonel Pope, and as a result of this meeting, or of this and subsequent meetings, she received from him through his attorney, who was a witness in the case, large sums of money. Her explanation is that Pope lured her to a bedroom, under pretense of taking her to a respectable private lunchroom, and attempted a rape upon her; that he failed utterly in his wicked design and deeply repented of it; that he was a very philanthropic man, and, actuated by the combined motives of philanthropy and remorse, he forced money from time to time upon her—money which she was reluctant to receive, and which at times she refused to receive. Upon the other hand, her own letters, over the authenticity of which there cannot be the slightest doubt, disclose and declare with nauseating circumstantiality of detail that she was the mistress of Pope, had willingly submitted to his embraces, and thereafter had instituted a system of blackmail, so that Pope called to his aid his attorney, who, with a detective, effected an arrangement with Miss Ashley, whereby she was to be paid $200 per month, if she would not annoy Pope by writing to him (Pope being a married man with a family of children), and would keep away from Boston. In receipt of an income from this source, she left the Thompson home and established herself in a hotel in Boston, explaining to the Thompsons that a millionaire "up the Hudson" had become enamored of her and engaged to her, and was giving her money on condition that she travel. It is to W. A. Redding, the attorney for Pope, that she expressed her desire to go to California; and it was he that gladly gave her the money. She is thus living upon the fruits of Pope's unsolicited bounty, or upon the blackmail which she wrung from him, when she entered into her marriage contract with Baldwin. And here we may anticipate the future narrative to make a statement which will, of course, occasion not the slightest surprise. The written contract was never produced. The explanation of its nonproduction, however, is surprising. Baldwin, as we have seen, gave it to her, but a day or two after asked her to give it to him, which she did, he saying that "girls were so careless about such things," and, of course, she never saw it thereafter. And to finish this outline, it should be said that Baldwin was 65 years of age, with daughters grown up and married, and one of them a grandmother, with his home in San Francisco, where lived his wife, married by a church ceremony, and known to the world to be his wife. Baldwin's own reputation as a libertine, if not national, was certainly more than local; and there is evidence that Miss Ashley knew this, though as Mrs. Turnbull she unhesitatingly denies this fact, as, it may be said, she denies nearly every other fact or circumstance which may be thought to weigh against her.

The story of the assumption of marital rights, duties, and obligations following the marriage contract, entered into at midnight of March 3d, next follows. The two slept in the rooms assigned to Miss Ashley as "Mrs. Ashton," not even in the apartments of Baldwin, which he had declared to be his "home," had breakfast in the woman's room next morning, and later in the day went to a gallery, where she was photographed. That night he again slept with her in her room, and on the 5th, 6th, or 7th of March, the bride being unable to name the date with more particularity, he left her and went to Bakersfield alone. During this period, but one person is declared to have seen them together in her room, and that person an unknown negro waiter, who served their breakfast. She was still registered as "Mrs. Ashton." Her explanation of this is that the secrecy was maintained at Baldwin's request. On March 8th she went alone to Los Angeles, and herself registered at the Westminster Hotel as "Miss L. A. Ashley, Boston, Mass." Two days later Baldwin joined her at the hotel. They lunched together in the public dining room, and took a train for San Diego. They arrived at San Diego on March 10th, and Baldwin there did the registering. The registration was "E. J. Baldwin and Daut." They were assigned adjoining rooms, whether connecting or not she did not remember; but they slept together at night. Three days were spent in driving about the city. The only person whom she recalls having met at the hotel was Mr. Babcock, the proprietor. She says that Mr. Baldwin introduced Mr. Babcock to her as Mrs. Baldwin, notwithstanding the fact that the register showed them as father and daughter. And once more, anticipating for a moment, it may be said that Mr. Babcock testifies that he was introduced to her by Baldwin as his daughter; and that in a seduction suit which Miss Ashley subsequently brought against Baldwin she caused the deposition of Mr. Babcock to be taken, and it was taken for the express purpose of showing that Baldwin had so introduced her as his daughter, and that the register showed this precise fact. Leaving San Diego upon March 12th, and traveling together to Los Angeles, Baldwin left her at the depot and told her to proceed to the Oakwood Hotel at Santa Anita and there register as Miss Ashley. The Oakwood Hotel was owned by Baldwin, was near one of his home places, the great Santa Anita ranch, where lived one of his married daughters, Clara Stocker, with her husband. Miss Ashley went to the hotel and so registered. The next day she was one of a "bus party" which was driven from the hotel to the grounds and private residence of Mr. Baldwin, a mile away. She there saw Mr. Baldwin and went driving with him. During all of the time that she remained at the Oakwood Hotel, which was from March 13th until April 19th, Baldwin admittedly in the daytime was domiciled at his home upon the ranch. He was never registered at the Oakwood Hotel, where, in a single room and registered as "Miss L. A. Ashley," was his trusting, confiding, and puritanical wife. She asserts, in contrariety to the testimony of every other witness, that Baldwin came to the Oakwood Hotel at night and slept with her. She does not assert that any human being knew this, even her brother, who occupied an adjoining room. Every other witness at the trial with any knowledge of the facts, including the then lessee and manager of the hotel, swore that Baldwin never in his life spent a night in a room at the hotel. Be this as it may, and accepting Mrs. Turnbull's statement that he did so spend the nights with her there, indisputably the visits were furtive and clandestine. Upon April 19th, Baldwin having departed some days prior thereto, Miss Ashley left the Oakwood Hotel, and with her brother went to San Francisco and to the Baldwin Hotel. Here, again, she registered as Miss L. A. Ashley, or Lillian A. Ashley. She testifies that she occupied Baldwin's suite at the hotel. The evidence of the manager is that the hotel books showed an assignment to her of a room upon another floor. However this may be, she names but two persons who ever saw her in those rooms, an unnamed and undiscoverable negro servant, and George Baldwin, son-in-law of E. J. Baldwin and husband of his daughter Anita. She and Baldwin breakfasted and dined, she says, in his rooms, while she took her luncheon in the main dining room at a table where sat her brother, Anita, Baldwin's daughter, George Baldwin, her husband, Henry E. Highton, Baldwin's attorney, and Mrs. Highton, his wife. With the single exception of George Baldwin, who admittedly was fully aware that Baldwin had a wife living in a home upon California street in San Francisco, Mrs. Turnbull does not assert that during her entire stay at the hotel any one of these persons with whom she sat at the table ever knew her as other than Lillian Ashley. She thus, and under these conditions of life, remained in the hotel from April 20th until about May 17th. A few days before the last-named date, she says she overheard the name of "Mrs. Baldwin" mentioned by Anita and later by another woman. She asked Baldwin about it, and he told her he was married, and not divorced. She at once broke off all relations with him, and became ill.

Upon May 17th Baldwin left for the East. Immediately thereafter, she was told to vacate her rooms. She did so upon the 26th of May, 1893, and went East in pursuit of Baldwin. She found him upon the St. Louis race track and obtained from him $40. With this she went to Boston to see Colonel Pope. She was turned over to James R. Wood, a detective in his employ. He arranged with her that if she would go back to California and live there for a year, without annoying Pope, he would within a year buy her a home in Los Angeles for $2,000 in return for a full release to Pope from all her claims and demands. She gave the release and received the home. She was with child, which was born December 27, 1893, and the paternity of this child was charged upon Baldwin. Subsequently she brought a suit for seduction against him, in which a vast amount of documentary evidence, consisting of her letters to Baldwin and Wood and W. A. Redding, Pope's attorney, and to others, were introduced. She failed in this action. The judge who tried that case, and the courtroom clerk, testified to the genuineness of these letters, and to their having been introduced in evidence without demur or question of their genuineness upon her part, though at the present trial, whenever such a document appears to be damaging, she unhesitatingly pronounces it a forgery. Many of these letters, of course, bear the file marks of the court upon the former trial.

To fill in this outline which has been given of her testimony as to the assumption of marital rights, duties, and obligations, nothing need be added to the period from the 3d of March to the 12th of March, when she reached the Oakwood Hotel. The general course of life of herself and Baldwin there has been described according to her own testimony. The only persons whom she named as having any knowledge of the asserted marital relations while she was at the Oakwood Hotel were her brother, whose deposition taken in the seduction case, which deposition in this case he declares to be the truth, entirely negatives her assertion, a Mr. Risner, who is dead, and a Mr. Stevens, who is dead, and Mr. and Mrs. Fox, tourists from "somewhere in Wisconsin," who could not be located, a Mr. Lopez, who denied that he had ever been introduced to her at all, or that he had even known her as Mrs. Baldwin, two women, neither friends nor associates of Baldwin, and finally Mrs. Stocker, Baldwin's married daughter, herself a grandmother. Upon the trial of this action, Mrs. Turnbull's testimony was given at intervals and consumed much time in the taking. Asked concerning her meeting with Mrs. Stocker at the Oakwood Hotel, and whether Mrs. Stocker spoke to her "as she would to a mother," Mrs. Turnbull replied that she did not, adding, "I think she very likely thought I was Miss Ashley." Mrs. Stocker, of course, knew of the existence of the legally and ceremoniously wedded Mrs. Baldwin; but a few days later Mrs. Turnbull testified that Baldwin had, in fact, introduced her to Mrs. Stocker as his wife, and that at a dinner party given in her honor Mrs. Stocker leaned over and whispered to her, "Mother." Mrs. Stocker denies all this absolutely. This covers the matrimonial relationship at the Oakwood Hotel. At the Baldwin Hotel, during the time of her last residence there, George Baldwin, a cousin of E. J. Baldwin, and husband of his daughter, who knew the true Mrs. Baldwin intimately and had lived at her home for months, testified that Baldwin introduced Miss Ashley to him as his wife. He says: "He [E. J. Baldwin] asked me to say nothing in regard to the introduction he gave me. I says: 'How is that; haven't you got a wife?' And he says: 'Yes; but you can have as many as you want, if you know how to manage it.' I says: 'That is a new one on me; you can do that in Utah, but not in California.' He says, 'Don't say anything about it, George,' and walked away." Another witness, Stewart by name, said that he had met her with Baldwin in the corridor of the hotel, and Baldwin had introduced her as his wife. He was not sufficiently well acquainted with Baldwin to know at that time that Baldwin had a legal wife. Some other witnesses of similar character offered like testimony. The explanation lies, perhaps, in the evidence given by one of them, Wheatfield, who said he thought that Mrs. Turnbull was one of the women Baldwin had introduced to him as his wife. Wheatfield declared that Baldwin had introduced so many women to him as his wife that he had "got himself mixed up so on Mr. Baldwin's ladies that I would not stand here on oath and swear to any of them * * * as to being his wife, or not his wife. * * * He had a manner of introducing them that way."

During the period of time of this asserted matrimonial relationship, she was in receipt of and receipted for moneys from Colonel Pope in the name of Lillian Ashley. During this time, she wrote for and received $400 from Pope to make a trip to Australia; for it appears that Pope was quite willing to pay the larger price for the greater distance. It is uncontroverted that wherever and whenever she was called upon to write her name she wrote it as Lillian Ashley. In the seduction suit which she subsequently brought against Baldwin, and wherein she charged him with "soliciting and importuning her to have sexual intercourse with him, and, by means of artifice and promises, inducing her so to do," from the beginning to the end, in all of the explanations, examinations, and cross-examinations touching the false promises which led to the seduction, there is not one word of this asserted marriage. Moreover, in the letters which she wrote to Wood, Pope's detective, at a time when she thought that Wood would aid her in her prospective seduction suit against Baldwin, letters of a most extraordinarily intimate character, letters urging that Pope deny his intimacy with her, and that she would do the same for fear of the injurious effect which the truth would have upon her case against Baldwin, nowhere is there the slightest intimation, much less claim, of a marriage contract or of a marriage relationship.

[3, 4] The law governing the consideration of evidence offered to support a marriage, such as is here contended for, merits presentation. But, from the very simplicity and uniformity of that law, the presentation may be brief. At common law, the ceremony of marriage was religious, and to a valid marriage such ceremony was a prerequisite. But where a man and a woman lived together as husband and wife, under the name of husband and wife, held themselves out to the world as husband and wife, and by their conduct to each other and to the world thus established a common, uniform, and undivided repute that they were married, evidence of all this was accepted, not as establishing a marriage, but as raising a presumption that a marriage had taken place. The law was influenced to this end, because it always inclines to believe in fair dealing, rather than foul; it presumes innocence and not guilt; it prefers to recognize a relationship held out to the world as honest to be honest, rather than dishonest; and it leans to the legitimacy of children. In this state before the Codes, the common-law rule obtained; and this principle of the common law was placed in the Code, and still remains there, in the declaration that it is a disputable presumption "that a man and woman deporting themselves as husband and wife have entered into a lawful contract of marriage." Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 30. This presumption at common law, as under the Code, was disputable; and whenever it conflicted with a higher presumption, as the presumption of innocence, where a charge of bigamy was based upon a marriage resting in cohabitation and repute, it fell. Case v. Case, 17 Cal. 598; White v. White, 82 Cal. 427, 23 Pac. 276, 7 L. R. A. 799; People v. Beevers, 99 Cal. 286, 33 Pac. 844.

[5] We need not be at length to point out the requisites of conduct, deportment, demeanor, and repute necessary at the common law to supply evidence from which the presumption of marriage could arise. The subject is elaborately discussed in White v. White, 82 Cal. 427, 23 Pac. 276, 7 L. R. A. 799, and the common-law authorities cited. The opinion of Lord Westbury, in Campbell v. Campbell, L. R. I. Sc. & Div. App. 200, 211, is quoted to the following effect: "Cohabitation as husband and wife is a manifestation of the parties having consented to contract such relation inter se. It is holding forth to the world by the manner of daily life, by conduct, demeanor, and habit that the man and woman who live together have agreed to take each other in marriage, and to stand in the mutual relation of husband and wife; and when credit is given by those among whom they live, by their relatives, neighbors, and acquaintances, to these representations, and their continued conduct, then habit and repute arise and attend upon the cohabitation. The parties are holden and reputed to be husband and wife; and the law of Scotland accepts this combination of circumstances as evidence that consent to marry has been lawfully interchanged. Probably, therefore, in the correct expression of the law, it would be more proper to say that cohabitation with habit and repute is a mode of proving the fact of marriage, rather than a mode of contracting marriage." And this court declares it to be "well settled that the repute which, with cohabitation, will be proof of marriage must be uniform and general, not divided and singular. If repute lacks uniformity and is divided, then such repute cannot prove a marriage." In the later case of Quackenbush v. Swortfiguer, 136 Cal. 149, 68 Pac. 590, it is repeated: "It may be said that the law is elementary that the repute which, with cohabitation, will be proof of marriage must be uniform and general, and not divided and singular, and cannot be established, except by the open, undisguised, and undoubted acts of the parties which are visible to outsiders." So much for the governing principles of the common law.

[6] The Code section did not modify the requirements of the common law. When it declared that, to constitute a marriage, consent first had must be followed by "the mutual assumption of marital rights, duties, or obligations" it did not mean that less in the deportment, conduct, and repute of the parties was necessary than had been necessary at common law. All that the common law required was still necessary. The subject is reviewed in Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 Pac. 26, 131; and, while holding to the requirements of the common law as here set forth, it is added: "But certainly, if consent and consummation by sexual intercourse were sufficient to constitute marriage at common law, it clearly appears to have been the intention of our Legislature to change that rule and require something more. At common law, and under statutes authorizing marriage by consent, without formal ceremony, if the parties agree presently to take each other for husband and wife, and from that time live together professedly in that relation, proof of these facts is held to be sufficient to constitute marriage. Certainly nothing less than this can be held to be sufficient under the latter clause of section 55. There must be evidence sufficient to show that they assumed the relations of husband and wife, which calls for the same degree of proof, if cohabitation be depended upon, as was required at common law to establish the marriage." In Hinckley v. Ayres, 105 Cal. 357, 38 Pac. 735, the matter is thus succinctly summed up: "There is no need here of discussing the law of marriage without solemnization, or the question: What constitutes a 'mutual assumption of marital rights, duties, or obligations,' within the meaning of section 55 of the Civil Code? The law on that subject is sufficiently settled for the purposes of the case at bar in Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 Pac. 26, 131; White v. White, 82 Cal. 427, 23 Pac. 276, 7 L. R. A. 799; Kilburn v. Kilburn, 89 Cal. 46, 26 Pac. 636, 23 Am. St. Rep. 447; People v. Beevers, 99 Cal. 286, 33 Pac. 844, and other cases. There is no such assumption, unless the parties live together as husband and wife, treat each other 'in the usual way with married people,' and so conduct themselves as to have full repute among their intimate friends and associates to be husband and wife." And to the like effect may be cited In re Briswalter, 72 Cal. 107, 13 Pac. 164; Harron v. Harron, 128 Cal. 308, 60 Pac. 932; In re Jessup, 81 Cal. 408, 21 Pac. 976, 22 Pac. 742, 1028, 6 L. R. A. 594.

[7] When to what has been disclosed as the conduct and life of these parties in the brief months during which the marriage relationship must, if it existed, be established by this open and undivided repute, it is remembered that Baldwin's lawful wife was living in San Francisco, that in his wide circle of intimate friends and associates no one was presented to this supposititious wife, that she herself never represented or claimed herself to be his wife, that for him to have done so would have been to declare himself guilty of the crime of bigamy, and that in the communities where their fugacious and furtive intrigue was carried on it could not have been possible for the repute of their marriage to have even existed, much less to have become uniform, general, and undivided, because the very persons who alone could have established such repute knew of the existence of Baldwin's legal wife, and would have known that the pretensions of another were ill-founded (and repute to be repute must be believed), can it be said that any review of this evidence is either needful or desired? To declare that the holy state of matrimony is shown by this low, lecherous liaison, this clandestine commerce, compounded of concupiscence and cupidity, would be to the mind of woman as abhorrent as to the mind of man it is preposterous; and we express our accord with the declaration in the brief of attorneys for respondents that "to deny the trial court the right to direct a verdict in such a case and upon the facts here proved would be to deny it the right to retain its self-respect."

Lest it may be thought to have been overlooked through inadvertence, one other contention of appellant deserves brief consideration. It is, in effect, that the law requires only a commencement of matrimonial cohabitation of the mutual assumption of marital rights, duties, or obligations, and that once the commencement has been made the marriage is complete; that this commencement need not be public, nor need the matrimonial cohabitation continue. This is but a euphemistic way of declaring that, if a man and woman, however secretly, consent to take each other as husband and wife, and follow that consent by a single secret act of sexual intercourse, the marriage is complete. The same argument was advanced in Sharon v. Sharon, and was met and answered in the following language: "The contention of the respondent is thus expressed in her brief: 'We repeat, the first mutual act, be it of sexual commerce or the assumption of any other right, duty, or obligation of the marital relation, after the execution of the written contract of marriage, instantly establishes the relation of husband and wife.' The exigencies of her case drive her to this position. If it cannot be upheld, the conclusion reached by the court below must inevitably be wrong. Let us see to what this would lead us. It means, supposing a case, that, where a couple are associated together in the meretricious relation of man and mistress, and in the habit of meeting occasionally, solely for the purpose of gratifying their passions, while so connected they consent, no matter how informally, to marry, and thereafter continue to live precisely as before, the mere fact that sexual intercourse, under such circumstances, follows after the consent amounts to a mutual assumption of marital rights, duties, and obligations, and from that time they are husband and wife. It means, therefore, that, in some cases at least, this requirement of the statute amounts to nothing. It means that a couple may consent to marry, may live precisely as if they are unmarried and their relations meretricious; to the world they may appear to be unmarried, and their children, if they have any, appear to be bastards. If they conclude to violate their 'consent' to marriage, they may go their ways; that they were husband and wife cannot be proved, and their children are bastards indeed. We cannot so far reflect upon the lawmaking power as to hold that such was their intention."

The decree appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

(162 Cal. 455)

WILLCOX v. EDWARDS. SAME v. PAXTON. SAME v. LEWIS. (S. F. 5,313, 5,314, and 5,315.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1912.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 5*)—AMENDMENT OF CONSTITUTION—EFFECT.

The Nov. 3, 1908, amendment of Const. art. 4, § 26, forbidding sale of corporate stock on margin or to be delivered at a future day in certain cases, repealed or extinguished all provisions of the former section not re-enacted in the amended section.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2, 8; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 23*)—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS—OPERATION.

Generally a constitutional provision is not retrospective in its operation, unless clearly so intended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 23*) — RETROACTIVE OPERATION.

The amendment Nov. 3, 1908, of Const. art. 4, § 26, whereby sales of corporate stock on margin or to be delivered at a future date are unlawful only when made without intention to make actual delivery, is not retrospective in its operation, and does not validate previous contracts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

4. CONTRACTS (§ 103*)—ILLEGALITY — REPEAL OF STATUTE—EFFECT.

A contract void when made is not validated by subsequent repeal of the law which made it invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 468-476; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 23*)—STOCK—UNLAWFUL SALES OF STOCK—RIGHT TO RECOVER PAYMENT.

Const. art. 4, § 26, originally provided that all contracts to sell corporate stock on margin, or for future delivery, should be void, and that money paid thereunder might be recovered. As amended November 3, 1908, the section forbids such sales only when made without intention to deliver, and prohibits the recovery of any money paid under a void contract. Held, that the amendment repealed the right of action to recover money paid under a contract which was void under the original section, but which would have been valid if made after the amendment; the right to sue not having become vested.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

6. CORPORATIONS (§ 123*) — PLEDGES UNDER VOID CONTRACT—RIGHT TO RECOVER.

But shares pledged under a void contract, but not purchased on margin, are recoverable as not being held by the pledgee to cover a valid obligation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 481, 491, 507-512, 537, 539-546, 612, 618; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Actions by George M. Willcox, administrator of F. W. Sisson, deceased, against W. Edwards, doing business as Edwards & Co., against Charles E. Paxton, and against Frank R. Lewis. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with instructions.

Charles S. Wheeler and J. F. Bowie (Nathan Moran, of counsel), for appellant. Aitken & Aitken and Bishop, Hoefler, Cook & Harwood (Alfred J. Harwood, of counsel), for respondents.

PER CURIAM. After the decision of these cases in department a rehearing was granted for the purpose of considering further the effect of the omission from the constitutional enactment of November 3, 1908 (section 26, art. 4), of the provision whereby money paid on certain prohibited contracts might be recovered. As there is no difference of opinion regarding some of the matters discussed in the opinion of the department, written by Mr. Justice Shaw, a portion thereof is hereby adopted as follows:

"In each of the above-entitled causes a general demurrer to the amended complaint was sustained, the plaintiff refused to amend, and judgment was thereupon given for the defendant. The plaintiff in each case has appealed from such judgment. The questions of law presented are the same in each case, and the facts are so far identical that it will be necessary to give those only which are stated in the complaint against Edwards. Edwards was a broker in San Francisco. Sisson and Edwards agreed that Sisson should furnish Edwards with sums of money wherewith to buy corporate stocks, not enough, however, to pay the full price thereof, and that Edwards should buy such stocks for Sisson. Edwards agreed to advance whatever additional money was required for that purpose and to hold the stocks so bought as security for the moneys so advanced by him, with interest thereon, and for his commissions for making the purchases, all of which Sisson agreed to pay. If the stocks bought depreciated so that they were not worth the amount of such advances, interests, and commissions, Edwards was empowered to sell them to reimburse himself. Under this arrangement, Edwards had bought stocks from time to time for Sisson, had received divers sums of money for Sisson for that purpose, and had advanced sums of money for him in payment thereon, the particular amounts whereof were unknown to the plaintiff administrator, but were well known to the defendant. In November, 1907, and January, 1908, the stocks bought by Edwards had depreciated, and he threatened to sell the same to repay the advances, interest, and commissions owing to him, whereupon, to prevent the making of such sales, Sisson delivered to Edwards, in pledge as additional security for the moneys so owing to Edwards, two stock certificates, representing 200 shares of the Arizona Lumber & Timber Company. These shares were owned by Sisson, and were not a part of the stocks purchased by Edwards in pursuance of the aforesaid agreement. A few days after the pledge of this stock was made Sisson died. The plaintiff is the duly appointed administrator of his estate. Edwards threatened to sell the two certificates last mentioned to obtain repayment of the moneys so due him from Sisson, whereupon this action was begun. The complaint prays for judgment directing the delivery to plaintiff of the two last-mentioned certificates of stock and enjoining the threatened sale thereof, and that Edwards be compelled to account for the moneys furnished by Sisson to him, and that judgment be given in favor of plaintiff for the balance found due upon such accounting.

"The action was begun on June 12, 1908. It was predicated on the provisions of section 26, art. 4, of the Constitution, as it then existed, authorizing a recovery of money paid on a contract for the sale of corporate stock on margin. A demurrer to the complaint was filed, and before it was disposed of the people, on November 3, 1908, adopted an amendment of section 26, art. 4, aforesaid. Thereupon an amended complaint and a general demurrer thereto were filed, and this demurrer, as above stated, was sustained by the court below. On behalf of the respective defendants, it is claimed that the amendment of the Constitution takes away all prior rights of action to recover moneys paid on contracts for margin sales of stock, and all rights growing out of such contracts.

"Prior to the amendment of November 3,

1908, section 26 was as follows: 'The Legislature shall have no power to authorize lotteries or gift enterprises for any purpose, and shall pass laws to prohibit the sale in this state of lottery or gift enterprise tickets, or tickets in any scheme in the nature of a lottery. The Legislature shall pass laws to regulate or prohibit the buying or selling of the shares of the capital stock of corporations in any stock board, stock exchange, or stock market under the control of any association. All contracts for the sale of shares of the capital stock of any corporation or association, on margin or to be delivered at a future day, shall be void, and any money paid on such contracts may be recovered by the party paying it by suit in any court of competent jurisdiction.' The section as amended on November 3, 1908, is as follows: 'The Legislature shall have no power to authorize lotteries or gift enterprises for any purpose and shall pass laws to prohibit the sale in this state of lottery or gift enterprise tickets or tickets in any scheme in the nature of a lottery. The Legislature shall pass laws to prohibit the fictitious buying and selling of the shares of the capital stock of corporations in any stock board, stock exchange, or stock market under the control of any corporation or association. All contracts for the purchase or sale of shares of the capital stock of any corporation or association without any intention on the part of one party to deliver and of the other party to receive the shares, and contemplating merely the payment of differences between the contract and market prices on divers days, shall be void, and neither party to any such contract shall be entitled to recover any damages for failure to perform the same, or any money paid thereon, in any court of this state.' The concluding sentences of the respective sections show the changes made by the amendment which are involved in this action. The original section gives the broader description of the thing prohibited. It forbids all contracts for the sale of stock 'on margin, or to be delivered at a future day.' The new section forbids such sales only when they are made 'without any intention on the part of one party to deliver and of the other party to receive the shares, and contemplating merely the payment of differences between the contract and market price on divers days.' The contract between Sisson and Edwards, as it is alleged, was clearly a contract for the purchase and sale of stocks on margin (see Parker v. Otis, 130 Cal. 330, 62 Pac. 571, 927, 92 Am. St. Rep. 56), and as such was forbidden by the constitutional provision in force at the time it was made. But the allegations of the complaint do not show a contract which comes within the description of the thing forbidden by the amended section. The complaint does not aver that the sales were made without any intention to deliver or receive the stock, or that the parties contemplated merely the payment of differences between the buying price and the market price on a future day. Both the old and the new section declare that the forbidden contracts 'shall be void.' The contract as alleged was void under the old section, the one then in force, but it would not have been void under the new section, if it had been made after its adoption.

[1-3] "The effect of the adoption of the amendment of 1908 was to repeal or extinguish all provisions of the former section that are not re-enacted in the amended section. If it has a retroactive effect, it would validate the contract for the purchase of stocks as it is alleged in the complaint, and render it binding upon both parties. This would necessarily defeat the action to recover from Edwards the money paid thereon by Sisson, for it does not appear that Edwards is in any respect in default thereon; hence he could not be called upon to return the money paid to him thereunder and used by him in pursuance thereof, if the validity of the contract is established. The first question for determination is therefore whether or not the repeal or extinguishment of the former section had the effect of validating the contract which by it was expressly declared to be void. The general rule, applicable alike to constitutions and statutes, is that they are not to be considered retrospective in their operation, unless the intention to make them so clearly appears from their terms. Gurnee v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 90; Watt v. Wright, 66 Cal. 204, 5 Pac. 91; Oakland v. Whipple, 44 Cal. 303; Cooley on Const. Lim. 97. The amendment is therefore not retrospective in operation, for it contains nothing to that effect.

[4] "The established rule is that, if a contract is void by the law in force at the time it is made, the subsequent repeal of the law will not validate such contract. The following cases declare this rule: Hannay v. Eve, 2 Cranch, 242, 2 L. Ed. 427; Milne v. Huber, 3 McLean, 216, Fed. Cas. No. 9,617; Mays v. Williams, 27 Ala. 267; Woods v. Armstrong, 54 Ala. 150, 25 Am. Rep. 671; Pacific G. Co. v. Dawkins, 57 Ala. 115; Mitchell v. Doggett, 1 Fla. 371; Denning v. Yount, 62 Kan. 220, 61 Pac. 803, 50 L. R. A. 103; Quarles v. Evans, 7 La. Ann. 543; Springfield Bank v. Merrick, 14 Mass. 324; Hathaway v. Moran, 44 Me. 67; Robinson v. Barrows, 48 Me. 186; Bancher v. Mansel, 47 Me. 58; Webber v. Howe, 36 Mich. 155, 24 Am. Rep. 590; Ludlow v. Hardy, 38 Mich. 690; Handy v. St. Paul, etc., Co., 41 Minn. 188, 42 N. W. 872, 4 L. R. A. 466, 16 Am. St. Rep. 695; Andling v. Levy, 57 Miss. 58; Decell v. Loewenthal, 57 Miss. 334, 34 Am. Rep. 449; Bailey v. Mogg, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 62; New York, etc., Co. v. Van Horn, 57 N. Y. 477; Roby v. West, 4 N. H. 285, 17 Am. Dec. 423; Puckett v. Alexander, 102 N. C. 95, 8 S. E. 767, 3 L. R. A. 43; Hughes v. Boone, 102 N. C. 164, 9 S. E. 286; Nichols

v. Poulson, 6 Ohio, 309; Denny v. McCown, 34 Or. 47, 54 Pac. 952; Gilliland v. Phillips, 1 S. C. 155; Hunt v. Robinson, 1 Tex. 748; Sayer v. Brown, 7 Ind. T. 675, 104 S. W. 878.

"The text-writers declare the same doctrine. 9 Cyc. 576; 15 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 242; 1 Page on Cont. § 333, p. 517; Bishop on Cont. § 479; 2 Sutherland on Stats. (2d Ed.) p. 1219. Statutes changing the law relating to usury seem to constitute an exception to this rule. In Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 85, 152, 173, 229, 254; Woodruff v. Scruggs, 27 Ark. 206, 11 Am. Rep. 777, Iowa Ass'n v. Heidt, 107 Iowa, 297, 77 N. W. 1050, 43 L. R. A. 689, 70 Am. St. Rep. 197, Savings Bank v. Allen, 28 Conn. 97, Welch v. Wadsworth, 30 Conn. 149, 79 Am. Dec. 239, and Andrews v. Russell, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 474, there were retrospective statutes expressly forbidding the party to set up the defense of usury in actions upon pre-existing contracts, or, in effect, taking away the right to make such defense. In Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 148, 2 Sup. Ct. 408, 27 L. Ed. 682, Wood v. Kennedy, 19 Ind. 68, and Parmelee v. Lawrence, 48 Ill. 339, the amended statutes merely omitted and consequently repealed by implication the penal provisions of the previous usury law. The defense of usury must be made affirmatively in some recognized mode, or it is waived. 22 Ency. of Pl. & Prac. 421, 422. The usurious contract, although said by the statute to be 'void,' is held to be only voidable at the election of the payor, and money paid thereon cannot be recovered. Matthews v. Ormerd, 140 Cal. 582, 74 Pac. 136. The general rule that the repeal of a law does not validate contracts declared void thereby is recognized and admitted in all the above mentioned cases, and the usury law is said to be an exception. The decisions are based on the ground that the right to set up usury as a defense and avoid the contract to pay principal or interest is in the nature of a statutory penalty upon the lender and comes within the rule that the repeal of a penal law instantly releases the penalty imposed, and that it is not a property right, but a mere privilege pertaining only to the remedy, which the Legislature may take away. The situation of one who has agreed to pay usury is not similar to that of the decedent here. One who sets up the defense of usury to avoid his note in not seeking to recover money which he has paid, or of which he has been deprived. He is endeavoring to avoid the payment of money which he justly owes. He is given the right to do this solely for the sake of accomplishing the public purpose of preventing the making of usurious contracts, and not to reimburse him for any outlay he has made. The decedent, on the other hand, has paid money to the broker. He had, in contemplation of the law as it then stood, suffered a pecuniary loss. He was allowed to recover the loss, whereas the one who pleaded usury to avoid payment of his debt was allowed to inflict a positive injury upon the payee.

* * *

"There are a few decisions not involving usury laws which declare that the particular contracts under consideration therein, although void by the law in force when made, were rendered valid by the subsequent repeal of the law. Washburn v. Franklin, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 599; Central Bank v. Empire, etc., Co., 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 23; Hess v. Werts, 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 356; Lewis v. McElvaine, 16 Ohio, 347. The overwhelming weight of authority, as we have seen, is against these decisions. * * * The amendment to the Constitution is not made retroactive, the original section declares such contracts wholly void and not merely voidable, the vice inhered in the contract itself, and the new provision does not purport to declare such prior contracts or any contracts valid or enforceable. We are satisfied that the amendment does not validate previous contracts for the sale of stocks on margin."

[5] No doubt can be entertained on the foregoing proposition that the contract for the purchase of stocks on margin was void under the provision of the Constitution existing at the time it was made, and that it would not have been void if it had been made after the amendment in 1908 of section 26, art. 4, of the Constitution. The court, however, is convinced that the right to sue under the section as it existed when the contract was made did not survive the repeal of that part of the Constitution. To uphold that doctrine, we would be compelled to conclude that the right to sue for the recovery of money paid under a void contract for the purchase of stock was a vested right depending upon a quasi contract for the repayment of the money by the broker which arose by operation of law from the very terms of the constitutional provision as it existed when the void contract was made. Such a rule is not, we think, supported by the best reasoning nor by the weight of authority. We are here concerned with the right of action given by the section as it stood originally, but omitted from it upon its later readoption. Unless a vested right had arisen in favor of plaintiff's decedent prior to the amendment of the constitution without a saving clause, the privilege of bringing suit for the money paid on the margin contract was withdrawn by the repeal of the law granting it, and all pending litigation not prosecuted to final judgment fell for want of authority to maintain it. We have concluded that the privilege of bringing an action like this was taken away by the later enactment, and that makes it unnecessary to discuss the effect of this subsequent constitutional provision upon the status of the contract for the purchase of stock on margins. We are aware that this court has held the constitutional provision giving the right to sue under the former section 26 of article 4 to be not penal but remedial in its nature (Parker v. Otis, 130 Cal. 322, 62 Pac. 571, 927, 92 Am. St. Rep. 56), and therefore that an action brought under it is not barred by the statute of limitations applicable to actions "upon a statute for a penalty or a forfeiture"; but it does not follow that being remedial the section in question confers a right that is vested before action and final judgment thereon. Nor does the expression contained in the case just cited mean that the drastic remedy formerly given to one who deals in stocks on margin contracts is not conferred for highly punitive purposes. In that case and in others to which we shall refer the court merely held that the privilege of bringing suit was not technically a "penalty" in contemplation of the statutes of limitation. Indeed, Parker v. Otis is itself authority supporting respondents' contention that the right to sue is in the nature of a privilege extended to the investor on a margin contract not merely to protect him, but to discourage that kind of gambling. The opinion contains this language: "The Constitution treats the transactions in question as harmful in their tendency, and because harmful has sought to eradicate the evil not only by declaring the contract void, but also by giving a right of action to recover the money paid under it." In Baldwin v. Zadig, 104 Cal. 594, 38 Pac. 363, 722, this court said: "Except for the provision of the Constitution, there would be no right of recovery in the plaintiff, and we think that this right of recovery must be measured by the terms of the Constitution in which it is given." In Wilson v. Head, 184 Mass. 516, 69 N. E. 317, the problems before the court were essentially the same as those presented here. That also was a suit to recover money paid under a contract for the purchase of stocks on margin which was void in law at the time it was made. By a subsequent amendment to the law, the right of recovery was limited in such manner as to make it applicable to the facts of that case. There, as here, the contention was made that the right to recovery of money paid under the void contract had vested by virtue of the law in force when the transaction took place, and could not be defeated by the subsequent enactment, but the Supreme Court of Massachusetts held that, although the statute creating the privilege to sue was remedial and not penal, it gave no vested rights which the Legislature could not take away. The opinion contains this language: "It is necessary to consider the effect of the amendments upon cases which arose prior to the enactment of the statute of 1901 and which are included in the original statute, but not included in the amended statute. Did the statute create rights which vested before the amendments were in force so that the Legislature could not constitutionally take them away? These rights were purely statutory, to recover money paid under a kind of gambling contract under which there can be no recovery at common law. Wall v. Metropolitan Stock Exchange, 168 Mass. 282, 284, 46 N. E. 1062. As was said in Corey v. Griffin, 181 Mass. 229, 232, 63 N. E. 420, 421, the statute was 'intended to suppress a well-known species of gambling. * * * The object is not to punish the winner nor to protect the loser as such, but simply to prevent this kind of gambling by subjecting the participants to a liability which, except for some great purpose of preventing injury to the public morals, would seem to be unfair and unjustifiable.' See Crandell v. White, 164 Mass. 54 [41 N. E. 101]. Such a statute does not give vested rights which the Legislature may not take away. When the remedy provided by the statute is lost by an amendment taking it away in certain classes of cases, nothing further of benefit remains in those cases. Bartlet v. King, 12 Mass. 537 [7 Am. Dec. 99]; Nichols v. Squire, 5 Pick. 168; New London Northern Railroad v. Boston & Albany Railroad, 102 Mass. 386, 389; Louisiana v. Mayor of New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 287 [3 Sup. Ct. 211, 27 L. Ed. 936]; People v. Livingston, 6 Wend. [N. Y.] 526, 530; Van Inwagen v. Chicago, 61 Ill. 31; Bailey v. Mason, 4 Minn. [546 (Gil. 430)]." One of the cases cited in the opinion just quoted is State of Louisiana ex rel. Folsom v. Mayor and Administrators of New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 3 Sup. Ct. 211, 27 L. Ed. 936. The relator, Folsom, joined certain judgments against the city of New Orleans, given as compensation for injury to property by a mob. After these judgments became final, the power of taxation by New Orleans was so changed that no money could be raised for their payment. The relator sought to compel a levy under the former law of a tax sufficient to meet his claims. It was urged that the judgments were contracts which might not be impaired by subsequent legislation. Mr. Justice Field, delivering the opinion of the court, said, among other things: "A judgment for damages, estimated in money, is sometimes called by text writers a specialty or contract of record, because it establishes a legal obligation to pay the amount recovered; and, by a fiction of law, a promise to pay is implied where such legal obligation exists. It is on this principle that an action ex contractu will lie on a judgment. Chitty on Contracts (Perkins' Ed.) 87. But this fiction cannot convert a transaction wanting the consent of parties into one which necessarily implies it. Judgments for torts are usually the result of violent contests, and, as observed by the court below, are imposed upon the losing party by a higher authority against his will and protest. The prohibition of the federal Constitution was intended to secure the observance of good faith in the stipulation of parties against any state action. Where a transaction is not based upon any assent of parties, it cannot be said that any state is pledged with respect to it; and no case arises for the operation of the prohibition. Garrison v. City of New York, 21 Wall. 203, 22 L. Ed. 612. There is therefore nothing in the liabilities of the city by reason of which the relators recovered their judgments that precluded the state from changing the taxing power of the city, even though the taxation be so limited as to postpone the payment of the judgments." If a judgment for tort does not vest a right arising ex contractu against a municipal corporation, a fortiori, the privilege of an individual to sue, given him more to prevent gambling than to reimburse him for money paid by him on a valid contract, is not a contractual prerogative which the Legislature may not take away before it has ripened into a final judgment. In Bartlet v. King, 12 Mass. 537, 7 Am. Dec. 99, it was held that a statute of mortmain was repealed by a later law changing the whole attitude of the state to the subject-matter of the legislation. In New London Northern R. R. Co. v. Boston & Albany R. R. Co., 102 Mass. 386, it was held that a statute vesting in railroad commissioners the powers and duties of commissioners appointed by the court in accordance with an earlier statute took away the jurisdiction of the court and its commissioners over pending proceedings. The court used the following significant language in the course of the opinion: "A statute which wholly repeals an earlier one, either expressly or by implication, without any saving clause, makes it ineffectual to support any proceedings, whether not yet begun, or pending at the time of its passage, and not already prosecuted to final judgment vesting absolute rights. The books are so full of cases illustrating this principle that the only difficulty is in making a selection." In Van Inwagen v. City of Chicago the Supreme Court of Illinois was considering an action to collect a tax for an insurance business transacted in the city of Chicago. It was held that the enabling act was repealed by a later statute, and that the cause of action for the tax was not a vested one. Mr. Justice Breese, who delivered the opinion of the court, said, among other things: "We believe the rule is well settled that, as to inchoate rights, rights not carried into judgment, and so not executed, cannot be, and are not, saved, in the absence of a saving clause in the repealing statute. The doctrine is that inchoate rights, derived under a statute, are lost by its repeal, unless saved by express words in the repealing statute, and unless those rights have become so far perfected as to stand independent of the statute. * * * The effect of a repealing statute is to obliterate the prior law as completely from the records as if it had never passed, and it must be considered as a law that never existed, except for the purpose of those actions or suits, which were commenced, prosecuted and concluded while it was an existing law. Ray v. Goodwin, 4 Moore & Payne, 341; Dwarris on Statutes, 676."

The very language of section 26, art. 4, of the Constitution as it existed when plaintiff's decedent entered into the contracts in question, indicates, we think, an intention not to vest a right to the return of his money in one who entered into a forbidden arrangement with a broker for the purchase of stocks on margin. He was given the power to sue for the money, but there is no declaration or implication that he was entitled to it before it was recovered by such suit. The very terms of the section gave to him an inchoate right, and, as we have seen, such rights became vested only when reduced to final judgment. In Bailey v. Mason, 4 Minn. 546 (Gil. 430), it was held that a mechanic's lien, depending not on contract, but upon a statute alone for its existence, was an inchoate right which was destroyed by the unconditional repeal of the statute which created it. We might discuss many other cases to which our attention has been called, but will only mention a few typical ones. Kimbrow v. Colgate, 5 Blatchf. 230, Fed. Cas. No. 7,778, was a case involving the validity of a contract made in violation of a federal statute requiring agreements of a certain kind to be stamped. It was conceded that the contract, when made, was wholly void, and that any party to it was authorized to bring suit to recover back the money paid under such purported agreement for his own benefit. The right to sue was declared to be not a penalty. Nevertheless the court said that: "As the money was paid under a contract made in violation of law, there is no ground for the recovery of it back, upon principles of the common law, and, as the statute which gave the remedy has been repealed, the cause of action and the suit must, upon established principles, fall with the repeal." The rule that if the remedy for a right created solely by statute is repealed while the right is still inchoate, and not reduced to possession, the right is lost, in the absence of a saving clause in the repealing statute has been adopted in this state. In People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 159 Cal. 65, 112 Pac. 866, Mr. Justice Henshaw, delivering the opinion of the court, after a review of the leading state, federal and English authorities, said: "In the case of penalties and crimes, the repeal operates to defeat all actions pending. In case of a statute conferring civil rights or powers, the repeal operates to deprive the citizen of all such rights or powers which are at the time of the repeal inchoate, incomplete, and unperfected. In the case of statutes conferring jurisdiction, the repeal operates by causing all pending proceedings to cease and terminate at the time and in the condition which existed when the repeal became operative. In cases of judgment pending upon appeal, the rule of decision is that the proceedings abate and the judgment falls."

Our attention has been called to no authority holding that a quasi contract for the repayment of money arises out of a transaction like the one which we are considering. In Palmer v. Conly, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 376, it was said that a penalty given to a landlord against one who knowingly assisted a defaulting lessee to remove his furniture from the leased premises vested in favor of the lessor, notwithstanding the repeal of the statute providing the remedy of distress for rent. That case, however, is not at all similar to the one at bar. The reason for imposing the penalty was that the wrongdoer knowingly assisted another in violating his contract with an innocent party. The College of Physicians v. Harrison, 9 Barnard & Creswell, 524, and the Company of Cutlers in Yorkshire v. Ruslin, Skinner, 364, cited in Palmer v. Conly, supra, were both cases in which the penalties were given in favor of innocent parties against the violator of the law as satisfaction to the former for actual loss. Thompson v. Howe, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 287, to which our attention has been called, was dependent upon a statute giving to a party defrauded a right of action for a penalty against the one who had practiced the fraud upon him. We have been cited also to authorities holding that where a penalty is imposed by statute on a common carrier for omitting precautionary measures, and such omission constitutes negligence, the repeal of the law commanding the precautions, after a breach thereof, does not take away a right of action in favor of a party injured by reason of the common carrier's negligence (Grey's Executor v. Mobile T. Co., 55 Ala. 407, 28 Am. Rep. 729; Graham v. Chicago, etc., Co., 53 Wis. 473, 10 N. W. 609; Bay City, etc., Co. v. Austin, 21 Mich. 410), but such authorities are not apposite to the circumstances of this case, because the relation of common carrier and shipper or passenger is contractual and applicable existing statutes are, of course, made part of every contract between such parties.

We conclude, therefore, that the special remedy conferred by the old section 26 of article 4 of the Constitution was not one arising from contract, and was not a vested right. It arose alone upon the provision of the statute imposing it. (Baldwin v. Zadig, supra.) No quasi contract for repayment of the money arose by operation of law, because such contracts are not favored, and are only declared when "principles of natural equity" or the law itself produces the obligation. Pothier on Obligations, p. 113. Therefore, the administrator had no cause of action for the money paid to the brokers under void contracts. The demurrers were properly sustained as to these causes of action.

[6] The plaintiff also sued for the delivery of certain shares of stock which were owned by his decedent, and were pledged to the brokers to secure the payment of certain sums claimed under the margin contracts. These shares were not purchased on margin. It is contended that the right to sue for the return of the money paid and the cause of action for the pledged stock are not dependent one upon the other—that the original contract being void, stock pledged in support of it could be recovered as not being held by the pledgee to cover a valid obligation, and with this contention we agree. Respondents argue that in theory these actions were exactly like Cashman v. Root, 89 Cal. 377, 26 Pac. 883, 12 L. R. A. 511, 23 Am. St. Rep. 482, in which the property pledged as security for payments on contract for purchase of stock on margin are held recoverable under the very section we have been discussing; that, as these suits depended upon the privilege of bringing an action for payments on a certain sort of contract, the withdrawal of that privilege left the plaintiff without power of recovery in these actions whatever his right to the return of the pledged stock may be if pursued in a proper suit. But the complaint in each case sets forth all of the circumstances of the transactions between Sisson and the defendants, and prays judgment for the money and the pledged stock. The contracts were void when they were made, and, as we have held, the repeal of the constitutional right to sue for the money paid under their terms did not operate to give validity to the agreements themselves. The stock, therefore, was pledged to secure advances to be made on void contracts. None of it had been actually applied to payments on such contracts before the return of the shares was demanded by plaintiff, and such demands antedated the constitutional amendment. The stock was, therefore, held without authority of law as supposed security for void contracts and according to the complaints in these cases clearly plaintiff was entitled to its return. The demurrers to the causes of action for recovery of the pledged stock were erroneously sustained.

The judgment is reversed with instructions to the superior court to permit amendments to the complaints in accordance with the views expressed in the foregoing opinion.

SHAW, J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment of reversal. I agree with the conclusion that the contracts for the purchase of stocks on margin, being void under the constitutional provision existing at the time said contracts were made, were not made valid by the subsequent amendment in effect repealing the vitiating provision. And I agree that the stocks pledged to secure these void contracts belonged of right to the pledgor, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover them. I express no opinion upon the proposition that the money paid upon the marginal contracts cannot now be recovered back by the plaintiff.

ANGELLOTTI, J. I concur with SHAW, J.

162 Cal. 493

In re FORRESTER. (Sac. 1.920.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1912.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 10*)—APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN—COMPETENCY—BURDEN.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1751, providing that the father or mother of a minor child under the age of 14 years is entitled to appointment as guardian in preference to any other person if found competent, a father is entitled to appointment in preference to the grandmother, unless found to be incompetent; the presumption being that he is competent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 23-33; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 10*) — APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN—WHO ENTITLED.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1751, providing that the father or mother of a minor child under the age of 14 years is entitled to appointment as guardian in preference to any other person if competent, the father, if competent, is to be preferred to the grandmother, although the child's health and welfare would be promoted by granting guardianship to the grandmother.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 23-33; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

3. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 13*)—APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN—PROCEDURE.

In a contest over the appointment of a guardian for a minor child, where the court finds as a fact that the father has not maintained the child and as a conclusion of law that he is incompetent to act as guardian, a judgment granting letters to the grandmother is improper, there being no finding that the father is incompetent, and the conclusion of law being insufficient as a finding because based on the finding of his failure to maintain, which is insufficient to show incompetency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 40-52; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

4. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 10*)—APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN—WHO ENTITLED.

Although Civ. Code, § 246, subd. 4, provides that a parent forfeits his right to guardianship of a minor child if he knowingly or willfully abandons or fails to maintain it, a mere acquiescence in the voluntary act of the grandparents in supporting the child does not forfeit such right, especially in view of Civ. Code, § 208, providing that a parent is not bound to compensate the other parent or a relative for the voluntary support of a child without an agreement for compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 23-33; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Norton, Judge.

Petition by Annie I. Wollam for letters of guardianship of Elsie Anna Forrester, a minor. From a judgment granting letters to the petitioner, Coover W. Forrester, father of the minor, appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

R. W. Dodge, for appellant. H. R. McNoble and A. V. Scanlan, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The respondent, Annie I. Wollam, applied for appointment as guardian of the person of the minor above named. The petitioner was the maternal grandmother of the minor; the mother being dead. The amended petition of respondent alleged that appellant, the father of the minor, was not a fit and proper person to be appointed guardian, and was incompetent to act as such. Appellant answered, denying his incompetency, and asking that he be appointed guardian.

The court below found as facts that the minor was, and had been for 15 months prior to the commencement of the proceeding, under the care of and solely supported by respondent and her husband; and that appellant, having the ability so to do, had willfully failed and neglected to maintain said minor and to provide her with the common necessities of life. From these facts it drew the conclusion of law that the appellant is not a fit and proper person to be appointed guardian of said minor child, and is incompetent to act as such. Judgment was accordingly entered directing that letters be issued to respondent. The contestant, Coover W. Forrester, appeals from this judgment.

[1, 2] The minor was of the age of 19 months when this proceeding was instituted. Under the provisions of section 1751 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is made the duty of the court to appoint the father or mother of a minor child under the age of 14 years, if such parent is "found by the court competent to discharge the duties of guardianship." Inasmuch as the presumption of law is in favor of competency, "the section is to be construed as if it read that the father or mother is to be appointed if not found by the court incompetent." In re Campbell, 130 Cal. 380, 62 Pac. 613. Accordingly, where the father is competent, he is entitled to letters of guardianship in preference to the grandmother, even though the court may find that the child's health and welfare would be promoted by granting guardianship to the grandmother. Guardianship of Salter, 142 Cal. 412, 76 Pac. 51. In a case like this the primary subject of inquiry is, then, the competency of the parent applying to act as guardian. If found competent, he or she must be appointed as against a more distant relative or a stranger. To this rule there appears to be no exception, except that declared by subdivision 4 of section 246 of the Civil Code. Under that section, a parent forfeits the right of guardianship if he "knowingly or willfully abandons, or having the ability so to do, fails to maintain his minor child under the age of fourteen years. * * *"

[3] In the case at bar, the court found that the appellant had wilfully failed to maintain the child, though able to do so. It did not find as a fact that he was not competent to act as guardian. His incompetency was declared to follow as a conclusion of law from the facts found. A finding may, to be sure, be regarded as one of fact, even though mistakenly placed among the conclusions of law. But this cannot be done where it appears that the alleged finding was a conclusion drawn by the court from the facts previously found, and such facts do not, as matter of law, support it. People v. Reed, 81 Cal. 77, 22 Pac. 474, 15 Am. St. Rep. 22; Geer v. Sibley, 83 Cal. 4, 23 Pac. 220; Sav. & L. Soc. v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 540, 39 Pac. 922; Niles v. City of L. A., 125 Cal. 572, 58 Pac. 190; People v. McCue, 150 Cal. 195, 88 Pac. 899. Such is the situation here. The only finding of fact affecting the father's right to letters is that he has willfully failed to maintain his child. The failure to provide may, no doubt, be shown as one of the items of evidence bearing upon the question of competency. But it is not the same thing as incompetency, nor does it in and of itself require a conclusion that the parent is incompetent. The past failure of a parent to provide for his child may well coexist with a present ability to fully discharge all the duties of guardianship. The judgment appealed from cannot, therefore, be sustained on the ground of the appellant's incompetency.

[4] This would, however, be immaterial if the finding that the appellant had willfully failed to support his child were supported by the evidence. As has been said, such failure forfeits the parent's claim of guardianship. But we think the testimony introduced was not sufficient to justify a finding of such forfeiture. The parent's right to the custody and control of his child should not be taken from him except upon a clear showing of delinquency on his part.

The child was born in January, 1909, at Hanford. In May, 1909, the child's mother returned with it to the home of her parents (one of whom is the respondent) at Stockton. The appellant at this time went to Texas. In October, 1909, he came to Stockton, and lived with his wife and child in apartments. In the interval, the grandparents had supported the child, the appellant furnishing only a small amount of money. After three or four weeks, the wife again went to the home of her parents, taking her child with her. In April, 1910, she died. During all of this period, from October to November, 1909, to April, 1910, and until the commencement of the proceedings, in June, 1910, the child was entirely supported by its grandparents; the appellant furnishing nothing for its support. The appellant himself was in poor health, but the testimony was such as to justify the conclusion that he had the ability to earn enough to provide for the child. But the testimony of all parties agreed to the point that the grandparents had voluntarily supported the child, and that neither of them had ever asked the father to contribute. It was also shown (though this would perhaps be important only if there were a claim that the appellant had abandoned the child) that he had from time to time visited the child at the home of its grandparents, and had been deterred from further visits by warnings not to enter the house.

Section 208 of the Civil Code provides that "a parent is not bound to compensate the other parent, or a relative, for the voluntary support of his child, without an agreement for compensation. * * *" In view of this provision, we think the severe penalty of forfeiture of parental rights should not be visited upon a father who has merely permitted other relatives to voluntarily support his child, where the child is properly cared for, and no request for contribution has been made. In such case the interests of the child have suffered no injury, and the father has violated no legal duty to the relatives who have assumed the maintenance of the child. His acquiescence in their voluntary acceptance of this burden does not constitute a willful failure to support, within the meaning of subdivision 4 of section 246 of the Civil Code. The case is certainly no stronger than it would have been if the appellant had agreed with the grandparents that they should have and rear the child. In that event, the father might have reclaimed his child at any time, even though the grandparents had expended money in its support. Matter of Galleher, 2 Cal. App. 364, 84 Pac. 352, and cases cited. For these reasons, the judgment must be reversed, and the proceeding remanded for a new trial. The appellant asks that the court below be directed to grant letters to him. This cannot be done, because the issue as to his competency has not been disposed of, and this issue must be determined by the trial court.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

162 Cal. 524

In re FLEMING'S ESTATE. (S. F. 5,869.) (Supreme Court of California. April 3, 1912. Rehearing Denied May 1, 1912.)

1. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION (§ 71*)—RELATIONSHIP—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a proceeding for the distribution of the estate of an intestate, a person claiming that the intestate's real name was different from that under which he went, and that he was in fact her brother, has the burden of establishing such fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Descent and Distribution, Cent. Dig. §§ 229-236; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

2. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION (§ 71*)—RELATIONSHIP—EVIDENCE.

In a proceeding for the distribution of the estate of an intestate, evidence held sufficient to support a finding that a claimant was in no way related to intestate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Descent and Distribution, Cent. Dig. §§ 229-236; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 151*)—PARTY AGGRIEVED.

In a proceeding for the distribution of an intestate's estate, where the court on appeal has determined that a claimant is in no way related to deceased, she is not a party aggrieved, and has no standing to attack the decree on the ground that the person to whom it awarded the property was not entitled thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 947-952; Dec. Dig. § 151.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1169*)—VALIDITY—NECESSITY OF FINDINGS.

A judgment which is not supported by the findings is not void, but merely erroneous, rendering it reversible on an appeal by a party entitled to appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4531-4539; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Proceedings for the final distribution of the estate of John J. Fleming, deceased. From an order denying a new trial, Ella Fleming Carter appeals. Affirmed.

R. B. Tappan and F. A. Berlin, for appellant. A. L. Frick, A. F. St. Sure, George W. Reed, and Darwin C. De Golia, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by Ella Fleming Carter from an order denying her motion for a new trial of a proceeding for the final distribution of the estate of deceased, who died intestate. In her petition for distribution appellant alleged that the only heirs at law of deceased were herself, an adult half-sister of deceased, and Justine Fleming, Annie Fleming, and Ella Fleming, children of a deceased half-brother of deceased, and she asked that the whole estate of deceased be distributed to her and said Justine, Annie, and Ella Fleming. There was another petition by Ella Woodbury and three others, alleging themselves to be nephews and nieces of deceased and his sole heirs at law. Still another petition was presented by respondent A. F. St. Sure, as assignee of George A. Myles and Ann Myles, who were the brother and sister of the wife of deceased, who had predeceased him, and who were alleged to have been of the nearest degree of relationship, and entitled to take all his estate. The basis of their claim was that the property was common property of deceased and his deceased spouse while such spouse was living, and that, in the absence of blood relatives, they were entitled to take the same under subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code. The three petitions were heard together. The trial court in its decree specifically found as to Ella Woodbury and her three copetitioners and as to Ella Fleming Carter, Justine Fleming, Annie Fleming, and Ella Fleming, that they "are not the heirs at law, next of kin, or in any way related to the said deceased, John J. Fleming, nor is any one of them an heir at law, or next of kin, or in any way related to the said deceased, John J. Fleming," and denied the petitions on their behalf. Finding further that deceased left surviving him no blood relation, or person related to him by consanguinity, it distributed the whole estate to petitioner St. Sure, the assignee of George A. and Ann Myles. Ella Woodbury and her three copetitioners acquiesced in this result, neither appealing from the same, nor inaugurating any proceeding for new trial. Ella Fleming Carter alone moved for a new trial, and has taken an appeal from the order denying such motion.

The principal question for consideration on this appeal is whether such portions of the findings of the trial court as declare that she and her three nieces, Justine, Annie, and Ella Fleming, are not in any way related to deceased, and that none of them is an heir at law of deceased, are sufficiently sustained by the evidence.

Appellant's claim of such relationship is based entirely upon the claim that the deceased was, in fact, one Richard Fleming, Jr., a son of Richard Fleming, Sr., who came from England to New Orleans, La., in 1854 or 1855 and who lived in such city until he died in the year 1869. It is not disputed that appellant is a daughter of said Richard Fleming, Sr., by his second wife, or that Justine Fleming, Annie Fleming, and Ella Fleming are the children of a deceased son of Richard Fleming, Sr., by said second wife. Richard Fleming, Sr., had a son, named Richard Fleming, Jr., by his first wife, and appellant's claim of relationship to deceased on the part of herself and her three nieces is based entirely on her claim that deceased was, in fact, said Richard Fleming, Jr.

[1] The burden of proof was upon appellant to establish the validity of this claim. The findings of the trial court were substantially that such claim was not established to its satisfaction by the evidence. Is there sufficient support in the evidence for such a conclusion? If there is, it is not to be doubted that we cannot disturb the findings, even though the evidence is such that sufficient support for a contrary conclusion might also be found therein.

[2] An examination of the evidence on this question contained in the transcript, and a consideration of the arguments contained in the brief of counsel, have satisfied us that there is no warrant for holding that the findings in this matter are without sufficient support in the evidence.

It is established by the evidence given on behalf of appellant that Richard Fleming, Jr., was born in England. His mother's maiden name was Bessie Kalaher. She died in England, and subsequently, in 1854 or 1855, the father, Richard Fleming, Sr., came from England to New Orleans with the boy, then a lad of four or five years of age, and there established his residence. Richard Fleming, Jr., ran away from his home when he was a small boy in company with a man named Sawyer. Evidence as to his subsequent whereabouts was very meager. John J. Fleming of Burlington, Iowa, a son of a brother of Richard Fleming, Sr., who resided in Burlington, deposed that he saw him at that place in 1863 or 1864, wearing the uniform of a Union soldier and going under the name of James Sawyer, and representing himself as having been in the Union army. This witness further said that he saw Richard Fleming, Jr., once thereafter, between the years 1880 and 1884, in Burlington, when he looked very badly, and his clothes were in a dilapidated condition, and he asked for some money, saying he was very much in need thereof. He remained there one or two days only. There was testimony that in 1884 or in 1885 he was in New Orleans for about a week, when he made himself known to his relatives, and said he was from California and said he was going back there. John J. Fleming of Burlington was of the opinion that a photograph of deceased shown him was the photograph of Richard Fleming, Jr. Certain of the witnesses who saw Richard Fleming, Jr., in New Orleans in 1884 or 1885 testified that they were of the same opinion. There was testimony on the part of these witnesses and John Fleming of Burlington, none of whom ever saw Richard, Jr., except upon the occasions already designated, as to his height, apparent age, and general appearance, the tendency of which was to show that he resembled deceased in those regards. There was also testimony of a Mrs. Sears who knew deceased in Oakland, Cal., from the year 1883, to the effect that deceased told her that he ran away from home while young and had lost sight of his folks, but knew that he had an uncle, a brother of his father, living in Burlington, and also that when deceased returned from a trip to New York, which she said he took in 1887 by steamer by way of Panama, he told her that he came back from New York by rail by way of New Orleans. There was also the testimony of two men named Valentine to the effect that deceased had told them in the late 80's that Judge Fleming of Burlington was his uncle, and they further testified that he resembled the Burlington Flemings in appearance. There was also the testimony of another witness to the effect that appellant resembled deceased in appearance. Another witness testified that deceased once told him, when he was drunk, that he was born in England, and that he had "more relatives what you think of." There was also the evidence of some witnesses to the effect that in their opinion there were certain points of resemblance between deceased and the photograph of some member of the New Orleans Flemings, which photograph was in evidence before the trial court. Such, in a general way, is the testimony relied on by appellant as showing that deceased was Richard Fleming, Jr.

The deceased resided in Alameda county, Cal., from at least as early as 1872, for he was registered as a voter of that county on September 30, 1872, to the time of his death, January 17, 1907. He always went by the name of John or John J. Fleming, never having been known in that county by any other name. His first registration showed the name to be John Fleming, and his place of nativity to be New York. His last affidavit for registration, made September 28, 1904, gave his name as John James Fleming, and New York as his place of birth. His affidavit for a marriage license made April 10, 1875, gave his name as J. J. Fleming, his age as 25 years, and his place of nativity as New York. The certificate of his marriage states him to be John James Fleming, age 25 years, of New York City, a son of James Fleming and Mary, née Smith, his wife. His record as a depositor at the Oakland Bank of Savings, furnished by himself, gave his father's name as P. Fleming, his mother's maiden name as Mary Kiley, his birthplace as New York City, and his date of birth September 15, 1850. His depositor's record at the Union Savings Bank, signed by himself, showed his mother's maiden name to have been Mary Kiley and his birthplace New York City. His depositor's record at the Central Bank, made in December, 1896, entirely in his own handwriting, was signed John J. Fleming, and stated his father's name to have been P. Fleming, his mother's maiden name to have been Mary Kiley, and his date of birth September 15, 1850. He had told several apparently disinterested witnesses that he was born and raised in New York, and was apparently quite familiar with that city, and had apparently never told anyone that he had lived in New Orleans, or had any relatives there. During his residence in Alameda county, he apparently left the state only once, and the evidence is ample to support a conclusion that this was after he sold a saloon owned by him, known as the Gem Saloon, which was shown to have been August 28, 1885. There is ample evidence to support a conclusion that he left San Francisco by a steamer for Panama, avowedly bound for New York, that he went directly to New York by this route, and returned to California within a few weeks, variously stated by witnesses from four to eight or nine. There was nothing to indicate that he passed through or visited New Orleans on his trip, other than the testimony of the New Orleans witnesses already referred to, except the testimony of Mrs. Sears that he told her he "came back from New York by rail by way of New Orleans and visited that state." There was absolutely nothing other than the testimony of John J. Fleming of Burlington, already referred to, to indicate that he visited Burlington on this trip, or at any other time. So far as appears, the only claim of any mention by him of New Orleans in the whole course of his residence in Alameda county was that contained in the testimony of Mrs. Sears above noted. There was nothing to indicate that he had ever served in the United States army or that he had ever said anything about any such service. No reason appears why deceased should have assumed a name not his own and especially no reason why he should have assumed the name of John J. Fleming, if it were not his true name.

We have set forth in a general way the testimony before the lower court on the question at issue. It seems very clear to us that it is of such a nature as to support the conclusion of the lower court that appellant had not satisfactorily established that deceased was Richard Fleming, Jr., or in any way related to the family of which he was a member. At the very least, the circumstances relied on by respondent were sufficient to present a case of conflicting evidence. In view of the many other circumstances appearing, the trial court was not bound to accept the testimony of Mrs. Sears and the Valentines as correctly stating the exact purport of statements made by deceased to them in the course of casual conversation many years before. Even if such statements had been made by him, they would by no means be conclusive, in view of the other circumstances. The same is true as to the testimony relating to the claimed resemblance between deceased and the man who visited New Orleans and Burlington in the early 80's, and is also true of every bit of evidence relied on by appellant. There is the possibility that deceased and Richard Fleming, Jr., were, in fact, one and the same person. If, however, deceased was born in New York, and his father's name was not Richard Fleming, it is clear that he was not the Richard Fleming, Jr., referred to in the evidence. There was ample evidence to sustain a conclusion to such an effect. It must be held, in view of what we have said, that the findings of the trial court to the effect that neither appellant, nor any one of her three nieces was in any way related to deceased, or one of his heirs at law, are sufficiently sustained by the evidence. We have examined the few rulings that are complained of in the matter of striking out certain evidence given by witnesses for appellant bearing on the issues we have discussed, and find nothing therein prejudicial to appellant.

[3] What we have said disposes of the appeal of Ella Fleming Carter, and requires an affirmance of the decree; she being the only appellant. Learned counsel urge several reasons why, even if appellant and her nieces are adjudged to be without interest in the estate of deceased, the distribution of the property to the assignee of George A. and Ann Myles was erroneous, such as that George A. Myles was estopped from asserting any right to succeed to any of the property because of an alleged adjudication against him on the proceeding for letters of administration when he and the public administrator were opposing claimants; that, even if appellant and her nieces were in no way related to deceased, there are other nearer heirs and next of kin than George A. and Ann Myles; and that there was no proof that the property left by deceased was the common property of deceased and his deceased spouse while such spouse was living (a condition essential to the right of relatives of the deceased spouse to take any part of his estate under subdivision 8 of section 1386, Civ. Code). But, it being once established that appellant was in no way related to deceased and is absolutely without interest in his estate, it is of no concern to her how the estate is distributed, and, as said in Estate of Walker, 148 Cal. 166, 82 Pac. 771, "she is in no position to contest the decree, it matters not to her to whom the estate is distributed." There being no sufficient legal ground for the granting of a new trial as to the issues material to her relationship to deceased and her interest in his estate, the findings on which being as already stated, she is in no sense an aggrieved party as to the finding on any other issue, or as to the disposition of the property made by the decree. See Estate of Walker, supra; Blythe v. Ayres, 102 Cal. 254, 36 Pac. 522; Estate of Piper, 147 Cal. 606, 82 Pac. 246. Even if such a condition would assist appellant there is no foundation for the claim that the decree of distribution is void on its face. The utmost that might be contended for against it is that the findings do not support the judgment in so far as the distribution to the assignee of the Myles is concerned.
Cal.Rep. 123-126 P.—7

[4] But the fact that the findings do not support a judgment does not render a judgment void, but only erroneous, a condition warranting a reversal on an appeal therefrom by an aggrieved party. Such a point, as has often been held, may not be considered on a motion for a new trial, even when such motion is prosecuted by the party aggrieved, but only on direct appeal from the judgment. But, as we have said, it is a matter of no concern to appellant under the circumstances, who was found entitled to take this property or how it was in fact distributed, it being established that she, in any event, has no right to any part of it.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

(162 Cal. 506)

GORDON v. ROBERTS et al. (L. A. 2,546.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 2, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 856*)—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—REVIEW.

Where a motion for a new trial is based on various grounds, and the order granting the motion is general in its terms, it should be affirmed, if it could be properly granted on any of the grounds assigned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3406-3434; Dec. Dig. § 856.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 856*)—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—REVIEW.

Where an order granting a new trial specifies the grounds upon which it was granted, it should be sustained on appeal, if properly granted on any other grounds specified in the motion, except that of the insufficiency of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3406-3434; Dec. Dig. § 856.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 979*) — ORDERS GRANTING NEW TRIAL—DISCRETION.

The action of a trial court in granting a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence is conclusive on appeal, unless the discretion of the court has been abused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3871-3873; Dec. Dig. § 979.*]

4. NEGLIGENCE (§ 134*)—PRESUMPTION FROM ACCIDENT.

If a person standing on the sidewalk in front of a building in process of construction is injured by a falling trestle used in the building, the accident establishes a prima facie case of negligence on the part of those responsible for the management of the trestle.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 267-273; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

5. NEGLIGENCE (§ 33*)—INJURY TO TRESPASSER—LIABILITY.

If a person with no lawful business therein enters a building in process of construction, with no invitation and in defiance of warnings, and is injured while in the building, he cannot recover, unless his injury was the result of a willful or malicious act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 45-47; Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

6. NEW TRIAL (§ 71*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence, in an action for injuries from a falling trestle, used in a building in process of construction, held to present a substantial conflict as to whether the injured party was a trespasser in the building when injured, or on the sidewalk in front of the building; and hence the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial on defendant's motion for insufficiency of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 144, 145; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

7. NEGLIGENCE (§ 138*)—INSTRUCTIONS—INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR — "VICE PRINCIPAL."

In instructing the jury in an action for negligence, it is improper to refer to an independent contractor as a "vice principal"; this term being applicable only in actions by a servant against a master.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 354-370; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7313-7316; vol. 8, p. 7827.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by John A. Gordon against William B. Roberts and another, doing business as the Roberts Construction Company, and others. From an order granting a new trial to defendants James B. Lankershim and Achille Biorci, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Gavin W. Craig and C. H. Slease, for appellant. M. E. C. Munday, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries, alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff through the negligence of the defendants. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $2,000. The defendants Lankershim and Biorci moved for a new trial, and the court below made an order granting their motion. From this order, the plaintiff appeals.

The complaint alleges that the defendant Lankershim was erecting a building in the city of Los Angeles; that the defendants Biorci and Roberts Construction Company were employed by him in the construction; that, while plaintiff was standing on the sidewalk in front of said building, he was struck and injured by a timber which, through the negligence of the defendants, fell from within the building. Lankershim and Biorci answered separately. It is sufficient for the present purpose to say that each of the answers denied that plaintiff had sustained injuries in the manner asserted by him, and averred that such injuries were received by plaintiff while he was, in disregard of warnings posted at the entrance, within the building as a trespasser, and were caused by the accidental tipping and falling of a trestle, which was being used in the work of painting the walls.

[1, 2] The motion for new trial was based on various grounds. The order granting the motion was general in its terms. It must therefore be affirmed, if it could properly have been granted on any of the grounds assigned. White v. Merrill, 82 Cal. 14, 22 Pac. 1129; Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 269, 29 Pac. 481; Thompson v. Cal. Constr. Co., 148 Cal. 35, 82 Pac. 367; Wendling Lumber Co. v. Glenwood L. Co., 153 Cal. 411, 95 Pac. 1029; Morgan v. J. W. Robinson Co., 157 Cal. 348, 107 Pac. 695. Even if the court had undertaken to limit the reasons for granting the motion, the appellate court would not be precluded from considering any of the grounds which the trial court had excluded from view (Kauffman v. Maier, supra), excepting only the one of insufficiency of evidence. Weisser v. S. P. Ry. Co., 148 Cal. 426, 83 Pac. 439, 7 Ann. Cas. 636; Bressee v. Traction Co., 149 Cal. 131, 85 Pac. 152, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1059. And this ground will also be looked to for justification of the order granting a new trial, unless the trial court has, by the express terms of its order, excluded it as one of the grounds for making the order. Weisser v. S. P. Ry. Co., supra; Ben Lomond Wine Co. v. Sladky, 141 Cal. 619, 75 Pac. 332; Morgan v. J. W. Robinson Co., supra. As suggested, the order before us was not limited in any way, and it must, on this appeal, be treated as if granted on the ground of insufficiency of evidence, or any other ground assigned.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Index

[3] This court has frequently commented upon the wide extent of the discretion of the trial court in granting or denying a new trial for insufficiency of evidence. "Its action," as was said in Donico v. Casassa, 101 Cal. 411, 35 Pac. 1024, "is conclusive upon this court, unless there has been an abuse of discretion." And, if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, the trial court will not be deemed to have abused its discretion when it has determined that the verdict or the finding is against the weight of the evidence, and that there should be a new trial. "When the evidence is conflicting, the trial court is authorized to review it; and if, in its opinion, the verdict is against the weight of evidence, it is its duty to grant a new trial." Warner v. Thomas, etc., Works, 105 Cal. 409, 38 Pac. 960. See, also, Bjorman v. F. B. R. Co., 92 Cal. 500, 28 Pac. 591; Cole v. Wilcox, 99 Cal. 549, 34 Pac. 114; Bledsoe v. De Crow, 132 Cal. 312, 64 Pac. 397.

[4, 5] We think that, on the main question in controversy here, there was a sufficient conflict to justify the court below in concluding, as it must be deemed to have concluded, that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence, and that justice would be promoted by a new trial. The decisive issue relates to the position of the plaintiff at the time of the injury. That he was injured by the fall of a wooden trestle used in the building is not open to doubt. If, as he claimed, he was standing on the sidewalk, the mere fact that the trestle fell upon him from within is sufficient to make out a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the person or persons responsible for the management of the trestle. Byrne v. Boodle, 2 H. & C. 722; Scott v. London Dock Co., 3 H. & C. 596; Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567, 15 Am. Rep. 530. And there was nothing to overcome this prima facie showing. On the other hand, if the plaintiff, without having any lawful business or occasion to enter the building, did enter it without invitation, and in defiance of warnings, and while therein was injured, he would have no redress, unless his injury was the result of the willful or malicious act of one of the defendants.

[6] It was shown on the trial that the defendant Lankershim was the owner of a building in course of construction, situated at the southeasterly corner of Main and Fourth streets, in the city of Los Angeles. The contractors in charge of the general work of construction were the defendants William B.

and James A. Roberts, doing business as the Roberts Construction Company. Their contract did not, however, include the painting and decorating of the entrance hall. This part of the work was being done by the defendant Biorci, who was working under a contract with the owner, Lankershim. There was testimony to the effect that, under this contract, Lankershim agreed to have the general contractors furnish the scaffold or trestle required for the painting, and move it as needed.

At the time of the occurrence in question, such a trestle had been provided, and was in use by one of Biorci's men, occupied in painting the north wall of the entrance hall. The testimony on the part of the plaintiff tended to prove that another man attempted to move the trestle, whereupon it fell over in such manner that one end protruded from the entrance of the building, striking the plaintiff upon the left shoulder. The plaintiff, according to the testimony of two witnesses besides himself, was standing on the sidewalk, about five feet from the entrance of the building. No witness directly contradicted this statement, and none testified that he had at any time seen the plaintiff within the building.

But the defendants offered testimony to show the physical conditions and surroundings which, as they claimed, demonstrated that plaintiff could not have been struck by the falling trestle, unless he had been inside of the building. The principal entrance was on the westerly, or Main street, frontage of the building. The opening was 12 feet in width, and led to a hall of like width, running easterly into the building from the sidewalk line. On the southerly side of this hallway there was a stairway, running down to the basement. The stairs were separated from the hallway by a concrete coping, running along the northerly line of the staircase for a distance of about 15 feet, and thence at a right angle, across the width of the stairs, to the south wall of the hallway. This coping, which was about 22 inches high, began about 2½ feet from the front of the building. The distance between the coping and the north wall of the entrance hall was about 8 feet.

The trestle which, in its fall, struck and injured the plaintiff was about 16 feet long, and about 14 feet high. The top, upon which workmen were to stand, consisted of a 2 by 10 plank running the length of the trestle. The upper part of the trestle was supported by four legs, two at either end of the trestle. These legs, which were braced by crosspieces, were spread so as to separate each pair at the floor end by about 4 feet.

There was evidence that, just prior to the accident, this trestle was standing within the entrance hall, parallel with and close to the north wall of said hall, and that one of Biorci's employes was on the trestle, painting the north wall. The end of the trestle nearest Main street was inside (i. e., east) of a column, 18 inches deep and 3 feet wide, which was placed at the northerly end of the entrance opening. The testimony on behalf of plaintiff was that the trestle was placed diagonally; but there was a conflict on this point, and the version of the defendants was far from improbable, in view of the fact that a man standing on the trestle would not have been within easy reach of more than a small space on the wall which he was painting, if the trestle had been placed at an angle. Biorci himself, with another of his employes, was working further back in the hall. He heard something fall, and, coming forward, found the trestle lying on its side. The man who had been on it was just coming up the stairs from the basement. He had apparently been thrown over the coping onto these stairs, when the trestle fell. His pot of paint was lying on the third or fourth step, and paint was running down the steps, and was scattered over some marble which was leaning against the concrete coping. The trestle did not "go out in the street." Another witness, who was on the spot shortly after the fall of the trestle, and before it had been righted, found it lying "right square over the curbing (coping) and marble," and not "out in the street." A third testified to the same effect, stating that no portion of the trestle was "beyond the line of the front of the entrance," or "extending onto the sidewalk."

In this state of the evidence, it seems clear that there was a substantial conflict on the question whether any part of the trestle projected over or onto the sidewalk, and, consequently, whether the plaintiff, when he was struck, was on the sidewalk, as he and his witnesses testified. While no one testified directly to having seen the plaintiff within the building, the facts concerning the location and dimensions of the trestle, and the measurements of the space in which it was, were such as to justify the inference that the witnesses who stated that the trestle projected over the building line, and struck the plaintiff while he was on the sidewalk, were not stating the facts correctly. We do not say that the case comes within the rule that the trial court or jury is not bound to accept even the uncontradicted testimony of a witness, if the statement be inherently improbable. Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 645; Baker v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 79 Cal. 41, 21 Pac. 357; McLennan v. Bank of Cal., 87 Cal. 575, 25 Pac. 760. Here the testimony regarding plaintiff's position was contradicted by evidence of physical conditions tending to show that such testimony was untrue. If the trestle, 16 feet long and 14 feet high, standing parallel to the north wall inside of an entrance 8 feet wide, tipped over in such manner that it lay entirely within the building, directly across the coping on the southerly side of the hall, these circumstances were very persuasive evidence to show that the falling trestle did not strike any one standing on the sidewalk. Under the rule announced above, it cannot be said that the trial court abused its discretion in granting a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of evidence.

This conclusion renders it unnecessary to consider at any length the other assignments of error relied on by respondents to justify the order under review. Some of the questions are not likely to arise again. Of this class is the alleged error of the court in permitting the foreman to sign the special findings after the discharge of the jury.

Whether, under the facts in evidence, Biorci or the Roberts Construction Company, or both, were independent contractors, so as to exempt Lankershim from liability for the negligence, if any, of either is a question discussed in the briefs. There is no substantial difference between the parties regarding the nature and legal effect of the relation of independent contractor. Ordinarily, of course, the existence or nonexistence of this relation is a question of fact for the jury; but there are cases in which the proof is such that the court may declare the result as a matter of law. As the evidence may be different on another trial, we express no opinion on the conclusions to be drawn from the facts here shown.

[7] Of the instructions, all that need be said is that any reference to "vice principal" should have been omitted, as the expression is not applicable to a case of this character, but is used in connection with actions of servants against masters to recover damages sustained by the negligence of other servants.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

162 Cal. 497

JONES & LAUGHLIN STEEL CO. v. ABNER DOBLE CO. (S. F. 5,790.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 2, 1912.)

1. PLEADING (§ 126*)—ANSWERS—ADMISSION.

An answer in an action for building materials sold and delivered, which denies that plaintiff delivered all of the materials agreed on, is an insufficient denial, and is equivalent to an admission that substantially all were delivered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 261-263; Dec. Dig. § 126.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 304*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS—PLANS—ACCEPTANCE.

Where plaintiff, under contract, delivered plans and drawings, and they were received without objection and acted on by defendant after opportunity to ascertain their character, and the only objection to them was made several months after they were received and repeatedly examined by defendant's officers in charge of the work, they were sufficiently approved by defendant to make it liable therefor.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1457-1465, 1467-1479; Dec. Dig. § 304.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 931*)—FINDINGS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The court in reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings for plaintiff must take the evidence most favorable to him, and the testimony of a witness for defendant contradicted in all essential particulars by a witness for plaintiff must be disregarded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3728, 3762-3771; Dec. Dig. § 931.*]

4. SALES (§ 81*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION—TIME FOR DELIVERY.

Defendant by letter of June 14th requested plaintiff to furnish plans for a steel frame building and the steel frame construction, and asked for an answer as to when shipments of the building could be made. On July 7th plaintiff inclosed a blue print showing suggestions regarding the work and asking approval. On July 12th, defendant, in reply, inclosed the suggested plans, and asked as to how soon the material could be shipped. Plaintiff by wire replied that shipments could begin in six weeks. Defendant by wire entered his order for rush work. The plans were not finally determined on until September. Held, that the statement of plaintiff as to when shipments could begin was but a mere estimate, and not a promise, and, as no time was expressed, the law implied an agreement to deliver the materials within a reasonable time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 217-223; Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

5. CONTRACTS (§ 322*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS—WARRANTIES—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to warrant a finding that a contractor for the steel frame construction of a building did not warrant that the floors of the building should bear any specified weights, and he could recover for the work, complying with a detailed plan, though not sufficient to bear the specified weights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1306, 1307, 1339, 1347, 1348, 1465, 1492; Dec. Dig. § 322.*]

6. CONTRACTS (§ 320*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS—PERFORMANCE—ACTIONS.

Where one has contracted to erect a building for a fixed price and the contract is entire, he cannot recover on the contract where he has failed to perform a substantial part thereof, but he may recover the price less the damages caused by defects where he has endeavored in good faith to perform, and has substantially performed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1493-1527; Dec. Dig. § 320.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Jones & Laughlin Steel Company against the Abner Doble Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Campbell, Metson, Drew, Oatman & MacKenzie, J. C. Campbell, and Marcus Purcell, for appellant. Albert J. Dibblee and Alex. G. Eells, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to recover the sum of $27,641.20, alleged to be due as the reasonable value of certain building material sold and delivered by plaintiff to the defendant at its request. The materials were to be used by the defendant in the construction of certain buildings upon its land. Plaintiff also claimed a lien therefor upon the land and building, and certain other lien claimants were made parties defendant. The appeal is by the Abner Doble Company alone. The only dispute is in relation to the sum for which judgment was given, and the liens and the other claims are not material to our consideration of the case.

The complaint alleges the following facts: In 1906 the defendant ordered from plaintiff, whose place of business was Pittsburg, Pa., all the structural steel, metal window frames, sash, doors and wire glass and other metal material required for a warehouse, a forge shop and a lavatory, to be erected by defendant according to plans and drawings prepared and to be prepared by plaintiff, based on general suggestions in letters and certain outline or preliminary plans theretofore written and furnished by defendant. Plaintiff prepared the plans, and they were sent to and approved by defendant. No price or specific time for delivery was agreed upon. It was agreed that payment was to be made 30 days after date of shipment, with the privilege to defendant of 6 months' additional time by giving notes due in that time at 5 per cent. annual interest. Plaintiff furnished the materials ordered. The reasonable value of that used in the warehouse is $19,176.33, of which $3,819.80 was paid. That used in the forge shop was worth $10,323.80, of which $21.84 was paid. That used in the lavatory was worth $1,982.72, none of which was paid. The total balance unpaid was $27,641.21, all of which was past due. In pursuance of the agreement for credit some notes were given by defendant to plaintiff, which plaintiff tendered for such disposition as the court deemed proper.

The answer of the Abner Doble Company admits that a contract was made between said defendant and plaintiff for the furnishing of the materials alleged. It avers as a counterclaim that it was agreed that plaintiff would draw and furnish to defendant "all the detailed plans and specifications" for the aforementioned buildings, that the said plans and specifications were to be for "a good, first-class, substantial steel framed building, of sufficient strength to carry, on one half of the second floor of the warehouse, a weight of five hundred pounds to the square foot, and on the other half one hundred and fifty pounds to the square foot"; and that all said material was to be delivered by the plaintiff in San Francisco, in condition for placing in said buildings, the material for the warehouse to be delivered between August 1, 1906, and October 15, 1906, and that for the forge shop on or about September 13, 1906. It then avers that plaintiff did not deliver said materials until eight months after the times agreed upon as aforesaid; that the building, as planned by plaintiff, and the material as constructed by plaintiff, was not strong enough to carry the weights above mentioned; that the doors were not made as planned, or of good material, and could not be used in the buildings, and that by reason of these breaches of the contract the defendant has suffered damage, to wit, from deprivation of the use of said buildings during the delay in completion thereof caused by said delay in shipment, in the sum of $16,000, by reason of the insufficient strength of the building, in the sum of $10,000, by reason of defective doors, in the sum of $3,000, in all, $29,000.

[1] The answer also denies that plaintiff delivered "all" of the materials agreed upon. This is an insufficient denial, and is equivalent to an admission that substantially all were delivered. The omission of a single rivet or bolt would satisfy the denial. There is a denial that the value exceeds $16,982.71, but it is conceded that the proof was sufficient to support the findings on this point. The principal points relied on by appellant relate to the counterclaim, under the claim that the findings thereon are contrary to the evidence.

The court found that the plaintiff did not agree to furnish "specincations" for the buildings, but only plans and drawings; that the plans and drawings were prepared by plaintiff and were sent to and approved by the defendant; that no specific time was agreed on for the deliveries, except that they were to be furnished as speedily as circumstances would permit; that plaintiff substantially performed its contract, except that there were certain minor defects, for which allowance was made. As to these, the findings are that the value of the material furnished, less payments thereon, was, for the warehouse, $15,300.98, for the forge shop, $10,301.96, and for the lavatory $1,982.72, making the total $27,585.66. The minor errors in the warehouse material caused defendant to expend $964.14, and it would cost $140 to remedy the defects in the doors. Deducting the $1,104.14 for these defects, the balance remaining is $26,481.52, for which, with interest, judgment was given. The court also found that plaintiff agreed to furnish no plans or drawings for the buildings, other than working plans showing the details of the erection and construction of the material which plaintiff was to furnish, and that plaintiff did not agree that the plans it prepared should provide a second floor strong enough to bear 500 pounds, or 150 pounds, to the square foot, or any other weight, that only such portion of the material to be furnished by plaintiff was to be fabricated by plaintiff as might be necessary to enable the defendant to conveniently and in the usual manner erect the same upon its lot, and that there was no agreement that all the material was to be framed by plaintiff. It is claimed that these findings are not sustained by the evidence.

1. There is no evidence that specifications were to be furnished by the plaintiff. The evidence on the subject related to plans and detail drawings, and they were furnished.

[2] 2. The plans and drawings were sent to defendant long before the material was furnished, and they were either expressly approved, or received without objection, and acted on by defendant, after full opportunity to ascertain their character. The only objection, if it can be called such, which is called to our attention, was made in a letter written several months after the plans and drawings were received by defendant, and after they had been repeatedly examined by its officers in charge of the work. The finding that the plans and drawings were approved by defendant is amply supported by the evidence.

[3] 3. With respect to the alleged agreement as to time of deliveries, there is some conflict. We must take that most favorable to the plaintiff, because it is presumed that the trial court did so. In May, 1906, Abner Doble, as agent for defendant, had a conversation with Geddes, who was a special agent of plaintiff for the sale of a different kind of material from that sold to defendant by plaintiff. Doble said his company was making designs for a warehouse and forge shop to be erected on its lot. Geddes requested that, when it got its plans ready, the defendant would place its order for the fabricated steel and iron work with plaintiff, suggesting that plaintiff's engineers could assist in arriving at the constructional details. No contract or agreement was made between them. The testimony of Abner Doble, as to there being a parol contract between himself and Geddes at that time, is contradicted in all essential particulars by Geddes. It must therefore be disregarded.

[4] The contract between the parties was made by the interchange of letters and telegrams. These begin with a letter of June 14, 1906, from defendant to plaintiff. It inclosed blue prints of a foundation plan, a cross-section of the elevation, and some details of second floor construction for the proposed warehouse. It stated that defendant desired a plain, thoroughly substantial steel frame building to carry a weight of 500 pounds a square foot on one part of the second floor and 150 pounds a square foot on the remainder. It gave many particulars as to the proposed building, and stated that "what we desire to secure from you is the entire steel frame construction of the building, with the roof trusses, doors and windows as outlined," and it asked an answer "at the earliest possible moment, as to just when you can make shipment of this building" saying further, "as this is our main warehouse building, it is imperative that shipment should be made at an early date," and that "we would appreciate drawings from you just as soon as possible." The general style and the angles and details of construction were left to the plaintiff's engineers, and their suggestions and comments were solicited. This letter was written in pursuance of suggestions made in the conversation between Doble and Geddes in May. On July 7th plaintiff answered, inclosing a blue print showing "our suggestions regarding this work" and asking approval. On June 26th defendant sent plaintiff drawings showing the design for the proposed forge shop, with an explanatory letter requesting that plaintiff's engineers "work out a type of building" for it, and that plaintiff state the price and time of delivery of the materials. This was not received by plaintiff until about July 11th. In the meantime defendant wrote again, inclosing blue prints showing the windows and doors of the forge shop. In this letter defendant said: "We trust that you will be able to get out the designs for these buildings promptly, so that we can get prompt shipment on the same," and asked plaintiff to send detail drawings immediately, so that defendant could have the foundation done at once, "as we are now working on same." On July 12th defendant, having received plaintiff's letter of July 7th inclosing suggested plans, sent plaintiff this telegram: "How quick can you ship warehouse building. Crane runway already shipped. How soon forge building. Must have immediately drawings showing placing foundation bolts." To this on July 13th plaintiff by wire answered, "Could begin shipment warehouse building six weeks, complete twelve weeks. Could begin shipment forge building eight weeks, complete fourteen weeks. Drawing showing foundation bolts can be sent promptly upon receipt of advice that we are to proceed with work." To the latter defendant, by wire, replied, July 13th: "Enter order rush work on warehouse and forge buildings. Anticipate promised shipment if possible. Send immediately drawing showing foundation bolts and necessary information to build foundation. Work on foundation delayed for this information." Plaintiff on July 13th wrote defendant, referring to the telegrams, and saying: "We have made a careful canvass of the matter. The best we think we can do for the warehouse would be to begin shipment in about six weeks and complete in about six weeks thereafter. For the forge building, we could begin shipment in about eight weeks and complete in about six weeks later. * * * From a careful canvass of the conditions now existing we do not think they would justify a quicker promise than above." On July 26th plaintiff forwarded to defendant drawings of foundation plans for warehouse and forge shop and general design for forge shop. On August 3d it sent detail plans of window frames and sash. On August 17th defendant sent to plaintiff plans for an alteration consisting of a lavatory to be put between the two buildings at the second story and to be attached to the walls and to communicate with each building and asking detail plans for the metal work therefor and that plaintiff furnish the fabricated material necessary.

Other correspondence was had making various changes in the plans, which were suggested by the defendant, and the final plans were apparently not determined until in September. Some changes were made even later. In defendant's letter of August 2d, containing a suggestion of a material change of the warehouse plan, it said: "We should be pleased to have you advise us as to when you expect to be able to ship the building." In its letter of September 17th, it said: "You will note that from your letter of July 13th that you expected to begin shipment of the warehouse building in six weeks and the forge shop in eight weeks, and in accordance with this promise the buildings should be coming along rapidly now."

Defendant claims that this correspondence shows a positive contract to ship the steel and iron work for the buildings at the times stated in plaintiff's letter and telegram of July 13th. We do not think it necessarily had that effect, and that from the circumstances and the entire correspondence the court below was warranted in holding that it did not. On July 13th the plans were not settled, many of them were not made, and plaintiff could not then know when they would be completed to the satisfaction of both parties. Until they were settled, plaintiff could not definitely know what it was to construct or how the material was to be fabricated. If the statements of July 13th had been in the positive language of a promise, they could not be understood as anything more than a promise to begin and complete the shipments within the times stated, such time to be computed, not from the date of the statement, but from the time of the complete agreement on the plans. But, in view of the uncompleted condition of the negotiations and of the plans at that time, it is more reasonable and natural to construe it as a mere estimate and not as a promise. The court below, as we understand, so interpreted the statement, and we think it was correct. The subsequent conduct and letters of the defendant at least suggests that this was its understanding, also, at that time. The result is that, as no time was expressed, the law would imply an agreement to deliver within a reasonable time, or, as the court found, "as speedily as circumstances would permit."

[5] 4. There was sufficient evidence to support the finding that there was no contract or warranty by plaintiff that the floors of the warehouse should bear the weights above mentioned. The general plans sent to plaintiff by defendant showed a detail plan of the second floor, stating the weights to be carried thereon, and the accompanying letter also stated the same things. But plaintiff's advice was not asked on that point.

Both the plan and the letter gave the sizes of the supporting beams for this floor, and beams of those sizes were furnished. The statements as to weights were apparently intended as information, and not as a request for advice. The defendant was, and for years had been, engaged in heavy iron and steel manufacture and professed to do the work of engineers therein. The inference is that it could and would judge for itself as to the sizes of beams required. It had a competent and experienced architect in its employ. There is nothing necessarily showing that the defendant was not, or did not consider itself, competent to determine the matter, or that it relied on plaintiff's advice or suggestions regarding it; or that plaintiff offered or undertook to give such advice. These observations also apply to the claim that the building was not sufficiently braced. Upon the latter point there is, moreover, a conflict of evidence, and sufficient to sustain a finding in favor of plaintiff thereon, that it was properly braced.

[6] 5. Defendant contends that plaintiff cannot recover because of the minor defects in the materials on account of which the lower court deducted $1,104.14. It cites on this point cases declaring that, where one has contracted to erect a building or sell property for a price to be paid when he has fully performed his obligation, the contract being what is called an entire contract, he cannot recover on the contract, if he has himself failed to perform a substantial and material part of his own agreement. It is true that in such cases the party cannot prevail in an action technically on the contract for the price, but it is well settled, and the cases cited recognize the rule, that he may recover in a proper action the reasonable value of the goods delivered to and retained by the buyer. Katz v. Bedford, 77 Cal. 322, 19 Pac. 523, 1 L. R. A. 826. If the plaintiff suing for the value, or for the price, has endeavored in good faith to perform his part of the agreement, and has substantially performed, but there are unimportant defects arising from accident or inadvertence, and which do not defeat or materially change the object of the contract, he may recover the price, less the damage caused by the defects. Perry v. Quackenbush, 105 Cal. 308, 38 Pac. 740; City St. I. Co. v. Kroh, 158 Cal. 325, 110 Pac. 933. There is much doubt whether the contract was entire and indivisible as to either of the three structures involved. See Sterling v. Gregory, 149 Cal. 120, 85 Pac. 305; Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. Amalgamated O. Co., 156 Cal. 779, 106 Pac. 55. But, conceding it to be so, the complaint counts upon the implied contract to pay the reasonable value of the materials furnished and the case falls within the rule last stated.

6. Our conclusion that the finding that the plaintiff did not agree to deliver the materials within a specific time, as alleged in the counterclaim and that there was no agreement that the second floor should bear certain weights, is sustained by the evidence, makes it unnecessary to consider the asserted errors of law in the admission or exclusion of evidence relating to the damages claimed to have been suffered by defendant from the failure to perform these alleged agreements, and also unnecessary to consider the rule as to the proper measure of damages from such breaches of contract or warranty, or as to the right to recover upon such contracts or warranties. There are no other points that require notice.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

162 Cal. 513

DAVIS v. CRUMP et al. (S. F. 5,752.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 3, 1912.
Rehearing Denied May 3, 1912.)

1. TRIAL (§ 165*)—DISMISSAL OR NONSUIT—HEARING AND DETERMINATION.

On a motion for a nonsuit, the evidence in favor of plaintiff must be taken as true, and all evidence in conflict therewith disregarded; every favorable inference or presumption must be considered in favor of the plaintiff; that construction of the evidence most favorable to him should be adopted; and if, with all these aids, a verdict or decision in favor of plaintiff would be held by an appellate court to be supported by the evidence, a nonsuit should be denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 373, 374; Dec. Dig. § 165.*]

2. EJECTMENT (§ 108*) — QUIETING TITLE (§ 47*)—NONSUIT IN PART.

If the plaintiff in an action of ejectment or to quiet title makes out a prima facie case as to only a part of the land claimed, the nonsuit should be limited to the particular portion as to which no case has been made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. § 316; Dec. Dig. § 108;* Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 95-97; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

3. QUIETING TITLE (§ 35*)—PROCEEDINGS—PLEADING—ALLEGING POSSESSION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, providing that an action may be brought by any person against another who claims an estate or interest in real property adverse to him for the purpose of determining such adverse claim, the plaintiff need not allege possession; an allegation that he is the owner in fee being a sufficient statement of his interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 73, 74; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

4. QUIETING TITLE (§ 44*)—PROCEEDINGS—EVIDENCE.

While a plaintiff in an action to quiet title can recover judgment only on the strength of his own title, he need only establish a prima facie case of ownership in order to put defendants to the necessity of meeting such case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 89; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

5. QUIETING TITLE (§ 43*)—PROCEEDINGS—PLEADING—VARIANCE.

The fact that a plaintiff in an action to quiet title pleads ownership only, and not possession, does not prevent him from proving possession in order to show ownership.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 84-87; Dec. Dig. § 43.*]

6. QUIETING TITLE (§ 44*)—PROCEEDINGS—EVIDENCE.

Proof of possession of land makes out a prima facie case of ownership in an action to quiet title as against persons not shown to have any title thereto, or to have had any possession thereof, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 11, 12, providing that things which a person possesses are presumed to be owned by him, and that a person is to be presumed the owner of property from exercising acts of ownership over it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 89-92; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

7. QUIETING TITLE (§ 44*)—PROCEEDINGS—EVIDENCE—OWNERSHIP—POSSESSION.

The inclosure of a piece of land by a substantial fence, followed by a claim of ownership, shows actual possession sufficient to establish a prima facie case of ownership in an action to quiet title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 89-92; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

8. QUIETING TITLE (§ 44*)—PROCEEDINGS—EVIDENCE—OWNERSHIP—POSSESSION.

In an action to quiet title, the fact that possession of the land involved was taken by plaintiff only two days before the action was commenced does not detract from its force as prima facie evidence of title, where there is no evidence that such possession was obtained otherwise than peaceably, or that any one else had possession at the time plaintiff took possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 89-92; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by George M. Davis against J. C. Crump and others. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Milton Shepardson, for appellant. R. H. Countryman, H. L. Breed, Benj. R. Aiken, F. J. Solinsky, S. W. Molkenbuhr, Reed, Black & Reed, J. W. Bingham, Edward W. Engs, Geo. E. Samuels, Mervyn J. Samuels, Irving Magnes, J. J. McDonald, Johnson & Shaw, Lillenthal, McKinstry & Raymond, L. Oppenheimer, Fitzgerald & Abbott, Pierce A. Fontaine, Cooper, Gray & Cooper, F. W. Shay, John T. Pidwell, Ben F. Woolner, Wm. H. O'Brien, T. J. Lyons, Cullinan & Hickey, and George Lull, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action to quiet plaintiff's alleged title in fee to a tract of land containing some 16.75 acres described in the complaint as being situate in the county of Alameda, state of California, and sufficiently shown by the evidence to be in the city of Oakland in said county. There were exceeding 100 defendants. The defendants answered, setting up their respective claims. At the trial, plaintiff having introduced his evidence and rested, a motion for a nonsuit, based upon 17 grounds, was granted. Judgment of nonsuit was thereupon given. This is an appeal by plaintiff from such judgment.

[1] The rules applicable in determining the question of the correctness of a ruling granting a nonsuit are well settled in this state. As was said in Freese v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, 139 Cal. 392, 394, 73 Pac. 172: "It is not disputed, and cannot well be under the decisions, that a motion for a nonsuit should not be granted where plaintiff's evidence is such, if the case had gone to a jury on that evidence, and a verdict had been rendered for him, the evidence would be held sufficient to support the judgment upon the verdict. The rules as to nonsuit are the same, whether the trial is by the court or by a jury." See, also, Goldstone v. Merchants', etc., Co., 123 Cal. 625, 56 Pac. 776. In determining whether a nonsuit should be granted, all the evidence in favor of the plaintiff must be taken as true and all evidence in conflict therewith disregarded, "every favorable inference fairly deducible and every favorable presumption fairly arising from the evidence produced must be considered as facts proved in favor" of the plaintiff, and where the evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, or if either of several inferences may reasonably be made, the court must take the view most favorable to the plaintiff. If with all these aids the evidence is in such condition that a verdict or decision in favor of the plaintiff would be held by an appellate court to have sufficient legal support in the evidence, a nonsuit should not be granted. See Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 82 Pac. 252, and cases there cited.

[2] It is also to be borne in mind that if the plaintiff either in an action of ejectment or to quiet title makes out a prima facie case as to a part only of the land claimed, it is error to grant a motion for nonsuit not limited to the particular portion as to which no case has been made. See Wright v. Roseberry, 81 Cal. 87, 92, 22 Pac. 336; Wolfskill v. Malajowich, 39 Cal. 276; Peterson v. Gibbs, 147 Cal. 1, 5, 81 Pac. 121, 109 Am. St. Rep. 107.

The real claim in support of the ruling of the trial court is that plaintiff failed to sufficiently show any title in himself as to any part of the land.

[3] The plaintiff did not in terms allege that he was in possession of any part of the land; his allegation in this regard being simply that he "is now and at all the times herein mentioned was the owner in fee of all that certain lot, piece or parcel of land," etc. No allegation of possession was essential, however, in view of the fact that our statute (section 738, Code Civ. Proc.) authorizes the maintenance of an action of this character by any person, whether in or out of possession. The allegation that plaintiff is "the owner in fee" was a clear and unqualified allegation of a seisin in fee in "ordinary language" (see Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 224), and is a sufficient statement of the right of a plaintiff in either ejectment or an action to quiet title. The decisions upon this point are many and the rule is thoroughly established. See Payne v. Treadwell, supra; Garwood v. Hastings, 38 Cal. 216; Heeser v. Miller, 77 Cal. 192, 19 Pac. 375; Souter v. Maguire, 78 Cal. 543, 21 Pac. 183; Johnson v. Vance, 86 Cal. 128, 24 Pac. 863; Castro v. Barry, 79 Cal. 447, 21 Pac. 946; Riverside, etc., Co. v. Jensen, 108 Cal. 146, 41 Pac. 40.

[4, 5] It was incumbent upon plaintiff, of course, in order to put defendants to their proof, to make out a prima facie case of ownership, for learned counsel for defendants are undoubtedly right in their contention that a plaintiff can recover judgment in this character of action only upon the strength of his own title, and that if he shows no title it is unnecessary to inquire into a defendant's rights. But all that was necessary for him to do in order to put defendants to the necessity of meeting his claim was to present such evidence as would make out for him a prima facie case of ownership. We can see no force in the claim that by reason of the fact that he simply alleged ownership, without in terms alleging possession, he was restricted to evidence of a paper or record title.

[6] Plaintiff's only proof of ownership of the legal title was such as tended to show actual possession of the greater part of the property at the time of the commencement of the action. A quitclaim deed of the premises bearing date December 23, 1909, purporting to be the deed of the Oakland Prospect Homestead Association and Charles J. King and J. F. Crosset as the sole surviving trustees or directors of said corporation, and of Charles J. King and J. F. Crosset as individuals, to plaintiff, delivered to him on January 3, 1910, was introduced in evidence as the individual deed of Messrs. King and Crosset. There was nothing to show legal title to any interest in this land at any time in either King or Crosset. But there was absolutely nothing in the evidence tending to show that any of the defendants ever had any interest, legal or equitable, in any of the land, and so far as the land actually enclosed by plaintiff's fences is concerned, which will be referred to hereinafter, nothing to indicate any prior possession on the part of any of the defendants except in so far as a "real estate sign" indicating one Cameron as an owner of some indefinite portion of the property was on the land. Whether this was the Cameron who was named as a party defendant, but who apparently did not appear in the action, is not shown. There were some 10 or 15 other "real estate signs" on various portions of the property at the time plaintiff took possession, but what they indicated as to ownership, if anything, did not appear. There were also in one place the remnants of an old fence, a few posts, and old wires; but by whom constructed or originally maintained does not appear, and there was nothing to indicate any existing inclosure of any portion of the property involved in the action. There was an occupied dwelling house on the property, but no connection is shown between the occupant of this house and any of the defendants, and the ground upon which the same stood was not inclosed by plaintiff's fence, but was intentionally omitted from any taking of actual possession by him. There was also a dwelling house in course of construction on another part of the land, but there is nothing to indicate that any of the defendants had any interest in the land upon which the same was being constructed. Whether this was included in plaintiff's inclosure did not clearly appear, but the matter is not of any particular importance. We have said this much to make it clear that, at the time of the granting of the nonsuit, there was nothing tending to show that any of the defendants had any interest in the property or had ever been in possession of any part thereof, and that it must be held, so far as this appeal is concerned, that they each and all occupy the position of strangers to the title. There was no such admission on the part of plaintiff on the trial as would warrant a different conclusion. Under the circumstances, there can be no doubt that in so far as plaintiff showed actual possession of the property at the time of the commencement of his action, he made a prima facie case of ownership against the defendants, unless the evidence given was such as to compel the conclusion, in view of the rules we have already referred to as applicable on a motion for nonsuit, that notwithstanding such possession he had no interest therein.

Learned counsel for defendants claim, as we have already indicated, that proof of actual possession is not sufficient to make out a prima facie case of ownership in an action to quiet title, and especially under such allegations of title as we have in the complaint before us. The contrary is thoroughly established by the decisions in this state. We have already shown that, under such allegations as are presented, the plaintiff was entitled to prove ownership by any evidence competent for that purpose. It is declared by our statutory law to be presumed "that things which a person possesses are owned by him," and "that a person is the owner of property from exercising acts of ownership over it." Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 11, 12. These provisions are in accord with the settled law everywhere, and while such presumptions are disputable and may be controverted by other evidence, they afford full and sufficient evidence of ownership of land unless controverted. Section 1961, Code Civ. Proc. As against an entire stranger to the title, actual possession of land has uniformly been held, both in ejectment and actions to quiet title, to make out a prima facie case, sufficient to sustain a conclusion of ownership. See Zilmer v. Gerichten, 111 Cal. 73, 43 Pac. 408; McGovern v. Mowry, 91 Cal. 383, 27 Pac. 746; Morris v. Clarkin, 156 Cal. 16, 103 Pac. 180; Leonard v. Flynn, 89 Cal. 543, 26 Pac. 1097, 23 Am. St. Rep. 500; Sepulveda v. Sepulveda, 39 Cal. 13. See, also, Tate v. City of Sacramento, 50 Cal. 242; Scorpion S. M. Co. v. Marsano, 10 Nev. 378. In the last case cited, an action to quiet title, an allegation of present possession in plaintiff was not denied by the answer, and it was said through Beatty, J., "that the burden is upon the defendant, if he admits plaintiff's possession, or does not disclaim, to plead and prove a good title in himself." In Sepulveda v. Sepulveda, supra, an action to quiet title, it was said that, if the plaintiff showed possession, she should not have been nonsuited, even if she had attempted to show paper title in herself and had failed, for the deeds read in evidence did not show any title in the respondent, "and until their title was in some way made to appear, the appellant might rest safely upon the mere fact of her possession of the lands and the presumptions arising therefrom in her favor." In McGovern v. Mowry, supra, an action to quiet title, it was held, after quoting section 1006 of the Civil Code, that actual occupancy and possession of the premises at the time of the commencement of the action is sufficient evidence of ownership as against "one who, like defendant, never had any title, but who claimed to have title to the premises." In Morris v. Clarkin, supra, an action to quiet title, a judgment of nonsuit was reversed; the court saying: "So far as the evidence goes, Lunnun is an entire stranger to the title. Actual possession for any period, under claim of ownership, is sufficient evidence of title in plaintiff as against a trespasser or one who establishes no title in himself." In Zilmer v. Gerichten, supra, which was an action in ejectment, a judgment of nonsuit was reversed, one of the grounds being that, even if plaintiff had failed to show a paper title as attempted, he had shown prior actual possession of the property, while there was nothing to show prior possession in defendants, or that they had any kind of title, and that this was enough to constitute prima facie evidence of title in plaintiff. The court also said: "A nonsuit should be denied when there is any evidence tending to sustain plaintiff's case, without passing upon the question as to the sufficiency of such evidence." There is absolutely nothing in our decisions in conflict with these views, which may properly be said to state simply elementary propositions. There is nothing in McGrath v. Wallace, 85 Cal. 622, 24 Pac. 793, an action to quiet title, in conflict therewith. There the plaintiff did not show possession at the time of the commencement of the action, but alleged in her complaint that the defendants were then in possession. It was said that "a complaint quia timet, counting upon title alone, as this one does, is not supported by evidence of prior possession insufficient to make title under the statute of limitations." (The italics are ours.) The distinction between that case and those we have cited is obvious.

[7] There can be no doubt that the evidence was sufficient to support a conclusion that plaintiff did take actual possession of the greater portion of the property described in the complaint under claim of title in himself thereto on January 8, 1910, and did remain in such possession thenceforth. This action was commenced January 10, 1910. During the afternoon of January 8, 1910, between about 1:30 and 6:30 p. m., he inclosed such greater portion of the property in two separate parcels by the construction of substantial five-strand barbed wire fences, with redwood posts, 12 or 14 feet apart, making two complete inclosures. It cannot well be claimed that these two parcels were not thenceforth each protected by a substantial inclosure (maintained by him), to an extent sufficient to satisfy the requirements of section 325, Code of Civil Procedure, as to the kind of possession essential to an adverse possession. Plaintiff thenceforth claimed to be the owner of such property so inclosed. This was sufficient to support a conclusion of actual possession of the inclosed portion on the part of the plaintiff. See Morris v. Clarkin, 156 Cal. 16, 103 Pac. 180; Knowles v. Crocker Estate Co., 149 Cal. 279, 283, 86 Pac. 715; Brumagim v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 24, 46. Respondents rely in this behalf upon certain early cases on the question of what constitutes such actual possession as was required by the terms of the Van Ness ordinance in San Francisco, such as Polack v. McGrath, 32 Cal. 15, and Wolf v. Baldwin, 19 Cal. 308, which cannot be accepted, especially in view of the later decisions, as establishing that a court would not be warranted in holding that one who has by a substantial fence completely inclosed land claimed by him has thereby established actual possession thereof.

It is also to be borne in mind that, so far as the evidence shows, none of the defendants had ever been in possession of any portion of the property, and that the evidence was not such as to compel the conclusion that any one at all was at the time of plaintiff's entry in possession of the property that was actually inclosed by him.

[8] But the evidence must be taken as showing without conflict that plaintiff's possession was taken by him in contemplation of this action less than two days before the commencement thereof, and with a view to the possible advantage to be obtained by him by being in possession at the time of the commencement of the proposed action. But we do not see that this detracts from the effect of his actual possession at the commencement of the action, as prima facie evidence of title in him as against third persons who are not shown to have any interest in the property or to have ever been in possession of any portion thereof. Learned counsel for defendants have cited some cases from other states as supporting the propositions that "the possession contemplated by the law is limited to possession peaceably and rightfully acquired," that "courts will not assume jurisdiction where the possession was acquired by use of unfair or corrupt means," and "that possession taken in contemplation of an action is not sufficient." As we have seen, there is nothing here to compel the conclusion that the possession was taken otherwise than peaceably, or that any portion of the property inclosed was in the actual possession of any other person at the time. This sufficiently distinguishes this case from that of Rubert v. Brayton, 82 Mich. 632, 46 N. W. 935, where the plaintiff, contemplating an action, forcibly removed the tenant of a claimant in possession and retained possession by force and arms. Most of the cases cited by defendants in support of the propositions stated above were decided under laws making possession by plaintiff at the commencement of the action essential to the jurisdiction of the court to entertain the action at all, and there are expressions in some of them tending to support the proposition that a possession taken for the mere purpose of securing advantage ground for such litigation, especially when obtained by unfair means or by force, is not the possession essential to jurisdiction of an action to quiet title contemplated either by the old equitable rule limiting such action to those in possession, or by statutes adopting that rule. While much may be said in support of such a conclusion, it has been distinctly held in this state under a statute requiring possession as a condition to the maintenance of such an action, that it is immaterial how possession was acquired (see Reed v. Calderwood, 32 Cal. 109, and Calderwood v. Brooks, 45 Cal. 519), and the same ruling was made in Nevada in Scorpion S. M. Co. v. Marsano, 10 Nev. 378, where the court said that it was immaterial if the actual possession was obtained by illegal means, vi et armis; the statute making no exception as to the manner in which possession is acquired. But, as we have, by statute, dispensed with the necessity of any possession by plaintiff, as an essential to jurisdiction of such an action, the particular question involved in the cases we have referred to is no longer of importance. We are concerned here solely with the question as to the character of possession essential to constitute prima facie evidence of ownership, and we can see no warrant for holding that the mere fact that the possession was taken by plaintiff only shortly before the commencement of his action, and with a view to the advantage to be derived in such litigation from being in possession, necessarily precludes it from constituting such prima facie evidence. It is constantly to be borne in mind that the evidence was not such as to compel the conclusion as matter of law that there was at the time of plaintiff's inclosure, actual possession of any portion of the property inclosed by him by any other person.

We have gone over the evidence word by word to ascertain whether there was anything in the evidence to compel the conclusion as matter of law that, notwithstanding plaintiff's actual possession of the greater portion of the land, he nevertheless was not the owner of any interest therein. If such a condition was affirmatively shown by the evidence, doubtless the prima facie presumption of ownership arising from mere actual possession should be held to be overcome. See Shelton Logging Co. v. Gosler, 26 Wash. 126, 66 Pac. 151. But we are satisfied that no such effect can be given to such evidence as was actually elicited on the cross-examination of plaintiff and Mr. Shepardson, his attorney, which constitutes the only evidence as to which any such claim could plausibly be made. In fact, learned counsel for defendants do not press any claim of this kind, as we understand their brief.

We are unable to escape the conclusion that, as to the property actually inclosed by plaintiff, a sufficient case was made to preclude the granting of a nonsuit for want of evidence of ownership of any interest in plaintiff. If, as is suggested by counsel for defendants, the plaintiff is, as matter of fact, without any interest in the property, and his action was "as bold and brazen a piece of land jumping as appears in the history of land jumping in this state," it is unfortunate that defendants did not introduce the necessary evidence, which must have been easily procurable, and press the case to a judgment on the merits, thus terminating the litigation, instead of resorting to a motion for a nonsuit, generally a proceeding of the most doubtful expediency for one who is able to prove a good defense on the merits.

We see nothing in other claims made in respondents' brief in support of the action of the trial court in granting the motion for nonsuit. What has been said disposes of the claim made by the seventeenth specification of the motion. The tenth specification referred only to lands lying outside of the plaintiff's inclosure, as to which it may be assumed plaintiff made no case; but, as we have seen, the fact that a plaintiff fails to make a prima facie case as to a portion of the land involved does not warrant the granting of a motion for a nonsuit as to the remainder of the property as to which he has made such a case. There was sufficient evidence to support a conclusion that the lands inclosed by plaintiff's fences are a portion of the land described in plaintiff's amended complaint, with the possible exception of a "small portion, northwesterly portion" of one of the inclosures, which, according to the testimony of Mr. Squires, a civil engineer, had been improperly included within plaintiff's fence. But even if we should assume that by reason of the presence in such inclosure of this somewhat indefinite quantity of land not embraced in the description contained in the complaint, as to the ownership of which there is no evidence whatever, except plaintiff's possession, a motion for nonsuit could properly have been granted as to all the land embraced in said inclosure, which, of course, is not conceded, it would still remain that the motion should not have been granted as to the other inclosure. No other special ground stated as a basis for the nonsuit requires discussion.

In view of our conclusion that the motion for nonsuit was erroneously granted, it is unnecessary to consider any other question discussed in the briefs.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

stress which rendered him unable to properly attend to his business."

Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 524-533; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

Application by Charles E. Behymér for writ of mandate to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. Writ denied.

C. Ibeson Sweet, for petitioner. Richard A. Dunnigan, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Application for a peremptory writ of mandate, commanding the superior court and the Honorable George H. Hutton, judge thereof, to vacate and set aside an order dismissing an appeal from a judgment rendered in the justice's court, in an action wherein one O. W. Hobbs was plaintiff and petitioner was defendant.

The judgment from which the appeal was taken was rendered on September 26, 1911, on which date defendant served his notice of appeal and filed the required undertaking, which action was followed, on October 3, 1911, by depositing with the clerk of the superior court a transcript of the justice's docket and the files and papers required upon hearing the case on appeal. The order of dismissal was made upon a motion, based upon the ground that appellant had failed and neglected to pay to the clerk of the court the sum of $6 as a deposit for costs, as required by rule 27 of the superior court, which is as follows: "In any civil action appealed from an inferior court, if the transcript and papers are not filed in the clerk's office and $6 paid to the clerk as a deposit for costs, within thirty days after the notice of appeal and undertaking on appeal are filed in such inferior court, such appeal will be dismissed on motion made upon notice to the appellant." That such requirement is a reasonable one, and the court authorized to adopt the rule, is unquestioned. Section 129, Code Civ. Proc. The notice of the motion was given on November 3, 1911, and on the day following, some 39 days after taking the appeal, appellant paid the fee of $6 as a deposit for costs, thus for the first time perfecting his appeal. Clearly he was in default; and, unless entitled upon the showing made to relief under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, the writ should not issue. An examination of the affidavits presented at the hearing of the motion fails to disclose any abuse of discretion on the part of the court in denying the appellant relief upon the ground of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. Indeed, it appears from the affidavit of petitioner's attorney that he was familiar with rule 27 and the requirement that the costs should be paid within 30 days; and, while conversing with respondent's attorney as to paying the costs of the appeal, he expressed himself as being opposed to paying the same. He nevertheless, on September 26, 1911, the day

(18 Cal. App. 464)

BEHYMER v. SUPERIOR COURT, LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (Civ. 1,123.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 5, 1912.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 155*)—APPEAL — FAILURE TO SEASONABLY PERFECT—EXCUSABLE NEGLIGENCE—RELIEF—DISCRETION.

In holding that defendant's failure to perfect his appeal from a justice by making a deposit for costs within 30 days after notice of appeal, as required by superior court rule 27, thereby subjecting the appeal to dismissal, was not due to excusable neglect, entitling him, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, to relief, it cannot be said the superior court abused its discretion; the showing being the affidavit of defendant's counsel that he neglected to make the deposit "solely because of forgetfulness, brought about by his physical condition," due to a minor surgical operation, and during all the time in question worked under physical difficulties, due to nervousness resulting from said operation, by reason whereof, according to the affidavit of his physician, "he suffered discomfort and dis-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes on which the appeal was taken, at petitioner's request, promised to pay the costs, upon his client's promise to come to his office and pay them later. That petitioner's attorney, according to his affidavit, "fully intended to pay said costs, and neglected to do so solely because of forgetfulness, brought about by his physical condition," due to the fact that on September 28, 1911, he submitted to a minor surgical operation, and during all of the time from September 26th to November 4th worked under physical difficulties, due to nervousness resulting from said operation, by reason whereof, according to the affidavit of the physician, "he suffered discomfort and distress which rendered him unable to properly attend to his business affairs." It further appears from a counter affidavit filed that on November 4th petitioner's attorney, in conversation with the attorney for respondent, assigned as a reason for noncompliance with said rule the fact that appellant had not paid to him the said costs, and that he personally refused to advance the same for his said client. Not only does it appear there was a conflict in the evidence as to the reason for appellant's neglect and failure to pay the costs necessary to perfect his appeal; but, even if uncontradicted, the showing made by appellant fails to exhibit facts upon which this court would be justified in holding the trial court abused its discretion in making the order complained of.

The case of Kraker v. Superior Court, 15 Cal. App. 651, 115 Pac. 663, upon which petitioner relies, has no reference to the facts under review. It differs from this in the fact that the appeal there had been perfected in all respects as required by law within the time allowed therefor; whereas, in the case at bar, the appeal was not perfected by paying the fees required as a condition of filing the papers until after the expiration of the time prescribed therefor.

The writ is denied.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

18 Cal. App. 421

KNOBLOCH v. BADER et al. (Civ. 926.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 1, 1912.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 520*)—ACTION ON—
FRAUD INDUCING SIGNING—EVIDENCE.

In an action on promissory notes given in payment for certain real estate and an assignment of a right to take gravel from certain lands, evidence held to show no fraudulent representation as to the length of time the right to take gravel would run.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1813, 1832, 1836, 1837; Dec. Dig. § 520.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 97*)—ACTION ON—
FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

Where, as consideration for notes, there passed to the maker a deed to certain property with two different licenses to take gravel from other lands, the cancellation of one of the licenses after the removal of gravel thereunder would not avoid the notes as a failure of consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 166–212, 1372–1376; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by F. Knobloch against F. Bader and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Everts & Ewing, for appellants. E. S. Van Meter and N. C. Coldwell, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial in an action on two certain promissory notes. The case was thus: On the 19th day of April, 1904, the plaintiff made and executed a deed of certain described real estate containing gravel; also an assignment of all right which the plaintiff had to take gravel from certain lands of the Pacific Improvement Company at a place called Pollasky, by virtue of a contract between one T. W. Pratt and said company; and also all the right that the plaintiff had under a certain verbal contract with one J. M. Braly to take gravel from described lands opposite Pollasky. In partial consideration of the deed and assignment, the defendants executed and delivered to the plaintiff two promissory notes—the subject of this action.

Defendants set forth in their pleadings, and now claim, that plaintiff represented to them that he had an assignment from Pratt of a right granted him by the Pacific Improvement Company to remove gravel from their lands for a period of two years in such quantities as he might desire; that this representation was fraudulently made, Pratt's right to remove gravel not being in fact for any definite period; that it was upon the strength of this false and fraudulent representation, and upon no other consideration whatever, that defendants accepted the said deed and assignment and made the said promissory notes.

[1] The court found against the defendants' position, which finding, upon an examination of the record, we conclude is amply supported by the evidence.

In the course of the negotiations, there evidently was something said to the effect that plaintiff's interest in the lands of the Pacific Improvement Company was for the period of two years; but plaintiff did not, as is asserted by defendants, pretend or represent that he had a definite arrangement for that length of time. On the contrary, according to the testimony introduced by the plaintiff, he told the defendants that he was selling them only such interest as Pratt had transferred to him in said gravel land at Pollasky. The attorney who drew up the papers in the transaction for the parties testified that the plaintiff, in the presence of defendant Bader, referring to his interest in the land, said: "I do not know just exactly what it is, * * * whether a contract or a lease. I do not know just what it is, but it is some kind of an agreement that Pratt has with the Pacific Improvement Company to take gravel from the land for two years." At this time Pratt was on his deathbed and unable to be seen, and apparently the parties were unable to learn just what the nature and extent of Pratt's interest in this land was; but the plaintiff nevertheless gave the defendants all the light he could on the subject, and they knew as much about it as he did himself. Hence it is plain that he practiced no deceit upon them.

[2] On the point of failure of consideration, in addition to the three property rights transferred as above mentioned, there were two others, and they all passed as one consideration in solido; and the defendants, according to the evidence introduced by plaintiff, having received just what they bargained for, and having removed gravel from the property of the Pacific Improvement Company for about a year under the Pratt lease or license, we cannot conceive how it can be successfully contended that the transaction was without consideration.

Having come to this view on the evidence in the case, it is unnecessary to discuss the questions as to whether or not defendants' pleadings and evidence allege and prove facts showing a rescission by them.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

(18 Cal. App. 339)

FIDDYMENT v. JOHNSON et al. (Civ. 948.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 24, 1912.)

1. SALES (§ 218½*)—DELIVERY—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Civ. Code, § 1140, declares that the title to personal property sold passes to the buyer whenever the parties agree upon a present transfer, and the thing itself is identified. Plaintiff agreed to sell to defendant all the baled hay belonging to him, situated in a certain barn, at an agreed price per ton, and at the time of the agreement received $400 on the purchase, and subsequently made deliveries from time to time, and after the balance of the hay, while in the barns, was ruined by flood brought action to recover the balance of the agreed price as upon a completed sale. Held, that the question whether the parties had agreed upon a present transfer was one of fact for the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 586, 587; Dec. Dig. § 218½.*]

2. SALES (§ 218½*)—DELIVERY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action to recover the balance of hay, alleged to have been sold and delivered to plaintiff, held sufficient to support a finding that there was a present sale or transfer of title at the time of making the agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 586, 587; Dec. Dig. § 218½.*]

3. SALES (§ 200*)—DELIVERY—WEIGHING OR MEASURING.

Where goods are identified, and the parties agree upon a present transfer, the fact that weighing or measuring is necessary to ascertain the price to be finally paid does not affect the question of the transfer of title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 524-528; Dec. Dig. § 200.*]

4. SALES (§ 201*)—DELIVERY—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—PLACE OF DELIVERY.

Where goods are identified, and the parties agree upon a present transfer, the fact that the seller has to deliver them at some point of shipment is not necessarily controlling on the question of the transfer of title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 529-541; Dec. Dig. § 201.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Jas. M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Frank A. Fiddymont against M. Johnson and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jas. P. Sweeney, for appellants. Meredith, Landis & Johnson, J. D. Meredith, and J. W. Henderson, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment and order denying defendants' motion for a new trial.

On or about the 15th day of January, 1907, plaintiff sold or agreed to sell to defendants all the baled hay belonging to plaintiff, situate in two certain barns, at an agreed price per ton. At the time of the agreement, $400 was paid on the purchase, and thereafter, from time to time, as appellants sent their schooners for the hay, portions were delivered and subsequently paid for. On the 23d day of March, however, a flood occurred, which ruined and damaged the balance of the hay as it remained in the barns, and, the purchasers refusing to pay therefor, this action was brought to recover the balance as upon a completed sale of hay.

The theory of plaintiff was and is that by the contract entered into the title to the hay passed to the purchasers, and that its subsequent loss before actual delivery and removal, occurring without the fault of the plaintiff, must be borne by the purchasers.

The principal and really only point to be determined upon this appeal is as to whether or not the evidence supports the finding that title to the hay passed from the seller to the buyers at the making of the contract.

It is true that appellants, in their brief, raise the question as to the authority of Webber to make any contract for purchase, other than one of delivery f. o. b. at the river bank or landing. But all discussion as to the agency of Webber in whatever contract he did make is foreclosed by the stipulation entered into by the appellants at the trial. It was stipulated by appellants that, in the negotiations between Mr. Webber and Mr. Fiddymment in the transaction of the sale of the hay from Fiddymment to appellants, Mr. Webber was the agent of appellants. This was a full and complete stipulation that Webber was the agent of appellants in the transaction involved in this suit; and it is now too late to urge that appellants were not bound by his contract, because, forsooth, he might have violated his instructions as to the terms upon which he might make purchases.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1, 2] Returning, now, to the only real question involved in the appeal, does the record show sufficient to support a finding of a present sale or transfer of title at the time of making the agreement? We think it clearly does. "The title to personal property sold or exchanged passes to the buyer whenever the parties agree upon a present transfer, and the thing itself is identified, whether it is separated from other things or not." Civ. Code, § 1140.

The hay in this case, as the evidence abundantly shows, was fully identified. It was all the baled hay belonging to plaintiff contained in two certain barns, a smaller and a larger barn. The smaller barn contained only baled hay, all belonging to plaintiff. The larger barn contained, besides the baled hay, some loose unbaled hay belonging to him, and some baled barley hay belonging to one Chambers. The baled hay of plaintiff in the larger barn consisted of a small portion of barley hay and alfalfa hay. The barn was divided into separate compartments. In one was baled hay belonging to Mr. Chambers; in another was baled hay, barley, and alfalfa belonging to plaintiff; and in another baled alfalfa belonging to plaintiff, and on top of this baled barley hay belonging to Mr. Chambers. There was no other baled hay in the barn. The sale was of all of plaintiff's baled hay. It was all examined and identified by Mr. Webber, who also was shown, and examined, the Chambers hay, with a view to purchasing it, which he subsequently did. Nothing remained to be done to identify any of the hay sold. It was ready for delivery whenever it should be called for. The evidence as to what occurred at the transaction shows that Mr. Webber examined the hay, and finally agreed to buy all of plaintiff's baled hay in the two barns at a stipulated price per ton. Plaintiff then consented, at Webber's request, that the hay might remain in the barns until June 1st, to be delivered as the purchasers might send their schooners for it from time to time. After that had been agreed upon, Webber asked plaintiff if he would get the hay to the river when the purchasers sent their schooners for it; and plaintiff agreed to do so. The smaller barn was situated on the river bank; but the larger barn was some 200 yards away, and the hay had to be hauled from the larger barn to the river bank. The entire contract was in parol. No time of payment seems to have been stated; but $400 was paid as a deposit, and other payments made from time to time as deliveries were made. Webber was called as a witness, and remembered buying some hay from plaintiff in January, 1907, but did not remember anything of the details.

From the evidence presented to the court, it was a question for the court to determine as to whether or not the parties had agreed upon a present transfer. Where the intention of the parties is not clear, but must be determined from the facts and circumstances of the case, it is a question of fact for the jury or trial judge. 35 Cyc. 278; Prowers v. Nowles, 42 Colo. 442, 94 Pac. 347; Lobdell v. Horton, 71 Mich. 681, 40 N. W. 28; Sherwood v. Walker, 66 Mich. 568, 33 N. W. 919; Toohey v. Plummer, 65 Mich. 688, 32 N. W. 897; Fuller v. Bean, 34 N. H. 290; Dyer v. Libby, 61 Me. 45; Smith v. Friend, 15 Cal. 125.

[3] If the goods are identified, and the parties agree upon a present transfer, it does not matter that weighing or measuring is necessary to ascertain the price to be finally paid. Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., 76 Cal. 212, 18 Pac. 248, 9 Am. St. Rep. 199; Lassing v. James, 107 Cal. 349, 40 Pac. 534.

[4] Neither is the fact that the seller has to deliver at some point of shipment necessarily controlling. In Dyer v. Libby, 61 Me. 45, the seller was to haul and deliver at a specified point; and it was held not controlling. In Bill v. Fuller, 146 Cal. 50, 79 Pac. 592, the seller was to deliver oranges, then on the tree, at the railroad station, when wanted by the purchaser. The oranges sold were all that were grown by the seller, except the St. Michaels. The court, speaking through Mr. Justice Shaw, in concluding its opinion, said: "Nor do we wish to be understood as holding that the title to the crop did not pass as soon as the contract was executed. The agreement in form imports a present sale; the thing sold was in existence, and was identified and separated from other things. Under section 1141 [1140?] of the Civil Code, it would seem that title passed at once, and that the oranges remained on the tree at the risk of the buyer." See, also, Greenbaum v. Martinez, 86 Cal. 459, 25 Pac. 12.

In the case at bar, the subject-matter of the sale was perfectly identified; and the evidence was such as to justify the conclusion of the court that the parties had agreed upon a present transfer. The evidence therefore supports the finding that title passed to the purchaser at the execution of the contract, and the judgment and order should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

18 Cal. App. 423

STOECKLE v. KARR et al. (Civ. 922.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 1, 1912.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*) — FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where the evidence, though conflicting, supports the court's findings, they will not be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by J. A. Henry Stoeckle against William Karr and others. From a judgment against him, William Karr appeals. Affirmed.

Lee M. Olds and Frank Shilling, for appellant. J. C. Flannery, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by defendant, William Karr, from a judgment against him in favor of the plaintiff.

On the 9th day of August, 1910, the appellant and the plaintiff entered into a contract whereby appellant was to sell to the plaintiff a certain cigar store on Devisadero street in San Francisco. On that day plaintiff paid on account of the purchase price the sum of $30, and two days later he paid the balance of $820. Subsequently a dispute arose between the parties, and the property never changed hands. Plaintiff demanded the return of his money, and, his demand being refused, he brought this action for money had and received, upon the theory that no sale of the cigar store had been effected, and recovered judgment as above stated. The sole ground urged for a reversal of the judgment is that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings. Our study of the record leads us to the conclusion that this view is untenable.

The evidence introduced by defendant tends to show that the plaintiff was offered the cigar stand on either of two propositions. By one he was to pay for it the sum of $850 as it stood without condition or limitation of any kind. By the other proposition an invoice of the stock of goods was to be made, and the plaintiff was to pay therefor at wholesale rates, together with the sum of $150 for the good will of the business. Defendant's evidence tended to show that the plaintiff accepted the former proposition, and accordingly paid the agreed price of $850. Plaintiff, on the other hand, introduced evidence tending to prove that he paid the $850 with the understanding that $150 was for the good will of the business, and with guaranty and arrangement that the stock of goods would amount in value to $700; that unless it did so no sale was to be considered effected. It is true that the evidence is not at all direct and clear on this point, but that is largely due, we think, to the fact that the plaintiff is of foreign birth and not very familiar with the English language. The circumstances of the case tend, however, strongly to support this view. No arrangement was made for the assignment of the lease of the store to plaintiff until after the $850 was paid, and no assignment of it was in fact made to the plaintiff. It was agreed, according to the evidence on behalf of plaintiff, that an inventory of the stock was to be made, and it is not contradicted that the plaintiff with his son repeatedly called by appointment with the appellant at the store for the purpose of taking the same. Each time, however, the plaintiff was put off on what must have seemed to the trial court a disingenuous excuse and one indicating bad faith on the part of the appellant. On the last of these visits appellant asked plaintiff to take possession of the store and to make the necessary inventory afterwards, and upon plaintiff's refusal to do so declared that no inventory of the stock was necessary, and moreover that plaintiff's receipt would not disclose that he was entitled to one. All this time appellant apparently remained in charge of the business, taking and keeping for his own use the receipts thereof. According to the contract, the agent of the appellant, through whom the sale was negotiated, was to file with the recorder a five days' notice of the sale, which he failed to do until the day that plaintiff gave notice of rescission, and it was not until this day either that the agent paid over the amount of the second payment to appellant.

To say the least, it is certain that there is evidence in the case amply sufficient to support the findings, and under the familiar rule that when there is a substantial conflict appellate courts will not disturb the findings of the trial court, the judgment must be sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

18 Cal. App. 433

BAKER v. BOARD OF FIRE PENSION FUND COM'RS. (Civ. 1,083.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 2, 1912.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 200*)—EMPLOYEES—MUNICIPAL DEPARTMENTS—FIRE—RIGHT TO PENSION—DEATH OF FIREMAN—"DIED IN PERFORMANCE OF DUTY."

San Francisco Charter, c. 7, art. 9, § 5, requires, as a condition to the duty of the board of fire pension fund commissioners to provide a pension for a widow, that her husband shall have died "in the performance of his duty." A fireman driving a hose wagon received a broken back and other injuries by the overturning of the wagon, and, as a result of the pain he suffered, became insane and committed suicide. Held that, as he was neither legally nor morally responsible for killing himself, his death was caused without the intervention of any outside or independent cause, and he died in the performance of his duty, so as to entitle his widow to the pension.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 547; Dec. Dig. § 200.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Mandamus by Catherine Baker against the Board of Fire Pension Fund Commissioners of the City and County of San Francisco. From a judgment granting a peremptory writ, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Percy V. Long, City Atty., and J. F. English, Asst. City Atty., for appellants. John T. Williams, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment granting to plaintiff a peremptory writ of mandate against defendants, upon their refusal to answer after the overruling of their demurrer to plaintiff's petition, requiring defendants to grant, approve, and allow a pension to plaintiff, as the widow of one Frederick Joseph Baker, alleged to have been killed while in the discharge of his duty as a fireman of the city and county of San Francisco.

Section 5 of chapter 7, art. 9, of the San Francisco charter, makes it the duty of the board of fire pension fund commissioners to provide a pension in a designated amount, out of the firemen's relief fund, for the widow of any "member or employé of the fire department who may be killed while in the performance of his duty."

The real question to be determined is: Do the admitted facts in the case show that Frederick Joseph Baker, the late husband of plaintiff, was killed while in the performance of his duty?

In this connection, it may be noted that respondent claims that it is alleged in the complaint, and so admitted by demurrer, as an ultimate fact that said Baker was killed while in the performance of his duty. However, we think that from the whole record and the connection in which this allegation occurs it should properly be treated as a conclusion drawn by the pleader from the particular facts, which are pleaded in detail. For the purposes of this discussion, we shall so treat it; and the question then arises: Do the particular facts pleaded show that said Baker was killed in the performance of his duty as a member of the fire department?

In substance, these facts are that on the 15th day of June, 1910, said Baker, while in the performance of his duty in driving a hose wagon, received a broken back and other bodily injuries by the overturning of said hose wagon; that, as a result of such injuries, he suffered great pain and anguish, which caused him to become insane, and while so insane, and because thereof, he killed himself on the 3d day of September, 1910. Under these circumstances, can it be said that Baker, within the meaning of the provisions of the charter, was "killed while in the performance of his duty?" The trial court was of the opinion that he was, and accordingly directed that his widow be allowed the pension provided by law.

Neither side to the appeal has been able to cite to us any authority which may be said to be squarely in point. While the case is not without difficulty, we think that the decision of the trial court was correct. The injuries which Baker received may justly be said to have been the proximate cause of his death. They set in motion a train of events, operating from cause to effect, that, without the intervention of any outside and independent cause, resulted in his death.

We say that his death was not brought about by the intervention of any outside and independent cause advisedly; for, although his own hand inflicted the wound of which he died, this was not an act for which he was either legally or morally responsible. Upon this phase of the argument, the cases holding that suicide or self-destruction while insane does not exempt an insurer from liability under a policy, excepting from the risk a death by suicide or the insured's own hand, where the insured commits suicide while insane, are illuminative. See Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 82 U. S. 580, 21 L. Ed. 236; Breasted v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 8 N. Y. 299, 59 Am. Dec. 482; Newton v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co., 76 N. Y. 426, 32 Am. Rep. 335; Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 527, 7 Sup. Ct. 685, 30 L. Ed. 740.

It has been said that "self-destruction by a fellow being bereft of reason can with no more propriety be ascribed to the act of his own hand than to the deadly instrument that may have been used by him for the purpose," and was no more his act in the sense of the law "than if he had been impelled by an irresistible physical force." Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, supra.

So, in the case at bar, Baker cannot be said to have been the cause, either morally or legally, of his own death. The primary and efficient cause of his death was the dreadful injuries he received. These injuries set in motion a chain of events that, operating in a direct line from cause to effect, and without the intervention of any independent force, resulted in his death. His death resulted without the intervention of any independent force; for the self-inflicted wound was the result of the insanity, which was in turn caused by the injuries. The injuries were thus the efficient and proximate cause of his death. "An efficient, adequate cause, being found, must be deemed the true cause, unless some other cause, not incidental to it, but independent of it, is shown to have intervened between it and the result." Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Murray, 16 Colo. 296, 26 Pac. 774, 25 Am. St. Rep. 267.

The conclusion reached by the trial court certainly accords with the general purpose and spirit of the provision of the charter, which intends a provision for the support of those dependent upon firemen whose death results from a faithful performance of a very hazardous duty. Buckendorf v. Minneapolis Fire Department Relief Ass'n, 112 Minn. 298, 127 N. W. 1053, 1133.

The judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

18 Cal. App. 442

REED v. HAMMOND, County Auditor.
(Civ. 1,065.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 2, 1912.)

1. COUNTIES (§ 61*)—CREATION OF OFFICES—POWER OF LEGISLATURE.

Subject to the provisions of the Constitution, the Legislature may create county offices, prescribe the tenure thereof, fix the salary, and determine the qualifications required to render one eligible to election or appointment thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 86; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

2. INFANTS (§ 17*) — ASSISTANT PROBATION OFFICER.

Under Pol. Code, § 4013, providing that the officers of a county are the sheriff, auditor, etc., "and such other officers as may be provided by law," the office of assistant probation officer of a county of the seventh class, created by an act specifying the tenure of the office, fixing the salary and making it chargeable on and payable out of the county treasury, is a county office.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

3. OFFICERS (§ 20*)—QUALIFICATIONS—"ELECTION"—WOMEN.

Under Pol. Code, § 58, providing that, except where otherwise specially provided, an elector is eligible to an office for which he is an elector, and that no person is eligible who is not such an elector, and County Government Act (Gen. Laws 1910, Act 837) § 54, providing that no person shall be eligible to a county office who, at the time of his election, is not an elector of the county in which the duties of the office are to be exercised, a person who is not an elector of a county is not eligible to any office of that county, whether filled by election or appointment, the term "at the time of his election" not being limited in meaning to an election in the popular sense, in which all electors participate, but also including an appointment to office; and hence, prior to the constitutional amendment extending the elective franchise, a woman was not eligible to the office of assistant probation officer of a county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. §§ 24, 25; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2329-2336; vol. 8, pp. 7647-7648.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by J. A. Reed against Chauncey R. Hammond, as Auditor of the County of San Diego, for a peremptory writ of mandate. From an order and judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

H. S. Utley, Dist. Atty., for appellant.
Luce & Luce, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order of court, pursuant to which a peremptory writ of mandate was issued, commanding defendant, who was auditor of San Diego county, to issue to Lillie A. Reed, the wife of petitioner, his warrant upon the county treasurer in the sum of $120, claimed as salary for the month of May, 1911, as assistant probation officer of San Diego county, to which office, on May 1, 1911, she had been appointed, pursuant to the provisions of the Juvenile Court Act (St. 1911, p. 658) approved April 5, 1911.

The sole question involved is whether, prior to the constitutional amendment extending the elective franchise, women were eligible to appointment to the office of such assistant probation officer.

[1] It is unnecessary to cite authority in support of the proposition that the Legislature, subject to the provisions of the Constitution, may create county offices, prescribe the tenure thereof, fix the salary, and determine the qualifications required to render one eligible to election or appointment to such office. Section 55 of the County Government Act (Gen. Laws of Cal. p. 137), as codified in section 4013, Political Code, provides that the officers of a county are the sheriff, auditor, etc., "and such other officers as may be provided by law."

[2] The office of assistant probation officer of San Diego county was one created by the Legislature in and for all counties of the seventh class, to which San Diego belongs. The act specified the tenure of office, fixed the salary of the incumbent, and made it chargeable upon and payable out of the county treasury. Clearly it was a county office; indeed, respondent, upon the authority of Nicholl v. Koster, 157 Cal. 416, 108 Pac. 302, concedes it so to be.

[3] Section 58, Political Code, as enacted in 1872, provided that "every elector is eligible to the office for which he is an elector, except where otherwise specially provided; and no person is eligible who is not such an elector." In 1891 this section was amended by adding thereto the words "except when otherwise specially provided." It is apparent that this amendment was by the Legislature deemed necessary, in order to render effective an amendment, adopted at the same time, to section 792 of the Political Code, whereby women were made eligible to appointment as notaries public. Stats. 1891, p. 29. Section 54 of the County Government Act (Gen. Laws of Cal. p. 137), as codified in section 4023 of the Political Code, so far as it concerns the question here involved, was enacted on the same day, in 1872, as said section 58 of the Political Code. As originally enacted, it was as follows: "No person is eligible to a county office who, at the time of his election, is not of the age of twenty-one years, a citizen of the state, and an elector of the county in which the duties of the office are to be exercised." While it has been amended from time to time, no change has been made in the requirement that in order to render one eligible to a county office, other than superintendent of schools, school trustee, or member of the board of education, to which a woman may be elected or appointed, he must, at the time of his election, be an elector of the county wherein the duties of the office are to be exercised. In 1907 (St. 1907, p. 354) it was repealed and re-enacted as a part of the County Government Act, consisting of 234 sections.

Respondent contends that the provisions of this section have reference solely and alone to those officers selected by popular vote at an election in which the electors of the county give expression to their choice in filling the office, and not to county officers selected and designated by appointment. The case turns on the meaning to be given the words "at the time of his election," as used in the statute. An appointment is generally made by one person, or by a limited number constituting a board or tribunal acting under delegated power; while an election, in the popular sense, is a proceeding wherein all the electors at large participate in the designation of an official, and the one thus chosen to fill the office is said to be elected. In this sense, no incumbent of an office could be said to be elected to an office, in the absence of an election affording an opportunity to the electors to give such expression to their wishes in choosing the official. Hence, under this narrow construction, the fact that, while one who was not an elector or citizen, or of the age of 21 years, would be ineligible to an office, if elected thereto, nevertheless, the want of any of such qualifications, since there was no "time of his election" to which the possession of the qualifications could relate, would constitute no obstacle to his appointment to fill a vacancy occurring therein. Clearly it was not the intent of the Legislature that such interpretation should be given the statute. Considering the scope of the entire legislative scheme embodied in the County Government Act, and the fact that it provides for the selection of officers both by election and appointment, it is clear to our mind that the purpose of the section before us was to prescribe the qualifications of all county officers, in the absence of the possession of which they are ineligible, and this whether designated at an election, in the popular sense of the term, or designated by appointment. "In the construction of a statute, the intention of the Legislature is to be ascertained, not so much from the phraseology in which the intent has been expressed, as the general tenor and scope of legislation on the subject." People v. Eichelroth, 78 Cal. 141, 20 Pac. 304, 2 L. R. A. 770; Palache v. Pacific Ins. Co., 42 Cal. 419. In our judgment, the words "at the time of his election," as used in the statute, have reference to the time of the selection or designation to the office; and the provision as to eligibility contained in section 4023, Political Code, applies alike to all county officers, whether designated at an election, commonly so termed, or by appointment.

The declared purpose of the juvenile court act is to give to dependent and delinquent children of both sexes care and discipline approximating as nearly as possible that which should be given by parents. It is impossible to accomplish this purpose in full measure without the aid and assistance of women ready and willing to sacrifice their personal comfort and ease for the good and welfare, not only of such dependent children, but for the good of society in general, of which they form an important part. The Legislature having this in mind, it is undoubtedly true that its failure to remove the disability of women to fill this important office, in the performance of the duties of which she is peculiarly fitted, was due solely to an oversight. Fortunately the disability due to the omission on the part of the Legislature has been removed by the constitutional amendment extending the franchise, since the adoption of which the ground here urged for denying petitioner compensation for services rendered can no longer furnish a subject for the zeal of those whose duty it is to protect the county treasury from the payment of moneys to persons who, under the law, are not entitled thereto, and this whether they be alleged officials or extra deputies allowed to county officers.

With great reluctance, we are forced to the conclusion that the judgment and order from which this appeal is prosecuted should be reversed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

18 Cal. App. 460

SAN DIEGO COUNTY v. BRYAN. (Civ. 1,056.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 5, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 3, 1912.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 17*)—COMPENSATION—MARRIAGE FEES.

Under the county government act (Pol. Code, § 4238), providing that in counties of the ninth class justices of the peace in townships having a population of 16,000 or more shall receive $150 a month in full of all compensation in both civil and criminal cases, and section 4290, providing that salaries and fees provided in that title shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind rendered by the officers therein named, a justice of the peace in a township having more than 16,000 population, in a county of the ninth class, cannot retain for his own use fees received by him for solemnizing marriages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 28; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

2. COUNTIES (§ 80*)—OFFICERS—EXTRA COMPENSATION—STATUTES—STRICT CONSTRUCTION.

Under the county government act (Pol. Code, § 4292), providing that all salaried officers of the several counties and townships of the state shall collect for the use of their respective counties, and pay into the county treasury, the fees allowed by law, except where such fee, or a percentage thereof, is allowed to the officers, such fees cannot be retained by an officer to his own use, unless specially provided by law; the statute being strictly construed in favor of the government against the claimant for extra compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 125, 131-134; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by the County of San Diego for a peremptory writ of mandamus against Solon Bryan. From a judgment denying the writ, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

H. S. Utley, Dist. Atty., for appellant.
Adam Thompson and J. C. Hizar, for respondent

ALLEN, P. J. This is an appeal from the judgment of the superior court of San Diego county, denying a peremptory writ of mandamus, directing the defendant to pay into the county treasury of said county money received by him, as a justice of the peace, for solemnizing marriages.

[1] The only question presented upon the appeal involves the right of the defendant as such justice to retain as his own such fees; it not being disputed that if such fees belong to the county the proceeding sought is an appropriate one. The defendant, a justice of the peace, was elected and inducted into office since the adoption of the county government act, as amended in 1909. San Diego, by said act, is made a county of the ninth class. Section 4238 of such county government act (Pol. Code) provides: "In counties of the ninth class the county officers shall receive as compensation for the services required of them by law, the following salaries, to wit: * * * 15. Justices of the peace, in all townships having a population of sixteen thousand or more, one hundred and fifty dollars per month, in full of all compensation in both civil and criminal cases." The answer admits that the population of San Diego township is such as to bring respondent within this limitation as to salary; his contention, however, being that the solemnizing of a marriage is neither a civil nor a criminal case, and therefore the fees received by him are his personal property. The authority of a justice of the peace to solemnize marriages is conferred by section 70 of the Civil Code. Section 4290 of the county government act provides "the salaries and fees provided in this title shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers named in this title, either as officers or ex officio officers, their deputies and assistants, unless in this title otherwise provided," with certain exceptions, not here applicable. This section seems to us to comprehend all of the fees received for services rendered in an official capacity, whether performed in a strictly civil or criminal case, or otherwise. We are not of opinion that a proper construction of the county government act confers upon a justice of the peace of the township named the right to retain as his own any fees received by him in his official capacity. In County of Humboldt v. Stern, 136 Cal. 63, 68 Pac. 324, in construing the county government act of 1897 (St. 1897, p. 518), and that portion thereof identical with section 4290, the Supreme Court says: "This provision is a legislative declaration that the officers shall not receive any compensation from the county, other than the salaries therein named for any services they may render it, either in the line of their official duty or otherwise. * * * If he is of the opinion that the services asked of him are not within the line of his official duty, he can decline to perform them; but if he performs such services he cannot afterwards insist that it was not a part of his official duty, and claim a compensation therefor." By analogy, when an officer performs an act, the sole authority for which performance rests upon his official position, he may not insist that the same, when performed, is not an official act.

[2] The county government act provides (section 4292) that all salaried officers of the several counties and townships of this state shall charge and collect for the use of their respective counties, and pay into the county treasury, on the first Monday in each month, the fees now or hereafter allowed by law in all cases, except where such fees, or a percentage thereof, is allowed such officers, and excepting, also, such fees as are a charge against the county. The allowance of such fees, in order that they may be retained by the officers, must be specially provided by law. The rule of strict construction in favor of the government as against a claimant for extra compensation, where the enactment in reference thereto admits of two constructions, is applicable here. Irwin v. County of Yuba, 119 Cal. 686, 52 Pac. 35, and cases cited. We do not regard the case of City of St. Louis v. Sommers, 148 Mo. 398, 50 S. W. 102, as an authority in point. In that case, the statute only provided that the salary should be received in full of services performed in court; in other words, for strictly judicial duties. The Code provisions of this state under consideration are to the effect that such salary shall be in full of all services of any and every kind rendered.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

We are of opinion that the court erred in its judgment denying the writ, and the same is reversed, with instructions to issue a peremptory writ of mandate, commanding and directing the respondent forthwith to pay into the county treasury the fees collected for solemnizing marriages during his present term of office.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SILAW, J.

18 Cal. App. 457

POOLE v. GRAND CIRCLE, WOMEN OF WOODCRAFT. (Civ. 1,009.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 5, 1912.)

INSURANCE (§ 291*)—LIFE—AVOIDANCE FOR MISREPRESENTATION—"ILLNESS."

Under Civ. Code, § 3533, which states the maxim that the law disregards trifles, an insurance policy was not invalidated by answers of the insured, in her application, that she had not been confined to her house by illness or consulted a physician since childhood, though, about two years prior to the application, she had been confined to the house by an acute cold, causing suppressed menstruation and a soreness and congestion of the womb, at which time a physician paid her one visit, as "illness" contemplated in the application is a disease or ailment which affects the soundness and healthfulness of the system.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 681-690, 694-696; Dec. Dig. § 291.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3390-3391.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. E. Densmore, Judge.

Action by John R. Poole against the Grand Circle, Women of Woodcraft. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 119 Pac. 201.

John H. Foley, for appellant. Charles S. Burnell, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff, as the surviving husband of Gertie S. Poole, deceased, sues to recover upon a life insurance policy which had been issued to his wife by defendant, and wherein he was made the beneficiary. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which defendant appeals.

The policy was issued on October 26, 1908, upon an application therefor signed by the applicant on September 19, 1908. Defendant resists payment upon the ground of an alleged breach of warranty, in that certain statements made in the application, and which are claimed to constitute strict warranties, were untrue. Counsel for the respective parties devote a large part of their briefs to a discussion of the question as to whether statements made by the applicant should be construed as strict warranties. A determination of such question, however, is not essential to a decision of the appeal. Appellant's contention in this regard may be conceded. The question then arises, Were the statements untrue? The trial court found they were true; hence, if this finding is sustained by the evidence, the judgment must be affirmed, upon the ground that there was no breach of the alleged warranties.

The questions and answers thereto alleged to be false are as follows: "Q. When were you last confined to the house by illness? A. Not since childhood, 3½ years old. Q. When did you last consult a physician? A. Not since childhood. Q. Have you now, or have you had, any illness, disease, or injury not mentioned in the foregoing questions and answers? A. No. Q. Is the menstruation regular and normal? A. Yes. Q. Have you ever had any inflammation or other disease of the ovaries or tubes? A. No." Gertie S. Poole died on February 21, 1909. At the trial, Dr. Bacon, the physician who attended deceased in her last illness, was called as a witness, and testified that, some two years prior to the making of the application for insurance by deceased, he made one visit to her, at which time she was confined to her bed, suffering from an acute cold, and as a result of which there was temporary difficulty during the menstrual period; that he gave her a little medicine, and she got better right away; that on October 1st following she called at his office, when he made an examination and found everything normal, except that the womb was a trifle small and a little bit sore, due to the congestion resulting from the cold; that early in 1907 he gave her a general tonic to build her up and give her an appetite. There is no evidence, other than the fact that when the physician called at her house he found her in bed, that the insured was ever confined to her house by illness. Whether her being in bed at the hour of his call was due to the cold with which she was afflicted is not made to appear. Indeed, for aught that is shown by the evidence, she may have been in bed only during the time of his single visit; and at what time in the day this occurred is not shown. He says he could not say how long she was confined to the house. Moreover, "illness," as here used, must be construed as something more than a mere indisposition, due to a temporary cold, accompanied by a painful menstrual period. "Illness," as used, means a disease or ailment of such a character as to affect the general soundness and healthfulness of the system, * * * and not a mere temporary indisposition, which does not tend to undermine and weaken the constitution of the insured." Billings v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 70 Vt. 477, 41 Atl. 518. A cold is "not to be construed as importing an absolute freedom from any bodily ailment, but rather as freedom from such ailments as would ordinarily be called disease or sickness." Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. McTague, 49 N. J. Law, 587, 9 Atl. 766, 60 Am. Rep. 661. Illness "relates to matters which have a sensible, appreciable form, * * * and applies ordinarily to matters of a substantial character," and not to a slight and temporary indisposition, speedily forgotten. Hubbard v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 100 Fed. 723, 40 C. C. A. 665. Remaining in the house for a few hours, or abstaining from the labors of one's usual calling, owing to a temporary cold or headache, cannot be construed as "confinement to the house by illness." Applying the maxim, "The law disregards trifles" (section 3533, Civ. Code), the evidence wholly fails to show the statement made by the applicant, to the effect that she had not been confined to the house by illness, to be untrue.

What we have said is equally applicable to the alleged untrue statement that she had not consulted a physician. A reasonable construction of the question implies that it should be interpreted as relating to a consultation as to some disease or illness with which the applicant was or had been afflicted, not to some feeling of trivial discomfort or temporary indisposition, not affecting the general health.

The right of a beneficiary to recover upon an insurance policy, the application for which contains a statement that the applicant has not consulted a physician since childhood, should not be defeated by evidence that years before the date of his application he consulted a physician as to a headache, due to an overlibation at a banquet, and was advised to visit a soda fountain and drink a bromo-seltzer. We concur with the learned trial judge that, if the facts presented constitute a defense to the plaintiff's right to recover, very few life insurance policies justify the faith therein of their holders.

Upon the theory contended for by appellant, that the statements made constitute strict warranties, the finding of the court that there was no breach of said warranties is fully sustained by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

18 Cal. App. 446

PAYNE v. MURPHY. (Civ. 1,040.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California, March 4, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 3, 1912.)

1. STATUTES (§ 92*)—CLASSIFICATION OF COUNTIES BY POPULATION.

Under Const. art. 11, § 5, which authorizes the Legislature to regulate the compensation of county officers in proportion to duties and for this purpose to classify the counties by population, the power of the Legislature can be exercised only for the limited purpose of enabling the compensation of county officers to be fixed and adjusted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 101; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 93*)—GENERAL OR SPECIAL LAWS—CREATION OF COUNTY OFFICES.

St. 1911, p. 1165, amending Pol. Code, § 4256, relating to the compensation of officers in counties of the twenty-seventh class, affecting only one county, and which provides that in that county a stenographer should be appointed by the judge of the superior court to hold office at the pleasure of such judge, and fixes his compensation at $100 per month to be paid as the salaries of other officers were paid, is in conflict with Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 28, which declares that the Legislature shall not pass local or special laws creating offices or prescribing powers and duties of officers in counties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 102; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; Robert M. Clarke, Judge.

Mandamus by H. M. Payne against P. H. Murphy. Demurrer to petition sustained, and judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. P. Kaetzel, for appellant. Albert Nelson, S. V. Wright, L. A. Enos, Carpenter & Gibbons, and Lamy & Putnam, for respondent.

JAMES, J. In the year 1911 the Legislature enacted certain amendments to section 4256 of the Political Code relating to the compensation of officers in counties of the twenty-seventh class. San Luis Obispo was the only county in the state affected by that legislation. Subdivision 13 of the section mentioned was amended to read as follows: "Justices of the peace, such fees as are now or may be hereafter allowed by law; provided, however, that in counties of this class a stenographer shall be appointed by the judge of the superior court in and for such counties, to hold office at the pleasure of said judge, whose duty it shall be to report and transcribe the testimony and proceedings in all preliminary examinations in all of the justices' courts in and for each and every township in said counties, as provided by section 869 of the Penal Code; and whose further duty it shall be to report the testimony and proceedings in all inquests held by the coroner and transcribe the same into longhand and file a certified copy thereof with the county clerk. Such stenographer shall receive as compensation for his services the sum of one hundred dollars per month to be paid in the same manner and at the same time as the salaries of other officers are paid; and for all transcripts made as required herein he shall receive the same fees now allowed to phonographic reporters by section 274 of the Code of Civil Procedure; he shall also be allowed his necessary traveling expenses while engaged in the performance of his duties." Stats. 1911, p. 1165.

The provisions of this subdivision, wherein it is provided that a stenographer should be appointed by the judge of the superior court, were added by the amendment. Acting under the authority assumed to be given by the amendment, on the 13th of May, 1911, the superior judge of the county of San Luis Obispo appointed appellant herein as stenographer to fill the office so created. Acting under this appointment, the stenographer proceeded to perform the duties of his office until the 6th day of June, 1911, when he demanded that the auditor deliver to him a warrant for the sum of $58 in payment of his salary for that portion of the preceding month during which he had served. The auditor refused to draw such warrant, and this proceeding of mandamus was brought to compel that officer to comply with the demand of petitioner. A demurrer to the petition was thereafter sustained, without leave to amend, and judgment followed in favor of respondent, from which an appeal has been taken.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The contention of respondent is that the act in question is special in its nature and violative of the prohibition of the Constitution in that regard.

[1] It seems to be conceded by all parties that the power of the Legislature to classify counties by population is a power to be exercised for the limited purpose of enabling the compensation of the various officers to be fixed and adjusted. The Constitution, in section 5 of article 11, seems to make that proposition very clear, and our Supreme Court has so held in a number of cases, of which we cite: Pratt v. Browne, 135 Cal. 649, 67 Pac. 1082; Sanchez v. Fordyce, 141 Cal. 427, 75 Pac. 56.

[2] If the effect of the amendment referred to was to create an office, which office is made one special to counties of the twenty-seventh class alone, then the objection of respondent that such legislation is unconstitutional must be sustained. We think that no other construction can be given to the language used by the Legislature. The stenographer was one to be appointed by the judge of the superior court, and he was to "hold office at the pleasure of said judge," and "receive as compensation for his services the sum of one hundred dollars per month, to be paid in the same manner and at the same time as the salaries of other officers are paid." It cannot be said that the intent was merely to provide assistants to the justices of the peace, and so affect the matter of their compensation, which would be a proper subject for special act applying alike to all counties of the same class. The justices of the peace had been already by general law given authority to employ a reporter to report proceedings had at preliminary examinations of persons charged with crime and to fix their compensation, which when so fixed became a county charge. Section 869, Pen. Code. It is true that one of the duties of the stenographer was to report testimony and proceedings at coroner's inquests, and that this was a duty which had theretofore been imposed upon the coroner and for which he was required to pay out of the inquest fee allowed him. To this extent it may be said that the compensation of the coroner was affected by the amendment, but the subject-matter of the amendment taken as a whole indicates very clearly that it was the design to create an office. The superior judge of the county is called upon to make the appointment, and not the officer under whom the stenographer is required to render service, and the term of office is provided to be during the pleasure of the appointing power, and a salary is affixed which is to be paid in the same manner as the salaries of other county officers are paid. The amendment seems to have had no proper place under a subdivision treating alone of fees to be paid to justices of the peace. Subdivision 28 of section 25 of article 4 of the Constitution of the state provides that the Legislature shall not pass local or special laws creating offices or prescribing the powers and duties of officers in counties. We are of opinion that the amendment under consideration is properly subject to the objection made by respondent, in that it creates an office by special law not authorized under the Constitution.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

18 Cal. App. 454

SCHERMERHORN v. LOS ANGELES PAC.
R. CO. (Civ. 1,068.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 4, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 3, 1912.)

1. ACTION (§ 48*)—JOINDER AND SEVERANCE —INJURIES TO PROPERTY AND PERSON FROM ONE TORT.

When one's person and property are both injured through the same tort, he properly brings separate actions for the injuries. Code Civ. Proc. § 427, which declares that several causes of action may be united in the same complaint, "where they all arise out of * * * (6) injuries to person, (7) injuries to property," providing that "the causes of action so united must all belong to one only of these classes."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Cent. Dig. §§ 490-510; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 948*)—BAR OF ACTION—NECESSITY OF PLEADING.

Where plaintiff recovered in one action for injury to property and then brought action for injury to his person from the same tort, the recovery in the first action, if available as a bar to the second, must be pleaded in the answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1787-1794; Dec. Dig. § 948.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by C. P. Schermerhorn, administrator with the will annexed of E. B. Osborne, deceased, substituted for E. B. Osborne, against the Los Angeles Pacific Railroad Company of California. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. McKinley (W. R. Millar, of counsel), for appellant. John M. York, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff in this action suffered personal injuries through the occurrence of a collision between an automobile in which he was riding and a car of defendant company. He brought a separate action to recover damages sustained by reason of the injury to his automobile, in which judgment was rendered in the sum of $700. This action, being one to recover for the personal injuries suffered, came to trial after judgment had been rendered and satisfied in the first-mentioned cause. In the course of the trial of this action the plaintiff offered in evidence the judgment roll in the other action referred to for the purpose of showing an adjudication of some of the facts involved in the cause then on trial, which evidence was admitted by the court. The jury found that plaintiff had been damaged in his person in the sum of $6,000, and judgment was entered accordingly.

[1] On this appeal but one point is made in support of the contention of appellant that a reversal should be ordered: It is insisted that, where damage has been caused to the person and property of an individual by the same tortious act committed by another, separate actions cannot be brought to recover the different damages so resulting, and that as it appeared in this action that plaintiff had recovered judgment, which had been satisfied, as to the injury suffered by damage to his automobile, he was barred from any further recovery on account of damages of any kind which may have been caused him by the same negligent act of defendant. There are two very conclusive answers to be made to this contention: First, it is expressly provided by section 427 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the plaintiff may unite several causes of action, where they arise out of "(6) injuries to person, (7) injuries to property," and "the causes of action so united must all belong to one only of these classes." In construing this provision of the Code, it has been held that causes of action for damages to person and property, based upon a forcible trespass as the wrongful cause, could not be united in one action. Lamb v. Harbaugh, 105 Cal. 680, 39 Pac. 56. The case of Thelin v. Stewart, 100 Cal. 372, 34 Pac. 861, is also in point.

[2] The second answer that may be made to the contention of appellant is that nowhere in the course of the proceeding had in the trial court was the objection which is here made raised. It was incumbent upon the defendant, if it intended to rely upon the adjudication of the claim for damages caused to the automobile of plaintiff, as a bar to a recovery here, to have pleaded that defense in its answer. This it did not do.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

18 Cal. App. 437

UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO. v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF MONROVIA. (Civ. 1,037.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 2, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 1, 1912.)

BANKS AND BANKING (§ 130*)—DEPOSITS—TRUST FUNDS—LIABILITY.

A check payable to a guardian was sent to a bank with instructions to deliver to the guardian. It was so delivered and was deposited by him in an account which he then opened in his individual name. Thereafter the guardian drew out and embezzled the deposit. It was not claimed that the bank received any part of the amount embezzled. Held, that the bank was not liable to the minor or the guardian's bondsman.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 319-325; Dec. Dig. § 130.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company against the First National Bank of Monrovia. From a judgment for defendant on demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Flint, Gray & Barker, for appellant. Shankland & Chandler, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The complaint, in so far as essential to a consideration of the question involved, shows: That one Henry F. Kenyon was the duly appointed and qualified guardian of the person and estate of Frank C. Kenyon, alias Frank C. Davis, a minor. That for the purpose of enabling Kenyon to qualify as such guardian, pursuant to an order of court, plaintiff duly executed an undertaking in favor of the minor conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties imposed upon Kenyon as such guardian. That in February, 1908, one C. T. Clifford, of Clarksville, Mo., sent to defendant bank a check reading as follows: "Clarksville, Mo., Feb. 7, 1908. Citizens' Bank. Pay to Henry Kenyon, guardian for Frank C. Kenyon, a minor, alias Frank C. Davis, a minor, or order, $438.14, four hundred thirty-eight and 14/100 dollars. C. T. Clifford, Curator for Frank C. Davis, a Minor"—with instructions to deliver the same to Henry F. Kenyon as guardian of Frank C. Kenyon, alias Frank C. Davis, a minor, upon obtaining his receipt therefor. That the bank delivered the check as instructed and took Kenyon's receipt therefor as such guardian, and forwarded the same to Clifford. That

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Kenyon duly indorsed the check as such guardian, presented it to the bank, and requested that it open an account with him in his individual name and when collected place the amount of the check to such account. That the bank collected the amount of the check and, as requested by Kenyon, placed the proceeds thereof to his individual credit, having knowledge at the time that the money did not belong to him and that he individually had no right thereto or interest therein, and that his sole right and interest to and in the same was in his capacity as such guardian. That thereafter Kenyon drew his checks upon such account, which checks the bank paid to him personally, or as thereby ordered, the amount so paid out of said fund being $437.50, all of which belonged to said minor, and for all of which the guardian failed to account or pay over to his ward. That said Henry F. Kenyon died insolvent, and plaintiff thereafter paid to his successor as guardian of the minor the sum of money so embezzled from the estate of his ward, and which sum, after demand therefor made by plaintiff upon defendant, it refused to pay. Defendant demurred to the complaint, alleging, among other grounds therefor, the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained, and, plaintiff standing upon its complaint, judgment was entered for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

In our opinion there was no error committed by the court in sustaining the demurrer upon the ground stated. For our purposes, it may be conceded that plaintiff, as surety for the faithful performance of the duties of Henry F. Kenyon, as guardian, by paying to the estate of the minor the amount due from the estate of the deceased guardian, acquired by operation of law the right of the minor to recover against the estate of the deceased guardian, or, if such right existed in favor of the minor, against the defendant herein. The question therefore presented for determination is whether the acts of the defendant bank in connection with the transaction were of a character which rendered it liable to the minor for the loss sustained by the admittedly wrongful acts of his guardian. Appellant has cited numerous authorities in support of its contention that the bank, by reason of accepting the check wherewith it opened an account with Kenyon individually, and when collected placed the amount thereof to his credit in such account, became a party to the fraud and participant in the wrongful acts of the guardian. The extent to which such authorities go in sustaining the contention is sufficiently illustrated by reference to Carroll Co. Bank v. Rhodes, 69 Ark. 43, 63 S. W. 68; Bank v. Fidelity & Dep. Co., 108 Ky. 384, 56 S. W. 671; Skipwith v. Hurt, 94 Tex. 322, 60 S. W. 423; Boone Co. Bank v. Byrum, 68 Ark. 71, 56 S. W. 532; U. S. F. & G. Co.

v. Adoue et al. (Tex.) 137 S.W. 648. These cases merely sustain the general principle announced in Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, vol. 2, § 1612a, that: "If a deposit be made in bank to the credit of a certain person as agent or trustee, the use of such terms would charge the bank with notice that the funds were there in a fiduciary relation; it would have no lien upon them for the private debts of the depositor, and if it permitted them to be used for his private purposes in transactions with the bank it would be bound." The principle is by no means new or novel, having been promulgated with the 10 commandments when it was said, "Thou shalt not steal." The decisions to which we have referred, as well as others cited by appellant, wherein it was held the bank was liable to the cestui que trust or sureties of his trustee, were based upon admitted facts showing that the bank, with full knowledge that the fund was held in a fiduciary relation, permitted it to be used by the trustee in the payment of a personal debt due from him to the bank, thereby obtaining profits for itself by knowingly participating in the wrongdoing of the trustee. The case at bar is clearly distinguished from the facts upon which such decisions were rendered. Here no part of the fund was received by the bank other than as a temporary deposit thereof, to be paid out on checks as ordered by the depositor. In the absence of a law to the contrary, and our attention is called to none, there is no legal reason, whatever may be said as to the policy of so doing, which prevents a trustee from depositing the funds of a cestui que trust in a bank to his individual account. If he possesses the right so to do, it must necessarily follow that the bank has the right to receive the deposit, to his individual account, and, in the discharge of its duty to the depositor, subject to the limitation that the bank having knowledge of the fiduciary character of the fund cannot honor checks thereon drawn in its own favor in payment of personal indebtedness due from such depositor to it, pay it out in the usual course upon checks drawn thereon.

It is conceded that the bank upon presentation of the check duly indorsed might properly, and without cause for complaint, have paid the full amount thereof to Kenyon in cash. This being true, we conceive no reason preventing it with equal propriety from holding it at his request, either as a general or special deposit, subject to his order. The case of Duckett v. Bank, 86 Md. 400, 38 Atl. 983, 39 L. R. A. 84, 63 Am. St. Rep. 513, has no application to the facts here involved. In that case the bank, in effect, was instructed to deposit a sum of money, specified in a check payable to its cashier, to the credit of Henry W. Clagett, trustee. Instead of following these instructions, it made the deposit to the individual account of Clagett, who squandered the fund. It was held the bank in violating the express instructions participated in the breach of trust by taking the first wrongful step in the spoliation of the trust fund, the result of which was the dissipation thereof. Appellant's contention, if accepted as applicable to the facts presented, would render banks ex officio trustees in general for all cestui que trusts. In our opinion, the law does not impose such duties upon banks or other depositaries of trust funds. The complaint discloses no wrongful act in connection with the transaction on the part of the defendant, and there is no pretense that it was the recipient of any part of the fund embezzled by the guardian. It follows from what has been said that the court did not err in sustaining the demurrer upon the ground that the complaint failed to state facts essential to a cause of action.

We deem it unnecessary to discuss other grounds of demurrer interposed.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

(18 Cal. App. 482)

McCOWEN et al. v. PEW. (Civ. 882.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, March 8, 1912.)

1. INTEREST (§ 1*)—RIGHT TO ALLOW—EQUITY.

Civ. Code, § 3287, providing that persons entitled to damages which are certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation, and recoverable on a particular day, shall recover interest, and section 1917, providing for the recovery of legal interest on money from the day on which the balance due is ascertained, do not take away all the court's discretion as to allowing interest in an action in equity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interest, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

2. INTEREST (§ 1*)—RIGHT TO ALLOW—EQUITY.

Courts of equity may allow interest not recoverable at law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interest, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

3. INTEREST (§ 14*)—RIGHTS—EQUITY.

Where the purchaser of land required as a condition precedent to his paying the purchase price that there be a grossly excessive reduction from the contract price for timber cut by the vendor, and thereby caused long delay and expensive litigation, the vendor was entitled in equity to interest upon the amount due him on the purchase price as properly reduced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interest, Cent. Dig. §§ 26, 27; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

4. INTEREST (§ 19*)—WHEN ALLOWED—CERTAINTY OF CALCULATION—"CAPABLE OF BEING MADE CERTAIN BY CALCULATION."

The amount due under a contract to convey, at an agreed price per acre, land valuable principally for its timber, was "capable of being made certain by calculation," within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 3287, providing that persons entitled to damages certain or capable of being made certain by calculation may recover interest, though there was a deduction to be made as a mere matter of calculation for timber cut by the vendor from an ascertained number of acres.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interest, Cent. Dig. §§ 35-40; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 953.]

5. INTEREST (§ 19*)—WHEN ALLOWED—UNLIQUIDATED SET-OFF OR COUNTERCLAIM.

Where an amount demanded is sufficiently certain that interest may be allowed upon it, the existence of an unliquidated set-off or counterclaim will not prevent the recovery of interest on the balance found due from the time it became due.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interest, Cent. Dig. §§ 35-40; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by George McCowen and others against J. W. Pew. From the portion of the judgment awarding interest to the plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jesse W. Lillienthal and J. E. Pemberton, for appellant. H. C. McPike and Robert Duncan, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. A full recital of the facts involved in this litigation may be found in 147 Cal. 299, 81 Pac. 958, and in the decision rendered in this court on the 21st day of February, 1912, and reported in 123 Pac. 191. This is an appeal by defendant from that portion of the judgment "which directs and requires of said defendant the payment of any interest on any sum of money required by said judgment to be paid by him to the said plaintiffs as a condition of the conveyance to him by the said plaintiffs" of the real property in controversy. Defendant was required to pay $15 per acre for the land "less the sum of $410.00 deducted on account of the cutting of said timber, within thirty days from the rendition of judgment herein together with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, simple interest, from the 6th day of December, 1900, to the date of said payment, or tender thereof." It may be stated that the 6th day of December, 1900, was the date on and after which "plaintiffs were able to give good title." It is admitted by appellant that we have no decision in this state directly in point; but it is contended that "the California cases go to the extent of deciding that, where there is a quantum meruit or a quantum valebat to be proved in order to establish the amount recoverable, no interest can be recovered in California until the amount is settled and fixed by the judgment of the court. Here the amount due under the original contract was fixed by the contract, but the amount to be paid must be calculated on the principle of a quantum meruit. In the calculation of that there was sharp difference of opinion between the parties and also their respective counsel. That the position taken by us was finally declared to be incorrect by the Supreme Court we must admit, but it was taken by defendant on the advice of counsel and in good faith, and all the time he was offering to pay whatever the court said he should pay."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] We need not discuss the difference as to interest between an express and an implied contract. The subject is fully considered and the authorities reviewed by this court in Courteney v. Standard Box Co., 117 Pac. 778. Generally speaking, it may be said the former comes under the provisions of section 3287 and the latter of section 1917 of the Civil Code. But we do not think either section was intended to take away all discretion, as to interest, in a case like this. This was an action in equity to quiet title on the part of plaintiff with a cross-complaint by defendant demanding specific performance of a contract to convey.

[2] The court found that the contract should be performed, and, under the general principles of equity which it was at liberty to apply, the court had discretion to impose such terms as seemed just and reasonable, subject, of course, to review for any abuse of discretion. In equitable actions, it is true, the rule of law as to interest is generally followed; "but interest is sometimes allowed by courts of equity in the exercise of a sound discretion, when it would not be recoverable at law. On the other hand, courts of law are sometimes affected by equitable considerations in the allowance of interest." 22 Cyc. 1475. Respondents put the question as follows: "Is it conceivable that equity demands that for the last 12 years these plaintiffs shall have borne the taxes upon that land, the insurance, the care of it, preserved it to this day, when it is worth 10 times what it was then, and it is to be wrenched from them at one-tenth its present value, but that even they are to be deprived of the poor modicum of compensation which has remained in the pockets of this defendant who has never spent a cent?"

[3] But it is clear that the important question with us is whether the court had any discretion at all in the matter of interest. As far as equitable considerations are concerned, we must assume on this appeal, that the judgment is altogether just. The appeal being on the judgment roll, we may accept as established any fact, not inconsistent with the findings, that may have influenced the lower court in awarding interest. For instance, we may take for granted the following circumstances, which are disclosed in the transcript before us: On October 11, 1900, appellant gave written notice of his election to exercise his option, and he offered to pay for the property as he had agreed, less the loss occasioned by the said destruction of timber caused by respondents. The latter promptly replied that they were willing to make a liberal concession, trusting that appellant "will not be extortionate." They asked for the figures that appellant thought he should pay. Later they gave notice of having deposited a deed of the premises to appellant subject to his acceptance for the agreed price with an allowance of $300 for 20 acres cut over. Afterwards they sent a communication to appellant in which they stated that all of his objections to and criticism of the title had been obviated and that the "trifling loss in value of the said real property occasioned by the removal or destruction or injury to timber upon part thereof can readily be made certain by computation. We have carefully calculated such loss and find the same to amount to less than the sum of $400. For the sake of doing full justice and making adequate compensation to you in the premises, we have made an allowance of $400 on the contract price payable for said real property as aforesaid." Subsequently they offered to allow $600, but appellant insisted that it should be over $4,000, estimating it upon a basis entirely untenable, as held by the Supreme Court in said decision in 147 Cal., 81 Pac. The unreasonable demand of appellant, therefore, led to the long delay and expensive litigation in the cause. As a condition precedent to his payment for the property, he required a reduction from the contract price of 10 times as much as he was entitled to. Hence it is clearly a case for the application of the principle of moratory interest. It is allowable ex æquo et bono, as held by authorities of the highest character. It is said by the Supreme Court of the United States, in Curtis v. Innerarity, 6 How. 146, 12 L. Ed. 380, that: "It is a dictate of natural justice, and the law of every civilized country, that a man is bound in equity, not only to perform his engagements, but also to repair all the damages that accrue naturally from the breach. Hence every nation, whether governed by the civil or common law, has established a common measure of reparation for the detention of money not paid according to contract, which is usually calculated at a certain and legal rate of interest. Every one who contracts to pay money on a certain day knows that if he fails to fulfill his contract he must pay the established rate of interest as damages for his nonperformance. Hence it may correctly be said that such is the implied contract of the parties." Here, as we have seen, it was the fault of appellant that the sale was not consummated years ago, and it is only just that he should repair the damage that has followed from the breach of his obligation.

[4] But outside of the strictly equitable view, the foregoing suggests the application to the situation of said section 3287 of the Civil Code. Said section allows interest, as we have seen, when the damages are certain and also when they are "capable of being made certain by calculation." Appellant was informed of the number of acres from which the timber had been removed, the land was valuable principally for the timber, the agreed price was $15 an acre, and it would seem to be a mere matter of calculation to determine what allowance should be made for said removal. Robinson v. American Fish & Oyster Co., 119 Pac. 388.

[5] There is another view, also taken by respectable authority, which would lead to an affirmance of the judgment. It is expressed in 22 Cyc. p. 1514, as follows: "Where the amount of the demand is sufficiently certain to justify the allowance of interest thereon, the existence of a set-off or counterclaim which is itself unliquidated will not prevent the recovery of interest on the balance of the demand found due from the time it became due."

In Healy v. Fallon, 69 Conn. 228, 37 Atl. 495, the Supreme Court of Connecticut held that "in an action for the price under a building contract, plaintiff may be allowed interest as damages for the detention of the amount found to be due him, though such price was subject to unliquidated deductions for plaintiff's deviations from the contract." The court stated that: "The claim was wholly a pecuniary one, and was not at large, as are claims for damages for assault and battery, slander, or others of like nature. It represented a loss of a pecuniary value ascertainable with reasonable certainty, as of a definite time; and we think damages in the shape of interest should be recoverable from that time, for such a loss, for only in this way can equity be done between the parties in the case at bar."

In Tappan & Noble v. Harwood, 2 Speers, 551, the Supreme Court of South Carolina said: "By the decisions of this state, whenever a party stipulates in writing to pay money on a certain day, or on the performance of any stipulation or contract, interest is allowed. On the admitted completion and receipt of the buildings, interest would have been unquestionably allowable from the time of completion. The discount claimed by the defendant (for defective workmanship) may reduce the amount covenanted to be paid, but does not impair the claim for interest on the balance, when adjusted by the verdict of the jury."

In Smith v. Turner, 33 Or. 379, 54 Pac. 166, the Supreme Court of Oregon held that a counterclaim for unliquidated damages in an action on a note does not cut off the recovery of interest on the note from the time the claim accrued; the court stating, through Mr. Justice Wolverton, that: "The plaintiff's claim bears interest because there is a contract to pay it, while, under the rule announced, the defendant's counterclaims do not, but it is attempted to counterclaim as respects the first separate defense as of the date when it is alleged the damages accrued, and thereby cut off the running of interest upon the note. This cannot be done, however, because it required the verdict of the jury, or at least the confession or default of the plaintiff, to liquidate the defendants' demand for their alleged damages arising by reason of plaintiff's supposed breach of contract, while the note draws interest by force of its direct stipulations." Other cases holding similarly are Howard v. Behn, 27 Ga. 174; Stephens v. Burgess, 69 Mo. 168; Greenly v. Hopkins, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 96; Watkins v. Junker, 90 Tex. 584, 40 S. W. 11. Two or three decisions are cited by appellant apparently holding to the contrary, but the weight of authority seems to be against him. But whatever rule may be adopted in this state, in the case at bar, considering the trifling amount of the set-off in comparison with what was due under the contract, it is reasonable and just to hold that the balance should bear interest from the time it was due.

In fine, under the circumstances, we think it would be manifestly unjust and inequitable to deprive respondents of the interest, and the portion of the judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(18 Cal. App. 450)

HELMER v. PARSONS et al. (Civ. 1,082.)
(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
California. March 4, 1912.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 166*)—NEGOTIABILITY —NOTES SECURED BY MORTGAGE.

A note secured by mortgage is nonnegotiable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 418; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 342*)—NOTICE OF NONNEGOTIABILITY.

The recital in a note that it is secured by mortgage is notice to one taking a transfer thereof from its payee of its nonnegotiability, and of any defense available to the maker against the payee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 830-841; Dec. Dig. § 342.*]

3. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 370*)—TRANSFER—
DEFENSE AGAINST TRANSFEREE.

The defense of partial failure of consideration of a nonnegotiable note was one existing at the time of the transfer of the note by the payee, and so, under Civ. Code, § 1459, and Code Civ. Proc. § 368, available to the maker against the transferee, though such failure arose through the payee not paying the maker the part of the loan for which the note was given, which, under the agreement of loan, was not to be paid till a time subsequent to the transfer of the note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 864, 963; Dec. Dig. § 370.*]

4. MORTGAGES (§ 238*)—TRANSFERS—RECORD —NOTICE.

Under Civ. Code, § 2934, declaring the record of the assignment of a mortgage notice "to all persons subsequently deriving title to the mortgage from the assignor," it is not notice to the mortgagor as regards the question of whether a defense to the mortgage existed before notice to him of the transfer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 673-675; Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Willard A. Helmer against Henry B. Parsons and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank G. Bryant, for appellant. Elmer R. McDowell, E. Earl Crandall, William Hazlett, Sheldon Borden, and George H. Moore, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Action to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the payment of a promissory note in the sum of $3,500.

It appears from the findings that on December 4, 1908, defendant Parsons executed and delivered to one L. E. Jones a note and mortgage, which was made the subject of the action; that upon delivery thereof Jones paid to Parsons the sum of $1,000, agreeing orally to pay him $1,000 in 10 days, and the balance in 35 days; that on February 11, 1909, Jones paid to Parsons an additional $250, making in all $1,250, and no more, received by Parsons in consideration of the note and mortgage; that, prior to the making of this last payment, to wit, on December 29, 1908, Jones sold and, by an instrument executed in writing and duly recorded, transferred the note and mortgage to plaintiff, who paid Jones the full face value thereof; that plaintiff acquired the note and mortgage without notice of any existing equities or defenses thereto. Upon these findings, the court gave plaintiff judgment for $1,250 and interest, from which he prosecutes this appeal, claiming that judgment should have been entered thereon for the full face value of the note.

[1, 2] As the note was secured by a mortgage, it was nonnegotiable (Meyer v. Weber, 133 Cal. 681, 65 Pac. 1110; Trinity County Bank v. Haas, 151 Cal. 553, 91 Pac. 385), and, as this fact appears upon its face, notice of such nonnegotiability was thereby imparted to plaintiff, who, as a matter of law, was chargeable with notice that, if the maker thereof had any defense thereto as against Jones, he (plaintiff) took it subject to such defense. Mohr v. Byrne, 135 Cal. 87, 67 Pac. 11; Bouche v. Louttit, 104 Cal. 230, 37 Pac. 902. In protection of his interest, the duty devolved upon plaintiff to make inquiry of the mortgagor as to the validity of the instrument and existing equities which might be pleaded in defense of a recovery. Had he done so, and defendant had stated, as Jones is found to have done, that the note was valid and he (defendant) had no defense thereto, then the maxim here invoked by appellant, that, "where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he by whose negligence it happened must be the sufferer" (section 3543, Civ. Code), would apply. Briggs v. Crawford, 121 Pac. 381. "One about to take an assignment of a mortgage is bound in his own interest to inquire of the mortgagor as to the validity of the instrument and of the transaction on which it was founded and as to the amount due, and whether the mortgagor has any defenses or set-offs to interpose against it. If he neglects to do this, he takes the mortgage subject to all infirmities or objections which could have been set up against it in the hands of the original mortgagee, being charged with knowledge of all facts which such an inquiry would have disclosed." Volume 27, Cyc. p. 1324.

[3] Appellant invokes section 1459 of the Civil Code, as follows: "A non-negotiable written contract for the payment of money or personal property may be transferred by indorsement, in like manner with negotiable instruments. Such indorsement shall transfer all the rights of the assignor under the instrument to the assignee, subject to all equities and defenses existing in favor of the maker at the time of the indorsement." He insists that, inasmuch as there was no breach on the part of Jones in the payment of the $1,000, which was not to be paid until 35 days from the date of the making and delivery of the note, there was no defense existing as to such sum in favor of the maker at the time when plaintiff acquired the note on December 29th. Section 368 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "In the case of an assignment of a thing in action, the action by the assignee is without prejudice to any set-off, or other defense existing at the time of, or before, notice of the assignment; but this section does not apply to a negotiable promissory note or bill of exchange, transferred in good faith, and upon good consideration, before maturity." In the case of St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Gay, 101 Cal. 286, 35 Pac. 876, the court said: "These two sections must be construed as though they had been passed at the same moment of time, and were parts of the same statute * * * and the law as declared by the two sections is that a defendant may avail himself of set-off acquired before notice of assignment, provided the set-off be in other respects good." The partial failure of consideration for the note would have been a complete defense to the extent of such failure in an action instituted by Jones to foreclose the mortgage. It was a defense existing at the time of the transfer; and since, under the statute, the action by the assignee is declared to be without prejudice to defenses existing at the time of the assignment, it follows that the right to interpose such defense could not be affected by notice of the assignment given defendant.

[4] Moreover, even conceding, as claimed by appellant, that the defense based upon the failure of consideration due to default in payment of the promised $1,000 could be affected by notice of the transfer, nevertheless no notice of the transfer, other than the recording of the instrument, was given. The mere recording of the assignment constituted no notice to defendant of the assignment to plaintiff. Section 2934 of the Civil Code provides that "an assignment of a mortgage may be recorded in like manner as a mortgage, and such record operates as notice to all persons subsequently deriving title to the mortgage from the assignor." Defendant, however, was not a person deriving title to the mortgage from any assignor thereof, and hence was not one chargeable with constructive notice of its transfer by the recording of the assignment. "The provision about the recordation of an assignment of a mortgage is in section 2934, and the provision is that such record operates as notice to all persons subsequently deriving title to the mortgage from the assignor." Adler v. Sargent, 109 Cal. 42, 41 Pac. 799. And in Murphy v. Barnard, 162 Mass. 72, 38 N. E. 29, 44 Am. St. Rep. 340, it is said: "A mortgagor is not chargeable with constructive notice by the record of an assignment of the mortgage." See, also, McCabe v. Grey, 20 Cal. 509. While we deem the question of notice in the case at bar as unimportant, for the reason given, nevertheless we are of opinion that the mere recording of the assignment was insufficient to constitute notice of such fact.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

18 Cal. App. 426

CASSIDY v. CANNON, Justice of the Peace.
(Civ. 1,045.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California, March 1, 1912. On Petition for Rehearing, March 30, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 26, 1912.)

1. PROHIBITION (§ 10*)—GROUNDS FOR RELIEF—WANT OR EXCESS OF JURISDICTION.

Prohibition lies only where a public officer is acting without or in excess of jurisdiction, which is not the case where a justice of the peace, having jurisdiction of misdemeanors, has, even though erroneously, determined that an affidavit filed before him, attempting to set up facts constituting a misdemeanor, is sufficient, and is about to proceed with the trial thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 37-56; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

On Petition for Rehearing.

2. OFFICERS (§ 121*)—OMISSION TO PERFORM DUTY OF OFFICE—CRIMINAL LIABILITY.

Refusal to perform a public duty amounts to an omission, so that an officer so doing is subject to Pen. Code, § 176, declaring that every willful omission to perform any duty enjoined by law on any public officer is punishable as a misdemeanor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. §§ 207, 208; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Petition by Thomas V. Cassidy for writ of prohibition to T. B. Cannon, Justice of the Peace of Gardena Township, County of Los Angeles. Judgment for petitioner, and respondent appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied by Supreme Court, 123 Pac. 359.

Randall & Gaines, for appellant. Hester, Merrill & Craig, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Petitioner presented his affidavit to the superior court of Los Angeles county, in which it was alleged that he was a qualified and acting justice of the peace; that respondent, Cannon, was also a justice of the peace in said county; that one Kent filed an affidavit before said Cannon, charging that petitioner "did willfully, unlawfully, and maliciously, on June 1, 1911, omit and refuse to perform his duty enjoined upon him by law, and refused to permit Jesse W. Kent, during office hours, the right to inspect and examine a public record, to wit, the justice's docket, of which record and docket the said Thomas V. Cassidy was then and there the custodian; the said Jesse W. Kent then and there being a citizen of said township, county and state, and being entitled by law to inspect and examine said public record." That respondent, Cannon upon the filing of such affidavit, issued his warrant for the arrest of petitioner, and that said petitioner was taken before the said magistrate, and, objecting to the jurisdiction of the justice, refused to plead; that the said justice of the peace then entered a plea of not guilty and set the cause down for trial; and that the same is pending before said justice of the peace. It is alleged that he will proceed to try petitioner upon such charge, unless prohibited from so doing. Upon this affidavit, the superior court issued an alternative writ of prohibition, and, upon a hearing, a peremptory writ was issued, prohibiting said Cannon from trying the case, or taking further proceedings therein, and taxing costs of $10 against him. From this judgment, an appeal has been taken.

Counsel for both parties upon this appeal present only the question involved as to the sufficiency of the affidavit to disclose a public offense; it being respondent Cannon's contention that a justice's docket is a public record, and that under section 1032 of the Political Code public records and other matters in the office of any officer are, at all times during office hours, open to the inspection of any citizen of this state; and he contends that section 176 of the Penal Code is applicable, which provides: "Every willful omission to perform any duty enjoined by law upon any public officer, or person holding any public trust or employment, where no special provision shall have been made for the punishment of such delinquency, is punishable as a misdemeanor." Upon the other hand, it is petitioner's contention that section 1032 of the Political Code guarantees only the right of examination and inspection, and in terms does not provide for the officer in charge of the records to permit or assist or aid in such inspection; that no duty in that regard devolves upon him by law, and claims that a case is presented similar to that of Ex parte McNulty, 77 Cal. 165, 19 Pac. 237, 11 Am. St. Rep. 257, in which our Supreme Court has said that the question whether or not the conduct in question is made a crime must be determined from the language used in the statute; that "constructive crimes—crimes built up by courts with the aid of inference, implication and strained interpretation—are repugnant to the spirit and letter of English and American criminal law."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] We are of opinion that it is unnecessary to enter into a discussion of this matter. We think it sufficient to say that justices of the peace have jurisdiction of misdemeanors, and that the affidavit filed before the justice in this case was an attempt to set up facts constituting an offense over which the justice had jurisdiction to hear and determine, jurisdiction to determine rightfully or wrongfully. Conceding that his determination as to the sufficiency of the affidavit of complaint was wrong, and that the facts set forth did not show that defendant had committed an offense, nevertheless he had jurisdiction so to determine. We perceive no difference between this and any other case where a defective information or affidavit of complaint has been filed, and the court has erroneously determined the same to be sufficient, in which cases the relief of defendant is not through prohibition; for prohibition only lies where a public officer is proceeding without or in excess of jurisdiction, and no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law exists. Keith v. Recorder's Court, 9 Cal. App. 380, 99 Pac. 416. If, as claimed by petitioner, no facts are averred constituting a public offense, he has ample relief through a writ of habeas corpus, in the event the justice should find him guilty. The justice, then, in our opinion, not being without or having exceeded his jurisdiction, prohibition does not lie, and the court erred in granting the writ.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [2] The refusal to perform a public duty amounts to an omission in that regard, and is comprehended within section 176 of the Penal Code. One refusing to perform a public duty is amenable to both sections 176 and 772 of the Penal Code. Ex parte Keeney, 84 Cal. 310, 24 Pac. 34.

Rehearing denied.

18 Cal. App. 426

CASSIDY v. CANNON, Justice of the Peace.
(L. A. 3,200.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 26, 1912.)

In Bank. Petition by Thomas V. Cassidy for writ of prohibition to T. B. Cannon, Justice of the Peace of Gardena Township, County of Los Angeles. Judgment for petitioner was reversed by the District Court of Appeal (123 Pac. 358), and petitioner asks for rehearing. Rehearing denied.

PER CURIAM. The petition for rehearing of this cause in the Supreme Court is denied.

The grounds stated by the District Court of Appeal in the brief opinion, denying the petition for rehearing in that court, states sufficient grounds for the reversal of the judgment. We do not wish to be understood as expressing any opinion as to the doctrines stated in the original opinion of that court.

162 Cal. 531

DILLER et al. v. NORTHERN CALIFORNIA POWER CO. (Sac. 1,900.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 6, 1912.
Rehearing Denied May 6, 1912.)

1. ELECTRICITY (§ 19*)—SAGGING WIRES—DEATH OF TRAVELER—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In an action against an electric power company for death of decedent while driving along a public road caused by his horses coming in contact with an electric wire, which sagged over the road, evidence held to warrant a finding of negligence of the company in constructing and maintaining the line.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

2. DEATH (§ 99*)—DAMAGES—EXCESSIVENESS.

Twenty thousand dollars was not excessive recovery for negligent death of a real estate broker 57 years old, with a life expectancy of 15.39 years, where there was evidence warranting a finding that he contributed $200 a month for the support of his family.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 125-130; Dec. Dig. § 99.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1004*)—REVIEW—DAMAGES—ASSESSMENT.

In assessing damages for negligent death, much is left to the sound discretion of the jury, and their action and that of the trial court will be reversed on the ground of excessiveness only where the amount of damages is obviously so disproportionate to the injury as to justify a conclusion that the verdict did not result from cool and dispassionate discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3944-3947; Dec. Dig. § 1004.*]

4. DEATH (§ 78*)—DAMAGES—ELEMENTS.

In actions for negligent death, plaintiffs are limited to the pecuniary loss suffered by them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

5. ELECTRICITY (§ 19*)—SAGGING WIRES—DEATH OF TRAVELER—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against an electric power company, an instruction that the fact that a wire belonging to the company highly charged with a dangerous current of electricity was down across the public highway where the accident occurred, and that plaintiff's intestate while traveling along the highway came in contact with the wire and was killed, raises a presumption of negligence in maintaining the wire, and casts upon the company the burden of meeting such presumption, did not conflict with an instruction that such presumption need not be overcome by a preponderance of evidence; it being sufficient that the company produce sufficient evidence to balance the presumption.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

6. ELECTRICITY (§ 19*)—SAGGING WIRES—DEATH OF TRAVELER—RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

The res ipsa loquitur doctrine is properly applied to the falling upon or across a public highway in such way as to endanger persons traveling thereon of a wire carrying an electric current of 20,000 volts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1068*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Any error in an instruction which submits a particular ground of negligence not within the issues is harmless, where the special verdict shows that the only negligence found was within the issues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4225–4228, 4230; Dec. Dig. § 1068.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 380*)—PHOTOGRAPHS—ADMISSIBILITY.

It was not error to admit in evidence photographs of a scene constituting enlargements of pictures originally taken without calling the maker of the enlargements as a witness to prove the accuracy of the pictures offered; it being within the sound discretion of a trial court to determine from the evidence before it whether a photograph offered is a correct representation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1657; Dec. Dig. § 380.*]

9. EVIDENCE (§ 244*)—TRANSACTION WITH AGENT—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action against an electric power company for death caused by the company negligently permitting a wire to sag, statements concerning the condition of the line made to an agent of the company in general charge of its power system, and the agent's statements in response, were properly admitted in evidence to show the company's knowledge of the unsafe condition of its line.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 916–936; Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

10. EVIDENCE (§ 254*)—DECLARATIONS AGAINST INTEREST—ADMISSIBILITY.

Declarations or admissions against interest by a party or his authorized agent may be given in evidence, and it is not necessary to lay a foundation therefor by asking the preliminary questions appropriate to an attempt to impeach a witness by proof of contradictory statements made at another time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1004; Dec. Dig. § 254.*]

11. WITNESSES (§ 37*)—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action for negligent death, it was not error to permit a witness to testify to the amount decedent had earned in his business; he having testified that he was familiar with decedent's affairs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 80–87; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

12. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1058*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Any error in excluding testimony whether an electric power line was of standard construction was harmless where witnesses subsequently stated that they had not observed the line so as to be able to say whether the construction was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4195, 4200–4206; Dec. Dig. § 1058.*]

13. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1015*)—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—CONCLUSIVENESS OF ORDER.

An order denying a new trial will be upheld when based on conflicting affidavits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3860–3876; Dec. Dig. § 1015.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

Action by Mae H. Diller and others against the Northern California Power Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Reid & Dozier, for appellant. Frank Freeman and Charles L. Donohoe, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiffs, widow and children, and the heirs at law of R. Diller, deceased, brought this action to recover damages from the defendant for the alleged negligent killing of said decedent. In May, 1907, the defendant owned and operated a line of poles and wires for the conducting of electric power to various places in the county of Glenn. The line ran along the county road between St. John and Hamilton in said county, and at one point crossed the road from the westerly to the easterly side thereof. On the morning of May 19, 1907, R. Diller was driving a team of horses, attached to a buggy, along said road. At the point where the power line crossed the road, one of the wires, highly charged with electricity, had become detached from one of the poles to which it has been fastened, with the result that it sagged down and hung on or near the surface of the road. Diller's team came in contact with the wire, and he (together with both horses) was instantly killed. The plaintiffs charged that the falling of the wire and the consequent death of Diller were caused by the negligence of the defendant in improperly and inefficiently and negligently constructing and maintaining the "said line and system of poles and wires at said place." The defendant in its answer denied negligence on its part, and averred that the deceased had been guilty of contributory negligence.

Upon a trial with a jury, a general verdict for $30,000 in favor of plaintiffs was returned. The jury also gave answers to special interrogatories. Upon defendant moving for a new trial, the court made a conditional order providing that the motion should be denied if plaintiffs would consent to a reduction of the verdict and judgment from $30,000 to $20,000; otherwise a new trial should be granted. The plaintiffs filed their consent to the reduction, and an order denying the motion for new trial was entered. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] The appellant argues that the evidence was insufficient to justify a finding of negligence on its part in constructing and maintaining its line of poles and wires. This position cannot, on the record, be supported. As will appear in the discussion of the instructions, the mere occurrence of the accident, under the circumstances shown, was enough to make out a prima facie case of negligence. But, regardless of this, there was further evidence to support the verdict. At the point where Diller met his death the road ran in a northerly and southerly direction. A line of poles ran along the westerly side of the road until it came to the place of crossing, where the wires were brought over to a line of poles on the easterly side. The power was conducted through three wires, two of which were strung on insulators placed at opposite ends of cross-arms attached to the poles, while the third ran on insulators fastened to the tops of the poles. The insulators were screwed onto eucalyptus pins which were fitted into holes in the cross-arms, or the top of the pole, as the case might be. Where the line took an angle, as at the place of the occurrence in question, the top wire was fastened to insulators attached by means of pins to a short cross-arm or "buck-arm," bolted to the pole about eight inches from its upper end. The wire which caused Diller's death was the one which had run along the tops of the poles. It had become detached from the pole which formed the point of the angle. The buck-arm was found lying in the road after the accident. One of the insulators was broken, as was one of the eucalyptus pins which had been affixed to the buck-arm. The jury found, in answer to special interrogatories, that the defendant's power line had been negligently constructed; that the negligence consisted in the use of a weak pin on the cross-bar (buck-arm) attached to the angle pole; that the falling of the wire was caused by this weakness; and that the line was negligently maintained, in that the man in charge neglected to repair said pin after his attention had been repeatedly called to its dangerous condition. While the defendant introduced evidence which would have fully warranted a finding that the fall of the wire was due to causes other than the one assigned in the verdict, it cannot be said that the conclusion reached by the jury was without substantial support. Several witnesses testified that they had, prior to the accident, observed that one or both of the pins on the buck-arm leaned over at an angle toward the road. There was also testimony that this condition had been called to the attention of

Mr. Thomas, who was in general charge of the defendant's business in the district in which the line in question was situated. This testimony, together with the circumstance that one of the pins was, in fact, found to be broken immediately after the accident, furnished a sufficient basis for the inferences that the pins in question were not as strong as they should have been, that their weakness was the cause of the fall of the wire, and that this weakness was actually brought to the knowledge of the defendant. No amount of expert or other evidence that the construction of the line was "standard" precluded the jury from drawing these inferences.

[2, 3] The damages fixed by the jury, even when reduced by the action of the trial court to $20,000, were heavy, yet we cannot say that the award was so large as to require an appellate court to set it aside as excessive. It is, of course, well settled that in the assessment of damages in cases of this character much is left to the sound discretion of the jury, and the action of the jury and the trial court will be reversed only where the amount of the damages is obviously "so disproportionate to the injury proved as to justify the conclusion that the verdict is not the result of the cool and dispassionate discretion of the jury." Aldrich v. Palmer, 24 Cal. 513; Morgan v. S. P. Co., 95 Cal. 501, 30 Pac. 601; Redfield v. O. C. S. R. Co., 110 Cal. 277, 42 Pac. 822, 1063.

[4] In actions for injuries causing death, the plaintiffs are, of course, limited in their recovery to the pecuniary loss suffered by them. Taylor v. W. P. Co., 45 Cal. 323; Munro v. Dredging Co., 84 Cal. 515, 24 Pac. 303, 18 Am. St. Rep. 248. The jury was so instructed here. The evidence was that Diller at the time of his death was a man in good health, a little over 57 years of age, and that his expectancy of life, according to the American Mortality Table, was 15.39 years. He was engaged in the real estate business in Chico. One witness testified that he was making about $6,000 per year in this business. It may be conceded that, in view of his cross-examination, this witness' testimony was not very satisfactory. But we have in addition the statement of the widow that during the years preceding his death Diller contributed not less than $200 per month for the support of his wife and children. There was testimony tending to weaken this statement. But with conflicts of evidence this court has no concern, and if the jury accepted the widow's testimony, as it had a right to do, the allowance of $20,000 cannot be overthrown as excessive. The amount is not manifestly in excess of a fair compensation for the loss, during the probable remainder of his productive years, of the support which had been, and would be likely to be, furnished by a healthy man, 57 years of age, who had been contributing at least $200 per month to his family. It cannot, of course, be known what Diller would have earned had he lived, but evidence of what he had done in the past furnished at least some, if not, indeed, the most satisfactory, basis for estimating what he would in all likelihood have done in the future. Shaw v. S. P. Co., 157 Cal. 240, 107 Pac. 108; Bonneau v. North Shore R. R. Co., 152 Cal. 406, 93 Pac. 106, 125 Am. St. Rep. 68.

[5, 6] We find no error in the charge to the jury. The court, after instructing that the plaintiffs were "bound to prove by a preponderance of evidence the negligence upon the part of the defendant as alleged in plaintiffs' complaint," gave a further instruction as follows: "The fact that a wire belonging to the defendant, highly charged with a dangerous current of electricity, was down across the public highway at the point where the accident occurred, and that the plaintiffs' intestate, R. Diller, while traveling along said public highway, came in contact with that wire and was killed, raises a presumption of negligence on the part of the defendant company in maintaining the wire, and casts upon the defendant the burden of meeting such presumption. Such presumption need not be overcome by the defendant by a preponderance of the evidence. If the defendant company produces sufficient evidence to balance such presumption, the presumption is overcome." These two instructions are not in conflict. The court properly imposed upon the plaintiffs the burden of establishing by a preponderance of evidence the negligence upon which they relied. At the same time it ruled that proof of certain facts, standing alone, was sufficient to make out a prima facie showing of negligence. This did not relieve plaintiffs of the burden which had been declared by the earlier instruction to rest upon them. They were still required to establish their case by a preponderance of all the evidence, and the jury was expressly told that the verdict must be for defendant if it succeeded in balancing the prima facie case (or presumption, as the court termed it) made out by plaintiffs. The proposition that the facts supposed in the later instruction amounted to a showing of negligence which had to be met by countervailing evidence is simply a statement of the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur." We do not doubt that the doctrine is properly applied to the falling upon or across a public highway in such a way as to endanger persons lawfully traveling thereon, of a line of wire carrying, as in this instance, an electric current of 20,000 volts. W. U. T. Co. v. State, 82 Md. 293, 33 Atl. 763, 31 L. R. A. 572, 51 Am. St. Rep. 464; Newark E. L. & P. Co. v. Ruddy, 62 N. J. Law, 505, 41 Atl. 712, 57 L. R. A. 624; Ruddy v. Newark, E. L. & P. Co., 63 N. J. Law, 357, 46 Atl. 1100, 57 L. R. A. 624; Snyder v. W. E. Co., 43 W. Va. 661, 28 S. E. 733, 39 L. R. A. 499, 64 Am. St. Rep. 922; Boyd v. Portland G. E. Co., 41

Or. 336, 68 Pac. 810; Thomas v. W. U. T. Co., 100 Mass. 156.

[7] It is complained that instruction 20 left it open to the jury to find that the defendant had been negligent in failing to install guard wires, and that this element of negligence was not within the issues. We think the instruction is not open to the construction which defendant seeks to put upon it. But, even if it were, the special verdict shows that the only negligence found and acted upon by the jury was the use and maintenance of a weak insulator pin. The instruction could not, therefore, have harmed the defendant.

The appellant assigns numerous errors in the admission and rejection of testimony. The more important may be noticed.

[8] Photographs of the scene were allowed to be given in evidence. They were enlargements of pictures originally taken. It is objected that the maker of the enlargements was not called as a witness to prove the accuracy of the pictures offered. But this was not required. It is for the trial court to determine, from the evidence before it, whether a photograph offered is a correct representation of the object or scene in question, and the ruling will be sustained on appeal unless it is apparent that there has been an abuse of discretion. Jones on Ev. (2d Ed.) § 411; 17 Cyc. 415; State v. Matheson, 130 Iowa, 440, 103 N. W. 137, 114 Am. St. Rep. 427, note, 8 Ann. Cas. 430; Carlson v. Benton, 66 Neb. 486, 92 N. W. 600, 1 Ann. Cas. 159. The preliminary proof of the accuracy of the photographs here in question was sufficient to justify their admission.

[9, 10] Evidence of statements made to Mr. Thomas concerning the condition of the pins on the buck-arm of the angle pole was proper to show the defendant's knowledge of the unsafe condition of its line. Thomas was its agent in general charge of its power system, and notice to him of a defective construction had a direct bearing on the issue of negligence in maintenance. Similarly it was proper to show what he had said in response to such statements. Declarations or admissions against interest by a party, or his authorized agent, may be given in evidence, and it is not necessary to lay a foundation for such declarations by asking the preliminary questions appropriate to an attempt to impeach a witness by proof of contradictory statements made at another time. So far as these matters were gone into in questioning Thomas himself, they were legitimate cross-examination.

[11] There was no error in permitting the witness Schuster to testify to the amount Diller had been earning in his business. The extent of his income was certainly relevant, and the witness had testified that he was familiar with Diller's business affairs. His testimony was, it is true, weakened on cross-examination, but this did not affect the admissibility of what he had already stated.

[12] Witness Kibby was not allowed to testify whether the line was of standard construction. But, since he subsequently stated that he had not observed the line so as to be able to say whether the construction was or was not proper, it is plain that the ruling, if erroneous, was not prejudicial. The witnesses who were allowed to state their opinions regarding the construction of the line testified in a manner which fully authorized the court to conclude that they were qualified to give expert evidence.

The other assignments of error in regard to evidence are either trivial in themselves, or are rendered unimportant by the nature of the answers to the special interrogatories.

[13] The motion for a new trial was based in part upon alleged misconduct of the jury. So far as this point is concerned, it is sufficient to say that the material averments of the affidavits relied on by the defendant were contradicted by the counter affidavits offered by the plaintiffs. Under these circumstances, the action of the trial court in denying the motion must, of course, be upheld.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

162 Cal. 539

SKOOKUM OIL CO. v. THOMAS.
(S. F. 5351.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 8, 1912.
Rehearing Denied May 8, 1912.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 335*) — DEFAULT IN PAYMENT—FORFEITURE.

Under a contract for sale of land in which time is of the essence and performance by the vendee a condition precedent to conveyance, after forfeiture is declared, the vendee cannot, without excuse shown, by tender, acquire a right to recover back the money paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 981-983; Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 335*) — DEFAULT IN PAYMENT—FORFEITURE.

In a contract for sale of land in which time is of the essence, the vendor's right to retain purchase money on unexcused default is not dependent on existence of an express clause in the contract giving right to declare a forfeiture, or right to retain the money as liquidated damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 981-983; Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 335*) — DEFAULT IN PAYMENT—FORFEITURE.

Time may be made of the essence of the contract for sale of land so as to give the vendor a right to declare a forfeiture and retain the purchase money without the precise expression that time is of the essence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 981-983; Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 335*) — DEFAULT IN PAYMENT—FORFEITURE.

Under a contract for sale of land in four payments, providing that, if the vendee failed to comply with the conditions, any payments theretofore received should be forfeited as liquidated damages, and a subsequent provision extending time for one payment in consideration of $1,000 paid down stipulated that, if the vendee did not elect to purchase said land, the vendor was to retain said sum of $1,000 as and for liquidated damages, payment on time was a condition precedent and of the essence of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 981-983; Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 335*) — DEFAULT IN PAYMENT—FORFEITURE—EXCUSE.

That the vendee had not the money, and that at that particular time it was difficult to borrow money, was not a legal excuse for default as against a forfeiture of past payments.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 981-983; Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 335*) — DEFAULT IN PAYMENT—FORFEITURE.

The inquiry whether time is of the essence of a contract as affecting the right to declare a forfeiture for nonpayment is to be determined from the terms of the contract, but consideration is to be given to the character of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 981-983; Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 335*) — DEFAULT IN PAYMENT—FORFEITURE—"HERETOFORE."

A contract for the sale of land for $40,000, payable in four equal payments, required the purchaser to pay "$10,000 (in addition to the sum of $10 herein paid)," etc., and provided that all sums paid herein shall apply to the purchase price, but, if the purchaser fails to comply with the conditions herein set forth, payments "heretofore" received, are to be forfeited as liquidated damages. Held, on forfeiture after two payments, the word "heretofore" would not be construed to limit the defendant's right to the $10 parenthetically referred to as "herein paid," but would be rejected as unnecessary or read as "theretofore," and include the $20,000 paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 981-983; Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3283-3285.]

8. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 335*) — DEFAULT IN PAYMENT—FORFEITURE.

On a contract giving an option to purchase oil lands for $40,000 in four equal payments six months apart, and stipulating for forfeiture on default, that the vendor chose to declare the forfeiture as complete the day following the maturity of the third payment did not affect his right to forfeit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 981-983; Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

9. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 341*) — DEFAULT IN PAYMENT—ACTION TO RECOVER.

In an action by a purchaser of an undivided interest in property to recover payments declared forfeited, evidence held to show that a change of subject-matter by which the vendor had become owner of a divided interest was with the consent of the purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 1008-1017; Dec. Dig. § 341.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by the Skookum Oil Company against U. M. Thomas. From a judgment of the appellate court affirming a decision for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Dudley Kinsell, C. C. Hamilton, and Mastick & Partridge, for appellant. Sutherland & Barbour and Geo. L. Warlow, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This appeal is here for further consideration after decision by the District Court of Appeal for the Third Appellate District affirming a judgment in favor of the defendant.

The action was brought to recover the sum of $20,000 received by defendant from R. L. Patterson, W. E. Dingley, and H. H. Dingley, assignors of plaintiff, and from plaintiff pursuant to a certain option to purchase land. The court made a general finding that the averments of the complaint, except as to the corporate capacity of plaintiff, were untrue, and rendered judgment in favor of defendant. The appeal is from the judgment on a bill of exceptions; the claim of appellant being that the evidence does not sustain the finding.

It appears that on January 17, 1907, defendant executed to R. L. Patterson, or assigns, a contract whereby he gave to the latter "the right and option to purchase from me all that certain tract or parcel of land in the county of Fresno, state of California, described as follows: An undivided one-half interest in and to all of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, sec. 6, T. 26 S., R. 15 E., M. D. B. & M., * * * upon the following terms and conditions: The price of which is forty thousand dollars, payable in four equal payments of ten thousand dollars each at intervals of six months, commencing January 27th, 1907. If said R. L. Patterson elects to purchase said property, he shall on or before January 27th, 1907, three o'clock p. m., pay me the sum of ten thousand dollars (in addition to the sum of ten dollars herein paid), and upon such payment he shall have and he is hereby given until February 27th, 1907, three o'clock p. m., to search the title of said property; and if the title is found good and valid he is to pay me the balance of the money, to wit: Ten thousand dollars July 27th, 1907; ten thousand dollars January 27th, 1908; and the balance of the purchase price, ten thousand dollars, on July 27th, A. D. 1908, upon my tendering to him a grant, bargain and sale deed, conveying to him or his assigns, said above described property, with valid title free and unincumbered, which I hereby agree to do. Said deed to be placed in escrow with the Bank of Coalinga upon the deposit of the first payment of ten thousand dollars. * * * If the title cannot be perfected within said time I agree upon demand to return to said R. L. Patterson or his assigns, all sums paid on account of this option. All sums paid herein shall apply to the purchase price of said property, but if said R. L. Patterson or his assigns, fails to comply with the conditions herein set forth, any payments heretofore received by me are to be forfeited to me as liquidated damages. Upon payment of first installment said Patterson or his assigns shall be given possession of said land and permitted to enter upon and drill said land for oil." There are other provisions in the option immaterial to the present consideration.

Subsequently, and prior to January 27, 1907, the date provided for making the first payment under the contract, the defendant indorsed upon it that "for and in consideration of the sum of one thousand dollars to me in hand paid" he extended the time for payment therefor to February 25, 1907, the said \$1,000 to constitute part of said payment of \$10,000 if Patterson or his assigns should "elect to take the property." If he did not so elect, defendant was "to retain said sum of one thousand dollars as and for liquidated damages." In February, 1907, Patterson conveyed an undivided one-third interest in the option to H. H. Dingley and E. W. Dingley and notice of such conveyance was given to the Bank of Coalinga. On February 25, 1907, Patterson and the Dingleys paid into the Coalinga Bank for defendant the sum of \$9,000. About the time of this latter payment defendant and Patterson deposited with the said bank the escrow papers and instruments, the defendant at that time also depositing therewith pursuant to the option agreement a deed in favor of Patterson to an undivided one-half interest in the property as described in the option, and to which interest it was stipulated on the trial that, when the option was executed, defendant had title. On March 25, 1907, before the second payment under the option became due, Patterson and the Dingleys transferred all their rights and interests under the option to the plaintiff, and on July 27, 1907, paid defendant said second installment of \$10,000. It was stipulated on the trial "that there was a partition of the land described in said paper writing (the option) leaving the absolute title to the S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 6 in the defendant U. M. Thomas, and that this partition took place on the 25th of March, 1907." Subsequent to the date when the partition was made the defendant deposited with the bank a deed dated March 27, 1907, in favor of Patterson conveying the S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the section. When the third payment under the option became due on January 27, 1908, it was not paid or offered to be paid and on the next day, in response to a telegraphic demand from defendant for the return of the two deeds to him they were sent to him by the cashier of the bank. Prior to January 27, 1908, plaintiff informed defendant of its probable inability to meet the third payment then falling due, and asked for an extension, which the defendant refused to grant. Subsequent to January 28, 1908, the parties had several conversations about the option, at one of which—in October, 1908—plaintiff offered to pay the \$20,000 for which it was in default under the option, with interest and any damages which the defendant had sustained through failure of the plaintiff to make the payments when due, but defendant refused to consider the matter of the option at all. At no time did plaintiff or any one in its behalf tender to the defendant any money on account of the purchase price of the land. At all the meetings with defendant above referred to (which were sought by plaintiff alone), the defendant refused to talk with plaintiff on the basis of the option having any existence. His position after January 27, 1908, consistently adhered to, was that the option was at an end, and that he was in no way further obligated by reason of its having been executed, or, as described by one of the witnesses of the plaintiff, his position was "that he considered that the Skookum Oil Company had forfeited all of its rights under the option and he would not discuss the matter with reference to the option."

The points made by appellant are (1) that time was not of the essence of the option agreement, and that the offer of the plaintiff to pay for all damages sustained should have been held to excuse the delay; (2) that the condition in the contract for a forfeiture should have been strictly construed; (3) that the defendant at the time he treated the option as forfeited—default in the third payment—the entire subject-matter of the contract had been changed and defendant was not in a position to deliver the land specified in the contract, as he had converted an undivided interest in the whole quarter section held by him when the option was executed into a sole ownership by him of the south half thereof.

The first two points were fully discussed and the law respecting them clearly declared in the decision of the District Court of Appeal when this matter was before it, and we quote and adopt what is there said in disposing of them. That court said:

[1] "It seems to us that the principles so clearly presented in Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., 123 Cal. 1 [55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17], are determinative of the questions here involved. It was there held that under a contract for the sale of real estate, in which time is made of the essence of the contract and performance by the vendee is made a condition precedent to a conveyance and upon breach thereof he is declared to forfeit all rights thereunder, including payments made thereon, the vendee cannot, after his default, without excuse shown therefor, by a tender of the amount due, acquire either an equitable or a legal right to maintain an action to recover back the moneys paid under the contract, nor can the purchaser, in such case, put the vendor in default by mere tender, nor can he elect to consider the contract at an end, and recover what he has paid on the contract, when the vendor has not abandoned the contract, but stands upon its terms and conditions. It was also held that, under such a contract, the refusal of the vendor to accept a tender made by a purchaser in default, and to convey to the purchaser after such default does not affect a rescission of the contract, nor entitle the vendee to recover the money paid. Neither will equity relieve such purchaser who has made an unexcused default and has not fulfilled conditions precedent to the vesting of his right of action.

[2] "It was held, further, that the vendor's right to retain the purchase money, where default was unexcused, is independent of any express clauses in the contract for forfeiture of rights, or for the retention of the purchase money as liquidated damages, and that such express clauses are but declarations in express terms of the legal rights of the parties under such a contract, existing without them.

[3] "Appellant attempts to distinguish the present case from the Glock Case on the ground that there the contract expressly made time of its essence. But it is very clearly shown in the opinion in that case that time may be made of the essence of a contract without employing those precise expressions. Said the court: 'When the equitable showing is not made to excuse the breach, the vendor has the right in equity, as he always has at law, to retain the moneys paid by the vendee. Therefore we have said that it matters not in such contracts that the parties have declared that the vendor may retain the moneys paid as stipulated damages. The name which the parties thus give does not alter the fact nor change the vendor's rights.' See the authorities cited in the opinion.

[4] "The contract here expressly provides that, upon the failure of the vendee 'to comply with the conditions herein set forth, any payments heretofore received by me are to be forfeited to me as liquidated damages.' In the provision extending the time for the first payment of $10,000 it was expressly stipulated that, if the vendee did not elect to purchase said land, the vendor was to 'retain said sum of one thousand dollars as and for liquidated damages.' It seems to us that the stipulations of the contract show unmistakably that prompt payment on time was a condition precedent and became of the essence of the contract. Mr. Pomeroy says: 'It is certain that when the contract is made to depend upon a condition precedent—in other words, when no right shall vest until certain acts have been done, as for example, until the vendee has paid certain sums at certain specified times—then also a court of equity will not relieve the vendee against forfeiture incurred by a breach of such condition.' In the Glock Case, supra, the court said: 'After the vendee's breach, the vendor may agree to a mutual abandonment and rescission, in which last instance, and in which alone, the vendee in default would be entitled to a repayment of the money.'

[5, 6] "There is in this case absolutely no excuse given for the failure to make the payment on January 27, 1908, except that the vendee had not the money, and that at that particular time it was difficult to borrow money—an excuse not deemed of any legal significance—and there is no pretense that there was any mutual abandonment or rescission of the contract. The Supreme Court said in Oursler v. Thacher, 152 Cal. 739, 745 [93 Pac. 1007, 1010]: 'There being no rescission or abandonment of the contract by the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs at all times having insisted on the contract and stood on its terms, and being in no respect in default, the vendees in default were not entitled to recover either the moneys paid by them to plaintiffs or the moneys expended in developing the property,' which was a mine. The consideration to be paid was $500 per acre, and the vendees were given the right to go into possession and drill for oil. The inquiry whether time is of the essence of a contract is to be determined, it is true, from the terms of the contract; but some consideration is to be given to the character of the property. Mr. Lindley says: 'The authorities, both in England and America, recognize that, where mines or mining properties are the subject of contract, time is of the essence, independent of any express stipulation inserted in the instrument.' 2 Lindley on Mines, § 859. So held in Waterman v. Banks, 144 U. S. 394 [12 Sup. Ct. 646, 36 L. Ed. 479]. A syllabus reads: 'Time may become of the essence of a contract for the sale of property, not only by the express terms of the parties, but from the very nature of the property itself. Mineral property requires the parties interested in it to be vigilant and active in asserting their rights.'

[7] "Appellant seeks to escape the force of the contract by resort to the rule that conditions of forfeiture are to be strictly construed against the party in whose behalf they were created. The contention is that the word 'heretofore' used in the forfeiture clause must be construed to limit the defendant's right to the $10, parenthetically referred to as 'herein paid.' The rules of construction forbid seizing upon some isolated provision of a contract in order to compel a certain result, and require that the intention be derived from a consideration of the entire instrument. Civ. Code, §§ 1641, 1650. True, the language is to govern, if it 'is clear and explicit, and does not involve an absurdity.' Civ. Code, § 1638. The paragraph in question reads: 'All sums paid herein shall apply on the purchase price of said property, but if said R. L. Patterson or his assigns, fails to comply with the conditions herein set forth, any payments heretofore received by me are to be forfeited to me as liquidated damages.' It seems to us that the vendor intended to refer to the 'sums paid herein * * * on the purchase price'; and it is not reasonably probable that he referred only to the $10 mentioned in a transaction involving property of such high value. The claim that the forfeiture must refer to the $10 paid as consideration seems to us wholly unreasonable if not absurd, because, if paid as the consideration, it became the vendor's, and the term forfeited could not reasonably be said to apply to it. The term 'heretofore' should be treated either as wholly unnecessary to express the intention and be rejected, or should read 'theretofore.' In Sprague v. Edwards, 48 Cal. 239, the phrase in a deed reading, 'subject, however, to the "appeal" of the said John A. Sutter,' the word 'appeal' was construed to mean 'approval.' The court said: 'The sole object to be attained in the construction of contracts is to ascertain the real intention of the parties; and with this view the whole contract and all its provisions, together with the relation of the parties toward each other, will be considered.' The provision immediately preceding the forfeiture clause lends support to our view. It reads: 'If the title cannot be perfected within said time I agree upon demand to return to said R. L. Patterson or his assigns, all sums paid on account of this option.'

[8] "That defendant chose to regard the forfeiture as complete the day following the maturity of the payment puts no different complexion on the transaction than if he had delayed a month or two months. His rights, whatever they were, accrued upon the vendee's default, and were immediately available to the vendor. The vendee's construction of the contract would permit him to continue prospecting for oil, and, whenever he chose or was compelled to desist, he could in any event recover the money paid. It was said in the Glock Case, supra: 'It would be to the last degree unjust and inequitable to allow a vendee, after his default under such a contract, to put the vendor in default by a mere tender. * * * Failing to make payment, he would three months, six months, one year, or as in this case over three years, after the date of the failure, make an offer to perform, and if the land had risen in value, according to the theory of respondent here, could compel performance; but in every case he could recover the money paid.' It appeared that in October, 1908, seven months after the default in payment, and after all payments were past due, the president of plaintiff company and its attorney, Mr. Dudley Kinsell, met the defendant at Fresno, and asked him if he would receive the $20,000. Defendant said he would not as he had already obligated himself to convey the property to other people. No tender of any money was made. Plaintiff's witness testified: 'I will frankly say we didn't have the money with us and couldn't have done it that day'—i. e., make a tender."

[9] The third point made by appellant for reversal is that prior to the time defendant treated the option as forfeited there had been an entire change of the subject-matter of the option, and defendant was not in a position to convey to the plaintiff the interest in the lands specified and mentioned in the contract. This point is based on the fact that the option agreement called for the conveyance by defendant to Patterson on performance of its terms by him of an undivided one-half interest in the whole quarter section described in the option, a deed therefor to him having been originally deposited in the bank in escrow; and the further facts that, on the trial, it appeared that subsequent to the execution of the option contract and deposit of this deed, and prior to the default of the plaintiff in making payments there had been a partition of the land described therein leaving the absolute title in the defendant to the south half of the southeast quarter of the section, and that subsequently defendant deposited in bank in escrow a deed from himself to Patterson to said absolute interest as a substitute for the original deed by him of an undivided one-half interest in said quarter section as mentioned in the option.

Under these facts the appellant seeks to invoke the rule that "if the vendor is unable to convey a proper title according to his contract at the time of performance because he has no title, or has a defective title, or has a less estate in the land than he agreed to convey, the vendee may treat the contract as at an end and may recover in an equitable proceeding for rescission the money he has paid on account of the purchase price." 29 Am. & Ency. of Law, p. 727.

But it is quite apparent from an examination of the record in this case that the stipulation as to partition was only made in connection with the formal proofs which plaintiff was making respecting the option contract, the assignment from Patterson to the Dingleys, and from all of the latter to the plaintiff, and to show the situation, in fact, respecting the property to which the option applied when it was claimed by defendant that all rights under it had been forfeited. No claim was made in the court below that the legal effect of the partition and change in the subject-matter of the option operated as a rescission of the contract entitling plaintiff to recover back the payments previously made. The case was tried on no such theory, and the point was made for the first time in the District Court of Appeal, and insisted on here. This of itself would afford good reason for refusing to consider a claim upon which no reliance was placed in the trial court, and is urged for the first time on appeal as a ground for reversal. But it is not necessary to dispose of the point for any such reason. The claim of plaintiff is based solely on the ground that it was shown by stipulation that there had been a partition of the property. It does not appear who asked for the stipulation as to this fact, though from its place in the record it may be assumed that plaintiff did. No reason or purpose in asking for it was given by the plaintiff, and defendant seems to have made no inquiry as to why it was desired. There appears to have been just the bald stipulation entered into between the parties, early in the trial, of the fact of the partition without any reliance being placed on it by plaintiff upon the trial or until it is now relied on to overthrow the finding of the trial court in favor of defendant. If, under the stipulation, appellant had, on the trial, claimed a right to recover on account of the change in the subject-matter of the option contract affected by the partition, the defendant would have had the right, if he could, to show that the partition had been effected by mutual consent of the assignors of the plaintiff and the defendant; and if now, on an examination of the record, sufficient evidence appears from which this fact may be fairly inferred, it will dispose of the claim of appellant. Necessarily, as no claim was made by plaintiff under the partition on the trial, it could hardly be expected that evidence addressed directly to the circumstances under which the partition was made would appear. There was, however, evidence introduced on other subjects which, in a measure, also bears on the matter of the partition, and which we are satisfied sufficiently warrants a reasonable inference that the partition was effected with the knowledge and consent of Patterson and of the Dingleys, the assignors of the plaintiff.

The partition between defendant and his cotenant was made on March 25, 1907, and on that same day a deed to the property as described in the option was made to the plaintiff by Patterson and the Dingleys; the latter having theretofore acquired an interest in the option from Patterson. Prior to this date the plaintiff had been organized as a corporation and the Dingleys from the time of its organization had been officers thereof—W. H. Dingley being vice president up to March 9, 1908, and from that date thereafter its president, and W. E. Dingley had been its secretary ever since its organization. Both later owned all the issued stock of the corporation save five shares, and they were the persons most actively engaged in attending to the interests of the corporation under the option and who had the several interviews with the defendant subsequent to the default of the corporation in making payments under the option, at which interviews they endeavored to persuade the defendant to renew the option or allow it to be carried out, notwithstanding the default, or refund the moneys previously paid under it. In all these interviews, while various reasons were urged by them why the option should be extended or renewed or the payments refunded, no claim was made, or even intimated, in any of these interviews that the corporation had a legal right to have the payments returned on the ground that a rescission of the contract had been worked prior to the default of plaintiff by a change in the subject-matter of the option by reason of the partition and the substituted deed, although the defendant in all these interviews refused to recognize that the corporation had any rights whatever under the option or to discuss matters on the basis of the existence of any rights in favor of the corporation under it or to restore any payments which had been made. It further appears that the deed of March 27, 1907, from defendant to R. L. Patterson, deposited by the former with the bank in lieu of the original deed, was deposited there "after the division of the property between Mr. Webb and Mr. Thomas." This sufficiently indicates that the partition was effected between these two—Webb and Thomas—as cotenants of the property, though we attach importance to this only as it bears upon another item of evidence. Plaintiff introduced in evidence a letter written by defendant to the Coalinga Bank on April 2, 1907. In this letter were inclosed three deeds—the first a deed from Webb and others to the defendant; the second a deed from defendant to Webb; the third a deed from defendant to Patterson and others. Respecting these deeds the defendant wrote "the first deed [Webb to the defendant] is unsigned, but I am told Webb will have it executed in accordance with an agreement with Patterson. When this is done the deed [defendant to Webb] can be delivered to Webb; the third deed [defendant to Patterson] you will keep in escrow in place of the deed sent you, which deed you can return to me. This third deed [defendant to Patterson and others] can be delivered to Patterson when the last of the $40,000 payments is made." It is quite apparent from this letter, in connection with the testimony previously referred to showing that the division or partition of the land was between the defendant and Webb as cotenants, that the partition was effected and the deed from Webb to defendant and from the latter to Patterson and others of an absolute portion of the quarter section was made under an arrangement and agreement with Patterson prior to the deed to the plaintiff. It further appears in the record that prior to the commencement of the present action the plaintiff had brought an action against defendant which had been tried, though it does not appear what was the result. That action was to enforce specific performance of the option contract against defendant and the complaint was verified on behalf of the plaintiff by H. H. Dingley as its president. It was alleged that plaintiff, as assignee of Patterson had offered to perform all the covenants contained in the agreement between defendant and Patterson and pay the balance under the agreement, and that defendant refused to make a deed to the land and refused to return the $20,000 theretofore paid to him, and the prayer was for a decree to compel defendant to make and execute to it a deed to the "south half of the southeast quarter of section six," being the absolute interest which defendant had acquired under the partition, and to which the substituted deed in escrow applied.

Taking into consideration these facts disclosed by the record, and without further discussing them, it is sufficiently apparent that the partition was effected with the consent of Patterson, the assignor of the plaintiff, and from the relations between Patterson and the Dingleys, individually and as officers of the plaintiff, that the partition was effected by Patterson with the understanding and consent of all of them and for their benefit. When all the matters recited are fairly considered, this is the reasonable inference to be deduced.

In his answer to the petition for rehearing, respondent incorporated therein as an exhibit a copy of the complaint in the former action just referred to, certified by the clerk of the superior court as being correct. In this copy of the complaint is set forth, among other things, a power of attorney by plaintiff to Patterson dated January 19, 1907, authorizing him to effect a partition of the property and an agreement for a division of the property between Patterson, representing defendant, and Webb, the cotenant of the defendant and persons claiming under an agreement to sell executed by Webb, and the interchange of the deeds effecting a partition of the land and vesting title in plaintiff to the S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$. But this is not part of the record, and cannot be considered by us. If we could do so, it would only strengthen what is reasonably inferable from the record properly before us, namely, that the partition and the substituted deed to the segregated portion of the quarter section were effected and made with the consent of the assignors of plaintiff prior to their assignment to plaintiff of their rights under the option.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.

162 Cal. 553

RUGGLES v. HELFRICH et al. (S. F. 5,990.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 10, 1912.

Rehearing Denied May 8, 1912.)

1. ATTACHMENT (§ 308*)—CLAIMS—PRIORITY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action by a trustee for the benefit of creditors to compel parties to interplead in respect to their claims to a fund to which the trustee made no claim, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that an attachment under which one creditor claimed was levied prior to the making of an assignment under which the other claimed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1102-1113; Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

2. EXCHANGES (§ 12*)—MEMBER'S LIABILITY TO THIRD PERSON—EXECUTION—SERVICE.

The constitution of a stock and exchange board, providing for suspension of a member on which his seat should revert to the board and be appropriated to satisfy his creditors in the board, and made the president of the board ex officio a trustee for such person and for his creditors. After the reverter and sale of a member's seat, writs of attachment and of execution in an action against a creditor of the ex-member were levied upon all moneys belonging to defendant therein "in possession or under control" of such board, but notice was served upon the president of the board. Held, that the money was under the control of the board, and that the notice was sufficient to fix the execution creditor's lien upon the fund.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchanges, Cent. Dig. § 15; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Jas. M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by A. B. Ruggles, trustee for J. B. Hill and his creditors, interpleading Cora A. Helfrich and Alphonsine Romer. Judgment in favor of defendant Helfrich, and defendant Romer appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 118 Pac. 458.

Humphrey & Hubbard and William P. Hubbard, for appellant. W. H. Barrows and Aitken & Aitken, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal by one of two interpleading creditors from a judgment in favor of the other and from the order denying a motion for a new trial.

Ruggles, who was president of the San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board, and as such officer the trustee of $5,000 realized from the sale of a suspended member's place on the said board, brought this action, in accordance with the provisions of section 386 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to compel the defendants to interplead regarding their right to the sum of $437 to which each made claim. He alleged that he had no claim upon the money, and that he was ignorant of the respective rights of the defendants. He offered to deposit and did deposit the money in court. Each defendant filed a cross-complaint. Their claims were litigated, and judgment was rendered in favor of Cora A. Helfrich, a creditor of one Robert Romer. She claimed the money by virtue of an attachment and a subsequent levy of execution in a suit against Robert Romer. The other defendant, who is appellant here, is the mother of said Robert Romer. She sought to establish title by an assignment from her son antedating respondent Helfrich's attachment.

The first assignment of error made by appellant is that her demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained, but without quotation from the complaint we may say that it sufficiently complies with the requirements of section 386 of the Code of Civil Procedure. As before stated, A. B. Ruggles was president of the San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board. Article 13 of the constitution of the board provides that any member who has been suspended for six months, and has not made a satisfactory settlement of his contracts in the board, shall be deprived of all privileges of membership, "and his seat shall revert to the board and shall be appropriated to satisfy his creditors in the board." The article further provides a calling by the president of the board of a meeting of the creditors in the board of the delinquent member and the presentation of their claims to said president. Then follows the enactment that the "president in all such cases shall be ex officio a trustee for such person and for his creditors in the board, and the said trustee shall be vested with all the rights and privileges formerly held by such person in the board, and shall dispose of the same in the same manner that a person retiring in good standing may dispose of his seat and privileges. The proceeds of any such disposition so made shall be devoted by the said trustee to discharging the obligations due by such person to members of the board." The rest of the article pertains to the disposition of the surplus, if any, or the prorating by the trustee of the proceeds of the sale if they be insufficient to pay all the debts of the ousted member due to his associates. It is agreed by all parties that the seat of one J. B. Hill was sold, pursuant to said article 13 of the constitution of the Stock and Exchange Board, on December 12, 1906, and at that time there came into the possession of A. B. Ruggles, as president of said board, the sum of $5,000 as the proceeds of this sale; that said J. B. Hill was indebted to Robert Romer in the sum of $437; and that Ruggles holds possession of said sum in his capacity as trustee. Alphonsine Romer's purported assignment from her son bears date July 27, 1906, and is as follows: "For value received I hereby sell, assign, transfer and set over unto Alphonsine Romer all sums of money belonging to me, in the hands of the San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board from the said Hill for me. Said sum being about $437.00 as found owing from said Hill to me by said board. Robert Romer."

It is admitted that notice of this alleged assignment was not served upon the San

San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board by delivery to the assistant secretary until February 25, 1908, more than a year after service of attachment in the case of Cora A. Helfrich v. Robert Romer, 118 Pac. 458, and only three days before the levy of execution in that case.

[1] The court, while making no finding of actual fraud, did find that the attachment, served February 9, 1907, was prior to any assignment made by Romer to his mother, although both of them testified that said purported assignment was made about the time of its date, July 27, 1906. The finding was justified by the evidence for several reasons. In the first place, the late delivery of the assignment to the board scarcely comported with the declarations by appellant and her son of its early existence; secondly, Robert Romer commenced suit on December 12, 1906, against Hill and the San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board as defendants, in which he asserted that all of the proceeds of the sale of Hill's seat belonged to him, and he prosecuted that suit until final judgment against him on October 24, 1907. Robert Romer also made formal and solemn affidavit in December, 1907, in the suit of Helfrich v. Romer that the $437 was his property; and, finally, the instrument itself is inconsistent with the admitted facts in the case, for, while it is dated two days after Hill's suspension from the board, the sale of Hill's membership did not occur until months later, namely, on December 12, 1906, and there were no "sums of money belonging to" Romer either in the custody of the board or the possession of A. B. Ruggles at the purported date of the assignment. In view of these undisputed facts, the court below would have been afflicted with wondrous credulity if any other finding had been made.

[2] But the all important question in the case is raised by appellant's attack upon the sufficiency of the levies of attachment and execution. The complaint alleged: "That at the time when said sum of $5,000 so came into plaintiff's possession said J. B. Hill was indebted to one Robert Romer in the sum of $437, and plaintiff as trustee for the said J. B. Hill and his creditors took possession of said sum and ever since has held and now holds possession of said sum of $437 in his said capacity as trustee." This averment was adopted by respondent Cora A. Helfrich in her cross-complaint. It was also alleged in the complaint, adopted as part of the said cross-complaint, and proved at the trial, that the notices both of attachment and of execution were directed to the San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board, although served upon A. B. Ruggles as its president. Appellant advanced the proposition (and reserved the point by timely demurrer, objections to evidence, and specifications of alleged error) that there had never been any proper and valid levy upon the trustee, and that, therefore, the fund was available for payment to her when notice of the assignment to her from her son was served. To this argument two answers are made. One is that appellant is in no position to attack the judgment, even under her own theory, because at the date of the assignment of his interest by her son to her the board held no moneys of J. B. Hill, and at the date of the service of said assignment on the board the money here sought was held, according to her views, not by that organization, but by the trustee A. B. Ruggles. The other answer is that the levies were effective because, although Ruggles was nominally the trustee, he was such merely ex officio as president of the board and was in reality the agent and servant of that association; the money in his hands being in effect in the custody of the board. The returns upon the writs of attachment and of execution showed that the levy in each instance was upon all moneys, etc., belonging to defendants mentioned in the writ or either of them "in possession or under control of the San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board." Respondent submits that the money was under control of the board, and that service of notice upon said board through Ruggles as president was sufficient to fix her lien upon the fund. An inspection of article 13 of the constitution of the Stock and Exchange Board convinces us that respondent's position in this regard is correct. Under that article of the board's organic law the seat of the delinquent member "shall revert to the board and be appropriated to satisfy his creditors in the board." And, while in such matters the president is made trustee for the indebted member and his creditors, he is only made so ex officio. It is true that for the purposes of disposing of them the president is vested with all of the rights and privileges formerly held by the delinquent member, but this investiture is only by virtue of his standing as president. In no event would his trusteeship for the purpose of sale of a membership and payment of creditors from the proceeds thereof survive his office. On his removal or resignation from the presidency it would be his duty at once to account for the funds in his hands, not to his successor (for perhaps none would have been selected immediately upon the happening of a vacancy in the office), but to the Stock and Exchange Board to which the title to the deposed member's seat had reverted. Clearly, though designated as a trustee for the delinquent debtor and the latter's creditors, the president was merely an agent of the board, under its control, and was but a custodian of the funds in question. If he had embezzled the money, he would have been answerable to the board, because under the above-quoted provisions of the said board's constitution the property in the seat of the deposed member had reverted to that association, and the proceeds of the sale thereof belonged to the board, because at no place in the constitution is provision made for transfer of the title to the seat from the board to the trustee. He is made trustee for the creditors and for their debtor, but not for the board, except to make the sale and to distribute the proceeds. The title to the seat would pass to the purchaser, not from the president as trustee, but from the board as owner. It follows that whether we consider the service of notice on the board, through its officer, or upon the trustee as one under the board's control, the levy was sufficient.

In any view of this litigation, appellant is without standing in her demand for the money derived from the sale of Hill's seat. If her theory is correct and the money was available, not as the property of the Stock and Exchange Board, but as a fund in the hands of a trustee, her assignment was subject to the same infirmity as were the attempted levies of the writs of attachment and execution, because it referred to "money in the hands of the Stock and Exchange Board." If that association never had in its possession any money due to Hill, then the attempted transfer of title to such a fund never became effective.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

162 Cal. 559

In re SPRECKELS' ESTATE.
(S. F. 5,678-5,683.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 10, 1912.
Rehearing Denied May 9, 1912.)

1. WILLS (§ 11*)—DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY—COMMUNITY ESTATE.

Under the direct provisions of Civ. Code, § 1402, only one half of the community estate is subject to testamentary disposition by the husband; the other half going to the surviving wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 26-31; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

2. WILLS (§ 439*)—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

Under Civ. Code, § 1317, providing that a will is to be construed according to the intent of the testator, the primary purpose of construction is to ascertain his intention.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 952, 955, 957; Dec. Dig. § 439.*]

3. WILLS (§ 441*)—CONSTRUCTION—SURROUNDING CIRCUMSTANCES.

Under Civ. Code, § 1318, resort may be had, in case of uncertainty of a will, to the circumstances of its execution; but, where the intent is plain, it should be declared, regardless of the surroundings of its execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 958; Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

4. WILLS (§ 448*)—CONSTRUCTION—VOIDNESS OF INTESTACY.

Under the direct provisions of Civ. Code, § 1326, that construction of a will which will avoid intestacy is to be preferred over one which causes intestacy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 964; Dec. Dig. § 448.*]

5. WILLS (§ 688*)—CONSTRUCTION—VALIDITY OF DEVISE.

A direct devise is not invalidated because the testator, contrary to Civ. Code, § 857, attempted to pass title through trustees for that purpose; the devise and method of transfer of title being separable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1574; Dec. Dig. § 688.*]

6. WILLS (§ 688*)—CONSTRUCTION.

A testator devised all of his real property to trustees to pay the net income to his wife during life, and upon her death to divide the estate into three equal parts, two to be assigned, transferred, and set over to two sons, and to become theirs absolutely and forever, the trustees to pay the annual income derived from the remaining part to his daughter, and upon her death to pay over the principal, with all accumulations, to her children then living; the same to become his or hers absolutely and forever. The will also provided that, in case of the death of the testator's sons, all legacies and devises given to them should go to their issue, and should become theirs absolutely and forever. Held that, while the expression, "shall be assigned, transferred, set over, and delivered by my trustees," used with reference to the shares of the sons, calls for a conveyance by the trustees of the real estate, the other portions of the will show that the testator intended to make absolute devises to those to whom the trustees were directed to transfer the property, so that the beneficiaries of the trust take directly as devisees, despite Civ. Code, § 863, providing that the beneficiaries of express trusts take no estate in the property, but may only enforce performance; and consequently the interest of the devisees is not affected by the invalidity of the trust as one merely to convey, which is not within Civ. Code, § 857, specifying the only purposes for which a trust can be created.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1574; Dec. Dig. § 688.*]

7. WILLS (§ 688*)—CONSTRUCTION—TRUSTS—"DIVIDE"—"EQUAL."

By his will, a testator devised and bequeathed unto his trustees all his estate, including real property, to pay the income to his wife during her natural life, and upon her death to divide the estate into three equal parts, and to assign one part to each of two sons, and hold the remainder in trust to pay the income to his daughter during her life. Civ. Code, § 847, forbids trusts of real property, save those specified; and section 857 provides that express trusts in real property may be created to sell, mortgage, or lease, to receive the rents and profits and pay them to the use of any person, and to accumulate the rents and profits. Held that, as the word "equal," used in the direction to divide the estate into three equal parts, implies parts equal in all respects—in quantity, character, and value—and as the term "divide" does not, of itself, import a physical segregation in distinct shares, the directions to the trustees were not to make an actual physical division, it apparently being the intention of the testator to devise his property to his children as tenants in common; and hence the trustees did not take absolute title, but took only sufficient title to support their duty of apportioning the share of the daughter and paying over the income, and so the absolute devises to the children were not invalid, because based on trusts to physically divide, which were invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1644-1649; Dec. Dig. § 688.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2142-2143, 2419.]

8. TRUSTS (§ 134*)—TITLE OF TRUSTEES.

Trustees take only such estate as is commensurate with the necessities of their office; and hence, where the only duty of a trustee is to pay the income to one for her life, the trustee does not take a fee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 177; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

9. TRUSTS (§ 134*)—TITLE OF TRUSTEES.

Where trustees are given discretionary power of investment and reinvestment, such power does not make it necessary that they be invested with the fee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 177; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

10. PERPETUITIES (§ 6*)—SUSPENSION OF POWER OF ALIENATION—DEVISES.

Direct devises which vest at the death of one entitled to a life estate in the income of the property are not void because of undue suspension of the power of alienation, because among the takers there may be a child en ventre sa mère.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perpetuities, Cent. Dig. §§ 4-56; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Petition for partial distribution by Claus A. and Rudolph Spreckels, as trustees under the will of Claus Spreckels. From an order sustaining the demurrers of John D. and Adolph B. Spreckels, Claus A. and Rudolph Spreckels appeal, both individually and as executors and trustees. Judgment reversed.

Cushing & Cushing and Charles S. Wheeler (Nathan Moran, J. F. Bowie, and Wm. H. Gorrill, of counsel), for appellants. Morrison, Cope & Brobeck, Peter F. Dunne, Samuel M. Shortridge, and W. N. Hohfeld, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. Claus Spreckels died testate on the 26th day of December, 1908, leaving as his surviving heirs his widow, Anna Christina Spreckels, four sons, John D., Adolph B., Claus A., and Rudolph Spreckels, and a daughter, Emma C. Ferris. His will was admitted to probate in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco on the 9th day of January, 1909, and letters testamentary were duly issued to the executors named, who were his sons Claus A. and Rudolph. As will appear, the will undertook to make devises and bequests to these two sons, as trustees, upon certain declared trusts. After the lapse of four months from the issuance of letters testamentary, Claus A. and Rudolph Spreckels, as trustees of the trusts created by the will, petitioned the court for partial distribution to them of a large portion of the real and personal property left by the testator. They subsequently filed an amended petition to the same end. To this last petition, demurrers were interposed by John D. and Adolph B. Spreckels, and the court, after hearing the respective parties, made its order sustaining the demurrers, and denying the petition for partial distribution. It appears, and the fact is recited in the order, that the testator's widow died three days prior to the signing of the order.

From the order or judgment so made, six appeals are taken, one (No. 5,678) by Claus A. Spreckels individually, one (No. 5,679) by Rudolph individually, one (No. 5,680) by Claus A. and Rudolph as trustees of the trusts created by the will, one (No. 5,681) by Claus A. and Rudolph as trustees of the trusts created for the benefit of Emma C. Ferris, one (No. 5,681) by Claus A. and Rudolph as trustees of the trusts created for the benefit of Anna C. Spreckels, and finally one (No. 5,682) by Claus A. and Rudolph Spreckels as executors of the will of Anna C. Spreckels, deceased.

Involved in the first four of these appeals is a single main question, i. e., the validity, as a whole, of the trust scheme contained in the will. The other two appeals, No. 5,681 and No. 5,682, present narrower issues, turning upon the provision for the widow and the extent, if any, to which the petitioners' right to a partial distribution is affected by her death pending the proceeding. The conclusions which we have reached make it convenient and proper to consider all six appeals in one opinion.

As a preliminary to the statement and consideration of the positions taken by the respective parties, it will be necessary to set forth the terms of the will, and to give an outline of the amount and character of the estate left by the decedent.

Omitting the attestation clause and the signature thereto, the entire will reads as follows:

"I, Claus Spreckels, a citizen of the state of California, and a resident of the city of San Francisco in said state, now present in the city, county and state of New York, being of sound and disposing mind, and not under restraint or undue influence, do make, publish and declare this to be my last will and testament, hereby revoking all other wills by me made.

"First: I declare that all the estate, whereof I may die possessed, is the community property of my wife, Anna Christina Spreckels, and myself.

"Second: I hereby give, devise and bequeath unto my trustees hereinafter named, all my estate, real, personal and mixed, of every nature, kind and description, wherever situate and however held, which is or may be subject to my testamentary disposition at the time of my death, to have and to hold the same, in trust, nevertheless, for the uses and purposes, with the powers and in the manner hereinafter mentioned, namely, to-wit:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

"(a) To pay over the net annual income thereof to my wife during the term of her natural life.

"(b) Upon the death of my said wife, or upon my death if she be not then surviving, to divide said estate into three equal parts, when one of said parts shall be forthwith assigned, transferred, set over and delivered by my said trustees to my son Claus A. Spreckels, and the same shall be and become his absolutely and forever, and another of said equal third parts shall be forthwith assigned, transferred, set over and delivered by my said trustees to my son Rudolph Spreckels, and the same shall be and become his absolutely and forever.

"(c) To pay over the net annual income derived from the remaining equal third part of my estate to my daughter Emma C. Ferris of Kingswood, England, wife of John Ferris, during her natural life, upon her receipt without anticipation, and the same shall not be liable for her debts.

"Upon the death of my said daughter Emma, to pay over the principal of said one-third part of my estate, with all accumulations of the income therefrom, to her children then living, and so that each child shall receive an equal share thereof, and the same shall become his or hers absolutely and forever.

"Children of her deceased children shall, however, take the share which the parent would have taken had he or she survived my said daughter, and the same shall be divided between said children share and share alike. Upon the death of my said daughter without child, children or grandchildren her surviving, the trustees shall pay over the principal of said one-third part of my estate, with all accumulations of income therefrom, to my said sons Claus A. Spreckels and Rudolph Spreckels, share and share alike, and the same shall become theirs absolutely and forever.

"Third: If my said son Claus A. Spreckels shall not be living at the time of my death or surviving me be not living at the time of my wife's death, then all the legacies and devises given to him by this will shall go to his issue, to him in lawful wedlock born, share and share alike, and the same shall be and become theirs absolutely and forever. If my said son Rudolph Spreckels shall not be living at the time of my death, or surviving me be not living at the time of my wife's death, then all the legacies and devises given to him by this will shall go to his issue, to him in lawful wedlock born, share and share alike, and the same shall be and become theirs absolutely and forever.

"Fourth: I make no provision in this will for my sons John D. Spreckels and Adolph B. Spreckels for the reason that I have already given to them a large part of my estate.

"Fifth: I hereby authorize and empower my trustees hereinafter named, to invest and re-invest the trust funds hereinbefore provided for in any securities which are approved by my said wife and by them during her lifetime, in case she survive me, and after her death, in any securities which said trustees deem best, whether the same are or are not investments to which executors and trustees are by law limited in making investments, and to change or vary investments from time to time as they may deem best. I authorize and empower my executors and trustees hereinafter named, to hold and continue in their discretion, any security in which any of my property may be found invested at the time of my death, my intent being that they shall be absolved and discharged from the absolute legal duty of converting my estate into money, and that they shall not be liable for any shrinkage in value by reason of the exercise of the discretion hereby reposed in them.

"Sixth: I authorize and empower my executors and trustees hereinafter named in their discretion to sell and dispose of any and all of my property, real or personal, wherever situate and however held, either at public or private sale, and at such time or times and upon such terms as may seem to them meet and advisable, and to give to the purchaser or purchasers of any of my said property all deeds, bills of sale and other muniments of title which may be expedient or necessary.

"Seventh: I nominate, constitute and appoint my sons Claus A. Spreckels and Rudolph Spreckels as executors of this my last will and testament, and as trustees of any and all trusts herein created, and I direct and request that no bond or other security be required of them as such executors or trustees, or in any capacity in which they may act under this will."

[1] It will be observed that the testator declares, in paragraph "First" that his entire estate is community property, and that, by the express terms of paragraph "Second," he undertakes to dispose of only such portion of the estate as is subject to his testamentary disposition. The amended petition for partial distribution, too, alleges that all the property owned by the testator at the time of his death was the community property of himself and his wife. Since she survived him, an undivided half of said property was all that he could, as it was all that he attempted to, pass by means of his testamentary disposition. The other half vested at once in his widow. Civ. Code, § 1402.

The estate in the hands of the executors, at the time of the filing of the amended petition, consisted of real property, of the value of over $5,700,000, and of personal property worth in excess of $3,600,000. The amended petition describes some 19 tracts of real estate in the city and county of San Francisco, of the value of $5,358,460.60, and certain money, stocks, and bonds, of the value of $2,809,880, and asks for distribution of the real and personal property so described.

There is no question of the formal sufficiency of the petition to make out a case for partial distribution. The only doubt is whether the will gives to the trustees any estate which they may take under the laws of this state; or, in other words, whether any of the trusts sought to be created are valid. The respondents concede here, as they did below, that the trust to pay the income to the widow, during her life, is good; and it is not claimed that this trust may not be regarded as separable from the further provisions of the will in such manner that it should be given effect, without regard to the alleged void character of the other provisions. But, inasmuch as Mrs. Spreckels died before the decision on the demurrer to the petition for partial distribution, it is urged that the validity or invalidity of the life trust is immaterial. With this position, the appellants in S. F. Nos. 5, 681 and 5,682 take issue; their claim being that, in any event, the trustees are entitled to the income accruing before the death of Mrs. Spreckels, and that an affirmance of the order here appealed from will operate as a bar to a future assertion of their right to such income. We shall not stop to consider this contention, as we have reached the conclusion that the order must be reversed for other reasons. In the discussion which is to follow, we shall confine ourselves to a consideration of the provisions of the will which assume to dispose of the estate after the death of the widow.

With reference to these provisions, the argument of the respondents may be divided into three main heads: First. It is claimed that the will devises the entire estate to the trustees in fee upon trusts to partition the same into three shares or portions of equal value, and, upon the completion of such partition, to convey two of said parts to Claus A. and Rudolph, respectively, to hold the third for the life of Emma C. Ferris, and to convey the principal of such third share to her issue, or, in default of issue, to Claus A. and Rudolph. So far as such trusts affect real property, they are, it is claimed, in contravention of the terms of sections 847 and 857 of the Civil Code, and must fall, in accordance with the rule declared in Estate of Fair, 132 Cal. 523, 60 Pac. 442, 64 Pac. 1000, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70. Second. It is urged that the real and the personal property are so bound up in a single testamentary scheme that, if the provision cannot be given effect with respect to realty, the trust of the personalty must fail as well. Third. The respondents contend that the trusts to be performed after the death of the widow are void, with respect to both real and personal property, because they involve a suspension of the absolute power of alienation beyond lives in being. Civ. Code, §§ 715, 716.

[2, 3] Prerequisite to an examination of the soundness of these contentions is a construction of the will—a determination of the intention of the testator. The rules of construction to be applied in cases of this character are well settled in this court. The primary purpose of all such rules is to ascertain the testator's intention (Civ. Code, § 1317)—not some undeclared purpose which may be imagined to have been in his mind, but the intention disclosed by the words he has used. Estate of Young, 123 Cal. 337, 344, 55 Pac. 1011. As an aid to the interpretation, resort may be had "in cases of uncertainty" to the circumstances under which the instrument was executed. Civ. Code, § 1318; Estate of Marti, 132 Cal. 666, 61 Pac. 964, 64 Pac. 1071; Kauffman v. Gries, 141 Cal. 295, 74 Pac. 846. Where the intent is plain, the duty of the court is to declare that intent, without regard to the consequences. If the plan adopted by the testator for the disposition of his property cannot be given effect, because it violates the rules of law, the court is not authorized to substitute for the illegal provision some other which it may suppose would have been adopted by him, if he had known that the directions actually given could not be carried out. Estate of Young, supra. In other words, the court cannot, under the guise of construction, make a will for the testator in place of the one he has made.

[4] Side by side with these principles, however, goes the rule, frequently enunciated and applied in our decisions, that, where a will may reasonably be interpreted in two ways, one of which results in intestacy, while the other leads to an effective testamentary disposition, the interpretation which will prevent intestacy is to be preferred. Civ. Code, § 1326. "It is only," said the court in Estate of Heywood, 148 Cal. 191, 82 Pac. 758, "when the language actually used by the testator will admit of no other reasonable construction than that it declares an invalid trust that a court will declare this to be its effect." So, in Estate of Dunphy, 147 Cal. 99, 81 Pac. 317, it is declared to be "a fundamental principle that a construction of a will favorable to testacy will always obtain when the language used reasonably admits of such construction, and that it will not be held to contain a void trust, unless the invalidity of the trust be beyond question." See, also, Estate of Heberle, 153 Cal. 275, 95 Pac. 41; Estate of Peabody, 154 Cal. 173, 97 Pac. 184.

[5, 6] Applying these rules, is the will in question to be so construed as to subject its provisions to the destructive effect of the doctrine declared in Estate of Fair and similar cases? Estate of Sanford, 136 Cal. 97, 68 Pac. 494; Estate of Pichoir, 139 Cal. 682, 73 Pac. 606; McCurdy v. Otto, 140 Cal. 48, 73 Pac. 748; Hofsas v. Cummings, 141 Cal. 525, 75 Pac. 110; Estate of Dixon, 143 Cal. 511, 77 Pac. 412; Sacramento Bank v.

Montgomery, 146 Cal. 745, 81 Pac. 138; Campbell-Kawannanako v. Campbell, 152 Cal. 201, 92 Pac. 184. The substance of the decision in the Fair Case was that our Civil Code prohibits all express trusts in real property, except those specified in the four subdivisions of section 857; that a trust to convey real property is not included in any of such subdivisions; and that therefore a devise to trustees in trust, to convey to persons named, is void, where the instrument discloses an intent that the ultimate beneficiaries shall take only through a conveyance by the trustees, and that no estate or interest, other than a right to enforce the performance of the trust (Civ. Code, § 863), is given to them. In that case, as the court held, the language of the will was such as to compel the conclusion that the only direct gift was to the trustees, and that the only mode provided for the passing of any interest to the beneficiaries was by means of the conveyances directed to be made by the trustees. There were no words, other than the direction to convey, which indicated that such beneficiaries were to have the property at all. Their right had its birth and its sole claim to existence in the gift in trust to convey to them. If that gift fell, as embodying a void trust, there was nothing left in the will to operate as a devise of the property. And the situation was the same in each of the above-cited cases in which the Fair Case was applied and followed. In none of these cases was the trust to convey accompanied or supplemented by words which could be construed as constituting a direct devise of a legal estate to the person or persons to whom the trustees were directed to convey.

But wherever the court has been called upon to consider a will which contained, in addition to words which, standing alone, would be deemed to create a trust to convey, some expression which might be operative to pass the title directly from the testator to the beneficiary, the ruling has been that the will was to be construed as making a direct devise, and such devise has been given effect, in disregard of the words importing an invalid trust. And it is not too much to say that, in examining wills to ascertain whether they contained direct devises, the court has been keen to search for words which might save the testamentary attempt from failure.

Estate of Dunphy, 147 Cal. 95, 81 Pac. 315, was the first of the cases illustrating this tendency. We shall not take the space required to give even a summary of the somewhat extended provisions of the will there under consideration. It will suffice, for the present purpose, to say that there were provisions, as to two-fifths of the estate, that property devised to trustees should be "transferred and distributed" as directed by a beneficiary of the income for life, and, as to another fifth, that it should be "paid" as so directed. In each instance, the will declared that, in default of such direction by the beneficiary, the property should "go to" certain persons. The court held that no trust to convey was created; the reasoning being that the phrase "go to" amounted to "clear words of direct devise," and that the prior expressions, "shall be transferred and distributed," or "shall be paid," did not "necessarily mean that the title to the property could pass only by the trustees' conveyance." Estate of Heywood, 148 Cal. 184, 82 Pac. 755, followed shortly after the Dunphy Case. It furnishes another illustration of the desire of the court to so construe a will as to avoid the necessity of holding that the testator had attempted to create a trust which would be void. There the residue was given to trustees, in trust to apply the income as directed during the life of the testator's wife. Upon the death of his wife, one half of the residue was to "vest absolutely" in his daughter, and the other half was to "vest absolutely" in certain proportions in the testator's brothers, sister, nephew, and niece. It was then provided that if the daughter should die before the wife, without child or children, "then the whole of said residue shall be divided among my said brothers and sister and niece and nephew in the proportions named in the last preceding subdivision." The court construed the clause just quoted, taken in connection with the rest of the will, as directly devising the share otherwise going to the daughter to the other relatives, in the event of her death. "It is true," says the court, "that the testator might have used more apt words to disclose his intention to directly devise his estate to the other beneficiaries, should his daughter die; but a declaration that it 'shall be divided' among them is by no means indicative of a different intention. If these words were used in a will free from trust provisions, they would undoubtedly be treated as words of devise."

More directly in point, and very persuasive authorities against the application of the doctrine of the Fair Case to the Spreckels will, so far as the point of a "trust to convey" is concerned, are Estate of Heberle, 153 Cal. 275, 95 Pac. 41, and Estate of Peabody, 154 Cal. 174, 97 Pac. 184.

In the first of these cases, the decedent had, in the seventh paragraph of his will, devised certain property situated on Spring street, in the city of Los Angeles, to trustees, to be held by them for the term of five years, "and then the same by said trustees to be conveyed to the children of my deceased brother Martin Heberle * * * share and share alike." By the fourteenth paragraph, the testator empowered his trustees to convert real estate into money by sale. The seventeenth paragraph read as follows: "That the power to sell my real estate, as set forth in the fourteenth subdivision, shall not affect my said Spring street property, which is not to be sold, but which is to be kept and distributed to the children of my deceased brother Martin." The following quotations from the opinion will show the view which the court took of these provisions: "The trust created by paragraph 7 being void in its creation, no estate as to the Spring street property passed to the trustees. If in the will there are no other apt words disposing of the property on the failure of this trust, intestacy as to it must be the result. The trial court found those words in the seventeenth subdivision of the will, above quoted; and, in view of the fact that a construction which favors testacy is always preferred to one resulting in intestacy (Dunphy's Estate, 147 Cal. 96 [81 Pac. 315]), it may not be said that the interpretation is not a permissible one. The seventeenth paragraph contains a direction for the 'distribution' of the Spring street property to the children and grandchildren. While it may be argued that the word has reference to distribution by the trustees under the trust, yet it is not a word aptly used for such a purpose; while it is apt in its application to a direct devise. It is equally open to the construction, therefore, that the distribution to the children is to be at the hands of the court. * * * The paramount idea in the testator's mind was, not that the property should descend to his beneficiaries through a trust, but that, with or without a trust, they should with certainty receive property to that value from his estate." The court accordingly sustained the holding of the trial court to the effect that the decedent had not died intestate as to this portion of his estate.

In Estate of Peabody, the clause in question read as follows: "Secondly, I do now give, devise and bequeath all my real estate [describing both real and personal property] to my executors to be transferred by them to the Women's Occidental Board of Missions * * * with the executive committee of the Women's Presbyterian Missionary Society of the Los Angeles Presbytery as trustees and managers thereof."

It was contended, as obviously it could be with great plausibility, that the will disclosed an intention to create an estate in the executors, upon the trust that it was to be by them conveyed to the Board of Missions, and that such trust was void under the rule in the Fair Case. The court, however, held that this was not the necessary construction of the will; that the word "transfer," at least when used by one not skilled in the use of technical legal terms, was not synonymous with the word "convey," and that the testatrix, in disposing of her property, "meant nothing more than that the executors, in their representative capacity, should take possession and control of the property for administration under the laws of this state, and in due course of administration should transfer it by final decree of distribution to the trustees in whom she desired that the title should vest, to be applied to the charitable uses she describes." "Thus," says the court, "the will is harmonious, no trust to convey is created, and her intended disposition is valid. * * *"

In the light of these decisions, let us consider the terms of the will before us. We pass for the moment the direction in subdivision b of paragraph "Second," "to divide said estate into three equal parts," and concern ourselves here and now only with the question whether the three separate parts which, according to the contention of the respondents, are to be created by such division are directly devised by the will to the beneficiaries, or are to pass to them only by and through a conveyance to be executed by the trustees. A reading of the second and third paragraphs shows that the will abounds in expressions which, under the prior decisions of this court, must be held to import a direct devise of legal estates.

In subdivision b of paragraph "Second," after providing for the division of the estate, the will declares that one of said parts shall be forthwith assigned, transferred, set over, and delivered by my said trustees to my son Claus A. Spreckels, and the same shall be and become his absolutely and forever. It will not be questioned that the words in italics are apt and proper words to vest an estate by direct gift from the testator. They are identical in purport with the phrase "shall go to," which, as we have seen, is declared in the Dunphy Case to show an intent to make a direct devise.

Incidentally, something may be said regarding the phrase "shall be forthwith assigned, transferred, set over and delivered," upon which the respondents found their contention that a trust to convey was sought to be created. The only one of these words which can be deemed applicable to the passing of title of real property is the word "transferred," concerning which this court has said, in Estate of Dunphy, supra, that it does not "necessarily mean a passing of the title to land by a trustees' conveyance, and it would not have that meaning even if there had been a direction to the trustees to transfer." But, notwithstanding these expressions and what is said of the word "transferred" in Estate of Peabody, we do not doubt that the phrase "shall be forthwith assigned, transferred, set over and delivered by my said trustees," is, in and of itself, open to the construction that it calls for a conveyance by the trustees of real estate, and for such mode of passing title to personalty as may be appropriate to the particular property involved. Unlike the will in the Peabody Case, the one before us was not the work of an unskilled hand; and, giving all due weight to the intimations in former decisions that the word "transfer" is less significant than the word "convey" of an intent to have the title to real estate pass by deed, we may concede that, if nothing appeared in the will but a devise to trustees in trust to "transfer" the property to certain persons. It could hardly be said that the provision was in any substantial degree different from that contained in Fair's will.

But, when words which, by themselves, import an unlawful trust to convey are joined with other words which are sufficient to operate as a direct devise of the interest, the direct devise is not destroyed by the fact that the testator may have attempted to provide in addition for an unlawful method of passing title through trustees. In such case, the provision for a conveyance is to be regarded in the manner indicated by the following quotation from the opinion of the majority of the court in Estate of Fair: "The case would have been different if there had been an independent devise followed by a direction to the trustees to convey to the devisees; in that case, the words of devise would create an estate, and the conveyance would have been unnecessary, except, perhaps, as convenient and additional evidence of title." It can, we think, make no material difference that the direction for transfer is followed, instead of preceded, by words indicating an intent to make a direct devise. No such distinction seems to have been in the mind of the writer of the opinion in which the passage just quoted is found; for in the sentence just preceding he says that the direction to transfer and convey cannot be treated as calling for mere evidence of a title passing otherwise, because "the words do not precede or follow, and are not merely additional or supplemental to, any other words which, by themselves, and without the aid of the words 'to convey,' would devise any estate whatever to the asserted remaindermen." It would, we think, require some refinement of construction to say that the phrase, "when one of said parts shall be forthwith assigned, transferred, set over and delivered by my said trustees to my son Claus A. Spreckels, and the same shall be and become his absolutely and forever," conveys to either the professional or the lay mind a very different meaning from "when one of said parts shall be and become the property of my son Claus A. Spreckels absolutely and forever, and the same shall be forthwith assigned, transferred, set over and delivered by my said trustees to him."

It will be observed, further, that the testator is not content with saying in the one instance "and the same shall be and become his absolutely forever," but the same form of words is applied to the provision for Rudolph. With an unimportant variation, it is used again in subdivision c of paragraph "Second" in the provision for the disposition of the principal of the third part upon the death of the daughter, Emma. Again, the same expression is found in the provision made for the disposition of the third part, in the event of the death of the daughter without child, children, or grandchildren surviving. And so, again, it is repeated in paragraph "Third" with reference to the disposition of the shares of Claus A. Spreckels and Rudolph Spreckels, in the event that they, respectively, shall not be living at the time of the testator's death, or at the time of his wife's death.

But this is not all. The argument that the testator intended to make direct devises to the various beneficiaries named in the will is much strengthened by other phrases used by him. Thus, in subdivision c of paragraph "Second," the provision for the daughter, Emma, and her issue, or those who may be substituted for them, not only contains the words of direct devise which we have already quoted, but it is marked by an entire absence of those words ("assigned," "transferred," etc.) which are found in the earlier part of the will, and which might be deemed to indicate an intent that the title to the property should pass by conveyance from the trustees. The provision is that upon the death of Emma the trustees are "to pay over the principal of said one-third part of my estate * * * to her children then living," and similarly they are directed, in the event of her death without issue living, to "pay over the principal of said one-third part of my estate * * * to my said sons. * * *" Here we find no words which might be held to import a direction that the legal title to real estate should be conveyed by trustees. The word "pay" is not properly applicable to the conveyance of real property; and a direction to pay over such property in itself imports a direct devise to the party or parties who are, according to the testator's intent, to receive the property. Estate of Dunphy, 147 Cal. 101, 81 Pac. 315.

The same may be said of the provision in subdivision c that upon the death of Emma the children of her deceased children "shall take" the share which the parent would have taken, if surviving, "and the same shall be divided between said children share and share alike." Here is no provision for a conveyance to the children of children. Whatever may be said of a direction to trustees to divide property among certain persons or members of a class (a point to which we shall revert hereafter), Estate of Heywood, supra, is a clear authority in support of the proposition that a mere provision that property shall be divided, or shall be divided equally, among certain persons amounts to a direct devise to those persons as tenants in common. And it is equally beyond doubt that the expression "shall take" is appropriate and sufficient to constitute a direct devise.

A further argument in support of the contention that the beneficiaries take by direct devise is afforded by paragraph "Third" of the will. Here the testator provides that, if his son Claus A. shall not survive the testator or his wife, "then all the legacies and devises given to him by this will shall go to his issue. * * *" A similar provision is found with respect to Rudolph. Here the testator, in referring to each of his sons, speaks of the "legacies and devises given to him by this will." On the contention of the respondents, no legacies or devises are given to either of the sons by the will. Omitting any consideration of personal property, the only devise, as they construe the will, is one in fee to the trustees; and the sons Claus A. and Rudolph take (Civ. Code, § 863) no estate or interest in the property, but only a right to enforce the performance of the trust. To such a right, the term "devise" is inapplicable. The testator, in referring to the legacies and devises given to these sons, undoubtedly believed he had given them legacies and devises; and, the question being purely one of intent, his language must, if possible, be given the effect which he understood that it would have. Furthermore, it is provided by the subdivision last quoted that the legacies and devises given to each of these sons by the will "shall go" to his issue. Here, again, are words of direct devise. So that we find running through the entire will a succession of varying phrases, each of which, when used in a will, has been repeatedly held to operate as a direct devise of a legal estate. The testator speaks of property which "shall be and become his absolutely and forever." He directs the trustees "to pay over the principal" of one-third part of the estate. He provides that in a certain event such part "shall be divided" between children, and that children of deceased children "shall take" the share which the parent "would have taken." He speaks of "legacies and devises" given to his sons "by this will," and provides that such legacies and devises shall "go to" certain persons. Certainly there is far more reason for saying that this will indicates an intent to make direct devises of legal estates to the beneficiaries than could be found in such cases as Estate of Heberle and Estate of Peabody, supra.

We do not overlook the argument of the respondents to the effect that the provisions of paragraph "Third" of the will are substitutionary merely, and that they give to the issue, in certain contingencies, nothing more than the parent would have had under the provision originally made for him. The parent taking nothing because, as is contended, his only claim is under a void trust to transfer, the issue occupy no better position. The argument would have considerable weight if it were perfectly clear, without regard to the terms of paragraph "Third," that no direct devise to Claus A. or to Rudolph was intended. But, as we have shown, paragraph "Second" itself contains several expressions which indicate an intent to pass the property directly from the testator to the beneficiaries, without the intervention of a conveyance by trustees. The meaning of the original provision for the two sons being at least doubtful, the subsequent clauses, even though they be substitutionary, may be looked to for the purpose of ascertaining the intent of the testator, as disclosed by a comparison of all the provisions of his will. If, on the face of the preceding paragraph, it is open to question whether the testator designed that his sons should take an estate independently of any action by the trustees, we may be helped to a solution of the doubt by an examination of the language in which he has cast his provision for benefits to the issue of his children. The testator, it may be assumed, intended to provide a consistent scheme for the distribution of his property. It is hardly probable that he intended that a son, surviving his mother, should receive his share only through a conveyance by trustees, and that at the same time he gave direct devises to the issue of such son, if he should predecease his mother. The substitutionary clauses, therefore, containing, as they do, language which is clearly that of direct devise, throw light upon the testamentary plan as a whole, and support the view that direct devises are given by the preceding clauses.

[7] We conclude, therefore, that the will, on its proper construction, purports to give to Claus A., to Rudolph, and to the issue of Emma, direct devises. There still remains, however, the question of what is devised to them. We are thus brought to a consideration of the various questions arising out of the direction to the trustees to "divide said estate into three equal parts," etc. Section 857 of the Civil Code, in its enumeration of the purposes for which a trust of real property may be created, does not include the division or partition of such property. If, then, the meaning of this direction is that the trustees are either to physically subdivide the various parcels of realty owned by the testator, or, as the respondents claim, appraise the entire estate, real and personal, and allot various parts of it, so as to make three shares of substantially equal value, and if, as they further claim, no interest is given to either Claus A., Rudolph, or the issue of Emma until the share of each has been ascertained by such appraisal, segregation, and allotment, it follows, say the respondents, that any direct devise is of an interest which is to be ascertained and brought into being only as the result of the exercise of a prohibited trust, and that it cannot be effective. The prohibited trust to divide is, as is argued, the very foundation and basis of the right of the beneficiaries. Even if there be a direct devise of the segregated portions (which is, of course, denied by the respondents), such devise is effective only after the completion of the division ("to divide said estate into three equal parts, when one of said parts shall," etc.), and is, both as to identity of subject-matter and time of vesting, absolutely dependent upon the void trust.

On the other hand, the position of the appellants is, first, that the direction to divide calls for nothing more than a mere theoretical or imaginary separation into equal interests in every item of the property, creating, in effect, a tenancy in common, in which view the direction would impose upon the trustees no powers, other than the law would imply; and, second, that if an appraisement and allotment is called for the direction to make it, whether a trust or a mere power, and whether invalid or valid, does not prevent the property passing to the ultimate beneficiaries by virtue of implied devises to them of undivided interests in remainder.

At the outset of this inquiry, it becomes important to recall the circumstances under which the testator executed his will. As disclosed by the instrument itself, he was not in the complete ownership of any item of the property, real or personal, which was to and did pass into the possession and control of his executors. It was all community property, in which his interest was only an undivided half; and he undertook to dispose of this half, and no more. A physical partition of each parcel of land would not, therefore, have been feasible, and cannot be supposed to have been in the contemplation of the testator. Yet such subdivision, if any, would seem to be necessary, if we are to give full and literal significance to the word "equal." The estate is to be divided into three "equal" parts. The parts will not be equal, unless they are equal in all respects—in quantity, in character, and in value. See Richardson v. Morey, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 181, 188. The respondents, however, limit the requirement to that of equality in value, and contend that the trustees are to appraise the entire estate, and divide the whole into three separate portions, which may be composed of entirely different constituents, subject only to the condition that the value of each part, according to their appraisement, shall be substantially the same. But this, if a permissible interpretation of the language, is by no means a necessary one. And, since the result of adopting it would be to destroy the testamentary effort, we must pass it by, if we can find a different meaning, which, while fair and reasonable, will allow validity to the will. In the first place, the word "divide," in and of itself, does not import an actual physical segregation into distinct shares. It is, when used in such phrases as "to be divided between," or "divided in equal shares among," or the like, very commonly used to express an intention to give interests to persons as tenants in common. It will suffice to cite a few of the many authorities that might be referred to in support of this statement:

Walker v. Dewing, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 520; Emerson v. Cutler, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 108; Griswold v. Johnson, 5 Conn. 363; Weir v. Tate, 39 N. C. 264; Freem. Cot. & P. (2d Ed.) § 23, and cases, cited. It is likewise well settled that such phrases as "equal parts," or "equal third parts," or "third parts," are entirely appropriate to indicate a tenancy in common. Arthur v. Nelson, 1 Dem. Sur. (N. Y.) 337; Andrews v. Boyd, 5 Me. 199.

There is, to be sure, a difference between a mere provision that property is "to be divided" between certain persons (as in the cases heretofore cited), and a direction that trustees shall so divide it. The respondents cite cases which, as they claim, support their contention that the words used in the Spreckels will impose upon the trustees the active duty of separating the entire estate into three distinct portions of equal appraised value, and to allot one of these shares to Claus A., one to Rudolph, and the other to themselves, as trustees for Emma and those who are to take upon her death. But we think these authorities, when examined, will be found to deal, in each instance, with a form of expression substantially different from that employed in the Spreckels will. In Hawley v. James, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 61, the will directed the trustees, at a certain time, "to proceed to divide" the residue, "as nearly as may be, into twelve equal parts," and to "allot and distribute the same." There were, besides the words "as nearly as may be" and the direction to "allot and distribute," various other expressions showing that an actual segregation of shares was contemplated. De Kay v. Irving, 5 Denio (N. Y.) 646, specifically directed that all the property "shall be valued in one united valuation, to be made by appraisers * * * and the aggregate amount of such valuation shall be divided into five equal parts, and so much of the said aggregate estate as shall be equal in value to one of said five parts shall go to each of my children," etc. It was further directed that specific property should be included in certain portions. Certainly there could be no doubt of what the testator meant by these elaborate provisions. Cooke v. Platt, 98 N. Y. 36, is somewhat closer to the case at bar; but even there the language pointed more clearly to a physical partition than that here found. The will gave property to trustees, in trust "to divide and distribute my estate, or its proceeds, * * * to and among my four children [naming them] in equal proportions." Lord v. Comstock, 240 Ill. 492, 88 N. E. 1012, is strongly relied on by respondents in support of their position that the entire fee was intended to be vested in the trustees, and was necessary to enable them to make the division. But there the will plainly declared an intent that an actual segregation of the estate into separate parts should be made; for it provided that upon the death of one of the life tenants her share of the income should go to her heirs "until one-half of the principal of my estate, as it shall then be, can be made over to them, the said trustees taking such time as they shall think best for the interest of all concerned in making division of said principal." The will considered in Story v. Palmer, 46 N. J. Eq. 1, 18 Atl. 363, in addition to provisions like those in the will before us, expressly gave power to the executors to "make all divisions and partitions of my real and personal estate, or the proceeds thereof." Fischer v. Butz, 224 Ill. 379, 79 N. E. 659, 115 Am. St. Rep. 160, involved a will which empowered the executors to "sell, convey, mortgage or partition any part or all of my estate for the purpose of settlement thereof," a form of words, which, in connection with the rest of the will, excluded the idea that tenancies in common were intended. Guilbert v. Guilbert, 68 Misc. Rep. 405, 124 N. Y. Supp. 564, was a case in which the devise was upon trust to set apart one-half of the residuary estate, "as nearly as the same, in the judgment of my executors, can be set apart or apportioned." This clearly gave a discretionary power to segregate specific property as one-half of the residue. In Potter v. Eames, 70 Misc. Rep. 147, 126 N. Y. Supp. 787, we again find the phrase "as nearly as may be" in connection with a direction to trustees to "divide into two equal separate parts or portions," and the court lays stress upon these words in announcing its conclusion. Manice v. Manice, 43 N. Y. 303, is a case strongly relied on by both parties, more particularly with reference to the question of devise by implication. For our present purpose, it will suffice to say that the testator provided an elaborate scheme for appraisal, and a division into 12 equal parts, of "the aggregate amount of such personal and real estate." One other case cited by respondents may be noted. It is Boston S. D. & T. Co. v. Mixter, 146 Mass. 100, 15 N. E. 141. The testator, by his codicil, gave one-fourth of his estate to a trust company, the income to be paid to his daughter, and "at her death I direct that said estate so left in trust shall be divided among her children, share and share alike, giving to each child * * * one share." It was held that because a division was to be made the entire estate was in the trustee. It will be observed that the will does not provide that the trustee is to make the division; and it would seem, accordingly, that, under the great weight of authority, including one case in our own state, the direction that the property should be divided might well have been held to be a direct grant of tenancies in common. Estate of Heywood, supra; Potter v. Eames, supra.

None of these cases, then, is authority for the proposition that a mere direction to divide an estate into three equal parts imports a physical partition of the property, or a valuation and apportionment into heterogeneous shares of equal appraised value.

It may be remarked that many New York cases use expressions concerning "division" or "severance" of trust funds or estates in a sense that might be misunderstood, if due regard were not had to the New York statute limiting restraints on alienation. The statute of that state prohibits the creation of a future estate which may suspend the absolute power of alienation for a longer period than during the continuance of not more than two lives in being at the creation of the estate. Where, therefore, an estate is devised for the benefit of several persons during their lives, it is often essential to the validity of the disposition that the interest of each be severed from the rest, so that, through considering such interest by itself, the suspension of the power of alienation shall not exceed the duration of two lives. But it is not necessary to this end that there should be any physical division. "All that is requisite is that the intent to have the estate contemplated as theoretically divided into separate parcels or portions should appear." Chaplin, Susp. of Power of Alienation, § 217. Instances of such supposed separation are found in many cases in which there was no direction to divide, but merely a provision for enjoyment "in equal shares," or other words indicating tenancies in common. Tucker v. Bishop, 16 N. Y. 402; Savage v. Burnham, 17 N. Y. 561; Everitt v. Everitt, 29 N. Y. 39; Hoppock v. Tucker, 59 N. Y. 202; Matter of Verplanck, 91 N. Y. 439. The Court of Appeals had no difficulty in reaching the same result, where the will expressly provided for a setting apart of an "undivided one-fourth part" of the residue. Vanderpoel v. Loew, 112 N. Y. 167, 19 N. E. 481. On the other hand, where a will devised an estate to trustees, in trust "to divide my estate into three equal shares, one to be held in trust for each of my children during life, and after death to be disposed of as follows," etc., the court treats the language as similar in effect to that used in such cases as Tucker v. Bishop, supra, Savage v. Burnham, supra, and Hoppock v. Tucker, supra, citing these cases in support of the statement that "the authorities abundantly sustain devises and bequests in this form." Moore v. Hegeman, 72 N. Y. 376. In the case last cited, the form of words was substantially the same as the part of the Spreckels will now under consideration. If such words called for a physical segregation of the estate, whether by partition or by appraisal and allotment of shares of equal value, the severability of the trusts would have been apparent; and the validity of the disposition could have been sustained on even clearer ground than that applied to cases where the will directed a mere theoretical segregation into undivided interests. Yet it did not, apparently, occur to the court that a simple direction to "divide into three equal shares" meant anything different from a direction to hold for beneficiaries "in equal shares."

Of the many cases cited by learned counsel in their exhaustive briefs, we may briefly notice one or two in addition to those already discussed. Thompson v. Hart, 58 App. Div. 439, 69 N. Y. Supp. 223, is strongly relied on by respondents. But the decision, when examined as a whole, seems to bear more strongly against their position than in its favor. There the devise was to trustees, "first, in trust to divide the same into five equal parts or shares, and to allot to my children * * * each one of said five parts or shares; second, as to each of such parts or shares, to continue seised of the same for and during the life of the child to whom such part or share is allotted, upon the trust * * * to apply the net income. * * * If such child leave no lawful issue then surviving, then to divide, distribute and pay over the said capital and accumulations in equal portions to and among the children then living of any surviving brothers or sisters." The provision (first) to divide and allot was given a construction similar to that for which the respondents contend here. But of the later provision (second) for the disposition of the property upon the death of a child ("to divide, distribute and pay over in equal shares"), a provision not unlike the direction to divide in the Spreckels will, the court says that it must be treated as a devise of remainders over to grandchildren, and that it "gave them estates in fee as tenants in common."

How v. Waldron, 98 Mass. 281, involved the construction of a will which devised property to trustees, and provided that the property at a certain time should be conveyed to testator's children; the same to be equally divided among them. The will did not, in terms, provide that the division was to be made by the trustees, although the language was fairly open to the construction that this was the intent. It was held that the duty of making partition was not imposed on the trustees, but that a conveyance to the children in common, in equal proportions, would answer the intent of the testator. Farrow v. Farrow, 12 S. C. 168, deals with a will which is somewhat similar, and declares a like conclusion. The following passage from the opinion is significant: "It seems to be thought, however, that the division of the property, after the death of John, is a part of the trust. The language of the will does not sustain such a view; but, if it did, then the testator has himself done the work by saying 'to be equally divided,' and has thus left nothing for the trustee to do." It might well be conceded that a devise to trustees, in trust to divide the property into three equal parts, when one of said parts shall be transferred by said trustees to A., another to B., and the third to C., is, in and of itself, open to the construction that a partition of the property into separate individual holdings is contemplated. This may, indeed, be the more obvious construction. But when, as here, the interest of the testator is only an undivided one-half, and a segregation of such interest into estates in severalty is impossible without the concurrence, either voluntarily or as the result of a bill for partition, of the owner or owners of the other undivided one-half, it becomes clear that this could not have been the intent. Accordingly, as we have already suggested, we find the respondents contending that the provision calls, not for a partition in kind, but for an appraisal of the corpus of the entire estate, real and personal, and for an allotment of properties, selected by the trustees, to the beneficiaries, with no restraint on the discretion of the trustees with respect to the kind, character, or amount of property that shall compose the respective shares, other than that the value of each shall be the same. But this is importing into the will, and that for the purpose of destroying it, language which the testator did not use. He directed his trustees to divide his estate into three equal parts—not to divide it "as nearly as may be, into twelve equal parts," and "to allot and distribute the same" (Hawley v. James, supra), nor that the trustees should make over "one-half of my estate, as it shall then be, taking such time as they shall think best for making the division" (Lord v. Comstock, supra), nor that the property "shall be valued in one united valuation * * * by appraisers, and the aggregate amount of such valuation shall be divided." De Kay v. Irving, supra.

Furthermore, the will does not stop with a mere direction that the trustees shall divide the estate into three equal parts, when one of said parts shall be transferred to A., another to B., and the third to C. After providing for the passing of "one of said parts" to Claus A., the testator, in disposing of the rest of the property, abandons the simple phrase "one of said parts," and declares that another of said equal third parts shall be transferred to Rudolph, and "the remaining equal third part" shall be retained for Emma. The term "one of said parts" would be entirely apt to signify a segregated portion, representing in value a third of the appraised value of the whole. But an "equal one-third part" means, according to the usual understanding, an undivided interest. There would have been no occasion for the testator to recur to this form of words if he had understood that Rudolph and the trustees for Emma were to have parts or shares which resulted from a segregation. Such parts or shares would not, strictly speaking, be equal one-third parts.

The respondents suggest the supposed absurdity involved in saying that a direction that the trustees are to "divide" means that the process is to result in the interests being "undivided." But the same criticism could be made of every case in which a provision that property shall be divided has been held to create tenancies in common. Where there is a tenancy in common, the interests of the respective owners, while attaching to the entire property, are separate and distinct from one another. Chaplin, Susp. of Allen, § 180. In that sense, the ownership of the property is divided, while the physical property itself is not.

There are further reasons against the construction that the trustees were to appraise the entire estate, separate the same into distinct shares of equal value, and allot such shares to or for the respective beneficiaries. In any case, such a valuation and separation would require some time; and where, as here, a vast and complex estate was involved, a considerable time would necessarily be consumed. Now, on the contention that during this period the entire fee was in the trustees, and that until the completion of the valuation, segregation, and allotment (or, as the respondents assert, until a conveyance) nothing would vest in the beneficiaries, some very peculiar results would follow. In the first place, the substitutionary provisions contained in paragraph "Third" take effect in the event of the death of Claus A. or Rudolph, respectively, before the death of the testator's widow. There is no provision for the issue of either, if he dies after his mother and before the completion of the separation into shares. In case of such death, the will would, therefore, on respondent's construction, fail to dispose of the one-third which would have gone to the son so dying. His estate does not take, because no interest has vested in him. His issue do not take, because the contingency upon which they were to take has not occurred. So there would be an intestacy as to this portion of the estate—a result which is to be avoided, if possible. Again, on this construction, there is no provision for the payment of income to the testator's daughter, pending the appraisal and division into shares—a result which can hardly be supposed to have been in accordance with the testator's intent.

It seems probable, therefore, that the testator contemplated that the division of his estate, the receipt of two-thirds thereof by his sons Claus A. and Rudolph, and the commencement of his daughter's receipt of the income of one-third, should all coincide at one moment of time—that of the death of his wife. This could occur only if the direction for a division into three equal parts were intended to accomplish merely a creation of equal one-third interests in the entire estate and every part thereof; that is to say, tenancies in common.

[8, 9] On this interpretation, which appears to us, in view of the scope of the entire will, to be, at the least, as consistent with the language used as is the interpretation of respondents, there can be no objection, under sections 847 and 857 of the Civil Code, to the validity of the dispositions made. The estate is devised to trustees, in trust to pay the income to the wife for life (Civ. Code, § 857, subd. 3); upon her death, one-third of the estate is devised to Claus A., or, if he be not then living, to his issue; another third to Rudolph or his issue; the remaining third rests with the trustees upon the valid trust to pay the income to Mrs. Ferris during her life, and upon her death, this third goes, by virtue of the terms of the will itself, to her children and grandchildren, or to Claus A. and Rudolph. The trustees, under the familiar rule, take only such estate as is "commensurate with the necessities" of their office. Morffew v. S. F. & S. R. R. Co., 107 Cal. 587, 40 Pac. 810. A fee in them was not required for the performance of the duties imposed upon them by the provisions which we have considered. All that they required was an estate in the entire property for the life of Mrs. Spreckels, and a further estate in one-third for the life of Mrs. Ferris. The powers of investment and reinvestment given by the fifth paragraph of the will, and the power of sale given to the executors and trustees by the sixth paragraph, being purely discretionary, do not make it necessary that the trustees should be invested with the fee. Morffew v. Railroad Co., supra.

If these views be correct, the direction to the trustees to divide the estate (i. e., into interests held in common) and to assign, transfer, set over, and deliver imposed upon them merely the obligation which would rest upon any trustee, at the termination of his trust, with respect to property which then passed in undivided interests to two or more persons. It would be his duty to deliver such property to the parties entitled (Estate of Dunphy, supra), and to that end to make such division as is involved in the act of turning over an undivided share. Such duties being implied, they may be conferred by the testator without violation of the provisions of sections 847 and 857 of the Civil Code. Estate of Heywood, supra.

It is of no consequence, in this inquiry, whether the interest given to the issue of Mrs. Ferris is, prior to her death, vested or contingent. Nor need we undertake to define, in technical terms, the nature of the interest of any beneficiary. It is sufficient to say that all such interests are directly devised by the terms of the will; and that such of them as did not vest at the death of the testator have vested at the widow's death, or will necessarily vest at the death of the daughter.

The construction which we have put upon the will makes it unnecessary to consider the soundness of appellants' contention that, even if the direction to divide be construed as respondents would have it, the will nevertheless contains direct devises by implication to the persons intended by the testator to be his ultimate beneficiaries.

Having reached the conclusion that valid dispositions of the realty are made, there is no occasion to examine the point that the supposed invalidity of the trust with respect to the realty carries with it, as a part of a single scheme, the failure of the provisions, in so far as they affect personal property.

[10] Nor need we give extended consideration to the contention that the power of alienation is suspended beyond permissible limits. The argument is based on the construction that the estate is, after the death of the widow, vested in the trustees for the purposes of division and transfer during a term not measured by lives in being. No further answer is required than to repeat that, as we read and understand the will, it does not give the estate to the trustees during any such term. Of course, if direct devises, vesting at the death of Mrs. Spreckels, or of Mrs. Ferris, are given to all of the ultimate beneficiaries, the fact that among the takers there may be a child en ventre sa mère does not, as the respondents concede, effect an undue suspension of the power of alienation.

It follows that the will created valid estates in the trustees, and that the demurrers to their amended petition should have been overruled.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

162 Cal. 340

McKENNA et al. v. McKENNA et al.
(S. F. 5,770.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1912. On Rehearing, April 16, 1912.)

GIFTS (§ 45*)—INTER VIVOS—UNDUE INFLUENCE—PLEADING.

In an action to set aside a gift of a deposit, the complaint alleged that the deceased made the gift to defendant by assigning her bank book; that at that time the deceased was 74 years of age, greatly enfeebled in mind, and unable at times to talk or to knowingly understand the ordinary affairs of life; that she was living with defendant; that plaintiffs were her next of kin, and were upon terms of friendly relationship; that defendant, for the purpose of inducing the deceased to make such assignment, falsely represented to her that plaintiffs willfully neglected her, and induced deceased to make her cross to the assignment by way of affixing her signature thereto; and that deceased did not know the significance of her act, which, save for the influence exercised by defendant, she would not have done. Held that, while undue influence to invalidate a transaction must amount to force or coercion, destroying the free agency, the complaint was, on general demurrer, a sufficient charge of undue influence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. § 80; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Patrick McKenna and others against Mary McKenna and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Costello & Costello, for appellants. Breen & Kelly, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. A general demurrer to the second amended complaint was sustained; plaintiffs, declining to amend, suffered judgment, and from that judgment prosecute this appeal.

The action was to avoid a gift or assignment of $2,800 on deposit in the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, the property of

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Catherine Styles or Catherine McKenna, which moneys, shortly before her death, she gave to defendant Mary McKenna through the medium of an assignment of her bank book. It is alleged that Catherine Styles was at the time 74 years of age, and so greatly enfeebled in mind as to have become "childish, and unable at times to talk or to knowingly understand the ordinary affairs of life, or to understand or to transact business"; that she was living with Mary McKenna; that plaintiffs were relatives and next of kin of Catherine Styles, and had been upon terms of friendly relationship with her; that Mary McKenna, for the purpose of inducing the deceased, Catherine Styles, to make this assignment, falsely and fraudulently represented to her that the plaintiffs willfully neglected her, and were without natural affection for her; and that their only object in maintaining friendly relations with her was for the purpose of sharing in the disposition of her property. The known falsity of these statements is charged against Mary McKenna. It is further alleged that Catherine McKenna, besides being infirm of mind and body, was without education, could not read or write, and while thus enfeebled was induced by Mary McKenna to make her cross to the assignment by way of affixing her signature thereto; that Catherine McKenna, when she so made her cross as a subscription to the assignment, did not know or understand the contents of the instrument, and did not know or understand the significance of the act which she was induced to perform; and finally that, save for this influence so exercised by Mary McKenna over this debilitated mind, she would not have executed the purported assignment.

In support of the judgment thus obtained, respondents cite a list of authorities from this state, with the declaration that they show that in pleading undue influence it is not sufficient merely to state the nature of the undue influence, but the facts should be alleged with certainty and expressly connected with the transaction sought to be invalidated; allegations that influence was overpowering, or that a party was unable to resist, without an allegation of the facts supporting such conclusions, are not sufficient. It is further declared that these authorities show that undue influence, to invalidate a transaction, must amount to force or coercion destroying the free agency as to such transaction; and that the exercise of such undue influence upon the very transaction must be shown. All this is quite true. Still we think that the complaint states sufficient facts to pass a general demurrer. In Estate of McDevitt, 95 Cal. 17, 30 Pac. 101, it is said: "I think the concluding sentence, 'that at said date, and while in said condition, and unable to resist the importunities of said Andrew, deceased made his mark to said pretended will,' sufficiently connects the alleged undue influence with the testamentary act." In Estate of Motz, 136 Cal. 558, 69 Pac. 204, there will be found a discussion of the ease with which an aged person of impaired physical and mental powers may be coerced by the "secret machinations and importunities of designing persons who, in the guise of love and friendship, have surrounded him and administered to his wants as life and reason have gradually ebbed away." In Estate of Sheppard, 149 Cal. 219, 85 Pac. 312, relied upon by respondents, the allegation was that Mrs. Reed, "when the mind of said Joseph Sheppard was weak and enfeebled from the infirmities of age and disease, continued to repeat and continued to prejudice and unduly influence the said Joseph Sheppard against your petitioner." There was in that case no allegation of any facts as to the nature, character, or form of the undue influence, or the charges or accusations against the petitioner, which were assumed to have coerced the testator's mind. In the pleading before us, there are the infirmities of the mind and body of the deceased alleged, the false representations are specifically set forth, and the successful accomplishment of a fraud growing out of this alleged undue influence in inducing Catherine McKenna to execute a gift and assignment, without an understanding of her act.

The judgment appealed from is therefore reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the general demurrer.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a rehearing is denied. The judgment heretofore entered is modified to read as follows: "The judgment appealed from is therefore reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer, with leave to the defendants to answer within such time as may to the said court seem advisable."

18 Cal. App. 400

QUARTAROLI et al. v. CITY OF SONOMA et al. (Civ. 889.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 29, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court

April 29, 1912.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 375*)—ABANDONMENT OF CONTRACT—RIGHT TO MATERIALS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, which provides that, if a contractor abandons the work, the contract price applicable to the liens of others than the contractor shall be fixed by taking from the value of the work done and materials furnished and on the ground, which shall thereupon belong to the owner, the payments then due and actually paid, materials left on the ground on abandonment of a building contract with a city belong to the city, where there were no lien claimants, and persons claiming such materials under a bill of sale from the contractor have no rights therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 375.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERROR FAVORABLE TO APPELLANT.

An award to plaintiffs, who claimed under a bill of sale from the contractor, materials left on the ground on the abandonment of a building contract could not be complained of by them on an appeal from a judgment for the defendants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4052-4062; Dec. Dig. § 1033.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thomas Denny, Judge.

Action by L. Quartaroli and others against the City of Sonoma and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Jas. C. Sims and Jas. W. Oates, for appellants. A. B. Ware, R. A. Poppe, and W. F. Cowan, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiffs bring the action to recover the possession of certain personal property or the value thereof, in case delivery cannot be had, alleged to be $3,590.85. They claim ownership by virtue of a bill of sale from one John T. MacQuiddy, of date September 13, 1906. MacQuiddy had entered into a written contract with defendant, the city of Sonoma, to construct a municipal building for that city, agreeing to furnish all materials and labor therefor at the agreed price of $15,475. This contract was duly authorized and legally entered into and was duly recorded. No question arises as to full compliance with the provisions of the statute relating to the making and recording of such contracts. At the same time MacQuiddy executed a bond with said city, "in the sum of $4,000.00," on which plaintiffs, including defendant Heggie's intestate, were sureties, which recited the making of said contract and was conditional upon its faithful performance by MacQuiddy and that he "shall make full payment to all persons supplying him labor or materials in the prosecution of the work provided for in said contract." This bond was also recorded at the same time and with the contract. MacQuiddy entered upon the work and prosecuted it up to September 8, 1906, on which day, as found by the court, "work ceased upon said building or the construction thereof and was wholly abandoned and the said John T. MacQuiddy ceased to do any work upon said building from the 8th day of September, 1906, and said cessation from work and the finishing of said construction and the abandonment of said work and said contract by said MacQuiddy on said unfinished building continued for more than 40 days after said cessation of work by said contract or Mac-

Quiddy, and that at the time of the abandonment of said contract by said contractor MacQuiddy the articles of personal property and the materials mentioned in the answer of said city of Sonoma, which were materials necessary for the construction of said building, were then actually delivered and on the ground where said building was to be constructed, and that the same and all thereof were necessary materials for the construction of said building and were actually delivered and on the ground where the same were to be used in the construction of said building, and that all of the aforesaid personal property was used and placed in the said building by defendant Newman at the instance of the said city of Sonoma long prior to the commencement of this action."

It appeared, and was so found by the court, that after MacQuiddy ceased work the city called upon him to resume work which he neglected and refused to do, and on September 13, 1906, he made the bill of sale to plaintiffs on which they rely. The court found further as follows: "That said John T. MacQuiddy entirely failed to complete said contract or to perform the conditions and covenants and agreements therein set forth, and that by reason of said default and failure to carry out said contract, said defendant city of Sonoma was compelled to and did, after proceedings had to that end, let to the highest bidder, to wit, to defendant James B. Newman, and entered into a written contract with him for the completion of said building in all respects as it was to be completed under the original contract to and with the said MacQuiddy, and the said James B. Newman and the said city of Sonoma entered into a contract for the completion of said building in and at the price of $14,200." And that prior to the entering into said contract with said Newman and subsequent to the failure and abandonment of the said MacQuiddy to perform his said contract, the said materials and articles of personal property, being then and there actually delivered and were upon the ground where said building was to be constructed, the said city of Sonoma caused to be estimated, inventoried, and listed, the said articles of personal property as nearly as possible by the standard of the whole contract price entered into by the said MacQuiddy with said city, and that the said materials and all thereof were delivered to the said James B. Newman by the said city of Sonoma for the completion and construction of said building and the carrying out of the said contract with the said Newman, and that said James B. Newman was furnished the said materials set forth in the separate answer of the said city of Sonoma by the said city, and that the same were placed in and used by him in the construction and completion of said municipal building." The court also found: "That the said city of Sonoma has paid out and expended the sum of $15,200 in cash for the carrying out and completion of the building entered into by the said MacQuiddy and abandoned by him and for the carrying out and completion of the contract as entered into by the said defendant James B. Newman for the completion of the building which was completed in all respects in accordance with the original contract, and that all of the materials and articles of personal property in controversy herein and herein sued for was actually used and necessarily used in the completion of the said municipal building, and that its value is hereby fixed at the sum of $3,590.85, and that if the city of Sonoma is or should be compelled to pay therefor the said sum of $3,590.85 to the plaintiffs, then and in that case the said city of Sonoma would lose and be damaged in the sum of the value thereof, to wit, $3,590.85, and that no part of the said sum has been paid to the said city of Sonoma, and that the bondsmen who executed the bond herein referred to and who are the plaintiffs in this action (with the exception of the said C. Aguillon, whose administrator is a plaintiff herein), would be liable to the said city for the said sum. That the said bond is a valid and legal bond and indemnified to the extent of $4,000 the said City of Sonoma from all damages which the defendant city of Sonoma should sustain by reason of the failure or abandonment of the said MacQuiddy to perform his said contract. That there is in the treasury in the city of Sonoma the sum of $275 properly applicable to the payment of the plaintiffs' claim for damages or from any cause arising out of the use of the said property by the said city and the said materials and articles of personal property which were used in the construction and completion of said building, and that there is no other money or funds applicable to the payment of the claim or demand of the plaintiffs herein sued upon, and that there will not be in the treasury of the said city any greater or other amount than the said sum of $275 in the general fund of the said city properly applicable to the payment of the said claim. That the plaintiffs are bound by their bond for any loss occasioned to the city of Sonoma by reason of the said abandonment of the said contract, and the said contract entered into by the said city with the said MacQuiddy to the extent of $4,000, and that the building was only completed at and for the sum of $15,200 after using all of the said materials and personal property involved in this action in the construction and completion of said building, and that the plaintiffs are estopped from recovering any other or further amount than the said sum of $275."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It appears that defendant Newman's contract gave him the right to use the materials in question "free of cost to him and to be used in the construction of said building." Upon the alleged sale to plaintiffs the court found as follows: "That on September 13,

1906, and while the said materials were upon the said plaza and grounds upon which the said municipal building was to be erected, and was thereafter erected, the said John T. MacQuiddy made a bill of sale to the said Quartaroli, Dal Poggetto, J. Fochetti, and C. Aguillon, and that said bill of sale was given to them to secure them as the bondsmen of the said John T. MacQuiddy in the said sum of $4,000, and to secure them on account of other obligations that they had entered into for and on behalf of the said John T. MacQuiddy. That at the time of making the bill of sale, the said parties to whom the same was made placed a man in charge of the materials and covered it with a canvas to protect it from the elements. That the defendant city of Sonoma made an inventory and estimate of the material before it was used in the construction of the said building and knew of the claim of the said parties to whom the said bill of sale was made. That defendant Newman completed the contract, and the building was accepted by the city, and he received $14,200 from the city. That while John T. MacQuiddy was working upon the said building he received from the city for material and labor on said building the sum of $1,000." The evidence was that MacQuiddy, on September 13th, pointed out to plaintiffs the material in question, and they put a canvas over part of it, and for a couple of days a man had charge of it. But it was not moved from the plaza nor taken possession of otherwise by plaintiffs. The court further found: That "at no time prior to the commencement of this action or at any time did plaintiffs demand" of either of the defendants "the possession or return of said property"; that, prior to the commencement of this action, plaintiffs had knowledge of the letting of said contract to Newman and that all of said materials had been used in the completion of said building as originally contracted for by said MacQuiddy, "and the said defendant Newman in submitting his bid and in entering into said contract for the completion of said building did so upon the consideration and express understanding that the said materials described in the answer of said defendant city were to be used by him in the completion of said building and without cost or expense to the said Newman, all of which was well known by the plaintiffs herein and their predecessors in interest, and the said plaintiffs did not at any time notify said defendant Newman that they claimed the said property or were the owners of said property, or that the same had been assigned to them by said MacQuiddy until after the completion of said building, but on the contrary the said plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest, having full knowledge that the city of Sonoma claimed the said personal property as its own, and that the said Newman intended to use the same in the completion of the building, permitted the said Newman to expend large sums of money in using the said property in the said building without objection and without any claim or notice that the said plaintiffs were the owners of the said personal property by assignment from said MacQuiddy, or otherwise, and by reason thereof the said plaintiffs are estopped from recovering from the said Newman for the value of any of said property." As conclusions of law the court found that plaintiffs are entitled to judgment "against the city of Sonoma only for the sum of $275, and that they are not entitled to their costs, nor is the city of Sonoma entitled to its costs," and, as to the defendant Newman, that plaintiffs are entitled to recover nothing, and that defendant Newman recover his costs. Judgment passed accordingly, from which and from the order denying their motion for a new trial plaintiffs appeal.

The findings indicate the character of the answer, which is quite lengthy and need not be set out. It denied plaintiffs' ownership or right of possession; set up MacQuiddy's contract and bond and breach thereof; that the city was compelled to complete the building and make the contract to that end referred to in the findings; that plaintiffs were estopped by their conduct; that defendants were entitled to set off or counterclaim plaintiffs' demand by reason of their bond given to the city and generally pleaded the issues to which the findings respond.

Respondents urge the point that the bond given by the contractor on which the plaintiffs here were sureties is in itself a complete answer to the claim of plaintiffs, as it exceeded in amount their claim; that this bond falls under the rule in Union Sheet Metal Works v. Dodge, 129 Cal. 393, 62 Pac. 41, and other cases, because it was a voluntary obligation and not entered into pursuant to section 1203, Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore was not void, as was held in cases such as Shaughnessy v. Am. Sur. Co., 138 Cal. 533, 69 Pac. 250, 71 Pac. 701, and Montague, etc., v. Furness, 145 Cal. 205, 78 Pac. 640, where it appeared affirmatively that the bond was given under the command of section 1203.

It is also strongly urged that plaintiffs are estopped to recover because they knew, at the time he attempted to convey the property to them, that MacQuiddy had abandoned his contract and quit work, leaving the material in question in plaintiffs' possession, where it had been delivered to be used in the construction of the building; that they knew the city had advertised for new bidders and that this property was to be considered in the bids as subject to be used by the successful bidder, and with this knowledge and the further knowledge that it was so used, they made no demand for its delivery to them and made no objection to its use in the building or forbade its use.

Respondents also claim that the entire building fund, with the exception of $275, was exhausted in the payments made to defendant Newman, under his contract, and that there are no longer any funds in the treasury out of which plaintiffs' claim could be paid.

Respondents also claim that the evidence showed that the transfer by MacQuiddy of his interest in the property was by way of security and was not consummated by delivery and was ineffectual as a sale.

[1] In some of these contentions there is much force, but we do not find it necessary to enter upon their discussion or decide the questions thus presented. It seems to us that section 1200, Code of Civil Procedure, conclusively establishes the right of the city, on the abandonment of the contract by MacQuiddy, to treat as its own the materials formerly belonging to him which were then on the ground in the city's possession, delivered there for the purpose of being used and which were used in the construction of the building, and that he had no right to defeat such ownership of the city or its right to use the materials for the purposes for which they were intended, by the attempted transfer to his creditors either absolutely or as security. The section is as follows: "In case the contractor shall fail to perform his contract in full, or shall abandon the same before completion, the portion of the contract price applicable to the liens of other persons than the contractor shall be fixed as follows: From the value of the work and materials already done and furnished at the time of such failure or abandonment, including materials then actually delivered or on the ground, which shall thereupon belong to the owner, estimated as near as may be by the standard of the whole contract price, shall be deducted the payments then due and actually paid, according to the terms of the contract and the provisions of sections one thousand one hundred and eighty-three and one thousand one hundred and eighty-four, and the remainder shall be deemed the portion of the contract price applicable to such liens." The section has received construction many times where the contractor had abandoned his contract and the rights of materialmen were involved. McDonald v. Hayes, 132 Cal. 490, 495, 64 Pac. 850; Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires, 154 Cal. 111, 114, 79 Pac. 152; McCue v. Jackman, 7 Cal. App. 703, 95 Pac. 673; Duffy Lumber Company v. Stanton, 9 Cal. App. 38, 98 Pac. 38. We find no case in our reports where the precise question here involved has arisen. It is this: When a contractor abandons his contract and quits work on the building leaving materials on the premises in possession of the owner of the building which the contractor has purchased and placed there to be used in the construction of the building, can he sell these materials or transfer them to creditors as security for his indebtedness to them, thus defeating the owner of all right thereto?

It is urged by appellants that, inasmuch as under the decisions (Mayrhofer v. Board of Education, 89 Cal. 110, 26 Pac. 646, 23 Am. St. Rep. 451, and others) the building could not be made the subject of a lien, the section has no just application here. Also, by its terms it concerns only the persons who may claim liens and does not concern the owner except as to such liens. It is true it protects persons entitled to liens in certain cases, but it specifically provides that, upon the abandonment of the work by the contractor, the "materials then actually delivered or on the ground, which shall belong to the owner," shall be deducted, etc.

An examination of the statute shows that the work and materials already done and furnished, including the materials then actually delivered and on the ground, shall, upon the abandonment of the work, belong to the owner, subject to such rights as are given to laborers and materialmen. The materials on hand are declared to belong to the owner, who may use them in the completion of the building, at their value, ascertained by the rule prescribed in the statute. The materials here were purchased by the contractor and were delivered on the ground to be placed in the building pursuant to his contract, and remained in the owner's possession after the contractor abandoned his contract and prior to any attempted transfer thereof. His abandonment was as much the abandonment of the materials delivered and on the ground as of the materials which had gone into the building. By the same token, all the materials referred to in the statute are treated alike.

It is true that, where there are liens of materialmen capable of enforcement, the statute gives them certain rights, after the owner is fully protected; but whether there are enforceable liens or not the fact does not take from the owner the rights given him. He finds himself with an uncompleted contract and with certain materials left on his hands by the defaulting contractor. His right to complete the building at the cost of the contractor is undoubted, and he certainly should have the right to lessen the cost to himself by using the materials which the statute says belong to him. Otherwise, the statute has little meaning for him.

In the case of White v. Miller, 18 Pa. 52, the controversy arose between an execution creditor who had sold on an execution against the contractor certain lumber after it was delivered on the ground on which the house was being erected and before it was worked into the house. In sustaining the lien as against the owner, the court took the view that the delivery of the lumber was on the credit of the building and not of the contractor; that the title to it was vested, by the delivery, not in him, but in the proprietor of the building "subject only to the revindication of the seller." "The ownership of it," said Gibson, C. J., who delivered the opinion, "between the time of delivery and of working it into the building, could not be in the contractor, because it was delivered to him, not on his own credit, but on the credit of the building to which it was destined. It was sold for the building and, consequently, to the owner of it." What the statute was in Pennsylvania at that time does not appear. It is to be inferred from the opinion that the principle on which the decision rests was invoked for the protection of materialmen and as "not only a just but a convenient one." Here, however, we have a statute making the owner of the building the owner of the materials delivered and on the ground at the time the contractor has abandoned his contract. There are no lien claimants; the question is one solely between the owner and the contractor. Every consideration of justice and fair dealing would seem to support the view we have taken of the statute. Appellants' contention apparently is that the bond is void and, in effect, that the owner is powerless to protect himself by a bond; that the contractor had the right to abandon his contract and turn over the materials delivered and on hand to whom he pleased, casting upon the owner the burden of completing the building at his own cost, which the contractor, confessedly, is unable to do and who may be insolvent. If the controversy were between the contractor and the owner for the value of this property, used, as it was, in the completion of the building and in the carrying out of the contractor's obligations, no court would entertain the contractor's claim, and we cannot see that his assignees should be accorded any stronger position.

The case of Steiger v. City of Sonoma, 9 Cal. App. 698, 100 Pac. 714, relied on by appellants, is not in point. There no delivery of the property had been made to the contractor and title had not passed to him, and for that reason it was held not to come within the provisions of section 1200, Code of Civil Procedure, but there, as in other cases, it was held that this section furnishes the rule for the disposition of materials belonging to the contractor, when he abandons his contract, which have been delivered and are on the ground where the building is to be erected.

It is only upon the theory that the contractor has abandoned all right to the materials, and that the ownership thereafter is in the owner of the building, that any claim of lien is given the mechanic and materialman. There is no reason why this relation of the owner to the property should change because there are no lienors or because the building happens not to be subject to a lien.

It will be observed that the owner of the building is given the right to deduct all payments "then due and actually paid, according to the terms of the contract," from the value of the work and materials that have gone into the building, "including materials then actually delivered or on the ground," and the remainder "shall be deemed the portion of the contract price applicable to such liens." In other words, the owner of the building is chargeable with the abandoned materials in an adjustment of the liens. Why, then, should the contractor have the right to do as he pleases with these materials when the statute deals with them as belonging to the owner of the building?

In the case of Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires, 154 Cal. 111, 97 Pac. 152, it was held that where a valid contract in writing for the erection of a building has been executed and filed, and the work thereunder has been abandoned by the contractor before completion, the amount of the contract price applicable to liens of persons other than the contractor is to be determined by section 1200, Code of Civil Procedure. Also, that if the payments made by the owner pursuant to the contract amounted, at the time of the abandonment, to more than the value of the work and materials then done and furnished, estimated by the standard of the whole contract price, no part of the contract price is applicable to the payment of liens, and lien claimants must look to their personal claim against the contractor, and this extends as well to the final reserved payment of the contract price. It was also held that in determining the value of work done and the materials furnished up to the time of abandonment, under section 1200, it is proper to consider not only the value of the work done and materials furnished at the time of the abandonment, but also of the work left undone and the materials yet to be furnished, i. e., the necessary cost of the completion of the contract. We can see no way by which this view of the statute can be realized except upon the assumption that not only the work and materials that have gone into the building, but also the materials delivered and on hand for that purpose, shall belong to the owner of the building.

[2] Whether the court was justified in awarding plaintiffs the $275 to the credit of this fund after the completion of the building is a matter of which appellants cannot complain.

It may be that some of the findings of the court on other defenses than the one we have considered are not supported. Still, if we are correct in our view of section 1200, the finding on the defense is sufficient to support the judgment, disregarding all others.

We discover no prejudicial error in the record, and hence the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

18 Cal. App. 505

CARPENTER v. GROGAN. (Civ. 1,053.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 11, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 8, 1912.)

1. SALES (§ 273*)—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

A contract for the purchase of a crop of olives growing and about maturing, which fixes the price at $110 per ton on cars, less $55 per ton on four tons agreed on as oil olives, and which provides that the olives are to be picked in a careful manner for ripe pickling olives, does not import a warranty that the olives other than the four tons shall be suitable for pickling purposes, but the buyer is liable for all olives delivered at $110 per ton, except the four tons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 772-776; Dec. Dig. § 273.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A finding on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by D. J. Carpenter against C. P. Grogan. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Powers & Holland, for appellant. Geo. P. Adams and Curtis & McNabb, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. On the 19th of August, 1909, the following contract was entered into between plaintiff and defendant: "This agreement made and entered into by and between D. J. Carpenter, and Chas. P. Grogan of Los Angeles, both parties of the state of California, is to the effect that Chas. P. Grogan agrees to purchase of said D. J. Carpenter his crop of olives now growing on the trees at Del Rosa at the following prices: One hundred & ten dollars per ton on cars at Del Rosa—less $55.00 per ton on four tons agreed on as oil olives. Olives to be picked in a careful manner for ripe pickling olives. Payment to be made within 30 days from date of shipment. I hereby acknowledge receipt of $1.00 as first payment on the olives. C. P. Grogan. D. J. Carpenter." At the time this contract was executed plaintiff was the owner of an olive orchard upon which the fruit which was made the subject of the contract was then growing. At that time the olives had about matured, but were not in the state of ripeness desired by the vendee. Shipment of the crop commenced in the latter part of October and continued from time to time until the 17th of February. Certain payments were made on account of the purchase price agreed to be paid by the vendee, but at the time shipment of the crop was concluded defendant contended that only a balance of $290.35 was due, while the plaintiff insisted that the amount was $1,666.17.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] This dispute arose on account of the fact that a portion of the olives before delivery to the transportation company had become damaged by frost and other action of the elements. It was the contention of the defendant that his contract should be so construed as to require the plaintiff to accept for all olives delivered which were not suitable for pickling a price which would equal the reasonable value of such olives if purchased to be used for manufacturing oil. It was admitted that all of the olives delivered could be manufactured into oil, but that for pickling purposes a special standard of size, firmness, and ripeness was required. Defendant in his answer alleged that as to the damaged olives plaintiff had agreed subsequent to the making of the contract set out above that he should receive only the reasonable market price therefor. The trial court, however, found against the contention of the defendant as to the making of this subsequent agreement, and found, further, that all of the olives were picked in a careful manner, and that under the terms of the contract there was due a balance of $1,537.75 to the plaintiff, for which amount judgment was entered. In the findings of the court it was further recited that some of the olives had been damaged by frost or wind. It appeared by the testimony that the olives were all merchantable for the purpose of being manufactured into oil. The trial court determined that defendant was liable to plaintiff under the contract for all olives delivered at the rate of $110 per ton, except for four tons, for which it was recited in the contract payment was to be made at the rate of $55 per ton. All of the questions argued depend for their solution upon what construction should be given to the contract. If the defendant may be said to have reserved for his benefit a condition to be implied from the written contract of sale that the olives to be delivered, except the four tons agreed upon as oil olives, should be suitable for pickling purposes, otherwise that they should not be paid for at the rate of $110 per ton, then the various objections made would appear to be of substantial merit.

However, we agree wholly with the trial court in its construction of the contract of sale. The crop of olives was then growing upon the trees, and was about matured when the defendant made his contract of purchase; that contract contains no terms from which there can be construed any warranty of quality that should be possessed by the fruit contracted for; on the contrary, it was expressly recited that it had been agreed that four tons only of the olives were to be paid for at $55 per ton as "oil olives." The crop was purchased as a crop then in existence, and not one to be grown in the future; that crop was not destroyed, but was delivered to the defendant by the plaintiff. If the defendant expected to insist upon a certain standard of size, ripeness, or other quality, to be possessed by the fruit at the time it was delivered, then that matter should have been expressed in the written agreement of sale; otherwise the vendor could not be bound by it. This court recently had occasion to construe a similar contract in the case of Kenney v. Grogan, 120 Pac. 433; and questions almost identical with those presented here were there fully considered and determined adversely to this defendant's present contentions. The decision rendered in that case and the authorities therein cited are applicable here.

[2] The questions of fact determined by the findings of the trial judge rest in the main upon evidence of a conflicting nature, and therefore those findings are not subject to review.

Upon the whole case as presented on the record submitted to us, in our opinion, there is no error shown.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

18 Cal. App. 499

McDERMOTT v. CHATFIELD et al.

(Civ. 930.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 11, 1912.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 339*)—ACTION TO RECOVER PURCHASE MONEY—CONDITION PRECEDENT—NOTICE.

A purchaser made a deposit on the price, he to have 20 days in which to examine the title and complete the sale, and, if the title was defective, the vendor to have 30 days after notice to perfect it, in default of which the deposit should be returned, and 2 days thereafter the records were destroyed, making it impossible for the vendor to convey a merchantable title within the time contemplated. Held, that the purchaser, after notice of cancellation and demand for the return of the money, might recover the deposit without giving notice of defective title; and that the purchaser's right to a recovery would not be defeated by the giving of a defective notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 994-1002; Dec. Dig. § 339.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 112*)—PURCHASER'S RIGHT TO RESCISSION—DEFECT IN TITLE.

The purchaser of land under an agreement that he should have 20 days in which to examine title and complete the sale, the vendor to be allowed 30 days after notice thereof to perfect it, on the destruction of records, making it impossible for the vendor to convey a perfect title within the time allowed, was entitled to disaffirm the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 199, 200; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 338*)—RIGHT OF ACTION—PURCHASE PRICE OF LAND.

A purchaser, who pays a deposit upon the purchase price of land and disaffirms the contract after the destruction of records, making it impossible for the vendor to convey a perfect title within the time agreed on, may sue for the deposit in an action for money had and received.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 991-993; Dec. Dig. § 338.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by William P. McDermott against Thomas F. Chatfield and another, copartners, etc. Judgment for plaintiff, and motion for new trial denied, and defendants appeal. Appeal dismissed, and order denying new trial affirmed.

Dorn & Dorn & Savage, for appellants. Breen & Kelly, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. [1] This is an action for money had and received to recover $500, a deposit paid upon the purchase price of a parcel of real estate.

On or about the 16th day of April, 1906, plaintiff agreed, in writing, to purchase a certain described piece of real estate in the city and county of San Francisco; and he paid to the defendants on account of the price thereof the sum of $500. The agreement in effect provided that he should have 20 days in which to examine the title and consummate the sale. If the title was found to be defective, the seller was to be allowed 30 days after notice thereof to perfect the same, in default of which the deposit was to be returned.

At the trial, it was admitted by the parties that on the 18th day of April, 1906, the records in the office of the county recorder of the city and county of San Francisco were destroyed by fire, so that after said conflagration there existed no record title to said property.

No notice of defective title was given by plaintiff; but on June 15, 1906, he caused notice of cancellation to be served on the defendants, based upon what may be conceded to have been untenable grounds. Accompanying this notice of rescission was a demand upon defendants for the return to plaintiff of the $500 deposit.

Judgment for plaintiff was entered as prayed, from which defendants appeal, as also from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The record having been destroyed, it was impossible for the defendants to convey to plaintiff a merchantable title within the time contemplated by the contract. Consequently notice of defective title mentioned in the contract was not necessary, in order to entitle the plaintiff to maintain this action. Such notice would have been an idle and useless act, which the law never requires. Title Document Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 88 Pac. 356, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199; Hooe v. O'Callaghan, 10 Cal. App. 567, 103 Pac. 175; McCroskey v. Ladd (Sup.) 28 Pac. 216; Cabrera v. Payne, 10 Cal. App. 675, 103 Pac. 176; Read v. Walker, 18 Ala. 323; Pate v. McConnell, 106 Ala. 449, 18 South. 98. As, under the circumstances of this case, no notice was required, it cannot be held that a defective notice would disentitle the plaintiff to the return of his deposit.

[2, 3] It is asserted that the evidence in the case does not show that there was an abandonment or mutual rescission of the contract; and therefore, so it is argued, this action, being one for money had and received, cannot be maintained. As the evidence shows that the title was defective, and that it was impossible for the owner, within the time prescribed by the contract, to remedy the defect and convey a perfect title, the plaintiff was at liberty to disaffirm the contract, and entitled to sue for the deposit in this form of action. 2 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. 1018, 1019, and note on page 1019; Daly v. Bernstein, 6 N. M. 380, 28 Pac. 764; Demesmey v. Gravelin, 56 Ill. 93.

The appeal from the judgment was not taken in time, and is hereby ordered dismissed. The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

18 Cal. App. 468

TOGNAZZINI v. FREEMAN et al.

(Civ. 927.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 8, 1912.)

1. HIGHWAYS (§ 184*)—COLLISIONS BETWEEN AUTOMOBILES—PLEADINGS—WILLFULNESS.

A complaint, in an action for injuries in a collision between automobiles, which alleges that, just prior to the collision, plaintiff was driving his automobile on a public highway, that defendant was driving an automobile in the wake of plaintiff on the same highway and in the same direction, that when within a short distance of plaintiff defendant negligently lost control of his automobile, that plaintiff turned his automobile to the right of the highway, and thereby gave defendant ample room, had he so desired, to pass without damage to either party, that, instead of so passing, defendant, with the intent of stopping his automobile, willfully and deliberately ran it on and against the automobile of plaintiff, states a cause of action for a willful and deliberate wrongful act of defendant, and not for mere negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. §§ 471-474; Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. NEGLIGENCE (§ 119*)—ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.

A complaint, alleging that plaintiff's damage complained of was the proximate result of defendant's willful and deliberate wrongful act specified, is not supported by proof of mere negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 200–216; Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 203*)—INSTRUCTIONS—NECESSITY.

A complaint must be founded on a theory, and plaintiff is entitled to instructions on the law applicable to such theory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 477–479; Dec. Dig. § 203.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 251*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ISSUES.

Where the complaint stated a cause of action founded on a willful and deliberate wrongful act of defendant, an instruction submitting the issue of negligence merely was erroneous, as limiting the jury to the determination of a question not an issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 587–595; Dec. Dig. § 251.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 296*)—ERRORS IN INSTRUCTIONS CURED BY OTHER INSTRUCTIONS.

The error in an instruction submitting the issue of mere negligence of defendant, while the complaint stated a cause of action for a willful and deliberate wrongful act of defendant, was not cured by an instruction that one committing a willful wrongful act must respond in damages, and that, if defendant willfully and deliberately committed the wrongful act complained of, the verdict must be for plaintiff, since it could not be determined which of the two conflicting theories the jury followed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 705–713, 715, 716, 718; Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 243*)—CONFLICTING INSTRUCTIONS—"NEGLECT"—"WILLFUL NEGLIGENCE."

The conflict in instructions submitting the issue of negligence of defendant and the issue of a willful wrongful act cannot be harmonized on the theory that the term "negligence," as used in the first instruction, covers willful acts, since "negligence" signifies the absence of care and implies a failure of duty and excludes an idea of intentional wrong, while "willful negligence" implies an intentional failure to perform a manifest duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 564, 565; Dec. Dig. § 243.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4743–4763; vol. 8, pp. 7483–7484, 7729–7731.]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 883*)—THEORY OF CASE IN TRIAL COURT—REVIEW.

Where a cause of action founded on a willful and deliberate wrongful act committed by defendant is, by the acquiescence of both parties, tried on the theory of liability of defendant for negligence only, plaintiff may not, on appeal, complain of an instruction submitting negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3611; Dec. Dig. § 883.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 883*)—THEORY OF CASE IN TRIAL COURT—REVIEW.

Where, in an action founded on a willful and deliberate wrongful act committed by defendant, the evidence, as disclosed by the bill of exceptions, sustained the charge, and plaintiff requested instructions on the theory that the act complained of was willful and deliberate, plaintiff did not acquiesce in the submission of the case on simple negligence, though the charge expressly declared that plaintiff claimed damages because of the negligence of defendant, and he could complain on appeal of instructions submitting the issue of negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3611; Dec. Dig. § 883.*]

9. NEGLIGENCE (§ 100*)—WILLFULNESS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

The doctrine of contributory negligence does not apply to a case founded on the willful and deliberate wrongful act of defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 85; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by T. C. Tognazzini against Isaac Freeman and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Henry C. & Oliver Dibble, for appellant. Samuel M. Shortridge, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. This action is for damages, alleged to have occurred as the result of a collision between two automobiles, one driven by the plaintiff and the other by the defendants. The cause of action pleaded in the plaintiff's complaint was based primarily upon the claim that the defendants intentionally and willfully ran their automobile upon and against the automobile of plaintiff. On the other hand, the defendants in their answer, after specifically denying all the allegations of the complaint, save and except the happening of the collision, pleaded that the injuries, if any, sustained by the plaintiff as the result of the collision were proximately caused by the negligence and carelessness of the plaintiff, and then counterclaimed against the plaintiff for personal injuries and damage to their automobile, which, it was claimed, were caused by the alleged carelessness and negligence of the plaintiff.

The case was tried by the court with a jury, and resulted in a verdict for the defendants and against the plaintiff upon the latter's cause of action, and in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants on their counterclaim. Judgment was entered in accordance with the verdict, from which the plaintiff has appealed. Plaintiff has also appealed from an order denying his motion for a new trial, and the case is here upon the judgment roll and a duly authenticated bill of exceptions.

[1] The only point urged for a reversal of the judgment is that the trial court misconceived and ignored the theory of the plaintiff's case as pleaded in the complaint, and in its instructions confused and misled the jury as to what was the real and only issue upon which the plaintiff relied for a verdict.

In substance and effect, the plaintiff's complaint alleged that, just prior to the collision, he was driving his automobile upon a public highway in Marin county, and that the de-defendants also were driving an automobile in the wake of plaintiff's upon the same highway and in the same direction; that when within a short distance of plaintiff the defendants carelessly and negligently lost control of the speed of their automobile, whereupon plaintiff turned his automobile to the right of the highway, and thereby gave defendants ample room, had they so desired, to pass without damage to either party; but that, instead of so passing, as they might have done, the defendants, with the intent and purpose of stopping their automobile, willfully and deliberately turned and ran it upon and against the automobile of plaintiff.

The bill of exceptions in the case does not purport to detail in narrative form or otherwise the evidence offered upon the whole case. It does show, however, "that evidence was duly offered by plaintiff and admitted sufficient to sustain the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, and sufficient to sustain the allegations of plaintiff's answer to defendants' cross-complaint," and also that "evidence was offered by defendants and admitted sufficient to sustain the allegations of defendants' answer, and sufficient to sustain the allegations of defendants' cross-complaint."

The instruction most complained of was this: "The plaintiff in this action alleges in his complaint that the alleged injuries to his automobile were caused solely by reason of the carelessness and negligence of the defendants. The court therefore instructs you that the burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff to prove his allegations; that is to say, the burden is on the plaintiff to prove that the alleged damages to his automobile were solely caused by the carelessness and negligence of the defendants. Unless you are satisfied from the evidence that the alleged injuries to plaintiff's automobile were solely caused by the carelessness and negligence of the defendants, the plaintiff cannot recover; and it is your duty to find a verdict in favor of the defendants."

The vice of this instruction is that it assumes that plaintiff's pleaded cause of action was for damages caused solely by the carelessness and negligence of the defendants; whereas it is readily apparent from the first reading of the plaintiff's complaint that the defendants' alleged negligence in the first instance, although it resulted in their losing control of the speed of their automobile, was not claimed by the plaintiff to be the cause, proximate or otherwise, of the collision. Plainly the plaintiff's cause of action was stated and founded solely upon a willful and deliberate wrongful act of the defendants. By no process of reasoning is the complaint susceptible of the construction that the plaintiff was seeking to recover upon the theory that the damage alleged resulted, either immediately or at all, from the negligence of the defendants in losing control of the speed of their automobile. It is equally clear from a reading of the complaint that under the circumstances therein narrated this negligence, in and of itself, would not have resulted in any damage to the plaintiff; and it follows that if the plaintiff was entitled to recover at all it must have been upon the theory, supported by proof, that the damage complained of was the proximate result of the willful and deliberate act of the defendants, which, although exerted in an effort to save themselves from disaster, was nevertheless wrongful and actionable.

[2] In brief, under the facts stated in the plaintiff's complaint, no recovery could have been had for mere negligence; and if the evidence offered upon the trial in support of plaintiff's case showed negligence only, there would have been a fatal variance between the material allegations of plaintiff's complaint and the proof. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Johnston, 79 Ala. 436; Birmingham, etc., R. R. Co. v. Jacobs, 92 Ala. 187, 9 South. 320, 12 L. R. A. 830; S. & N. R. R. Co. v. Schaufier, 75 Ala. 136; Highland Ave., etc., R. R. Co. v. Winn, 93 Ala. 309, 9 South. 509; 1 Shearman & Red. Neg. § 7, p. 6.

[3] The complaint in every action should be founded upon a theory; and the plaintiff is entitled to have the jury instructed by the trial court upon the law applicable to the theory upon which the cause of action is founded. Buena Vista, etc., Co. v. Tuohy, 107 Cal. 243, 40 Pac. 386; Renton Holmes Co. v. Monnier, 77 Cal. 455, 19 Pac. 820; Buckley v. Silverberg, 113 Cal. 673, 45 Pac. 804.

[4] There is no escape from the conclusion that the trial court, in the instruction complained of, not only ignored the real theory of plaintiff's complaint, but erroneously limited the jury in its deliberations to the determination of a single question of fact which, under the pleadings, was not a material issue in the case, and which, if it had been submitted to the jury in the form of a special issue, would not have supported a verdict for or against the plaintiff.

[5] It cannot be said that the error of this instruction was rendered harmless by anything which the court may have said elsewhere in its charge to the jury. True the court, in a preceding instruction, did tell the jury that a person committing a willful wrongful act must respond in damages; and that if they found from the evidence that the defendants willfully and deliberately caused the collision in question the verdict must be for plaintiff. This theory of the case, however, was so absolutely opposed to the subsequent instruction, which limited the plaintiff's cause of action solely to the defendants' negligence, as to make it impossible for us to determine which of the two conflicting theories was followed by the jury; and therefore the erroneous instruction must be deemed to have been prejudicial. Lemas- ters v. S. P. Co., 131 Cal. 105, 63 Pac. 128; Rathbun v. White, 157 Cal. 248, 107 Pac. 309.

[6] The evident conflict in the trial court's presentation of the vital issue in the case to the jury cannot be reconciled, or the charge of the court as a whole harmonized, upon the theory that the term "negligence," as used by the court in the instruction complained of, was broad enough in its legal significance to cover both the careless and the willful acts of the defendants. Ordinarily, and likewise in the law, there is a decided and well-defined distinction between mere "negligence" and "willfulness." Negligence is opposed to diligence, and signifies the absence of care. It is negative in its nature, implying a failure of duty, and excluding the idea of intentional wrong; and it follows that the moment a person wills to do an injury he ceases to be negligent. Stephenson v. S. P. Co., 102 Cal. 148, 34 Pac. 618, 36 Pac. 407; Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 30 Pac. 529; Bent on Cont. Neg. 62; Gardner v. Hearst, 3 Denio (N. Y.) 232; Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Tarrt, 64 Fed. 823, 12 C. C. A. 618; Raming v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 157 Mo. 477, 57 S. W. 268; Holwerson v. St. Louis, etc., Co., 157 Mo. 216, 57 S. W. 774, 50 L. R. A. 850; Linton Coal M. Co. v. Persons, 15 Ind. App. 69, 43 N. E. 651; Dull v. Cleveland, 21 Ind. App. 571, 52 N. E. 1013; Brooks v. Pittsburg, 158 Ind. 62, 62 N. E. 694.

Notwithstanding the confused and indiscriminate use at times of the terms "negligence" and "willfulness" by judges and text-writers, it is certain that the weight of authority supports the view that those terms have a distinct and well-defined meaning, which is clearly pointed out in Holwerson v. St. Louis, etc., Co., supra, where it is said: "By 'negligence' is meant ordinary negligence—a term the significance of which is reasonably well fixed. By gross negligence is meant exceeding negligence—that which is mere inadvertence in a superlative degree. * * * By 'willful negligence' is meant not strictly negligence at all, to speak exactly, since negligence implies inadvertence, and whenever there is an exercise of will in a particular direction there is an end of inadvertence, but rather an intentional failure to perform a manifest duty, which is important to the person injured, in preventing the injury, in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another. Such conduct is not negligence in any proper sense, and the term 'willful negligence,' if these words are to be interpreted with scientific accuracy, is a misnomer."

[7, 8] The defendants in a measure confess the conflict between the pleadings and the instruction complained of, but endeavor to justify it upon the ground that the cause was tried by the lower court, with the acquiescence and approval of the parties to the action, upon the theory that the liability of the defendants, if any, was for damages arising from the negligence, rather than the willful act, of the defendants. In other words, it is the claim of the defendants that the cause was tried as if the plaintiff's complaint and the defendants' answer had specifically put in issue the defendants' negligence to the exclusion of the claim that the collision resulted from the deliberate and wrongful act of the defendants. If this were so, the plaintiff would not now be heard to complain for the first time that the negligence of the defendants in the first place, and without regard to their alleged subsequent willful and wrongful act, was not an issue in the case; but the record before us fails to show affirmatively or by fair inference that the cause was tried in the court below upon any issue other than that originally framed by the pleadings in the case. Nothing that is contained in plaintiff's requested instructions warrants the claim of defendants' counsel that the case was tried solely upon the theory that the defendants were guilty of negligence, and not guilty of a willful and deliberate act. On the contrary, the record shows that the instructions requested by plaintiff were expressly framed upon the theory that the negligence of the defendants in permitting their automobile to run away was not, in and of itself, sufficient to warrant a verdict for plaintiff; and that a verdict for plaintiff could not have been rightfully rendered, unless it was first found from the evidence that the defendants willfully and deliberately caused the collision.

During the course of its charge to the jury, the trial court made use of this language: "As counsel have informed you, the plaintiff claims damages because he alleges that he was negligently run into by the defendants." This language, it is claimed, verifies defendants' contention that the action was tried and determined solely upon the supposed issue of negligence. It will be observed, however, that it does not appear from the quoted statement of the trial court which of the counsel was referred to; but, in any event, for us to hold that a mere general statement of the trial court in its charge to the jury, over which counsel for either party had no control, is conclusive or any evidence of the fact that counsel for plaintiff waived the issues raised by the pleadings, and consented that the case be tried upon a wholly different theory, would be carrying the "theory of the case" doctrine to greater lengths than the ends of justice require or permit. If in fact the case had been, by acquiescence of the court and the parties to the action, tried upon an issue which was foreign to the pleadings, that fact could easily have been shown by a direct statement in the bill of exceptions, or by a transcription of the record of the proceedings had upon the trial from which the theory upon which the case was tried might be shown or fairly inferred.

The defendants further contend that, because the jury were instructed upon the law of inevitable accident, it must be assumed that they heeded such instruction, and based their verdict upon the finding that the collision was the result of inevitable accident. This contention is untenable. The bill of exceptions certifies to the fact that the evidence upon the whole case was sufficient to sustain the allegations of the pleadings of the respective parties. Presumably, in that situation, the evidence was conflicting; and, as the verdict was general in its nature, it is impossible for us, in the face of conflicting evidence and contradictory instructions, to determine upon which of the several phases of the case the verdict was founded.

[9] In view of what has been said, it will not be necessary for us to follow counsel in their discussion of the trial court's charge upon the law of contributory negligence, further than to say that, the plaintiff's cause of action having been stated solely upon the willful wrongful act of the defendants, the doctrine of contributory negligence has no application to any phase of the case; and the fact that the trial court deemed it necessary to charge at all upon that subject emphasizes the contention that the cause of action stated in the plaintiff's complaint was misunderstood and erroneously stated to the jury. 1 Thompson on Cont. Neg. § 383; Shearman & Redfield on Neg. § 64; Esrey v. Southern Pac. Co., 103 Cal. 545, 37 Pac. 500; Harrington v. L. A. Ry. Co., 140 Cal. 523, 74 Pac. 15, 63 L. R. A. 238, 98 Am. St. Rep. 85.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

18 Cal. App. 488

REDDING GOLD & COPPER MINING CO.
et al. v. NATIONAL SURETY CO.
(Civ. 895.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 9, 1912. Additional Opinion March 12, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 957*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—VACATION—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The setting aside of a default judgment will not be disturbed, unless there has been a plain abuse of the discretion of the lower court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3823; Dec. Dig. § 957.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 143*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—VACATION—GROUNDS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, the court may not set aside a default judgment, regularly entered, except on a showing of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 269, 270, 272-291; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 143*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—VACATION—GROUNDS.

A demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled, with leave to answer within 10 days. Notice thereof was regularly served on defendant's attorney; but the time to answer expired without defendant taking any steps to protect his rights, and a default judgment was rendered. Nothing occurred after the service of the notice which could prevent defendant from answering. Held, that the judgment was not taken against defendant through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, within Code Civ. Proc. § 473; and a setting aside of the judgment was an abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 269, 270, 272-291; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 672*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—RIGHT TO SUE—DEMURRER.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 430, authorizing a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that plaintiff has no capacity to sue, a complaint, in an action by a foreign corporation, which does not show on its face that the corporation has not complied with Civ. Code, § 405, and hence is without legal capacity to sue under section 406, is not demurrable on the ground of want of capacity to sue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2645-2649; Dec. Dig. § 672.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by the Redding Gold & Copper Mining Company and another against the National Surety Company. From an order setting aside a default and vacating a judgment entered thereon, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Henry H. Davis, for appellants. A. H. Jarman and Nat Schmulowitz (Clarence Coonan, of counsel), for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from an order setting aside a default and vacating the judgment entered against defendant upon such default.

[1] The matter of setting aside defaults and vacating judgments entered thereon is very largely a matter of discretion, to be liberally exercised by the trial court in furtherance of justice; and, where the action of the trial court will result in a trial upon the merits, the appellate courts are very reluctant to interfere with the exercise of such discretion, and will only do so when it clearly appears that there has been a plain abuse of discretion. O'Brien v. Leach, 139 Cal. 220, 72 Pac. 1004, 96 Am. St. Rep. 105. Nevertheless cases do occur where the appellate court is obliged to say that the action of the trial court involves a plain abuse of discretion; and in such case it is the duty of the appellate court to reverse the action of the trial court. Shearman v. Jorgensen, 106 Cal. 483, 39 Pac. 863; Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 423; People v. O'Connell, 23 Cal. 282. We think the case at bar is such a case.

Plaintiffs commenced this action upon an injunction bond, given by defendant as the surety thereon, in an action wherein one Rasmussen was plaintiff and plaintiffs herein were defendants. A demurrer to the first complaint was sustained. Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint, to which defendant filed a demurrer. Subsequently defendant filed an amended demurrer. This demurrer came on regularly for hearing upon the 4th day of February, 1910, and, no one appearing for defendant, it was by the court overruled, and defendant allowed 10 days to answer to the complaint. Written notice of the overruling of the demurrer, and that defendant was allowed 10 days to answer to the complaint, was served upon the attorney for the defendant personally upon the 5th day of February, 1910, and his written admission of service indorsed on such notice. On the 16th day of February, 1910, the time allowed defendant to answer having expired, and no extensions of time having been granted, either by the court or counsel, and no answer having been filed, the default of defendant was duly entered, and judgment entered against defendant as prayed for in said complaint. Subsequently defendant, upon affidavits, procured an order from the court, requiring plaintiffs to show cause why such default and judgment should not be set aside and vacated. A hearing was had upon this order, which resulted in the granting of the order appealed from.

[2, 3] Where, as in this case, a default and judgment have been duly and regularly entered against a litigant, such default and judgment cannot be set aside and vacated, except upon a showing that they were taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. Section 473, Code Civ. Proc.; Shearman v. Jorgensen, 106 Cal. 483, 39 Pac. 863; Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 423; People v. O'Connell, 23 Cal. 282. In the case at bar, there is no dispute that the notice of the overruling of the demurrer and of the allowance to defendant of 10 days to answer, was served upon the attorney for defendant personally upon the 5th day of February, 1910. Neither defendant nor his attorney took any action, either to answer, or in any way to further defend against the complaint, until after the judgment had been duly and regularly entered. There is neither in the affidavit filed by the attorney for defendant, nor elsewhere, any claim or pretense that anything was said or done at the time of the serving of the notice of the overruling of the demurrer or afterwards to relieve such service from having its usual customary and legal effect. Neither is it pretended, either in the affidavit of said attorney or elsewhere, that anything whatever occurred after the serving of said notice which could or did prevent defendant from answering to the complaint. The bald facts are undisputed that such service was duly and regularly made upon the attorney for defendant and that he took no further steps in relation to the action until after judgment had been duly and regularly entered against his client.

[4] His affidavit does show that the hearing upon his demurrer had been continued several times, that upon several occasions the attorney for plaintiffs was not present at the calling of the demurrer, and that he (the affiant) had allowed the hearing to go over because of the absence of the attorney for plaintiffs, and that he had, prior to the overruling of his demurrer, extended other courtesies to the attorney for plaintiffs. And in his affidavit in support of the application for the order appealed from he states: "When deponent learned that plaintiffs claimed to have taken the default of the defendant, he was very much surprised, in the first place, because of deponent's liberal practice toward Mr. Davis (plaintiffs' attorney), in not having taken, or attempting to take, his (said Davis') default upon the numerous occasions hereinabove mentioned, when neither the said Davis nor any of his representatives had been in court," and also because a representative of the affiant had, at some time before the overruling of the demurrer, stated to the attorney for plaintiffs that he considered the demurrer well taken. As a matter of law, the demurrer was not well taken. According to the affidavit of the attorney for plaintiffs, "the point of the amended demurrer is that, since the complaint does not contain any allegation of compliance by the plaintiff, a South Dakota corporation, with section 405 of the Civil Code, it has not the legal capacity to maintain this action under section 406 of the Civil Code." There was no merit at all in the demurrer. It does not appear upon the face of the complaint that said plaintiff has not complied with such section. The want of capacity to sue can only be raised by demurrer when such want of capacity appears upon the face of the complaint. Section 430, Code Civ. Proc.; Los Angeles Ry. Co. v. Davis et al., 146 Cal. 179, 79 Pac. 865, 106 Am. St. Rep. 20.

The cases referred to by the attorney for defendant (Wood v. Ball, 190 N. Y. 217, 83 N. E. 21, and American De Forrest Wireless Telegraph Co. v. Superior Court, 153 Cal. 533, 96 Pac. 15) give no support whatever to the claim of defendant's attorney as to the merits of his demurrer. The New York case, when read in its entirety, is distinctly against him; and the case in 153 Cal. 533, 96 Pac. 15, is not in point as to the question presented by the demurrer.

The court therefore did not err in overruling defendant's demurrer, and the order vacating the judgment cannot be sustained upon any contention that might be made to the effect that the court erred in overruling such demurrer.

We are thus forced to look to the record to find facts sufficient to support a claim that the default and judgment were taken against defendant through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. We find nothing in the record to support any such claim. When the attorney for defendant was served with notice of the overruling of the demurrer, he had notice that the time within which defendant could answer was running. The simple fact that he had been liberal and courteous in his treatment of counsel upon the other side did not justify him in ignoring the effect of the service of such notice. In failing to take any action towards either answering or getting more time to answer, he was guilty of inexcusable neglect.

Neither can he claim that the judgment was taken against his client through surprise in any legal sense. The very purpose of giving the notice of the overruling of the demurrer and the allowance of time to answer was to put defendant upon notice that default might be entered upon expiration of the time allowed. Nothing was said or done to cause defendant or its attorney to believe that if no answer was filed judgment would not be taken in due course.

Quite as good, if not a better, showing for vacating a judgment entered upon a default was made both in Shearman v. Jorgensen, 106 Cal. 483, 39 Pac. 863, and in Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 423, and yet the Supreme Court was in each case constrained to hold that the trial court had erred in granting the relief, and reversed the order. See, also, People v. O'Connell, 23 Cal. 282.

The order is reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

Additional Opinion.

PER CURIAM. As a matter of justice to the attorneys who represented the defendant and respondent before this court in the above entitled matter, it is proper to say, as an addition to the facts stated in the opinion filed in said matter March 9, 1912, that said attorneys did not represent said defendant in the proceedings in the court below that resulted in the entry of default and judgment against said defendant.

(18 Cal. App. 493)

BURKI v. PLEASANTON SCHOOL DIST. OF ALAMEDA COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 892.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 11, 1912.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 81*)—CONTRACTS—CONDITION PRECEDENT—BONDS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under St. 1871-72, p. 925, which provides that a board authorized to erect any public building shall advertise for plans and specifications, and state therein the amount authorized by law to be expended in the erection of the building and the premium to be awarded to the contractor whose plans may be adopted, and that on adoption of plans the board, before any award of premium, must require the architect to execute a bond, to be approved by it, and conditioned that within 60 days from its date he will, upon presentation to him, enter into a contract containing the provisions required by such board, the execution of such bond is a condition precedent to the completion of the contract and the award of a premium.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. §§ 195, 196, 340; Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 193*)—DEMURRER—CONDITION PRECEDENT.

In an action upon an alleged building contract, plaintiff's failure to give the statutory bond required as a condition precedent thereto can be taken advantage of by demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 425, 428-435, 437-443; Dec. Dig. § 193.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 225*)—DEMURRER—RIGHT TO AMEND.

Where it is apparent upon the face of the complaint that the facts do not and cannot be made to state a cause of action, plaintiff, on the sustaining of demurrer thereto, may be denied leave to amend.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 575-583; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Action by F. W. Burki against the Pleasanton School District of Alameda County and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Langan & Mendenhall and Emil Pohli, for appellant. Wm. H. Donohue and Walter J. Burpee, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. This is an action upon an alleged contract which it is claimed the defendants made with the plaintiff for personal services as a supervising architect, and for plans and specifications of a proposed new school building in Pleasanton school district. A general demurrer, grounded upon the insufficiency of the facts stated in plaintiff's complaint to constitute a cause of action, was sustained, without leave to amend. Thereupon judgment was ordered and entered, denying plaintiff any relief and awarding costs to the defendants, from which the plaintiff has appealed upon the judgment roll.

The complaint, in substance and effect, alleges that the defendants, as the board of school trustees for Pleasanton school district, in accordance with the requirements of an act to regulate the erection of public buildings and structures (Stats. 1871-72, p. 925), invited architects generally to submit plans and specifications for the erection of a proposed new school building. In the published notice inviting the competition of architects, it was specified that the defendants, as the board of trustees, were authorized to expend \$26,000 in the construction of the building, and that a premium of 3½ per cent. of the contract price would be allowed to the successful architect upon the adoption of his plans and specifications, and that the architect whose plans and specifications were finally adopted would be required to superintend the erection of the building, for which he would be paid, in addition to the original premium, a fee of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the contract price. It was further specified in said notice "that prior to awarding any premium for said plans and specifications said board would require said architect to give a good and sufficient bond * * * in the penal sum of five thousand dollars, to be approved by the board of trustees, and conditioned that within sixty days from the date of said bond the said architect will, on presentation to him, enter into a contract containing such conditions and provisions as may be required of him by such board of trustees."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Within the time required by the notice, plaintiff prepared and submitted to the defendants plans and specifications for the proposed building, and thereafter, it is alleged, the defendants accepted and adopted the same, and employed the plaintiff as the architect of the proposed building, and directed that he give a bond in the sum of $5,000 in accordance with the requirements of its published notice and the act hereinbefore referred to.

Subsequently, on September 14, 1909, the plaintiff prepared and delivered to the defendants a bond in the specified amount, dated August 19, 1909, and conditioned, among other things, that, within 60 days from the date of the bond, the plaintiff would, "upon presentation to him, enter into a contract containing such provisions and conditions as may be required by the school district and board of trustees thereof," etc. The defendants refused to approve this bond, for the reason, affirmatively alleged in the complaint, that they "had received some information that the proposed school building could not be constructed for $26,000, and that said building would be unsafe and unfit for occupancy as a school building if built according to the plaintiff's plans and specifications, and for the further reason that said bond was dated August 19, 1909, instead of the day of delivery." Immediately following the rejection of the bond, the defendants, by resolution, rescinded the previous action of the board in the matter, and advertised for other plans and specifications, and notified plaintiff of its action.

It is not alleged in the complaint that the defendants presented any contract to the plaintiff for execution, or that his plans and specifications were ever used by the defendants, or that the proposed building was ever erected.

In support of the judgment, the defendants rely mainly upon the contention that the plaintiff's complaint does not and cannot be made to state a cause of action, because it affirmatively appears from the facts pleaded that the contract sued on was never legally consummated, in this: That the bond furnished by the plaintiff was not conditioned and approved as required by the law and the notice calling for the submission of plans.

The act of April, 1872, under which the proceedings for the erection of a school building were inaugurated, provides in effect that when, by any statute of this state, power is given to any board to erect any public building it shall be the duty of said board to advertise for plans and specifications, and to state in the advertisement the amount authorized by law to be expended in the erection of the building and the premium awarded to the contractor whose plans and specifications may be adopted; and that "whenever the plans and specifications of any architect shall be adopted" the board must, "before any premium shall be awarded for such plans and specifications, require such architect to execute and file with the * * * board of trustees * * * a good and sufficient bond * * * in the penal sum of five thousand dollars, to be approved by the * * * board of trustees * * * and conditioned that, within sixty days from the date of said bond, he will, upon presentment to him, enter into a contract containing such provisions and conditions as may be required by such board of trustees, * * * and also conditioned that he will give such further bond to secure the faithful performance of such contract * * * in the event that such board should within said sixty days" require said architect to enter into a contract to erect the building at the price specified in the published notice. The concluding clause of the act provides that all contracts entered into in violation of the act shall be null and void.

It is the plaintiff's theory that the allegations of his complaint show a completed contract, not only for his plans and specifications, but for his individual services as well, as superintendent of the proposed building; and, having, as he claims, performed all the conditions required of him by the law and the published notice of the defendants, they must respond in damages for the alleged breach of the contract.

[1] Plaintiff construes the statute in question to mean that the approval of the board is not a condition precedent to the payment of the premium to the architect whose plans have been adopted, and that the only purpose of the bond is to insure the proper performance of any subsequent contract which the board may make with the architect. In order to sustain this construction of the statute, it would be necessary to first read out of it the clause which provides that "whenever the plans and specifications of any architect shall be adopted such board of trustees * * * shall, before any premium shall be awarded for such plans and specifications, require such architect" to execute a bond, to be approved by the board, and conditioned that "within 60 days from the date of said bond, he will, upon presentment to him, enter into a contract," etc. A fair construction of the act in question compels the conclusion, it seems to us, that it empowers the defendants to accept the plaintiff's plans and specifications only upon the condition of the execution and approval of the required bond; and that therefore two things must happen before a contract with an architect can be legally consummated and a premium awarded, namely, delivery and adoption of the plans and specifications, and the execution and approval of the required bond. Tilley v. County of Cook, 103 U. S. 155, 26 L. Ed. 374; Mann et al. v. Town of Rochester, 29 Ind. App. 12, 63 N. E. 874; Walsh v. St. Louis Exposition, 101 Mo. 534, 14 S. W. 722; Smithmeyer v. United States, 147 U. S. 342, 13 Sup. Ct. 321, 37 L. Ed. 196.

In the case at bar, but one of the enumerated essentials of the statutory contract is pleaded as having been performed, namely, the presentment and adoption of the plans and specifications. The other essential—the giving and approval of the required bond—it affirmatively appears from the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint, has never been complied with. True a bond was presented for the approval of the defendants; but, as appears from the complaint, the condition of the bond in the material matter of time was radically different from the condition prescribed by the statute; and, if, as we think, the adoption of plans and specifications was, in obedience to the requirements of the statute, conditional upon the execution and approval of the required bond, then, in the absence of such a bond, duly approved, no valid contract could be entered into by defendants with the author of such plans and specifications. If we are correct in this conclusion, it follows that the complaint does not and cannot be made to state a cause of action.

[2, 3] It was suggested in the plaintiff's brief that, even if it be conceded that plaintiff failed to give the statutory bond, this was a matter which should be pleaded as a defense; and that it cannot be taken advantage of by demurrer. This contention is untenable. The plaintiff undertook to plead all of the circumstances of the transaction, apparently in anticipation of any defense which might be available to the defendant. He is bound by the facts pleaded in his complaint; and, as it is apparent upon the face of the complaint that those facts do not and cannot be made to state a cause of action upon a completed and valid contract, the demurrer was correctly sustained, without leave to amend.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

(18 Cal. App. 467)

CREDIT CLEARANCE BUREAU v. WEARY & ALFORD CO. (Civ. 949.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 7, 1912.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 612*)—TRANSCRIPT—AUTHENTICATION—SUFFICIENCY.

An appeal from an order vacating a default judgment, being one from an order heard and determined on affidavits, can be perfected only under the method prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953a, 953b, 953c, or that by Supreme Court rule 29 (144 Cal. lli, 78 Pac. xii), both of which methods require the trial judge to examine and authenticate the record, and so an appeal, not perfected in that manner, but merely upon a transcript furnished by the clerk, cannot be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2694-2701; Dec. Dig. § 612.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by the Credit Clearance Bureau against the Weary & Alford Company. From an order vacating and setting aside a default judgment, plaintiff appeals. Order affirmed.

L. S. Melsted, for appellant. Stratton & Kaufman, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order vacating and setting aside a default judgment.

The defendant objects to the hearing of the appeal, on the ground that no properly authenticated record has been filed in this court.

The clerk of the trial court prepared what purports to be a transcript for the use of this court upon the appeal, certifying that it contained a full, true, and correct copy of the judgment roll, notice of motion to set aside the default, and affidavits used on the hearing. It has been held, however, in several cases that this authentication is insufficient. Here the appeal is from an order heard and determined upon affidavits. To perfect such an appeal, it was necessary for the appellant to adopt either the method prescribed by sections 953a, 953b, and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, or that prescribed by rule 29 of the Supreme Court (144 Cal. lli, 78 Pac. xii). If either of such methods had been pursued, the record would have been examined and authenticated by the trial judge—the person who knew what papers were used upon the hearing of the motion. As was said in Walsh v. Hutchings, 60 Cal. 228, "it is not for the clerk to determine what papers or evidence the court acted upon."

The plaintiff having availed itself of neither method to perfect its appeal, it results that the appeal cannot be considered, and that we must affirm the order. Knox v. Schrag, 122 Pac. 969, decided February 12, 1912; Harrison v. Cousins, 16 Cal. App. 515, 117 Pac. 564; Hibernia Sav. & Loan Society

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

v. Doran, 118 Pac. 526; Hershey v. Bristol, 121 Pac. 371.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

(18 Cal. App. 501)

McPIKE v. MEHRMANN et al. (Civ. 1,002.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 11, 1912.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 712*)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—PROCEEDINGS BY SURVIVING SPOUSE—DECREE—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A decree, adjudging that property was community property and vested in the surviving husband, rendered in a proceeding instituted by him under Code Civ. Proc. § 1723, without personal notice to the executor of the deceased wife, and without his appearance, merely determines that, if the husband has any asserted right or title accruing on the death of the wife, the asserted right or title has accrued, and does not conclusively adjudge the ownership of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1233; Dec. Dig. § 712.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 743*)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—PROCEEDINGS BY SURVIVING SPOUSE—DECREE—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 1723, authorizing proceedings for the disposition of community property, is intended only as a proceeding to determine that a certain person is dead, on whose death the asserted right of another depends, and not one to have the validity of the right conclusively adjudicated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1253, 1275-1277, 1284; Dec. Dig. § 743.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by H. H. McPike against Allen Small, executor of Olive Coulson, deceased, and others, in which H. B. Mehrmann, administrator, was substituted in place of Allen Small, deceased. From a judgment for defendant, Mehrmann, plaintiff and certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John T. Thornton, for appellant McPike. H. W. Bradley, for appellants McMann and Donlon. Robert Edgar and Edward C. Harrison, for respondent Mehrmann.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment against him, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, in an action for the partition of certain real property.

January 20, 1906, Olive Coulson died, leaving a last will and testament, which was duly admitted to probate, and Allen Small qualified as executor thereof. At the time of her death, the three parcels of real property, the subject of this controversy, stood of record in her name, and she left as her surviving spouse Robert Coulson. September 26, 1906, Robert Coulson filed a petition under the provisions of section 1723, Code of Civil Procedure; and after 10 days' notice by publication in a daily newspaper a hearing was had, and the court made its decree, adjudging that the property here involved was community property, and vested absolutely in Robert Coulson, as the surviving spouse of Olive Coulson, upon her death. The executor of the estate of Olive Coulson, deceased, although in possession of the property at the time, received no personal notice of said proceedings, and consequently did not appear therein.

September 6, 1906, Robert Coulson made and executed a deed to an undivided one-third of said real property to the plaintiff herein. Subsequently Robert Coulson died, leaving a will, and Frank McMann was appointed executor of his estate. November 8, 1906, this action was commenced against the estate of Olive Coulson and against the executor and devisees under the will of Robert Coulson; the plaintiff alleging the ownership of the property to be exclusively in himself and in the estate of Robert Coulson as tenants in common, and praying for a partition thereof.

All the defendants, except the executor of the estate of Olive Coulson, deceased, filed answers, admitting the allegations of the complaint. Said executor filed an answer, denying that the plaintiff was the owner or holder of any estate in said real property, and setting up that the estate of Olive Coulson, deceased, was the owner in fee simple and in possession thereof.

During the pendency of the cause, Allen Small, the said executor, died, and H. B. Mehrmann, being appointed administrator of the estate of Olive Coulson, deceased, was substituted in his place as defendant.

At the trial, the executor of the estate of Olive Coulson, deceased, introduced evidence tending to show that she, at the time of her death and prior thereto, was the owner in fee simple absolute of all of the real property described in the complaint. Plaintiff, on the other hand, depended entirely on the decree in the proceedings instituted by Robert Coulson, above referred to. The court by its decree adjudged that the real property in question belonged to the said estate of Olive Coulson, deceased, in fee simple, and quieted the title of said estate against the plaintiff and against the codefendants of said executor.

Section 1723, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that if any person shall die who was the owner of a life estate, or if such person, at the time of his death, was one of the spouses owning a homestead, or if such person was a married woman, who, at the time of her death, was the owner of community property which passed upon her death to a surviving husband, any person interested in the property may file a petition, setting forth the facts, "and thereupon, after such notice by publication or otherwise as the court may order, the court shall hear such petition and the evidence offered in support thereof; and if upon such hearing it shall appear that such life estate of such deceased person absolutely terminated by reason of his death, or such homestead or community property vested in the survivor of such marriage, the court shall make a decree to that effect, and thereupon a certified copy of such decree may be recorded in the office of the county recorder, and thereafter shall have the same effect as a final decree of distribution so recorded."

[1, 2] The question in controversy here was recently squarely decided against the position of the appellants in the case of King v. Pauly, 159 Cal. 549, 115 Pac. 210. There, at the time of the death of one Cornelia Chase, there stood of record in her name certain real property which had been acquired while she was the wife of one Levi Chase. After her death, pursuant to proceedings instituted by said Chase under the terms of said section 1723, Code of Civil Procedure, the property was held to be community property, and consequently to vest absolutely in him as the surviving spouse of Cornelia. Subsequently the plaintiff, who derived title from said Cornelia, claiming that said property was her separate property, commenced an action to quiet his (said plaintiff's) title thereto. After declaring that, if all the persons interested in the estate of Cornelia Chase had actually appeared in the proceeding, or were regularly brought within the jurisdiction of the court by service of process, the proceeding would be treated as an ordinary action in equity, and the superior court would have jurisdiction to determine the title to the property, the court held (Mr. Justice Angelotti writing the opinion) that, as "neither any legal representative of the deceased, Cornelia Chase, nor all of her heirs, were shown to have appeared or to have been served with process," the court "was bound to consider the decree solely as one given in the special proceeding prescribed by section 1723 of the Code of Civil Procedure," and to give it such effect as a proper construction of that section warranted. So construing it, the court decided that the proceeding was only intended as a means "to have it determined that a certain person is dead, upon whose death the asserted right of another person depends, and not one to have the validity of the right conclusively adjudicated." Quoting from Hansen v. Union Savings Bank, 148 Cal. 160, 82 Pac. 769, the court further said: "The decree in the proceeding merely determines that, if the party petitioning has any asserted right or title accruing on the death of another person, such asserted right or title has accrued. * * * It is often convenient and important to those interested in or examining a title to have some record evidence of the death of a life tenant, a homestead claimant, or other person upon whose death some right or estate vests."

On the authority of that case and the cases there cited, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

(18 Cal. App. 477)

E. MARTIN & CO. v. BROSNAN. (Civ. 947.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 8, 1912.)

1. TRIAL (§ 91*)—EVIDENCE — MOTIONS TO STRIKE—NECESSITY OF OBJECTIONS.

Improper testimony of a witness will not be stricken, where no valid objection was interposed during examination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 242-244, 252; Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 105*)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—EXCLUSION.

Where a question plainly calls for hearsay testimony, the court may, on its own motion, exclude the answer; no objection having been made by the adverse party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 260-266; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 221*)—ACTIONS—PRESENTATION OF CLAIMS—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action against an administratrix for merchandise sold to her intestate, the admission of plaintiff's claim against the estate is not erroneous, because the claim does not, on its face, show that it was not barred by the statute of limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 901-903½, 1858, 1861-1863, 1865, 1866, 1871-1874, 1876; Dec. Dig. § 221.*]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 221*)—ACTIONS—PREVIOUS REJECTION OF CLAIMS—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action against an administratrix for merchandise sold to her intestate, where plaintiff's claim against the estate was generally rejected, and not for any special reason, it is admissible in evidence, despite formal defects, which are presumed to have been waived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 901-903½, 1858, 1861-1863, 1865, 1866, 1871-1874, 1876; Dec. Dig. § 221.*]

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 449*)—ACTIONS — PLEADING — MATTERS TO BE PROVED.

Where the answer of an administratrix admitted the presentation and rejection of plaintiff's claim, evidence thereof is not required; it being sufficient for the plaintiff to show that the action was founded on the claim which was presented for allowance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1850-1854; Dec. Dig. § 449.*]

6. NOVATION (§ 3*)—REQUISITES—CONSENT OF CREDITOR.

Under Civ. Code, § 1531, subd. 2, providing that novation is made by the substitution of a new debtor in place of the old one, with intent to release the latter, the intent of the creditor to release the original debtor is essential; and so, though a wife assumed the payment of her husband's debts, and the creditor applied payments made by her, no novation resulted, unless the creditor, in consideration of her agreement, agreed or intended to release the husband.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Novation, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1046*)—HARMLESS ERROR—REMARKS OF COURT.

In an action on a debt, where the defense was that there had been a novation, a remark of the court that a feature of the case indicated that there was no novation was not prejudicial error, where he immediately corrected the remark, and cautioned the jury not to be influenced by it nor by his denial of defendant's motion for nonsuit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4128-4131, 4134; Dec. Dig. § 1046.*]

8. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTIONS.

The refusal of requested instructions was not error, where substantially covered by those given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 651-659; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by E. Martin & Co. against Mary Brosnan, as administratrix of Thomas Brosnan, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. Castelbun, for appellant. Rothchild, Golden & Rothchild, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This action was brought to recover the sum of $908 upon a claim against the estate of Thomas Brosnan, deceased, for merchandise sold to him during his lifetime by plaintiff. The trial was had with a jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $618. From the judgment and an order denying a new trial, an appeal has been taken upon the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

[1] It was not error for the trial court to refuse to strike out all of the testimony of the defendant, Mary Brosnan, who was called as a witness for the plaintiff. The motion to strike out was not made until the witness had concluded her testimony and left the witness stand. Ample opportunity was afforded counsel for the defendant, during the course of an extended direct and cross-examination of this witness, to object to her testimony, had he so desired; but he failed to avail himself of the opportunity. He will not now be heard to complain that the testimony of the witness was objectionable; and, as a motion to strike out evidence must be based upon a valid objection previously stated, the motion in the present case was properly denied. People v. Long, 43 Cal. 444; People v. Rolfe, 61 Cal. 542; People v. Samario, 84 Cal. 484, 24 Pac. 283; In re Wax, 106 Cal. 347, 39 Pac. 624.

[2] The trial court of its own motion refused to permit a witness for the plaintiff to reply to a question upon cross-examination which plainly called for hearsay testimony. The point is now made that, in the absence of an objection from plaintiff's counsel, it was error to exclude the answer. Ordinarily it is the better and safer practice for the trial court to defer action upon the admission or rejection of evidence until a proper objection is made by the party interested in having the evidence excluded; but the trial court nevertheless is not compelled to hear and determine a cause, either in whole or in part, upon improper evidence; and, in the exercise of its undoubted right to control and regulate the conduct of the trial, it may of its own motion rightfully refuse to receive evidence which is palpably incompetent. Parker v. Smith, 4 Cal. 105; People v. Wallace, 89 Cal. 166, 26 Pac. 650; Davey v. Southern Pac. Co., 116 Cal. 330, 48 Pac. 117.

[3, 4] There was no error in admitting in evidence, over the objection of the defendant, the plaintiff's claim against the estate of the decedent. It was not necessary that the claim should show upon its face that it was not barred by the statute of limitations; and, in so far as the objection was directed to the formal sufficiency of the claim, it will suffice to say that, inasmuch as the claim, in the first instance, was rejected generally, and not for any special reason, its formal defects, if any, must be deemed to have been waived. Wise v. Hogan, 77 Cal. 184, 19 Pac. 278; Aiken v. Coolidge, 12 Or. 244, 6 Pac. 713.

[5] Moreover, as the presentation and rejection of the claim were affirmatively admitted by the defendant's answer, evidence thereof was not required; and it was sufficient for the plaintiff to show that the action was founded upon the same claim which was presented to the defendant for allowance. McGowan v. McDonald, 111 Cal. 57, 43 Pac. 418, 52 Am. St. Rep. 149; 1 Ross' Probate Law, 534.

[6] It is the contention of the defendant that the verdict of the jury is not only not justified by the evidence, but that it is contrary thereto. This contention is based upon the claim that the evidence shows that the defendant, pursuant to an agreement with the plaintiff, assumed the indebtedness of her husband; and that she thereafter made payments to the plaintiff which were applied on said indebtedness. From this it is argued that the defendant was substituted in the place and stead of the original debtor, with the intent of releasing the latter, and that thereby a contract of novation was created.

Assuming that the evidence shows all that the defendant claims in this behalf, still it does not follow, as a matter of law, that the acts and agreements of the parties amounted to a novation, as defined by subdivision 2 of section 1531 of the Civil Code. It may be conceded that the evidence does show that the defendant promised to pay the debt of her deceased husband, and that certain payments which she made were applied by plaintiff to that indebtedness; but it must also be conceded that the evidence fails to show that the plaintiff, in consideration thereof, agreed or intended to release the estate of the decedent. The intent of the creditor to release the obligation of the original debtor is necessary to the creation of a contract of novation; and if it be lacking, as it apparently was in the present case, novation cannot be justly claimed. Civ. Code, subd. 2, § 1531; Pimental v. Marques, 109 Cal. 406, 42 Pac. 159; Dellapiazza v. Foley, 112 Cal. 380, 44 Pac. 727; Carpy v. Dowdell, 131 Cal. 495, 63 Pac. 778.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

In our opinion, the evidence sufficiently supports the verdict; and this conclusion necessarily disposes of the defendant's further contention that the trial court erred in denying her motion for nonsuit. Obviously, if the evidence was sufficient to warrant the verdict for the plaintiff, it would have been error to grant a nonsuit.

[7] Upon the motion for a nonsuit being denied, the defendant rested, and the case went to the jury solely upon the testimony offered and received upon the behalf of the plaintiff. Immediately following the denial of the defendant's motion for a nonsuit, the trial court expressly stated to the jury that the ruling on that motion was not to be considered as an expression of opinion by the court as to the facts of the case. In addition, however, and, no doubt, inadvertently, the trial court did say, during the course of its remarks to the jury, that a certain feature of the case "would indicate that there was no novation." Clearly this was expressing the opinion of the court as to the effect of the evidence; and if it had been permitted to stand without correction there would have been no escape from the conclusion that it was tantamount to an instruction upon a question of fact. Counsel for the defendant, however, obviated this error by calling attention to the fact that the province of the jury had been invaded; whereupon the court promptly withdrew this statement, and clearly cautioned the jury not to be influenced in their deliberations by anything that the court might have said with reference to the denial of the motion for nonsuit. Presumably the jury heeded the caution, and consequently the incident cannot now be successfully assigned as prejudicial error.

It is claimed, however, that the trial court repeated the error of charging upon matters of fact in a subsequent instruction. That instruction in effect told the jury that if they found for the plaintiff the verdict might be for the sum sued for, or any less sum justified by the evidence; and, while the language employed was ambiguous and barely expressed the idea which the court endeavored to convey to the jury, nevertheless a liberal interpretation of the instruction does not compel the conclusion that the trial court expressed its opinion unequivocally or at all as to the weight and effect of the evidence.

[8] It was not disputed that the deceased, at the time of his death, was justly indebted to the plaintiff, and it was not claimed that the indebtedness had ever been fully paid. Under the defendant's theory of the case, novation and the application of payments were apparently the chief matters in dispute, and the court was requested to charge the jury upon the law relating to these subjects. The refusal of the court, however, to charge the jury in the exact language of the requested instructions was without prejudice to the defendant. While the court in its charge did not elaborate certain points of the case as fully as the defendant desired, still, as a whole, it fairly covered every phase of the case embodied in the requested instructions, and conformed generally to the theory upon which the defendant based her defense to the action. In so far as the requested instructions were correct in their statement of the law of the case, they were in substance incorporated in and made a part of the charge of the court; and that was all that the defendant was entitled to.

The remaining points presented in support of the appeal do not merit discussion; and it will suffice to say that we are satisfied from a perusal of the entire record that the trial of the cause was free from prejudicial error, and resulted in a judgment, supported by the evidence, which does substantial justice to the parties.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

18 Cal. App. 508

KASCH v. LABOR TEMPLE ASS'N.
(Civ. 924.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District,
California. March 12, 1912.)

1. SALES (§ 156*)—DELIVERY—ACTS CONSTITUTING.

On the sale of a laundry business, consisting of two routes, including the good will, where the driver of one of the routes was employed by the purchaser and took charge of that route for him; and the driver and purchaser went over the other route for two weeks and called on the customers, there was a sufficient delivery of the business, although a great many of the customers refused to patronize the purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 367-371; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

2. SALES (§ 124*)—RESCISSION—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT — RESTORATION OF FORMER STATUS.

Where, on the sale of a laundry business, the seller retired from business, and the pur-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes chaser took charge of the business and advertised that he had purchased it, but a good many of the customers refused to patronize him, and as a result the amount of business done materially decreased, the purchaser is not entitled to rescind for false representations as to the value of the good will, it being impossible to restore the status quo; and hence, in an action for the price, it is proper to allow a recovery with a set-off of the purchaser's damages from the false representations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 303-312; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by J. A. Kasch against the Labor Temple Association. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank H. Benson, for appellant. Rogers, Bloomingdale & Free, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff and one Bloemer were copartners, and as such conducted a laundry business under the name of the Standard Electric Laundry, and, as is alleged in the complaint, on the 27th day of February, 1909, "entered into a contract in writing with the defendant, Labor Temple Association, whereby they agreed to sell to said defendant their aforesaid laundry business and the good will thereof, also two horses, four wagons, two sets of harness and two storm robes, for a consideration of six hundred (600) dollars, to be paid as follows, to wit: One hundred (100) dollars upon the signing of said agreement, and five hundred (500) dollars upon the delivery of said business, such delivery and payment to be made within two weeks after the making and execution of said contract as aforesaid." Plaintiff alleged full compliance with the conditions of the contract by the vendors, an assignment by Bloemer to plaintiff, and refusal to pay the balance of $500 by defendant.

By way of defense, defendant pleaded that the execution of said agreement was procured by certain false and fraudulent representations as to the amount of business being done by the vendors, made by plaintiff, and a rescission and offer in writing, made March 25, 1909, to return all property received under the agreement, conditioned on plaintiff's paying to defendant the $100 paid on the execution of the contract of sale, and also denied performance by the vendors, save as to the delivery of the chattels mentioned.

The court, among other things, found that the contract was procured through the false and fraudulent representations of plaintiff, as alleged in the answer; that immediately upon the execution of said contract plaintiff and his assignor retired from the laundry business, and within the time limited by the contract delivered to the defendant the horses, wagons, harnesses, and robes mentioned in the contract, and the business actually being done by the Standard Electric Laundry; that defendant has continued to carry on said business, using said personal property in connection therewith, but has disposed of one of the horses mentioned in said contract and delivered to defendant; that defendant offered to rescind said contract and to return said personal property and business, as alleged in the answer, but that defendant, when said offer was made, "was not, and is not now, able to restore said plaintiff and his assignor, or either of them, to the situation they were in with respect to said business at the time said contract was made and said property and business delivered to the defendant, as aforesaid, nor to place said plaintiff and his assignor, or either of them, in statu quo." The court further found that defendant had been damaged by the false representations and failure of plaintiff in the sum of $100, and therefore deducted this amount from the balance due under the contract, and gave judgment for plaintiff for the balance, to wit, $400.

The first point urged by appellant seems to be that the court erred in finding that the vendors delivered the business actually being done by them to defendant. The finding as made is supported by the evidence.

[1] The business of the vendors consisted of two routes. The driver of one of these routes was at once employed by defendant, and took charge of that route, and collected the work therefrom. Plaintiff went with the same driver for two weeks over the other route, and, according to his testimony, called on all of the customers on that route, save two, who by other evidence were shown to have moved into the other route. It is true the evidence of plaintiff shows that a goodly portion of the customers refused to patronize defendant, and in that sense he was unable to deliver such business. But the delivery which he did make was, we think, a substantial compliance with the contract, so far as delivery of the business was concerned.

[2] The court, however, found that the contract was procured through false representations as to the business being done by the vendors; and this finding must be accepted as correct. The representation was to the effect that the business of the vendors amounted to between $100 and $125 per week; and the court found that it was substantially less than $100 per week. This, of course, justified a rescission by defendant, if promptly made on discovery of the fraud, unless the situation of the parties had been so changed through the execution of the contract that the status quo could not be restored. The court found that at the time of the attempted rescission and at the trial defendant was not able to restore plaintiff and his assignor to the situation they were in with respect to said business when the business was delivered to defendant. It is urged that the evidence does not support this finding.

We think it does. The vendors immediately retired from the laundry business, as the court found that they had agreed to do. Defendant at once advertised that it had purchased the business of the vendors. A goodly portion of the customers refused to patronize defendant, and doubtless transferred their patronage to other laundries. The evidence shows that the business done by defendant on the routes transferred by plaintiff to defendant decreased 20 per cent. in the second week from the amount done in the first week. It is clear that the defendant could not return to the vendors the business that they had in fact delivered to defendant. It is highly probable that many of the customers would refuse to go back to the vendors, if they should return to the business, but would insist on giving their patronage to defendant. The status quo could not be restored.

The situation brings the case within the rule laid down in the ably considered case of Snow v. Allen, 144 Mass. 546, 11 N. E. 764, 59 Am. Rep. 119, where it is said: "A civil proceeding is not intended to inflict punishment upon any one, still less a punishment which shall inure to the advantage of another, who is sufficiently protected when he has received full indemnity for all the injury he has suffered."

Brockhaus v. Schilling, 52 Mo. App. 75, is a case which in its essential features is very similar to the case at bar. It was a case where a saloon business had been sold. The buyer brought an action to rescind, alleging fraud. The court held that because the seller could not be restored to his original position the action would not lie; that no right of rescission exists "where there has been such a change of circumstances, through lapse of time or otherwise, as disables the purchaser from putting the seller in statu quo."

Where, upon the sale of a business, it becomes impossible, as a result of the execution of the contract, to place the parties in statu quo, there can be no rescission of the contract. Bailey v. Fox, 78 Cal. 389, 20 Pac. 868.

In the case at bar, there was evidence to the effect that the chattels sold to and still used by defendant were of the value of $300 and more. This left but $300 as the supposed value of the good will of the business sold. Because of the misrepresentations as to the amount of business done, the court allowed damages to defendant in the sum of $100. The defendant is still in full possession of the chattels (save one horse, which it sold), and carrying on the business transferred to it, and has at all times been in receipt of the profits therefrom, and has never made any offer to account for such profits.

It was held in Marten v. Burns Wine Co., 99 Cal. 355, 33 Pac. 1107, that the failure to offer to restore a small amount of the dividends received from stock, which were the subject of a fraudulent sale, was fatal to the right to rescind.

On the whole case the judgment rendered by the learned trial judge seems to do justice, and we can see no reason for disturbing the action of the trial court.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

18 Cal. App. 517
KEARNEY v. PALMER et al. (Civ. 1,016.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 15, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 14, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 957*)—REVIEW—MATTERS OF DISCRETION — OPENING DEFAULT.

The granting or denial of a motion to open a default, being largely within the discretion of the trial court, his action will not be reversed, unless such discretion is abused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3823; Dec. Dig. § 957.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 138*)—BY DEFAULT—OPENING—GROUNDS.

In an action to quiet title, where the failure of defendants' substituted attorneys to answer the complaint after a demurrer was overruled was due either to their own failure to examine the proper records and ascertain what disposition had been made of the demurrer, or to the misstatements of their clients that it had not been disposed of, and where it was not claimed that they had been misled by plaintiff or his attorney, the court did not abuse its discretion in denying a motion to open the default, especially where, although defendants in their proposed answer attacked plaintiff's title, they did not allege that they had any title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 249-251, 254; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Hattie M. Kearney against John Palmer and others, in which H. B. Mehrman, administrator, was substituted in place of

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

John Palmer, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff by default, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

N. Soderberg and P. M. Bruner, for appellants. E. K. Taylor, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered against the appellants upon their failure to answer to the complaint within the time allowed by the court upon overruling their demurrer to plaintiff's complaint.

The default of appellants was regularly entered on the 23d day of March, 1910. Subsequently appellants made a motion for an order to open said default, and to permit them to answer to the complaint, which motion was, after hearing by the court, denied, and subsequently the judgment appealed from was entered.

The only question presented for determination upon this appeal is as to whether or not the court erred in denying the motion to open the default. The grounds of the motion were that default had been entered against appellants through their excusable neglect and inadvertence. Section 473, Code Civ. Proc.

[1] At the outset, it is hardly necessary to say that the granting or denial of a motion to set aside a default is largely a matter of discretion to be exercised by the trial court; and that its action, either in granting or refusing the application, will only be reversed, where a clear case of abuse of such discretion is shown by the appellant. Garner v. Erlanger, 86 Cal. 60, 24 Pac. 805; Coleman v. Rankin, 37 Cal. 249; Williamson v. Cummings, 95 Cal. 652, 30 Pac. 762; Cass v. Hutton, 155 Cal. 103, 99 Pac. 493; Ingram v. Epperson, 137 Cal. 370, 70 Pac. 165.

[2] While the present appeal presents a case that appears to be near the border line, we are unable to say, after an examination of the entire record before us, that the trial court abused its discretion in denying appellants' motion.

The complaint is in the usual form for an action to quiet title. Appellants, by their attorney, Hiram Luttrell, filed a general demurrer to the complaint January 22, 1910, which was overruled by the court February 11, 1910, and 14 days allowed to appellants in which to answer to the complaint. Notice of this order was, in open court, waived by the attorney for appellants. The time to answer expired February 25, 1910.

Although Hiram Luttrell was the attorney of record for appellants, one Mr. Murphy was also acting with him for appellants. Appellants became dissatisfied with their attorneys, and on March 18, 1910, demanded and received from them all papers delivered to said attorneys in connection with said suit, and discharged said attorneys, and on the following day, March 19th, obtained from Mr. Luttrell a substitution of attorneys, signed in blank, which had been prepared by the present attorneys of appellants, and was certainly returned to them not later than March 21st. On this day Mr. Soderberg, one of the present attorneys for appellants, examined the files of the court in this action, and, of course, discovered that a demurrer had been filed. He made no other examination to discover what action, if any, had been taken upon the demurrer, but, as stated in his affidavit, "relied upon the statement of my clients that the demurrer was undisposed of." In this connection, it should be stated that there is in none of the affidavits any other reference to any such statement as having been made by said clients. There is, it is true, in the affidavit made by appellants a statement that said Murphy and Luttrell had stated to them "that said demurrer * * * would not come up in court before the 25th day of March, 1910." The truth of this statement, however, was denied by the affidavit of Mr. Murphy; and we must assume that the court accepted the statement of Mr. Murphy as correct. Indeed, there are several statements in the joint affidavit made by the appellants that are quite certainly shown to be untrue, which justified the court in distrusting all their statements.

Mr. Soderberg's failure to discover that the demurrer had been disposed of was thus clearly the result of his having been misled by the false statement of appellants, who should not be allowed to complain of the result of their own false statement. On the other hand, if Mr. Soderberg did not rely on such statement, or if no such statement was made to him, it is clear that he did not take the usual and proper means to ascertain the fate of the demurrer. This could have been readily ascertained by examining the register of actions or the minutes of the court. In no case do the files of the court show the disposition of a demurrer until the judgment roll is made up, which is not until entry of judgment.

We are the more readily inclined to affirm the action of the trial court because of other matters that appear in the record.

Appellants, with their motion, filed their proposed answer. While in this answer they deny, upon information and belief, the title of plaintiff, they clearly show that none of the appellants has or claims any title at all, save that they allege that each is in possession of some undescribed portion of the premises in suit, the title to all of which they allege to be in the state of California. It is quite clear from their tendered answer that they are simply "squatters," with no title or claim of title to the premises sued for.

It is not claimed that plaintiff or her attorney in any way misled appellants or their attorneys. The claim of appellants is that they were misled by their own original attorneys. In all the essential matters concerning the dealings between appellants and such attorneys, the record presents at least a case of conflict of evidence. We must assume that the court resolved all conflicts in the evidence as to the facts against appellants.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(18 Cal. App. 521)

KEARNEY v. PIERSON. (Civ. 1,017.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 15, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 14, 1912.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Hattie M. Kearney against J. W. Pierson. From a judgment for plaintiff by default, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

N. Soderberg and P. M. Bruner, for appellant. E. K. Taylor, for respondent.

HALL, J. This case is in all respects similar to the case of Hattie M. Kearney v. John Palmer et al., No. 1,016. 123 Pac. 611, this day decided, save that the action is one in ejectment and not to quiet title; and for the same reasons the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(18 Cal. App. 522)

PATTON v. LOS ANGELES-PACIFIC CO. (Civ. 1,081.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 19, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 17, 1912.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 183*)—INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—LIABILITY OF MASTER—"RAILROAD TRAIN."

Under the rule that a statute will be liberally construed to effect the purposes of its enactment, Civ. Code, § 1970, as amended in 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 119), providing that an employer shall be liable for injury to an employé from the neglect of a coemployé engaged in another department or employed upon another machine, railroad train, switch signal point, locomotive engine, or other appliance, applies to employés on interurban cars, and this would be true though "railroad train" were the only descriptive term used.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 373; Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 189*)—CONSTRUCTION.

In construing statutes, courts are not bound to an interpretation which shall give to words or phrases a literal, close dictionary definition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 427-435, 437-448; Dec. Dig. § 189.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 245*)—CLASS LEGISLATION—PRIVILEGES—EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAWS—LIABILITY OF MASTER.

Civ. Code, § 1970, as amended in 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 119), providing that an employer need not indemnify his employé for losses suffered from the ordinary risks of the business, or from the negligence of a coemployé engaged in the same general business, unless the negligence was committed in the performance of a duty owed by the employer to the employé, but that the employer shall be liable for injury to an employé from the negligence of a coemployé engaged in another department or employed upon a different appliance, does not make an arbitrary classification, nor does it give certain citizens privileges not granted to others or deny to any the equal protection of the laws in violation of the state or federal Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 702; Dec. Dig. § 245.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

Action by C. C. Patton against the Los Angeles-Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gurney E. Newlin (Roy V. Reppy, of counsel), for appellant. E. B. Drake and Jones & Drake, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff on April 2, 1908, was employed as a motorman on a passenger car of defendant which was engaged in making runs between the cities of Los Angeles and Santa Monica. On the day mentioned, the car upon which plaintiff was at work was proceeding west and had been given the "right of way." The conductor of another car of the same employer, which car was proceeding in the opposite direction, had been instructed by the train dispatcher to await orders at Gayland station. He disregarded these orders of the dispatcher and caused his car to proceed easterly along the track, and as a result it collided with the car upon which plaintiff was employed and caused plaintiff grave physical injuries. This action was brought to recover the sum of $25,950 as damages. By the answer of defendant it was admitted that the accident occurred because of the negligence of the conductor who disregarded the orders of the dispatcher; issue being taken by the answer only on plaintiff's allegations as to the character and extent of the injuries suffered and the amount of damages sustained. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $12,500, upon which judgment was entered. Defendant presented a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and an appeal was then taken from that order and also from the judgment.

[1] In support of this appeal, the first contention of defendant is that the negligence by which the accident was caused was that of a fellow servant with plaintiff, the risk of which negligence plaintiff assumed when he entered the employment of the defendant. Under the condition of the statute (section 1970, Civ. Code), as it stood prior to the year 1907, there is little room for doubt but that the relation existing between a motorman and conductor working upon different cars of the same employer and on the same line of railroad would have been such as to prevent a recovery by one from the employer for damages caused by the negligence of the other. But the Legislature in 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 119) enacted an amendment to the Civil Code section by the provisions of which the responsibility of the employer was enlarged. That section as it was then changed and as it has since provided reads, in part, as follows: "An employer is not bound to indemnify his employé for losses suffered by the latter in consequence of the ordinary risks of the business in which he is employed, nor in consequence of the negligence of another person employed by the same employer in the same general business, unless the negligence causing the injury was committed in the performance of a duty the employer owes by law to the employé; * * * provided, nevertheless, that the employer shall be liable for such injury when the same results from the wrongful act, neglect or default of * * * a coemployé engaged in another department of labor from that of the employé injured, or employed upon a machine, railroad train, switch signal point, locomotive engine, or other appliance than that upon which the employé is injured is employed. * * *"

Plaintiff, under the facts of the case as they were admitted by defendant, was allowed to recover judgment because of the provision contained in the section quoted from, which imposes liability upon an employer for injuries suffered by the employé through the negligence of a fellow servant, where the negligent servant is "employed upon a machine, railroad train, switch signal point, locomotive engine, or other appliance than that upon which the employé is injured is employed." Defendant demurred to the complaint of plaintiff on the ground that by the facts alleged a cause of action was not stated, and, the ruling of the court having been against defendant on that point, the same contention is raised here. More particularly stated, the objection urged is that single cars, like those upon which the plaintiff and the negligent conductor were employed, are not to be considered as machines, railroad trains, or to be comprehended within the term "other appliances" designated by the statute. To our minds, influenced by the consideration that the statute must be given a fair and reasonable meaning and be liberally construed to effect the purposes of its enactment (Judd v. Letts, 158 Cal. 359, 111 Pac. 12), this contention of appellant is without merit. From the phraseology of the provision quoted, it is evident that the Legislature intended to make the law broad in its scope and to preserve the liability of the employer for the employé's benefit in all cases generally where the mechanical device upon which the injured servant is employed is separate and different from that being operated by the negligent employé. By way of closer definition of the department of labor classification, the legislators undertook to and have said in effect that a person is not employed in the same department with another servant where he is at work with or upon a different machine, railroad train, et cetera, and in consonance with a rule of fair construction it would be proper to say, if the words "railroad train" were the only descriptive ones contained in that portion of the statute quoted, that that term, as applied to an interurban railway, is sufficient to include a single trolley car. Such cars combine in their construction both motors for propulsion and seats for the accommodation of passengers. Used in interurban traffic, they perform the same work over long distances as does the steam-propelled train. While a train usually consists of a motor vehicle and cars attached thereto, where these adjuncts are combined in one carriage and serve the same uses, there is no good reason why the one should be said to be a train, within the meaning of the statute, and the other not be so classed.

[2] In construing statutes, courts are not bound to an interpretation which shall give to words or phrases a literal, close dictionary definition.

[3] That the provision of the section gives certain citizens privileges not granted to others, or denies to any the equal protection of the laws, in violation of the provisions of the state or federal Constitution, we do not believe. There is a good reason why the persons who are employed upon the same machine should be denied right of an action for damages against their employer, where such damages are caused by the negligence of one of them, and that those employed upon different machines or trains should not be so restricted as to such remedy. Men working together on the same machine or car generally have an opportunity to view the actions of each other; under the eyes of each other they are easily and readily apprised of any negligent act which threatens injury to them and can better protect themselves. The classification made by the statute is not therefore arbitrary, but it comports with the rule that there must be a difference in the situation of the employé which justifies the special protection being extended to the one class and withheld from the other. Especially is this so as applied to operatives of a railroad working upon different trains or cars. Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Houlihan, 157 Ind. 494, 60 N. E. 943, 54 L. R. A. 787.

No other points are presented for consideration.

We are of opinion that the judgment and order should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

18 Cal. App. 527

RONNING v. WAY. (Civ. 1,035.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 19, 1912.)

1. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 114*)—LEVY ON MORTGAGED CHATTELS—FAILURE TO RECORD MORTGAGE—EFFECT.

Civ. Code, § 2959, requires that a chattel mortgage be recorded in the county where the mortgagor resides, and section 2957 provides that such a mortgage is void as against creditors and subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers in good faith and for value, unless it is recorded as grants of real property. Held, that an unrecorded chattel mortgage is not void as to an officer levying an execution on the mortgaged property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. § 184; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

2. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 114*)—LEVY ON MORTGAGED CHATTELS—WANT OF RECORD—ACTUAL NOTICE.

Civ. Code, §§ 2957, 2959, providing that a chattel mortgage not recorded in the county where the mortgagor resides shall be void as against creditors and subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers in good faith and for value, are qualified by section 2973 providing that chattel mortgages of property other than that mentioned in section 2955, and mortgages not in conformity with the article, are valid between the parties and persons who before parting with value have actual notice thereof, so that an unrecorded chattel mortgage was not invalid as against a constable levying on the mortgaged property who had actual notice of the existence of the mortgage prior to the levy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. § 184; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

3. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 114*)—SALE OF MORTGAGED PROPERTY—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—EXECUTION LEVY.

Civ. Code, § 2973, provides that mortgages of personal property not made in conformity with the provisions of the article which requires record in the county of the mortgagor's residence are nevertheless valid between the parties and person who before parting with value have actual notice thereof. Held, that where property covered by an unrecorded mortgage was levied on as the property of a purchaser from the mortgagor, but it was neither alleged nor proved that the purchaser purchased in good faith and for value, such purchase was no defense to an action for conversion against the constable on the theory that the mortgage was invalid as against the purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. § 184; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

4. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 138*)—CONVERSION—MORTGAGED PROPERTY—NOTICE OF MORTGAGE—EVIDENCE.

In an action by a chattel mortgagee against an officer levying on the mortgaged chattels for conversion, evidence held to warrant a finding that the officer had actual notice of the existence of the mortgage at the time of the levy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. §§ 290-296; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

5. PLEADING (§ 126*)—ANSWER—DENIAL.

In a suit for conversion of mortgaged property, the complaint alleged that the property was of the value of $600, and the answer merely denied that the property was of that value. Held, that such denial was consistent with an alleged value of $599, and hence was not a sufficient denial to require evidence to warrant a finding that the value was as alleged in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 261-263; Dec. Dig. § 126.*]

6. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 114*)—WRONGFUL LEVY—SALE.

Where, in an action against a constable for wrongful levy on mortgaged chattels, it was shown that the chattels were seized by the officer, disposed of, and never redelivered to the mortgagee, it was not material whether the constable had made a sale of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. § 184; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Oscar Ronning against R. B. Way. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Moore & Evans and W. S. Knott, for appellant. Tipton & Cailor, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to recover damages against the defendant as constable for an alleged wrongful conversion of property mortgaged to plaintiff. The court gave judgment for plaintiff, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant prosecutes this appeal.

The complaint alleges the execution to plaintiff of a mortgage upon certain personal property, situated at Whittier, in Los Angeles county, by one George A. Gray, a resident of Riverside county; that the mortgage was recorded in Los Angeles county only; that defendant, on May 15, 1909, converted the mortgaged property by levying upon and selling the same without paying or tendering to plaintiff the amount of the debt due to plaintiff, payment of which was secured by said mortgage; that the value of the mortgaged property so converted by defendant was the sum of $600. It was further alleged "that prior to the sale and conversion of the personal property herein referred to the plaintiff informed the defendant of the existence of said chattel mortgage and the claim of the plaintiff thereunder."

[1] Appellant contends that the court erred in overruling a general demurrer interposed to the complaint. This contention is based upon the claim, first, that the property covered by the mortgage was other than that specified in section 2955, Civil Code, and therefore not subject to mortgage; and, second, that the complaint shows that at the time of the execution of the mortgage the mortgagor resided in Riverside county in this state, and that no record of the mortgage was made in said county as required by section 2959, Civil Code; that, by reason of such failure to so record the mortgage, it was void under the provisions of section 2957, Civil Code, which provides that, "A mortgage of personal property is void as against creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers of the property in good faith and for value, unless: * * * (2) It is acknowledged or proved, certified, and recorded in like manner as grants of real property." Under this provision, the failure to record the mortgage in Riverside county rendered it void as to two classes of persons only; that is, creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent incumbrancers and purchasers in good faith and for value. Since, however, it does not appear that defendant belonged to either of these enumerated classes, he is not in a position, without pleading the fact, to avail himself of the benefit thereof. Cardenas v. Miller, 108 Cal. 250, 39 Pac. 783, 41 Pac. 472, 49 Am. St. Rep. 84.

[2] Moreover, the provisions of all these sections relied upon by appellant are qualified by section 2973, Civil Code, adopted in 1905. Old Settlers' Investment Co. v. White, 158 Cal. 237, 110 Pac. 922. This section provides: "Mortgages of personal property, other than that mentioned in section twenty-nine hundred and fifty-five, and mortgages not made in conformity with the provisions of this article, are nevertheless valid between the parties, their heirs, legatees, and personal representatives, and persons who, before parting with value, have actual notice thereof." As it was alleged in the complaint that prior to the conversion of the property by defendant he had actual notice of the existence of the mortgage, it was, under the provisions of the section just quoted, as to him, a valid existing mortgage, notwithstanding the fact that it contained property other than that mentioned in section 2955, Civil Code, and failure to record the same in the county of the mortgagor's residence. The complaint was not obnoxious to the general demurrer interposed.

[3] In his answer defendant averred that at the time of the alleged conversion one E. Jennie Horton was the owner and in possession of the goods and chattels as a purchaser thereof from Gray, the mortgagor; that in an action wherein Horton was sued by a creditor in the justice's court of Los Nietos township, of which defendant was constable, a writ of attachment was issued to him as such officer, pursuant to which he levied upon the mortgaged property, and thereafter, under an execution issued upon a judgment rendered in said action, he, as constable, sold the property to satisfy the judgment so rendered against Horton, all of which was by the court found to be true. It is not shown that Horton, prior to the purchase, had actual notice of the mortgage, and, in the absence of such notice, appellant, upon the grounds alleged in support of his demurrer, insists that the mortgage was void as to Horton, she being a subsequent purchaser from the mortgagor; that, as her right to the property was unaffected by the mortgage, the creditor's right to enforce his debt against the same was not affected by notice given to the constable acting as his agent. Under the provisions of section 2957, Civil Code, to render the mortgage void as against Horton it must appear by allegation, proof, and finding, not only that she was a purchaser, all of which does appear, but that such purchase was made in good faith and for value, neither of which facts is alleged, proven, or found. In the absence of such showing, no basis exists by virtue of said section 2957 for the claim that the mortgage was void as against her. Her position with reference to the property was identical with that of her vendor. Bank v. Purdy, 130 Cal. 455, 62 Pac. 738; Bank v. Menke, 128 Cal. 103, 60 Pac. 675.

[4] The only material allegation in the complaint which is denied by the answer is that prior to the conversion defendant had actual notice of the existence of the mortgage. Upon this issue, the court found in favor of plaintiff. Appellant attacks this finding, claiming it is not supported by the evidence. The evidence of defendant is that, while he was posting notices of the levy of attachment, the wife of the plaintiff came to the building wherein the property was located and had some conversation with Mr. Moore, the attorney for the plaintiff in the action wherein the attachment was issued; that he did not hear her say anything with regard to an existing mortgage upon the property. With reference to the circumstance of this visit, Mrs. Ronning, the wife of plaintiff, testified that Mr. Moore, to whom she stated in the presence and hearing of the defendant that "we have a mortgage on the outfit," introduced her to defendant, saying, "Here is the woman that has a mortgage on the outfit"; that she replied, "I don't pretend to have it; we have it." Mr. Moore said, "How do you know the mortgage is good?" to which Mrs. Ronning replied, "We supposed it was good." Under this evidence, it cannot be said the finding complained of is lacking support in the evidence. Meherin v. Oaks, 67 Cal. 57, 7 Pac. 47.

[5] Appellant claims the finding of the court to the effect that the mortgaged property was of the value of $600, as alleged in the complaint, is without evidentiary support. The answer merely denied the property was of the value of $600. Such denial was wholly consistent with an alleged value of $599. Westbay v. Gray, 116 Cal. 660, 48 Pac. 800. Such denial, as said in Marsters v. Lash, 61 Cal. 623, is "evasive and in fact no denial at all." There being no actual denial of the allegation, no finding thereon was required; hence it is immaterial that no sufficient evidence was adduced in support thereof.

Appellant directs our attention to a number of other assignments of error predicated upon insufficiency of evidence to support findings, all of which, as he says, are based upon the invalidity of the mortgage. What we have said in discussing the court's ruling upon the general demurrer is a sufficient answer to appellant's contention in this regard.

[6] Appellant challenges the finding to the effect that defendant seized, took, and carried away the whole of said mortgaged property "and sold the greater and best portion thereof"; his contention being that the evidence fails to show a sale of the greater and best part thereof. Plaintiff's right to recover damages is based upon the conversion. The disposal of the converted property by the officer, since it was not shown to have been redelivered to the mortgagee, as done in Irwin v. McDowell, 91 Cal. 119, 27 Pac. 601, was wholly immaterial.

We find no merit in alleged errors due to rulings of the court upon admissions of evidence. In several instances of alleged error no objection was made by defendant to the ruling of the court, and hence appellant is not in a position to urge the same in this court.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

18 Cal. App. 513

J. F. HALL-MARTIN CO. v. HUGHES.

MARTIN v. SAME. (Civ. 1,075.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 14, 1912.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 74*)—CONSIDERATION—BENEFIT TO THIRD PERSON.

Purchasers in a contract for the sale of real estate entered into possession, incurred expenses in an effort to subdivide the premises, and sell them. Deeds of trust to secure indebtedness on houses erected on the premises were foreclosed. Thereafter the purchaser agreed to reconvey the premises to the vendor, who agreed to pay the indebtedness incurred by the purchaser. Held, that the vendor by the agreement and reconveyance by the purchaser acquired the equity of redemption, which was a sufficient consideration to support the promises by him to pay the indebtedness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 331-343; Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 934*)—RECORD—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where a deed of trust does not appear in the record, the court on appeal will assume that the only remedy thereon was by foreclosure, and that it was of the character warranting the trial court in entering a decree of foreclosure, through which decree and right of redemption exists.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3777-3781, 3782; Dec. Dig. § 934.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 187*) — AGREEMENT FOR BENEFIT OF THIRD PERSON—ENFORCEMENT.

Where, pursuant to an agreement to rescind a contract of sale of real estate, the vendor in consideration of a reconveyance by the purchaser of all claims in the premises agreed to pay the indebtedness due to a third person named incurred by the purchaser for "street improvements, $8,200, mortgage indebtedness on houses erected on said premises, $3,700, with interest on all of said claims," the amount of the indebtedness specified and controlled, and the payment of $8,200 to the third person was a part of the purchase money agreed to be paid in consideration of the reconveyance, and under Civ. Code, § 1559, providing that a contract made for the benefit of a third person may be enforced by him, the third person may recover the $8,200.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 798-807; Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 461*)—VARYING WRITTEN CONTRACTS—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where a contract in writing is susceptible of construction on its face, evidence to explain the intention of the parties is inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2129-2133; Dec. Dig. § 461.*]

5. ACTION (§ 53*)—SPLITTING OF ACTIONS—WAIVER.

Where a party entitled to bring a single action to recover a specified sum brought two actions therefor, and defendant made no objection thereto, and the judgments rendered in the two actions were correct in amount and within the limits of the liability of defendant, the judgments will not be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Cent. Dig. §§ 549-623; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Statutory actions by the J. F. Hall-Martin Company and by R. B. Martin against W. E. Hughes. From a judgment for plaintiffs in each action, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Woodruff & McClure, for appellant. G. C. De Garmo, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. The facts disclosed by the record are these: During the year 1909 defendant entered into an agreement in writing with Daniel Stone and Paul H. Blades for the sale of certain real property in Los Angeles county. Stone and Blades entered into possession and formed a corporation known as the Central Square Company, which corporation was merely a corporate agency in and about the subdivision and improvement and sale of the property. Default being made by Stone and Blades as to certain payments, they entered into an agreement with defendant through which Stone and Blades and the corporation should reconvey all claim to the property so contracted to purchase, in consideration of which defendant agreed to pay certain indebtedness theretofore created by Stone and Blades and the corporation in an effort at subdivision and sale of the property. This agreement, in so far as material to a disposition of the questions presented upon this appeal, recited as follows: "(Hughes) promises and agrees to assume and pay all those debts of the Central Square Company, as follows: Martin and Hall for street improvements, eight thousand two hundred dollars ($8,200); mortgage indebtedness on houses erected on said premises, three thousand seven hundred dollars ($3,700); with interest on all of said claims." In this agreement were mentioned certain other debts not necessary to specify. Plaintiff had before this agreement performed the engineering work necessary in laying out the streets and platting the tract, through which an indebtedness of $532.75 arose. In addition, plaintiff had done the work of making and oiling the streets, which work, exclusive of the engineering work, was of the value of $5,957.55, in addition to which plaintiff had constructed three houses on certain lots of the tract, upon which there remained due to plaintiff the aggregate sum of $1,665.48. Before this last agreement with defendant was executed, mechanics' liens had been filed by plaintiff covering these items of indebtedness and actions thereon were pending. The lots upon which the houses had been constructed and covered by the liens had been conveyed to Stone and Blades, and what was denominated "mortgages" in the agreement were, in fact, deeds of trust. These deeds of trust had been foreclosed before the rescinding agreement was entered into. Plaintiff brought two suits, one for $7,627.09 for work done and materials furnished in the improvement of the real property described in the agreement, and the other for $532.75, as a part of the $8,200 agreed to be paid for the improvement of said property. It is shown by the record that as a matter of fact the cost of the street improvements proper was $5,957.55. This amount defendant paid and plaintiff received on account. Judgment was accordingly rendered in the first-mentioned suit for $1,669.44 and in the second for $532.75, the aggregate of which two judgments, together with the amount paid, was a little less than the $8,200 mentioned in the agreement. The court upon the trial found that Stone and Blades and the corporation had conveyed to defendant all of the premises described in the agreement, and that defendant was the owner and holder thereof. The court further found that the Martin mentioned in the agreement was plaintiff herein, and that the $8,200 specified in said agreement included the indebtedness for work done by plaintiff in the improvement of the property. Motions for new trial were made and denied; and from the judgments rendered, and from the order denying the motions, defendant appeals. The two causes were by stipulation consolidated upon the trial and heard together, and the appeal is presented upon a single record.

[1] We find no merit in appellant's first contention, namely, that the finding that defendant by the conveyance of Blades and Stone and the corporation became the owner and holder of all of the three lots had no support from the evidence. The deeds of trust, denominated mortgages in the agreement, had been foreclosed, and defendant by the agreement and reconveyance by Stone and Blades acquired the equity of redemption. This was sufficient consideration to support the promise made in the agreement with reference thereto. Bay v. Williams, 112 Ill. 97, 1 N. E. 340, 54 Am. Rep. 209. No question is presented as to the effect of a sale under power given in a deed of trust.

[2] Such deeds of trust not appearing in the record, it must be assumed that the only remedy afforded thereby was by way of foreclosure, and that the same were of a character warranting the court in entering a decree of foreclosure, and through which decree of foreclosure a right of redemption existed.

[3] The controlling question involved relates to the construction which should be given the agreement assuming and agreeing to pay to plaintiff for street improvements the sum of $8,200. The trial court determined that the amount specified was the controlling factor, and not the specification of the matter to which the payment should be applied. We are of opinion that the court did not err in so construing the agreement. Section 1559 of the Civil Code provides: "A contract, made expressly for the benefit of a third person, may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it." While such contract remains unrescinded, the relations of the parties are the same as though the promise had been made directly to the third party. The payment of $8,200 to plaintiff was clearly a part of the purchase money agreed to be paid in consideration of the quitclaim of those in possession and who had made the improvements. "It is not the business of the defendant to go upon a tour of investigation as to the merits of plaintiff's claim against its grantors after agreeing to pay it." Washer v. Independent M. & D. Co., 142 Cal. 708, 76 Pac. 654. Stone and Blades possessed the right, if conscious of an indebtedness to plaintiff approximating $8,200, to contract with defendant to pay for any single item an amount sufficient to cover all obligations. This they seem to have done in the agreement entered into with defendant, by which they directed the payment of the aggregate of such indebtedness upon one item. Defendant acquiesced in this and agreed to pay such gross sum, and accepted the conveyance and retains the benefits, and he should not now be heard to say that the item specified was less than the aggregate amount agreed to be paid as part of the purchase money; such aggregate amount representing a bona fide indebtedness of Stone and Blades to plaintiff at the time.

The views we have expressed render it unnecessary to consider the many specifications of error as to the action of the trial court in refusing to admit evidence tending to explain the intention of the parties.

[4] The contract being, in our opinion, susceptible of construction upon its face, evidence tending to explain the intention was not admissible.

[5] While, in our opinion, it was competent for plaintiff to have brought a single action to recover the $8,200, yet, having elected to bring two actions and no objection being made thereto, and the judgments rendered in the two actions being correct in amount and within the limits of the liability of defendant to plaintiff, no reason suggests itself why such judgments should be disturbed.

The judgment and order in each case are therefore affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

162 Cal. 602

BRADBURY v. HIGGINSON. (L. A. 2,885.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 30, 1912.

Rehearing Denied May 29, 1912.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§§ 195, 49*)—REPUDIATION OF LEASE BY LESSEE—REMEDIES OF LESSOR.

A lessee having repudiated the lease and abandoned the premises, the lessor may sue for installments of rent as they come due, or may sue for damages for breach.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 790-793, 117-119; Dec. Dig. §§ 195, 49.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 49*)—REPUDIATION OF LEASE BY LESSEE—DAMAGES.

The measure of damages for repudiation of a lease and abandonment of the premises by the lessee is the difference between what the premises may be rented for and the rent reserved in the lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 117-119; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 150*)—LEASES—"APPURTENANCE."

A lease of a house "with the appurtenances," though giving the lessee the right to the use of water supplied to the house at the time of leasing from a water system owned by the lessor, does not obligate the lessor to keep the system in repair.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 536, 538, 544-548, 555, 556; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases vol. 1, pp. 477, 487; vol. 8, p. 7580.]

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 195*)—REPUDIATION OF LEASE BY LESSEE—MATURING INSTALLMENTS OF RENT.

The repudiation by the lessee of a lease does not at once mature the installments of rent not yet due under the terms of the lease, so as to make them recoverable at once as rent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 790-793; Dec. Dig. § 195.*]

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 49*)—BREACH OF LEASE—DAMAGES—PLEADING AND PROOF.

The lease not binding the lessor by any covenants which are conditional on the performance by the lessee of his obligations, the lessor seeking to hold the lessee for the damages from his repudiation of the lease, as for breach of the entire contract, the measure of which is the difference between the rent to accrue and the value of the remaining portion of the term, must allege and prove the amount of such damages; there being no presumption, requiring the lessee to show the contrary, that the damages are the full amount of the rent for such period.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 117-119; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 49*) — BREACH OF LEASE—DAMAGES—COMPLAINT—PRAYER.

The complaint, merely alleging a lease by plaintiff to defendant at $100 per month, payable monthly in advance, and the repudiation of the lease by the lessee, when two months rent were due, and when the lease had four months longer to run, though asking judgment for $600, does not show damages of $600, or of any amount, at least where the complaint is drawn on the theory of the right to at once recover as rent the entire rent reserved as being matured by the repudiation; an allegation that plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $600 not being impleable, under such circumstances, from the prayer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 117–119; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

7. EVIDENCE (§ 441*) — PAROL EVIDENCE — VARYING CONTRACT.

The affirmative duty of the lessor to keep the water system in repair not being included in the reasonable meaning of the word "ap-purtenances," in the lease of a house with ap-purtenances, though at the time of the lease water was being supplied to the house through a water system owned by the lessor, parol evidence of the lessor's agreement to supply the water through such system and keep it in repair is not in aid of interpretation of the lease, but is a violation of the parol evidence rule, as showing an oral agreement of the lessor to do something beyond the terms of the lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1719–1845, 2030–2047; Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Samuel E. Crow, Judge.

Action by Louise S. Bradbury against Augustus B. Higginson. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions to dismiss.

B. F. Thomas, for appellant. Canfield & Starbuck, for respondent. Grant Jackson, amicus curiæ.

SLOSS, J. Upon an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, the District Court of Appeal for the Second Appellate District reversed the judgment. An opinion prepared by James, J., was filed, Shaw, J., concurring, and Allen, P. J., merely concurring in the judgment of reversal. Two main propositions were considered in the opinion; the conclusion of Mr. Justice James being favorable to the appellant on one of these, and in support of the respondent's contentions on the other. Both parties were dissatisfied, and each filed a petition to have the cause transferred to and heard in this court. An order of transfer was made. The opinion of Mr. Justice James reads as follows:

"Plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $600 from defendant. It is alleged in the complaint that defendant on December 13, 1904, leased from plaintiff the house and premises known as 'Eagle's Nest' at Montecito in Santa Barbara county, for the term of five years, at a monthly rental of $100, which was payable on the 1st day of each month in advance. It was alleged further that, pursuant to the terms of the lease, the defendant paid the rental as it became due for each month up to and including the month of June, 1909; that the rental which became due on July 1, 1909, and August 1, 1909, was not paid; that on August 17, 1909, the defendant repudiated the contract of lease and refused thereafter to be bound by the terms thereof. A prayer for judgment in the sum of $600 then followed. The complaint was filed on August 19, 1909. An amended answer was filed by defendant to which a demurrer was interposed by plaintiff. This demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for the amount prayed for and costs of suit.

[1, 2] "Upon this appeal, taken by defendant, the ruling of the trial court in sustaining the demurrer to the amended answer and the sufficiency of the complaint to support the judgment are the questions to be considered. They will be taken up in inverse order. It will be noticed that the term of hiring of the real property in question extended for four months after the date of the commencement of plaintiff's action. There was contained in plaintiff's complaint no statement that the premises had been abandoned by her lessee or of how she had been damaged by the alleged repudiation of the contract by defendant, other than that the rental becoming due on July 1 and August 1, 1909, remained unpaid. It is claimed by plaintiff that, immediately upon the repudiation of the lease contract by defendant, a cause of action for damages arose in her favor, and she might at once sue for the full amount which would become due had the contract run its full term and recover it as damages. That a landlord may have an action for damages for breach of contract when a tenant abandons his lease is not questioned by any of the authorities. His damages, however, in that event, are to be ascertained in a particular way. Where a lease is repudiated and the premises abandoned, the landlord may pursue one of two courses: He may rest upon his contract and sue his tenant as each installment of rent, or the whole thereof, becomes due; or he may take possession of the premises and recover damages, which damages will be the difference between what he may be able to rent the premises for and the price agreed to be paid under the lease. Where he sues for damages, he cannot in advance recover the full price to be paid for the unexpired term, but the amount of his recovery is limited as just indicated. In re Bell, 85 Cal. 119, 24 Pac. 633; Respini v. Porta, 89 Cal. 464, 26 Pac. 967, 23 Am. St. Rep. 488; Mas-sie v. State Nat. Bank, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 280, 32 S. W. 797; Jones on Landlord & Tenant, § 140. It is said by Mr. Gear, in his work on Landlord & Tenant: 'If the premises are abandoned without cause, the landlord may elect to leave them vacant and recover rent, or enter and determine the tenancy; but he cannot both enter and treat the contract as subsisting. * * * Under the Roman Civil Law and in Louisiana, the tenant who abandons during the term may be sued at once for the whole rent of the term.' From the decision in the case of Respini v. Porta, supra, we quote: 'But we cannot support him in his contention that because the defendant, against his (plaintiff's) wishes and without right, abandoned the property, he is entitled to recover the full amount provided for by the terms of the lease to defendant. Our Code provides that "for the breach of an obligation arising from contract, the measure of damages, except where otherwise expressly provided by this Code, is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result therefrom." Civ. Code, § 3300. * * * In cases of this kind the landlord is not entitled to recover for rent of the premises after the abandonment of them by the defendant, but has compensation for the injury, and his measure of damage is the difference between the rent he was to receive and the rent actually received from the subsequent tenant, provided there has been good faith in the subsequent letting.' (Citing cases.)

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

"It is not claimed by respondent that the action should be viewed as one for the collection of installments of rent under the lease, but it is insisted that it should be considered as one for damages resting upon a claimed abandonment made by the lessee. Respondent's position is that the lease was terminated by the alleged act of appellant, her lessee, in repudiating the contract and refusing to be bound further thereunder. The complaint is lacking in essential allegations entitling the plaintiff to judgment in the superior court for such damages as she may have suffered, and does not therefore properly state a cause of action of which such court had any jurisdiction.

[3] "We have next to consider whether or not the amended answer filed on the part of defendant was sufficient as against the demurrer interposed to it. The lease under which the property was held was in the ordinary form and contained the statement that the plaintiff leased to defendant 'the house known as "Eagle's Nest" at Las Tunas in the Montecito in the county of Santa Barbara, state of California, together with the grounds immediately around said house with the appurtenances.' In the amended answer, the abandonment of the premises on the 17th day of August, 1909, was admitted, and as excuse and cause therefor defendant alleged that, included within the terms of the lease by way of oral agreement and mutual understanding of the parties at the time the contract was entered into, was the agreement of the plaintiff to supply the premises leased with water for domestic purposes from a water system and plant maintained by and under the control of plaintiff, and that the furnishing of such water was the principal consideration for the rental stipulated to be paid. It was then alleged that the water was so furnished, except that for the months of July and August plaintiff neglected and refused to furnish the same, although notified by defendant so to do, and that defendant vacated the premises and abandoned the lease because of the failure of plaintiff to fulfill her part of the contract in this respect. Nothing was stated in the lease indicating that there was any obligation on the part of plaintiff to supply the premises with water. It is the contention of defendant, however, that as the water was being supplied at the time of the hiring of the real property in question, he should be permitted to show the agreement of the parties in that particular, even though orally expressed. He contends that the furnishing of water was an appurtenance within the meaning of that term as used in the lease contract. Unless proof of the alleged oral agreement of the parties is permitted to be made by way of explaining what was appurtenant to the premises leased, such proof is not competent otherwise, because it would add to the conditions and obligations of the parties as expressed in their written contract. Section 662 of the Civil Code defines an 'appurtenance' as follows: 'A thing is deemed to be incidental or appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit, as in the case of a way, or watercourse, or of a passage for light, air, or heat from or across the land of another.' Under his lease contract defendant undoubtedly had the right to use those things, and continue to use them during the term of the hiring, which were necessary to or attached to the real property at the time the contract was made. If water was being supplied to the premises from a water system owned or maintained by the plaintiff, the right to the use of the water so supplied would be one which would naturally, and perhaps necessarily, appertain to the leasehold estate. This right, however, in the absence of an express term of the written contract further defining it, would be only to have the water drawn from the supply controlled by the plaintiff and to have it pass through the pipes in which it was customarily conducted to the premises. Under the term 'appurtenances' there could not be implied an agreement on the part of the plaintiff to keep in repair the water system or the pipes leading to the leased premises. Such an agreement would necessarily become an added term of the contract itself; for it would guarantee something to the defendant which was not embraced within the general term 'appurtenances' as contained in the lease. It is not alleged in the amended answer that the plaintiff by any affirmative act prevented the water from flowing from her water system to and through the pipes leading to the leased premises. It is alleged that the plaintiff neglected to repair the pipes and water system when they became in disrepair. The appurtenant right to the water would give to the lessee authority to go upon the premises of the plaintiff, if need be, to make any repairs necessary to secure a continuation in the supply of water; but it would not cast upon the lessor the obligation to make such repairs or require of him that he see to it that the leased premises were kept supplied with water. Such an obligation cannot be imported into the terms of the written agreement through any proper or reasonable interpretation of the word 'appurtenances.' The amended answer, therefore, did not state facts sufficient to show a valid cause for abandoning the lease and vacating the premises, and the demurrer thereto was properly sustained. Plaintiff, however, has secured a judgment to which she is not entitled, because of the fact that her complaint is insufficient for the reasons first stated.

"The judgment is reversed."

We are content to adopt the foregoing opinion as a statement of our own views of the case. It may be well, however, to briefly add to it a notice of some contentions which have been more elaborately advanced since the transfer of the cause to this court.

[4] A reading of the complaint indicates that it was framed on the theory that the repudiation of the lease by the lessee operated at once to mature all the rent reserved in the lease and to enable the lessor to recover, not only the installments already accrued, but those to accrue in the future. This contention has been virtually abandoned by the counsel for respondent, although it appears to be still advanced by counsel appearing as amicus curiæ. But the proposition cannot be successfully maintained. It finds no support in the authorities with the exception of a few cases decided in Louisiana, a jurisdiction which is largely governed by the doctrines of the civil law. The general common-law rule is that rent, as such, is not payable until it falls due under the lease (1 Underhill, Landl. & Ten. § 333), and this rule is not altered by the fact that the tenant has abandoned the premises and notified the landlord that he will repudiate the lease (Nicholes v. Swift, 118 Ga. 922, 45 S. E. 708). Viewing the action as one for rent, it is not distinguishable, in principle, from Tatum v. Ackerman, 148 Cal. 357, 83 Pac. 151, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 908, 113 Am. St. Rep. 276, 7 Ann. Cas. 541.

[5] But it is argued that the plaintiff had the right to recover on the doctrine of "anticipatory breach." Alderson v. Houston, 154 Cal. 1, 96 Pac. 884. That is to say, that the defendant's repudiation of the obligations of his lease gave the plaintiff the right to treat the entire contract as broken, and to recover at once the damage sustained by such breach. But in an action to recover for such breach, the measure of damage would be, not the total rent reserved, but the difference between the rent to accrue and the value of the remaining portion of the term. See cases cited in the foregoing opinion of James, J. The complaint does not aver that plaintiff has sustained any damage by the defendant's repudiation, nor does it state any facts from which the amount of such damage may be inferred. It avers merely the nonpayment for two months, and the repudiation, and then asks judgment for $600. There is no allegation that the premises could not have been rented, during the rest of the term, for an amount equal to the rent agreed to be paid by the defendant. The respondent seeks to overcome the want of averments showing the extent of damage sustained by citing a passage in Alderson v. Houston, supra, where the court declared that the repudiation of a contract made out a prima facie case of liability on the part of the defendant for the entire sum which he had agreed to pay, and threw upon him the burden of showing that the plaintiff could have reduced the damage. Alderson v. Houston was a case of an agent wrongfully discharged and thus prevented from performing the contract on his part. The opinion expressly pointed out that the repudiation of a contract will not be deemed a prevention of performance where the obligations repudiated or unfulfilled by the defendant are not conditions precedent to performance by the plaintiff. The lease here in question did not bind the lessor by any covenants which were conditional upon the performance by the lessee of his obligations. If, therefore, the lessor sought to hold the lessee for the damage occasioned by an unauthorized repudiation of the lease, she was bound to allege and prove the amount of such damage.

[6] The respondent makes the further attempt to meet the want of an allegation of damage by referring to Riser v. Walton, 78 Cal. 490, 21 Pac. 362, where the court used language to the effect that, where a breach of an obligation is alleged, a prayer for damages in a certain sum may be treated as equivalent to an averment that plaintiff has suffered damage in that sum. But it appears that, in that case, the trial had proceeded upon the theory that the amount of damage was properly in issue, and the affirmation was rested, at least in part, on that ground. In the later case of Lehnhardt v. Jennings, 119 Cal. 192, 48 Pac. 56, 51 Pac. 195, the court held adversely to the claim that the prayer of the complaint was necessarily conclusive of the question of jurisdiction regardless of the averments on which such prayer was founded. However, even if we assume that Riser v. Walton decides that a prayer for judgment, in an action for damages, will supply the want of allegations showing the extent of the damage, the rule contended for could not be applied here. In Riser v. Walton the complaint showed upon its face that the sole cause of action relied upon was one for damages for deceit. In this case, as we have already suggested, the complaint was drawn in the belief that the facts alleged entitled the plaintiff to recover immediately the rent for the entire term, and the plaintiff undertook to set forth a demand for such rent. That this is the true interpretation of the pleading is confirmed by the language of the briefs first filed by the respective parties. There was nothing to indicate that damages for breach of an entire contract were claimed. In such a case, a court would not be warranted in saying that an allegation that plaintiff had suffered damage in the sum of $600 was to be implied from the mere fact that judgment in this amount had been asked.

[7] On the other point, that of the defense attempted to be set up by the answer, little need be added to the argument contained in the opinion above quoted. The averments of the answer show that the defendant does not claim a right to have water flow, unimpeded by any act of the plaintiff, but that he seeks to impose upon the plaintiff the affirmative burden of keeping the water system and conduits in repair. Such duty is not included within the reasonable interpretation of the word "appurtenances." Watkins v. Greene, 22 R. I. 34, 46 Atl. 38. The introduction of parol evidence in support of the allegations of the answer would not, therefore, be in aid of the interpretation of the lease. It would result in showing, in violation of the parol evidence rule, that there was, beyond the terms embodied in the lease, an antecedent oral agreement binding the lessor to do something more than she had in her lease agreed to do. Or, stating it in another way, it would, instead of showing what the "appurtenances" were, show that the lessor had undertaken to relieve the lessee of the burden, which (except to the extent of the provision of Civ. Code, § 1942) would rest upon him (Van Every v. Ogg, 59 Cal. 563; Gately v. Campbell, 124 Cal. 520, 57 Pac. 567), of keeping in repair the agencies requisite to the enjoyment of the appurtenances.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to dismiss the action.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

162 Cal. 595

In re LOVELAND'S ESTATE.

BENJAMIN et al. v. BOGLIOLIO et al.
(Sac. 1,957.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 30, 1912.)

1. WILLS (§ 55*)—CONTEST—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—MENTAL INCOMPETENCY.

Evidence in a will contest held to sustain a finding that the testator was mentally incompetent to make the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 137-161; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

2. WILLS (§ 53*)—CONTEST—EVIDENCE—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

An adjudication of mental incompetency, in a proceeding to secure the appointment of a guardian for the testator, was admissible in evidence in a subsequent contest of his will upon the issue of his testamentary capacity at the time of the adjudication; and where the evidence showed that his mental condition had not changed between the date of the adjudication and the date of the will, it was admissible upon the issue of his testamentary capacity at the time of making the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 111, 112, 120-130; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

3. WILLS (§ 285*)—CONTEST—AMENDED ANSWER.

In a will contest, the trial court may refuse to permit an amended answer to be filed, where permission is not asked until after the case has been submitted and decided and no adequate excuse for the delay is offered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 646; Dec. Dig. § 285.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1041*)—HARMLESS ERROR—REFUSAL TO PERMIT AMENDED ANSWER.

After evidence had been admitted and a will contest tried and decided upon the theory that the mental capacity of the testator was in issue, the refusal to permit the defendants to file an amended answer to correct the failure of their answer to deny the allegation of testamentary incapacity was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4106-4109; Dec. Dig. § 1041.*]

5. WITNESSES (§ 205*)—COMPETENCY—EMPLOYÉ OF ATTORNEY—STENOGRAPHER.

A stenographer who, while employed by the testator's attorney, met the testator and conversed with him several times in the office of her employer and formed an opinion as to his mental condition, was not barred from testifying to such opinion in a contest of the testator's will by Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 2, providing that an attorney's stenographer cannot be examined without his consent concerning any fact learned in such capacity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 763; Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a will contest, the exclusion of a witness' opinion as to the mental capacity of the testator, which opinion was competent under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, providing that an opinion by any intimate acquaintance respecting the sanity of a person is admissible, was harmless, where the opinion was based upon scant knowledge gained from 10 or 15 conversations with the testator during a period of only 10 or 12 days.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4153-4160, 4166; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1058*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXAMINATION OF WITNESS.

Error in excluding a question was harmless, where the witness subsequently testified as to the matter inquired about.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4195, 4200-4206; Dec. Dig. § 1058.*]

8. WILLS (§ 53*) — CONTEST — EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a will contest, evidence that the testator was of sound mind when he made a former will, about three years prior to making the contested will, was properly excluded, where contestants did not attack his mental competency prior to the year in which he made the contested will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 111, 112, 120-130; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

9. EVIDENCE (§ 471*) — CONTEST — ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—OPINION.

A witness' evidence as to his observation of the testator's appearance with reference to physical and mental condition, not being opinion evidence, was admissible in a will contest case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2149-2185; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Contest of will of D. H. Loveland, by Edna E. Benjamin and others against L. C. Bogliollo and others. From a judgment denying probate of the will and order denying defendant's motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Law T. Freitas and Stafford & Stafford, for appellants. Budd & Van Vranken and R. C. Minor, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. D. H. Loveland died on September 15, 1910, in the county of San Joaquin. On October 10, 1910, there was filed in the superior court of said county a paper purporting to be the last will of said decedent, together with a petition for its admission to probate. By this document the decedent undertook to give the residue of his estate, comprising the bulk thereof, to L. C. Bogliollo and his wife, Mrs. Anna Bogliollo, who were in no way related to him, and appointed as executor of his will his "friend and attorney," Law T. Freitas. Edna E. Benjamin, Leta Franklin, and Mary A. Corson, the daughters and sole heirs of Loveland, filed an opposition to the probate of said paper; their grounds of opposition being that at the date of the execution of the alleged will the decedent was mentally incompetent to make a will, and that the will had been procured to be made by the undue influence of the Bogliollos and Freitas. A trial without a jury resulted in findings to the effect that the decedent at the time of signing the alleged will was "of unsound mind and incapable from such unsoundness of mind of making a will." On the issue of undue influence the finding was in favor of the proponents. Upon these findings the court entered a judgment denying probate of the will.

From this judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial the proponents appeal.

The principal contention made on the appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding against the mental competency of the testator.

The contestants introduced evidence tending to show that, at the date of the execution of the instrument in question, Loveland was over the age of 80 years. He had had four children—three daughters, who are the contestants here, and a son, Willard T. Loveland, who died intestate on March 20, 1910. The will in controversy was dated March 25, 1910, and the estate of which Loveland assumed to dispose by it consisted almost wholly, if not entirely, of his interest in the estate of his son who had died five days before. It appears that the father and son had been on good terms, whereas there had been some degree of estrangement between Loveland and his daughters. Freitas, who was named as executor in the will, had been the attorney of Willard T. Loveland. He had, however, had no acquaintance with D. H. Loveland until the day before the will was drawn. Notwithstanding this fact, we find him named in the will as executor, designated as the "friend and attorney" of the testator, and made the chairman of an advisory "board of arbitrators" attempted to be created by the will for the purpose of settling any controversy that might arise regarding the will.

On the 24th of March, the day before the will was executed, the contestants herein, daughters of D. H. Loveland, filed in the superior court of San Joaquin county a petition, alleging that said Loveland had property in said county, that he had "by reason of his old age, defective memory, and physical disability, become mentally incompetent either to care for himself or to manage his property," and asking that a guardian of the person and estate of said Loveland be appointed. Citation on this petition was served upon Mr. Loveland on the morning of the 25th of March, and it was after such service that he communicated with Freitas and that his will was drawn and executed. The petition for appointment of a guardian came on to be heard before the superior court on the 4th and 5th days of April, 1910, and such hearing resulted in the making of an order whereby the court, after finding that said David H. Loveland was incompetent and incapable of taking care of himself and managing his property, appointed one Thompson as guardian of the person and estate of said David H. Loveland. All of the evidence relating to these proceedings was introduced and received in evidence without objection.

[1] In addition, the contestants offered other testimony bearing upon the competency of the testator. It will be noted that the hearing in the guardianship proceedings took place only 11 or 12 days after the execution of the will. Several witnesses testified that at this hearing Loveland was asked whether he had by his will made residuary gifts to any strangers to his blood, and that in answer to this question he had stated that "it was not his will if it so set forth such legacies." He had also in the course of such examination stated that he had by such will left no property to Mrs. Bogliolio, and that he did not think any one was named in the will as executor. Two witnesses, whose testimony was offered as that of intimate acquaintances of the decedent, testified that they did not think Loveland "capable of transacting any business"; that he was not "able to do any kind of business."

At this point the contestants rested, and the proponents proceeded to put in their evidence. The case having been submitted, the court directed that it be reopened for further testimony. The contestants produced additional witnesses, who testified, in effect, that, at the time of the hearing in the incompetency proceeding, Loveland, was apparently very old, and quite decrepit, that his memory was very defective, that he remembered little or nothing about the making of a will, and was "very uncertain as to just what he had or with regard to any mortgages." Various witnesses testified, in addition, that the mental condition of the testator at the time of the hearing and adjudication in the incompetency proceeding appeared to be the same as on the date of the signing of the will, some 10 days earlier.

There was very little conflict in the testimony; the showing made by the proponents being, as admitted by them in their brief, "not of a very strong character." But even if there had been a dispute on every item of testimony, we do not doubt that the proof offered by the contestants was ample to justify the trial court in finding that Loveland was not mentally competent to make a will. Entirely apart from the adjudication of incompetency, it appeared that the testator's faculties had been so far impaired that he had no clear idea of the character or amount of his property and was unable to remember, for even a few days, the provisions contained in the will which he had signed. The will itself contained statements and provisions which, when read in the light of existing conditions, indicated a want of comprehension of the signer's relations to the persons named in the will.

[2] But, in addition, we have the adjudication of incompetency, following closely upon the execution of the will. There is no need to discuss appellants' claim that this adjudication was not conclusive on the question of Loveland's competency to make a will. The lower court did not assume to give it such effect. What it did was to admit such adjudication in evidence as showing that, at the date of the adjudication, Loveland was so far incompetent as to justify the appointment of a guardian. This may not establish the want of capacity sufficient for the making of a will (Rice v. Rice, 50 Mich. 448, 15 N. W. 545), and of course could not fix the status of the person affected as incompetent to make a will on a date prior to that of the adjudication. But it is certainly evidence proper to be considered on the issue of want of testamentary capacity at the time of the appointment of the guardian. Ames v. Ames, 40 Or. 495, 67 Pac. 737; Chase v. Spencer, 150 Mich. 99, 113 N. W. 578; Schindler v. Parzoo, 52 Or. 452, 97 Pac. 755; Small v. Champeny, 102 Wis. 61, 78 N. W. 407; Terry v. Duffington, 11 Ga. 337, 56 Am. Dec. 423. And where there is testimony tending to show that the mental condition of the person has not changed between the date of the act in question and the appointment of a guardian, the appointment, although later in time, is admissible on the issue of capacity when the act was done. Here the connection between the time of the incompetency proceedings and that of the making of the will was sufficiently established both by direct testimony that the mental condition of Loveland had not changed in the interval separating the two dates and by the general aspect of the case, indicating, as it did, that any mental weakness on the part of Loveland was the result of that gradual decay which sometimes accompanies advanced age. Schindler v. Parzoo, supra; Giles v. Hodge, 74 Wis. 360, 43 N. W. 163; Deleglise v. Morrissey, 142 Wis. 234, 125 N. W. 452.

[3] Complaint is made of the action of the trial court in denying to the proponents permission to file an amended answer to the contest. Leave to file this pleading was not asked until after the case had been submitted and decided, and the refusal to allow the filing might well be sustained on the ground that no adequate excuse for the delay was offered.

[4] Furthermore, the filing of the amended answer would have accomplished nothing. The original answer of the proponents was open to the construction that it failed to deny the allegation of Loveland's mental incapacity to make a will. It was sought by the amended answer to correct the defect by raising a distinct issue on this point. But it appears that the trial had proceeded throughout the taking of testimony on the theory that the competency of Loveland was in issue. After the evidence was in, the court declined to grant the contestants' motion for a judgment on the pleadings, and passed on the question of competency as one of fact. The appellants were therefore given every advantage which they could have gained by the interposition of their amended answer, and it would have been useless to grant them leave to formally raise an issue which had been decided against them on sufficient evidence.

[5] Some of the rulings of the court in admitting or rejecting testimony are assailed as erroneous. Miss Davis, a stenographer employed by Mr. Freitas, one of the proponents, testified that she had met the decedent 10 or 15 times at the office of Mr. Freitas, and from conversations there had with him, had formed an opinion with regard to "his condition physically and mentally." The entire acquaintance covered a period of only 10 or 12 days. An objection to her stating her opinion was sustained; the court basing its ruling on the ground that she was barred from testifying by the provision of subdivision 2 of section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We are inclined to think that, on the state of facts shown by the record, the offered testimony did not come within the inhibition of the section cited.

[6] But the ruling was not of sufficient consequence to justify a reversal. The showing that Miss Davis was an "intimate acquaintance" of the decedent, and thus qualified, under section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to express an opinion regarding his "mental sanity," was so slender that the exclusion of her testimony for want of foundation in this particular would have been proper. It is true that this objection was not made, and may therefore be regarded as waived. If, however, the witness had been allowed to state that, in her opinion, Loveland was of sound mind, the fact remains that her opinion would have been based upon so brief and casual a knowledge of the decedent that we can hardly believe that the trial court would, by this testimony, have been materially influenced in its determination of the ultimate issue of competency.

[7] Appellants attack a ruling sustaining an objection to a question put to witness Parkinson, calling for his opinion respecting the competency of the decedent. But as it appears that, at a later stage, the witness was permitted to state his opinion that Loveland was competent, the ruling complained of was not injurious.

[8] A will made by Loveland in 1907 was introduced in evidence. The respondents sought to show that, at the date of the former will, the decedent was of sound mind. The offer of testimony to this end was properly rejected. The contestants had not attacked Loveland's competency at any time prior to 1910, and, if his state of mind when he made the former will was relevant at all, the proponents had the full benefit of the presumption of sanity, which, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, is controlling. In re Wilson, 117 Cal. 262, 49 Pac. 172, 711; Estate of Dole, 147 Cal. 188, 81 Pac. 534; Code Civ. Proc. § 1961.

[9] There was no error in permitting the witness Thompson to testify to his observation of Loveland's "appearance" with reference to physical and mental condition. This is not opinion evidence. People v. Manoogian, 141 Cal. 592, 75 Pac. 177; De Arellanes v. Arellanes, 151 Cal. 443, 90 Pac. 1059. Similar rulings on the testimony of other witnesses may be supported either on the same ground or on the ground that, where the witnesses were permitted to give their opinions, they had sufficiently qualified as "intimate acquaintances."

The appellants make no other points.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

162 Cal. 611

PUTERBAUGH v. WADHAM et al.
(S. F. 6,014.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 2, 1912.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 1*)—OCCASION FOR REMEDY.

While the writ of mandamus is not a writ of error and is not available to vary the finding of a judicial or quasi judicial body acting within its jurisdiction, yet where the facts are undisputed, and the only matter to be determined is the lawful duty of the body, the writ will issue not only to require the performance of this duty but to require it in a particular manner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-3; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

2. MANDAMUS (§ 107*)—OCCASION FOR REMEDY—SALARY OF OFFICERS.

Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the auditing committee of a city to pay the salary of a justice of the peace as fixed by law; such payment being a ministerial act not involving the exercise of any discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 225, 232, 234; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

3. OFFICERS (§ 100*)—SALARY—INCREASE DURING TERM.

Const. art. 11, § 9, providing that the salary of a public officer shall not be increased during his term of office, places a limitation only upon the legislative power, and does not prevent the salary of a city justice of the peace being automatically increased, under a statute existing when he went into office, by an official determination that the population of the city has so increased as to place it in a higher class.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. §§ 152-157; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

4. OFFICERS (§ 100*)—INCREASE OF SALARY—JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

In view of Act July 2, 1909, c. 2, § 20, 36 Stat. 7 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 557), providing that the 1910 census shall be taken as of April 15, 1910, and of Act 1883 (Stats. 1883, p. 24) § 2, providing that the federal census shall be the basis upon which to determine the populations of municipal corporations, and under Code Civ. Proc. § 103, fixing the salary of a justice of the peace in cities of the second class at $300 per month, a city of the third class, which was found by the 1910 census to have the population requisite for a city of the second class, became a city of the second class upon April 15th of that year, and a justice of the peace of that city was entitled to his increase in salary from that date, though the census was not promulgated until a later date.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. §§ 152-157; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

5. ESTOPPEL (§ 54*)—EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL—KNOWLEDGE OF FACTS.

Where a justice of the peace accepted the salary due him as such officer of a city of the third class after the date of the federal census, but before its promulgation, he was not estopped thereby from claiming that he was entitled to an increase of salary as a justice of the peace of a city of the second class, from the date of the federal census which showed the city to be of the latter class, since there can be no estoppel where the facts are not known.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 128-135; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

6. OFFICERS (§ 100*)—INCREASE IN SALARY.

Where the salary of a public officer is decreased by legislative enactment after he enters upon his term of office, Const. art. 11, § 9, prohibiting the increase of one's salary during his term of office, will not prevent a subsequent increase of his salary so long as the amount fixed does not exceed that to which he was entitled at the commencement of his term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. §§ 152-157; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

7. OFFICERS (§ 101*)—OVERPAYMENT OF SALARY—RECOUPMENT.

An overpayment made on the salary of a justice of the peace by the auditing committee of a city, under a mistake of law, is not deemed voluntary, and its amount must be deducted before he is entitled to any payment on future salary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. §§ 158-162; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

In Bank. Application for writ of mandate by George Puterbaugh against James E. Wadham and others. Writ ordered to issue.

George Puterbaugh, in pro. per. W. R. Andrews, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Petitioner, George Puterbaugh, justice of the peace of the city of San Diego, asks this court for a writ of mandate to compel the auditing committee and the city auditor of said city of San Diego to draw warrants for the payment of his salary. Respondents demur generally to the petition. They also file answers without waiving the demurrers, but these answers admit all essential matters of fact pleaded in the petition; therefore our conclusions upon the demurrers will suffice to settle the whole subject before the court. The demurrer is based upon the assertion that, the auditing committee and the auditor having acted in a quasi judicial capacity in determining what salary petitioner is entitled to receive under the law, the court cannot by mandamus review or alter such action.

[1] It is undoubtedly true that the writ of mandamus is not a writ of error, and that, generally speaking, it is not available for the purpose of altering or varying in any particular the finding of a judicial or quasi judicial body or officer acting within its or his appropriate jurisdiction; but where the facts are not disputed, and the only matter to be determined is the duty of the body or officer under the law, the court will define such duty and enforce not only its performance, but the carrying out of the obligations of the respondent body or officer in a particular manner.

[2] Mandamus is the appropriate method of compelling the proper officer to pay the salary of a public servant as fixed by law. In such a case, the law being ascertained, it is the auditor's duty to order the payment of a lawful claim. In such a case his function is ministerial, and he cannot avoid the application of mandate to compel the performance of such duty by saying that in mistakenly acting upon a claim he has exercised his discretion. Fowler v. Peirce, 2 Cal. 167. The same doctrine applies in the present case to the auditing committee.

Petitioner was appointed July 7, 1909, to fill an unexpired term as justice of the peace of the city of San Diego. At the time of his appointment, San Diego was a city of the third class, and the salary of his office as then fixed by law was $2,000 per annum. The charter of the city of San Diego makes no provision for the election or appointment of a justice of the peace, and petitioner is the only judicial officer of that rank having jurisdiction in that city. From the time of his appointment to the end of his appointive term, petitioner drew salary at the rate of $2,000 a year. In November, 1910, he was elected to the full term beginning on the first Monday in January, 1911. At the time of his election and when his elective term of office began, the city of San Diego had passed, by reason of its increased population, from the third to the second class, and the city justice of a city of that class was entitled to a salary of $3,600 per annum, payable in equal monthly installments. Section 103, Code Civ. Proc. At the end of January, 1911, he demanded $300 as his salary for that month. The auditing committee allowed his claim for $166.66 without prejudice, and later upon advice of the city attorney of San Diego commanded that a further warrant of $133.33 be drawn. For the months of February, March, April, May, and June, 1911, he presented his claims for $300 per month, and they were duly audited and paid. On July 31, 1911, his verified claim for $300 as his salary for the month of July went to the auditing committee, and on August 2, 1911, said committee allowed the claim and ordered its payment. Before a warrant for the July salary had been drawn, however, the city attorney of San Diego received a copy of the laws enacted by the Legislature of 1911, and discovered that on February 8th of that year an act had been approved by which cities were reclassified in such manner that San Diego again became a city of the third class; that on March 24, 1911, municipal corporations were again classified with the result that San Diego passed into the second and one-half class; and that following the adoption of this latest classification section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure had also been amended by an act approved April 29, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1215), and the salary of a justice of the peace in a city of the second and one-half class had been fixed at $3,000 per annum. He thereupon advised the auditor that the justice of the peace had been overpaid at the rate of $133.33 a month from February 8 to June 30, 1911; that the latest reclassification of cities and the amendment to section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure fixing the salary of a justice of the peace in cities of the second and one-half class at $3,000 a year could not operate in favor of petitioner Puterbaugh because it would be an increase of his compensation during his term of office in violation of section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution of California; and that the amounts paid to said Puterbaugh in excess of the sums found due by a computation based upon interpretation of the law must be either repaid to the city by him or earned at the rate of $166.66 a month before any warrant might be drawn in his favor, because under section 2 of chapter 2 of article 6 of the charter of the city of San Diego no demand upon its treasury may be allowed by the auditing committee or by any officer of the municipality in favor of one indebted to the city without first deducting the amount of such indebtedness. Acting upon this advice, the auditor refused to approve petitioner's warrant for July, although the auditing committee of the city had allowed his demand for $300. The auditor estimated that from January 1, 1911, to February 8, 1911 (the date of the first reclassification of cities), petitioner had earned at the rate of $3,600 per annum $380; that from the last-mentioned date to July 31, 1911, at the rate of $2,000 per annum he had earned $955.52, or $1,335.52 in the aggregate; but that having been paid $1,800 for the first six months of the year 1911, the justice of the peace was indebted to the city in the sum of $464.48 on August 1, 1911. To phrase it differently, the auditor estimated that on November 1, 1911, this petitioner would be entitled to a warrant for $35.51.

Following the auditor's refusal to audit his claim, petitioner demanded additional salary for that part of the year 1910, following the change in the classification of San Diego whereby it entered the third class. Under the twentieth section of the act providing for the taking of the census of the United States for the year 1910, it was specified that such census should be taken as of April 15, 1910, and by the official promulgation of the detailed figures of the census on or about March 22, 1911, it appeared that the population of San Diego was 39,578, which, according to the statute in force then and up to February 8, 1911, made it a city of the second class. Petitioner had been paid $166.66 for each month of the year 1910, but he claimed compensation at the rate of $300 a month after April 15th of that year, or an additional sum of $133.33 a month for 8½ months, or $1,133.33. The auditing committee rejected this claim upon the ground, as shown by their answer and in the brief of the city attorney, that by accepting $2,000 in full payment of his services for the year 1910, petitioner is estopped from demanding an additional sum, as well as upon the theory that the increased payment demanded would be in contravention of section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution. Petitioner insists that a city justice of the peace holding office by virtue of general laws is not a city, county, nor township officer, and is therefore not one of those contemplated by section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution, whose salaries may not be increased. Such justices of the peace have been repeatedly mentioned as "part of the constitutional judicial system of the state" (Graham v. Mayor and Board of Trustees of City of Fresno, 151 Cal. 471, 91 Pac. 147; People v. Cobb, 133 Cal. 76, 65 Pac. 325; People v. Sands, 102 Cal. 17, 36 Pac. 404; Kahn v. Sutro, 114 Cal. 331, 46 Pac. 87, 33 L. R. A. 620; In re Johnson, 6 Cal. App. 740, 93 Pac. 199), and the petitioner argues most forcibly that the constitutional inhibition cannot apply to those who do not come strictly within the classification of county, city, town, or municipal officers. We need not decide this interesting question, however, because, assuming that the said constitutional provision does apply to the case before us, there is no difficulty in determining the respective rights of petitioner and the city.

[3] Section 9 of article 11 is an inhibition directed to the Legislature because it applies not only to attempted increases of salaries but to efforts to extend terms of office. The latter part of the section is unquestionably a limitation upon legislative power, and the former from its association should be similarly construed. We think the section could have no application to the change in salary due to the passing of a city, not by legislative act, but by increased population, from one class to another—not a legislative but an automatic change. When petitioner was elected justice of the peace, the statute established his salary at $2,000 a year because of the population of San Diego; but the same statute fixed the salary of a justice of the peace in a city of the second class, and the evolution of the city into that class did not increase his salary as such—it merely placed him in a new class in which he was entitled to a certain salary which happened to be in excess of that payable to him when he took the office. The possibility of a change in his status when the city should grow into another class must have been in the contemplation of the officer and of the people who elected him. That this change would operate to increase his salary must also have been within their contemplation, and section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution, which was designed to protect taxpayers from legislative interference with their rights by increasing the compensation paid to their elected officers without consent of the electorate, would have no application to such a case as this.

[4] If, then, the taking of the census of 1910 operated without action upon the part of the Legislature or the people of the city of San Diego to place that municipal corporation in the second class as of April 15, 1910, the petitioner is entitled to salary as a justice of the peace of a city of that class from April 15th to the end of the year 1910, unless estopped from demanding such increased compensation by his acceptance of $2,000 in equal monthly installments for his services during the year 1910. The act of Congress authorizing the taking of the census in the year 1910 provides that such census shall be taken as of April 15th of that year. Act July 2, 1909, c. 2, § 20, 36 Stat. 7 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 557). Section 2 of the act of 1883 for the classification of municipal corporations (Stats. 1883, p. 24) provided: "The census taken under the direction of the Congress of the United States * * * shall be the basis upon which the respective populations of said municipal corporations shall be determined. * * *" This section has not been changed by subsequent amendments of the statute. Stats. 1901, p. 94; Stats. 1911, pp. 11, 476. We think that for the purpose of determining the amount of salary to be paid to petitioner the city of San Diego passed without formal action of any sort into the second class (Stats. 1901, p. 94) as of April 15, 1910, and he thereby became entitled to $300 a month (section 103, Code Civ. Proc.). This conclusion, it seems to us, follows inevitably from the doctrine of Ex parte Fedderwitz, 62 Pac. 939.¹ In the opinion of the Chief Justice in that proceeding, discussing the Mitchell Case, 120 Cal. 384, 52 Pac. 799, he said: "The question discussed in that case in both the principal and concurring opinions was whether the police court of Los Angeles had ceased to exist the moment it was ascertained by a special enumeration that the population of the city exceeded 100,000, and all that was decided was that changes of municipal organization do not take place automatically in consequence of changes of population which remove cities from one class to another. This is quite in consonance with the provisions of the classification act. A city of the fourth class retains its charter notwithstanding an increase of population which puts it in the third class. But it does not follow that because its charter remains unchanged its class remains unchanged. On the contrary, the privilege of changing its charter depends upon a change of class. The charter has nothing to do with fixing its class. That is dependent upon population alone, which is an element of all cities, however organized. In organizing under the general law a city must accept the charter of its proper class, but, unless it elects otherwise, it retains its original charter, no matter to what class it may rise or fall by change of population. This is the whole effect of the decision in Re Mitchell, and it does not conflict with the proposition that Berkeley, like every other city of California, becomes at once, within the meaning of our statute law, a city of the class to which its legally ascertained population assigns it."

[5] In People v. Wong Wang, 92 Cal. 280, 28 Pac. 271, it was held that "the exclusive jurisdiction of the police court over certain public offenses committed in a city having 30,000 and under 100,000 inhabitants depends upon the fact of its having the specified number of inhabitants, and not upon any report or proclamation of the fact," so the right of Judge Puterbaugh to draw salary as a justice of the peace of a city of the second class depended, not upon the proclamation, but upon the fact that on April 15, 1910, the population of San Diego was ascertained by the federal authorities to be 39,578. There was no estoppel by his acceptance of the former salary of $2,000 a year because the facts were not known to him until after the official promulgation of the census. There can be no estoppel where the facts are not known. Wheaton v. North British & Mer. Ins. Co., 76 Cal. 429, 18 Pac. 758, 9 Am. St. Rep. 216. It is therefore the duty of the auditor to certify the petitioner's claim for additional salary from April 15, 1910, to the end of that year at the rate of $3,600 a year.

[6] When petitioner commenced his elective term in January, 1911, he was a justice of the peace of a city of the second class and was entitled to a salary of $3,600 a year. This, we believe, is conceded by the attorney for the city and was admitted by the auditing committee and the auditor when they allowed petitioner's salary of $300 for the month of January. Conceding, without deciding, that section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution is applicable, the subsequent changes in his salary brought about by the Legislature during the session of 1911 would not be in violation of that section, because none of them raised his compensation above $3,600 per year. The salary of an officer which may not be increased "during his term of office" has reference only to his compensation as fixed by law when his term of office began. That the first reduction was to $2,000 a year, and that the salary eventually became $3,000 a year, is im-material. The former enactment did not bar the latter nor render it inoperative. The very purpose of the constitutional provision, as we have indicated above, was to prevent the Legislature from adding to the rate of salary payable to a public officer at the time of his induction into office, and the prohibition of the Constitution would not apply to legislative adjustments as rates less than that to which he was entitled at the beginning of his term. Petitioner's right to salary at the rate of $3,600 a year existed from the first Monday in January to February 8th of that year when by an amendment to the classification act he became a justice of the peace of a city of the third class. Stats. 1911, p. 11. Under this reclassification and under section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure as it then existed, he was entitled thereafter to compensation at the rate of $2,000 a year until the subsequent amendment which placed San Diego in the second and one-half class, and became a law March 24, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 476). Section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not then provide for any salary in the second and one-half class, and we must conclude that petitioner was without right to salary after March 24, 1911, until the re-enactment of section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure, April 29, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1215), when the salary of a justice of the peace of a city of the second and one-half class was fixed at $3,000 per annum.

¹ Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 130 Cal. xviii.

[7] It remains only to consider the auditor's claim that the city is entitled to recoupment for the overpayments mistakenly made after February 8th to July 1st upon the belief of the auditor and the auditing committee that San Diego was still a city of the second class. In our opinion these cannot be deemed such voluntary payments as prevent the city from enforcing its demands in an action like the present. The auditing committee is prohibited from allowing any demand upon the treasury in favor of any officer "in any manner indebted to the city." While this indebtedness has not been fixed by any judgment, it is easily ascertainable under the admitted facts of this case, and the auditing committee should not be compelled by mandate to allow any claim which does not recognize such indebtedness.

From the above discussion it follows that the demurrers to the petition herein are overruled, and upon the facts alleged in said petition, which are either directly admitted or not denied, it is ordered that mandamus issue to respondents that they audit and allow petitioner's claim for compensation at the rate of $133.33 a month from April 15, 1910, to January 2, 1911; $300 a month from January 2 to February 8, 1911; $166.66 a month from February 8 to March 24, 1911; and $250 a month from April 29, 1911, to October 1, 1911 (or to the last full month prior to the filing of the petition herein);

subtracting from the aggregate of all such sums, however, the amounts in excess of petitioner's salary (according to the views above expressed), which were paid to petitioner during the months of February to June, 1911, inclusive.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.

162 Cal. 588

SAN LUIS OBISPO COUNTY v. MURPHY,
County Auditor. (L. A. 2,726.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 11, 1912.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 53*)—"SURETY COMPANY."

The term "surety companies" in St. 1903, p. 476, which is an act to provide for the payment by the state, counties, cities, or cities and counties of the premium on official bonds, when signed by surety companies, includes any corporation contemplated by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1056, 1057, and Pol. Code, § 955, subd. 4, which authorized corporations organized for that purpose to become the sole surety on any undertaking or bond required by any law of the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

2. STATES (§ 48*)—OFFICERS—BONDS—SURETIES.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1056, 1057, provide that corporations organized to become surety on bonds or undertakings required or authorized by law may, upon compliance with the requirements of the laws of the state for any cause thereon, become sureties on such undertakings. Pol. Code, § 955, subd. 4, provides that a corporation, such as is mentioned in Code Civ. Proc. § 1056, may be accepted as sole surety on any bond or undertaking required by law, Pol. Code, § 954, provides that the bond of an official must be signed by the principal and at least two sureties. Section 955 provides that the sureties on a bond of a state officer must swear that they are freeholders, and are worth the amount for which they become surety. Held, that two classes of official bonds with respect to the character of the sureties are authorized; and the bond of either class presented by the officers, if otherwise legal, must be accepted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 48*)—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES—PRESUMPTIONS.

In view of the inferences that must be recognized in favor of the validity of any legislative act, it will not be presumed, for the purpose of nullifying St. 1903, p. 476, which provides for the payment by the state, counties, or cities, or cities and counties, of the premium or charge on official bonds, when given by surety companies, that there was any intention to discriminate in favor of surety companies as against personal surety, or in favor of certain officers as against others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 100*)—SPECIAL LEGISLATION—GENERAL LAWS.

St. 1903, p. 476, provides that the premium for official bonds given by surety companies shall be paid by the state, county, city, or city and county, respectively. Const. art. 1, § 11, provides that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation. Article 1, §

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

21, provides that no citizen, or class of citizens, shall be granted privileges which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all. Article 4, § 25, subd. 9, provides that the Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in regulating county or township business or the election of county and township officers. Held, that the statute is not unconstitutional as being other than a general law for limiting the charges guaranteed to bonds furnished by surety companies, as the Legislature might well conclude that the security furnished was superior to that of a personal surety, and the use of such bonds was therefore a proper safeguard of the public interests, in addition to which the surety companies practically constitute the entire class of those making charges for furnishing bonds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 112; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

5. STATUTES (§ 100*)—SPECIAL LEGISLATION—SURETY BONDS.

Under Const. art. 11, § 5, which gives the Legislature power to prescribe the duties of the various classes of county and municipal officers, and to regulate their compensation, St. 1903, p. 476, is not unconstitutional, as other than a general law, because it does not include justices of the peace and constables, as the test of generality is whether the act applies equally to all the class of officers to which it refers, rather than to all officers of the class in which those referred to are included.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 112; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

6. STATUTES (§ 100*)—SPECIAL LEGISLATION—SURETY BONDS.

The statute is not unconstitutional for its failure to include notaries, who are state officers, or officers of districts organized within counties for special purposes, between whom and county, township, or municipal officers there is an apparent distinction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 112; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

7. STATUTES (§ 100*)—SPECIAL LAWS—SURETY BONDS.

Though St. 1903, p. 476, may not apply to officers of a municipality organized under a freeholder charter, by reason of the fact that under certain provisions of the Constitution the matters involved in such act is controlled by the provisions of the charters, or to state officers, whose compensation is fixed by constitutional provision, it is not rendered unconstitutional as other than a general law; it being sufficient if it be operative as to the state officers, or any particular class over which the Legislature has control in reference to the matters embraced therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 112; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Injunction by San Luis Obispo County against P. H. Murphy, County Auditor. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Albert Nelson, Dist. Atty., for appellant. Paul M. Gregg and C. P. Kaetzel, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action by the county of San Luis Obispo, by its district attorney, to obtain a decree restraining and enjoining the auditor from allowing and auditing as a county charge a demand of the Ætna Indemnity Company, a surety company, for $20, the amount of the premium for the year 1910 on the official bond of the county recorder of said county, which demand had been allowed and approved by the board of supervisors thereof. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained; and, plaintiff having failed to amend, judgment went for defendant. This is an appeal by plaintiff from such judgment. The only question presented by this appeal is whether an act of the Legislature entitled "An act to provide for the payment by the state or counties, or cities, or cities and counties, of the premium or charge on official bonds when given by surety companies," approved March 25, 1903 (Stats. 1903, p. 476), is constitutional.

The act simply provides that "the premium or charge for bonds given by surety companies for state officials, county officials, city officials, or city and county officials, shall be paid by the state, county, city, or city and county respectively; provided, however, that no premium or charge shall exceed one-half of one per cent. per annum on the amount of such bond; and provided further, that this act shall not apply to notaries public." No question is suggested herein of any violation of provisions of the Constitution prohibiting the increase of the compensation of officers after their election or during their term of office, for the reason that the act in question became a law long prior to the election of a county recorder for the term that included the year 1910.

Our Constitution provides as follows: "All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation." Section 11, art. 1. "Nor shall any citizen, or class of citizens, be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens." Section 21, art. 1. "The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases; that is to say: * * * Ninth. Regulating county and township business." Subdivision 9, § 25, art. 4. It is claimed that the act in question is violative of one or more of these provisions.

No claim is made that the Legislature has not the power to make the cost or charge to a public officer of the official bond required by law to be given by him a public charge; and we know of no ground upon which it may properly be held that such power does not exist as to those officers as to whom the Legislature has the power to fix the compensation, or provide for such fixing, as in the case of cities and towns operating under the general municipal corporation act.

[1] The term "surety companies" in said act was intended, of course, to include any corporation organized for the purpose of carrying on the business of becoming a surety on bonds and undertakings, which, by sections 1056 and 1057 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and subdivision 4 of section 955, Political Code, is authorized to become the sole surety on any undertaking or bond required by any law of this state, and may be accepted as such by the approving authority, in lieu of a bond with natural persons as sureties.

[2] Under certain provisions of our Political Code, as they have existed from the adoption of our Codes in 1872, a public officer may give a bond, signed by natural persons, possessing certain qualifications, as sureties. Pol. Code, §§ 954 and 955. We thus have two classes of official bonds with respect to the character of the sureties; and a bond of either class presented by the officer, if it conforms to the requirements of the law in other regards, must be accepted. Except as affected by the act under consideration, the two classes of bond thus authorized are equally credited; either satisfying the law.

[3] In view of the well-settled presumptions that must be recognized in favor of the validity of an act of the Legislature, we are of the opinion that this act cannot properly be held to be violative of any of the constitutional provisions referred to. It is not to be assumed, for the purpose of nullifying the act, that there was any intention to discriminate in favor of surety companies as against personal sureties, or in favor of certain officers as against others. If a reasonable ground for the conclusion of the Legislature, confining the operation of the act to bonds given by surety companies, can be conceived, we must assume that the Legislature acted on that ground; and, consequently, that the classification made by it was authorized by the Constitution. Two such grounds may readily be stated.

[4] The act may reasonably be construed as one designed to encourage the giving by the officers to whom it is applicable of surety company bonds, rather than personal surety bonds, upon the theory that the public interests will be better protected by such bonds. While both classes of bonds were, prior to the passage of the act, equally credited, and while either must still be accepted, when presented by a public officer, when we take into consideration the provisions of our law relating to the conditions and official supervision under which surety companies may transact business, it cannot fairly be said that the Legislature may not reasonably have concluded that, while the personal surety bond may still be used at the option of an officer, the surety company bond is a better and safer bond, so far as the public interests are concerned, and the giving of such bonds should be encouraged. Such companies being engaged in the business of furnishing security for a consideration, and an officer furnishing such a bond being necessarily compelled to pay a premium or charge therefor (if the same is not a public charge), while no premium or charge is ordinarily involved in the matter of obtaining personal sureties, manifestly the giving of such bonds, in lieu of the personal surety bonds, would be much increased by an act making such premium or charge a public charge. Under this construction, the Legislature practically says to the officer: While we do not refuse to accept a personal surety bond from you, we believe a surety company bond better and safer for the public interests, and therefore prefer such a bond. If you will give such a bond, the premium charged therefor by the surety company, not exceeding a certain rate, will be paid from the public treasury, thus saving you from the additional expense that would otherwise be imposed upon you by reason of giving a surety company bond, instead of a personal surety bond. No reason is apparent to us why the Legislature has not the power to so declare; and, if this be so, there is nothing in the constitutional provisions, above referred to, that makes the act void, because it is applicable only to the premiums and charges on bonds furnished by "surety companies."

The act may also be reasonably construed as one designed to make the cost of an official bond to the officer furnishing it a public charge, in the same way that the act of March 20, 1905 (Stats. 1905, p. 477), makes the cost of his bond to an executor, administrator, etc., a lawful expense in the execution of his trust, for which he is to be allowed credit in his accounts. In the latter act, it is true that there is no express limitation in respect to the character of the sureties; while, under the act here involved, the premium or charge collected from the officer as a consideration by a personal surety would not be a public charge. It is a matter of common knowledge, however, that the only persons really engaged in the business of becoming surety on bonds for a consideration, and especially on official bonds, are the corporations authorized by our statutes to engage in such business under such limitations and restrictions as are imposed by law; and that it is only as to a bond given by such a corporation that there is ordinarily any premium or charge for the risk assumed by the surety. While, perhaps, an isolated case may be found of an officer being compelled to give to a natural person some pecuniary consideration for his service in becoming a surety on his official bond, we know that such cases are extremely rare; and that in almost every case a personal surety becomes such as a matter of favor to the officer, and without any charge whatever. The Legislature may have reasonably concluded that the cases in which a charge is made by a personal surety on an official bond are so inappreciable and insignificant in number that, in reality, the surety corporation bonds "compose the entire class" as to which there is a premium or charge for the risk assumed by the surety; and such a conclusion would warrant the limitation of the provisions of the act to such bond. See In re Spencer, 149 Cal. 401, 86 Pac. 896, 117 Am. St. Rep. 137, 9 Ann. Cas. 1105.

[5] The act does not apply, in express terms, to bonds given by township officers (unless the term "county officers" may be read to include township officers, a question which we do not decide), being limited to "state officials," "county officials," "city officials," and "city and county officials," and expressly excepts notaries public. Nor does it expressly include district officers, such as the officers of a school district, sanitary district, etc. There is, however, no discrimination therein as between officers of any particular character. By its terms, it includes all state officers (except notaries public, to whom we shall refer later), all county officers, all city officers, and all city and county officers; and we are of the opinion that, as to an act of this character, nothing further is essential, so far as the constitutional provision involved is concerned. The power of the Legislature to prescribe the respective duties of the various classes of county, township, and municipal officers, and to regulate their compensation, cannot be doubted. Section 5, art. 11, Const. We do not see how any provision applicable to all officers of a particular class, such as county clerks or sheriffs, etc., going to the question of the compensation, or the character or manner of qualification (including bonds), can reasonably be held to be inhibited by such provisions. For instance it would not be doubted that the Legislature might require an official bond to be given by members of certain classes of such officials, without requiring such a bond of members of other classes. It might dispense altogether with the requirement that justices of the peace and constables (the officers provided by law for townships) give any official bond. Requiring a bond from them, it might require a bond of a different character from that required of other officials, or might make different regulations as to sureties from those made as to other officers. The difference in the character of the respective officers and the duties to be performed furnish such a basis for different regulation as to render it impossible for a court to say that there was not reasonable ground for the action of the Legislature in this regard. As long as such an act applies equally to all of a particular class of such county, township, or municipal officers, it would seem, so far as the courts are concerned, to apply to all who stand in the same relation to it, and, consequently, to be a general law. We, therefore, are unable to see that the failure to include bonds given by justices of the peace and constables among those on which the premium or charge is a public charge renders the act violative of any of the constitutional provisions referred to.

[6] As to notaries public, who are state officers, and the officers of districts organized within the various counties for special purposes, such as school districts, sanitary districts, irrigation districts, etc., it is obvious, in view of what we have said, that such distinctions exist as would warrant their exclusion from an act of this character.

[7] It may be doubted whether the act here involved has any force as to state officers whose compensation is fixed by constitutional provision; but as to this we do not decide. It would seem, too, that it cannot have any force as to the officers of a city or city and county, organized and operating under a freeholders' charter. But these considerations do not affect the question of the validity of the act. There are many instances of general laws applicable to cities which are not operative in cities organized and existing under freeholders' charters, by reason of the fact that under certain provisions of the Constitution the regulation of the matters covered by such acts is controlled by the provisions of the freeholders' charter. The validity of such laws has never been doubted. It is sufficient for all purposes that such acts are operative as to all cities as to which the Legislature has control in regard to the matters embraced therein. And the same is true as to the matter of the state officers, whose compensation is fixed by the Constitution. It is sufficient if the act is operative as to the state officers of any proper class over which the Legislature has control in reference to the matters embraced therein.

Whatever may be our views as to the policy of the legislation here involved, we are unable to see that it is violative of any provision of our Constitution.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J. BEATTY, C. J. concurs in the judgment.

(18 Cal. App. 532)

EDMUNDS v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.
(Civ. 1,083.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 21, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 20, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1001*)—VERDICT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

If there is sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict, the appellate court will not weigh the evidence to determine its weight or character.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3022, 3928-3934; Dec. Dig. § 1001.*]

2. RELEASE (§ 17*) — VALIDITY — "ACTUAL FRAUD."

A statement to plaintiff, to induce him to execute a release, while he was in a weak physical condition from personal injuries, by defendant railroad company's claim agent, to the effect that plaintiff would be able to work in two or three weeks, and would have no scars, if palpably false, was an act fitted to deceive, constituting "actual fraud," within Civ. Code, § 1572, providing that actual fraud, committed by a party to a contract, consists, among other things, in any acts fitted to deceive, or any suggestion as a fact of that which is not true by one who does not believe it to be true.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Cent. Dig. § 32; Dec. Dig. § 17.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 157–158.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by Edward G. Edmunds against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. McKinley (W. R. Millar, of counsel), for appellant. E. B. Drake, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was one for damages, occasioned by injuries to plaintiff through the negligence of defendant. There is evidence in the record tending to show these facts: Plaintiff, a mail clerk employed by the United States government, was injured in an accident on defendant's road. The car in which he was employed being thrown near the engine, escaping steam from the engine burned plaintiff to such an extent that the skin and flesh fell from his hands, and his hands were so injured that it was not possible to close them in a natural way. In addition to this, his face, ears, and ankles were burned so as to make a permanent discoloration of the skin, and he was bruised on his knees and one of his ribs injured. Plaintiff was so shocked nervously that he was unable to sleep, and within three weeks after the accident had lost over 40 pounds in weight. Through the result of the injury, he was rendered unable to perform his usual and ordinary work, his hands are permanently disfigured, and up to the time of the trial his sleep was disturbed, and he is probably so permanently injured as to render him unable to follow his usual avocation. After the injury, plaintiff was taken to a hospital belonging to defendant and kept there for about 18 days, when he was brought to the city of Los Angeles, at which place he arrived on the 7th of January, 1909. When he arrived at Los Angeles, he was irrational. Occasionally he would have lucid intervals of 5 minutes or more; but much of the time, as one witness expressed it, "he just acted like a man that was crazy; that is all I can tell." While he was in this condition physically and mentally, and within 4 days after his arrival at Los Angeles, a claim agent of defendant approached him and effected a settlement of his claim for damages and paid him $1,250. Plaintiff testified that when he signed the settlement and release he did not know what he was doing; that he did not know its contents, and did not know such contents until the 11th of February, 1910, at which date, through counsel, a notice of rescission of the release was served upon defendant, with a tender of the amount paid. There is evidence to the effect that the claim agent represented to plaintiff that he would be able to work in two or three weeks; and that he would be all right in two or three weeks, and would have no scars. Defendant, upon the trial, pleaded this settlement and release in bar of the action, admitted its negligence, but denied that plaintiff was damaged to the amount claimed. The action was tried by a jury, which returned a verdict in plaintiff's favor of $5,000. Judgment was rendered thereon for that amount, from which judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals.

[1] Appellant's principal contention is that no actual fraud was shown in the matter of the settlement, and that it does not appear that plaintiff was in such mental condition at the time of the settlement as to render him incompetent to act; and, further, that the amount paid was equal to the damages sustained. The jury, having before it the witnesses, and having heard all of the evidence in the case, determined these matters adversely to appellant; and, there being testimony in the record ample to sustain such verdict, it is not the province of an appellate court to review or weigh the evidence in a determination as to its weight or character.

[2] The suggestions of the claim agent and his statements to a man in the weak physical condition of plaintiff were acts fitted to deceive, and, under section 1572, Civil Code, amounted to actual fraud. In addition to this, a careful perusal of the transcript leaves little room for doubt that this man, upon the date of this attempted settlement, was unfitted to enter into or consummate any business deal or arrangement. His mental and physical condition were such that it cannot be said that two minds met in the contract of release, and the jury very properly so determined. The question of sanity or insanity in the abstract is not involved in matters of this kind. The question for the jury was whether or not, at the time of the settlement, plaintiff was so weak mentally and physically that he did not know and understand what he was doing. The court gave instructions to the jury as favorable to defendant as could be asked, and under these instructions the verdict of the jury must be accepted as a final determination of the matters at issue. The suggestion of counsel that the amount of the settlement was adequate, as compensating plaintiff on account of his injuries, merits no serious consideration.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

(18 Cal. App. 585)

FOX et al. v. ROBINSON. (Civ. 906.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 27, 1912.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 165*)—CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION.

The contract of sale of land, described as commencing at a point on the southerly line of B. way, a certain distance from the intersection of said line with the easterly line of W. street, running thence southerly and parallel with said line of said street "fifty feet, more or less, but not less than forty-nine feet," to the center of a strip, formerly S. street; thence easterly along the center line of S. street 56 feet; thence northerly and parallel with said line of W. street "fifty feet, more or less, but not less than forty-nine feet," to the southerly line of B. way; and thence westerly along said line of B. way 56 feet to the point of beginning—is of a tract with definite north and south boundaries, controlling the calls for distances between them, with a warranty, however, that they are not less than 49 feet, so that there is no failure of title, but a breach of warranty, because they are less than 49 feet.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 329, 329½; Dec. Dig. § 165.*]

2. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 43*)—RESCISSION—PLEADING—VARIANCE.

While one may have rescission of a contract of purchase of land for breach of warranty of quantity, he must, to do so, plead the breach; and, having merely pleaded a failure of title, of which there was none, and proved such a breach, there is a variance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 96-99; Dec. Dig. § 43.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 170*)—PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT—TENDER—SUFFICIENCY.

A tender by a purchaser of the balance of price, with demand for a deed, by making tender to the vendor's wife, at his residence, in his absence, and leaving with her a written notice for him, is insufficient, in the absence of showing that he could not have been easily found; Civ. Code, § 1489, providing that an offer of performance may be made, where the person to whom the offer ought to be made can be found, or, if he cannot, with reasonable diligence, be found, then at his residence or place of business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 344-348; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 170*)—PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT—TENDER.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1493, 1495, providing that an offer of performance, to be of any avail, must be made in good faith, and shall be of no effect if the person making it is unwilling to perform according to it, a purchaser can get no benefit from tendering the balance of purchase money and demanding a deed; his intention being to reject any deed, because the land was not of the depth warranted in the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 344-348; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by Agnes Fox and husband against P. A. Robinson. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Samuel M. Samter, for appellants. Robert Edgar and O. Youngs, Jr., for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, rendered, upon motion of the defendant, at the close of the testimony introduced upon behalf of plaintiff.

The only question presented by the appeal is as to whether or not the court erred in granting the nonsuit.

Defendant and plaintiff Agnes Fox entered into a written contract on the 25th day of September, 1907, in which defendant agreed to sell to said plaintiff, and said plaintiff agreed to buy from defendant, a certain piece of land situate in the town of Berkeley, and particularly described in the agreement as set forth in the complaint as follows, to wit: "Commencing at a point on the southerly line of Bancroft way, distant thereon easterly two hundred (200) feet from the intersection thereof with the easterly line of West street, running thence southerly and parallel with said line of West street fifty (50) feet, more or less, but not less than forty-nine feet, to the center of that strip of land formerly known as South street; thence easterly along the center line of South street fifty-six (56) feet; thence northerly and parallel with said line of West street fifty (50) feet, more or less, but not less than forty-nine (49) feet to the southerly line of Bancroft way; and thence westerly along said line of Bancroft way fifty-six (56) feet to the point of beginning."

The price to be paid was the sum of $2,200, of which $200 was paid at the execution of the agreement; and the balance ($2,000) was to be paid "in monthly installments of ten ($10) dollars or more on the principal, with interest on balance remaining unpaid each month at the rate of six (6) per cent. per annum, but at the end of each year there must be at least $180 paid on the principal. And more can be paid if he so desires."

Plaintiff went into possession of the premises, or, as she claims, a part of the premises, and so continued until after September, 1909, when she delivered possession of the premises to defendant, and brought this action to obtain a judgment for the sum of $962.50, being $750 paid on the purchase price, and $212.50 expended on the property; and that said agreement be canceled.

Evidence was introduced tending to show that at the time the agreement of sale was executed the boundaries of Bancroft way were not marked upon the ground; that it was in appearance simply a country road. Subsequently it was graded and macadamized. Plaintiff procured the city surveyor of Berkeley to make a survey of the lot in question, who gave testimony at the trial, which, it may be conceded for the purposes of this opinion, established, or at least tended to establish, the fact that the distance from the southerly line of Bancroft way, along the easterly boundary of the lot described in the agreement, to the center of the strip of land formerly known as South street was but 47.63 feet, and the distance between said southerly line of Bancroft way, along the westerly boundary of said lot, to the center line of said strip of land formerly known as South street was but 48.17 feet. It was and is the theory of appellant that the facts thus shown established a failure of a clear title to the land described in the agreement, which entitles her to recover the money paid under the agreement, and to a judgment canceling said contract. She accordingly alleged in her complaint "that said defendant is unable to execute and deliver to said Agnes Fox a good and sufficient deed, conveying the land in said Exhibit A described, free and clear of all incumbrances."

[1] We think the theory of appellant is founded upon a misconception as to the correct construction of the agreement, and the effect of the words therein contained, "but not less than forty-nine (49) feet." The land in the agreement, as pleaded in the complaint, is described as bounded on the north by the southerly line of Bancroft way, and on the south by the center line of a strip of land formerly known as South street. Those lines, so far as the description of the land agreed to be sold is concerned, are controlling over the words indicating the distance between those lines. The words "but not less than forty-nine (49) feet," following the words "fifty (50) feet more or less," were intended to have, and did in fact have, the effect of a warranty that the distance between those lines was not less than 49 feet.

It is clear from the language of the agreement as pleaded that plaintiff only intended to buy, and defendant only intended to sell, a piece of land bounded on the north by the southerly line of Bancroft way, and on the south by the center line of the strip of land formerly known as South street. The defendant in the agreement did warrant that the distance between those two designated boundaries was at least 49 feet; but this warranty did not vary or change the identity or description of the land agreed to be sold. It was but a warranty as to the quantity of land contained within the description.

It is correctly stated in appellant's brief that "the insertion of the words 'but not less than 49 feet' was a warranty that the east and west sides were at least 49 feet in length." Plaintiff's complaint, however, was not framed upon the theory of a breach of warranty as to the distance between the given boundaries, but upon the theory of a failure of a clear title to the land described in the agreement.

[2] It is not doubted that a vendee may be entitled to a rescission of an executory contract, and to a return of money paid thereon, when such contract was procured by false and fraudulent representations as to the quantity of land contained within the parcel described, and also where there has been a breach of warranty as to such quantity. Eichelberger v. Mills Land, etc., Co., 9 Cal. App. 628, 100 Pac. 117; Quary v. Scher, 136 Cal. 406, 69 Pac. 96; Civ. Code, § 1786; Brooks v. Riding, 46 Ind. 15; Stevens v. Giddings, 45 Conn. 507; Davis v. Nuzum, 72 Wis. 439, 40 N. W. 497, 1 L. R. A. 774; Moore v. Harmon, 142 Ind. 555, 41 N. E. 599. But in such case the fraudulent representations or warranty and breach as to quantity must be pleaded. Such was the rule followed in each of the cases last above cited. Proof, either of false representations as to the quantity of land contained in the parcel described, or of a breach of a warranty as to the quantity, will not sustain a claim of failure in title to the land described.

In the case at bar, the boundary lines of the land contracted to be sold were correctly described. Only the land within those lines was intended to be sold. Defendant had a clear title to all the land within those boundary lines, and could give a clear title thereto. The record simply shows a breach of a warranty as to the quantity of land described in the agreement, and not a failure of title to any portion of the land described and agreed to be sold. It presents a clear case of a variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof. For this reason, the court did not err in granting the judgment of nonsuit. Bailey v. Brown, 4 Cal. App. 515, 88 Pac. 518; Tomlinson v. Monroe, 41 Cal. 95; Elmore v. Elmore, 114 Cal. 516, 46 Pac. 458.

[3] In holding that, for the reasons above set forth, the court did not err in granting the nonsuit, we have not overlooked the allegation in the complaint to the effect that plaintiff made a tender of the balance of the money unpaid, and demanded of the defendant that he execute and deliver to plaintiff, within 10 days after the 1st day of September, 1909, a good and sufficient deed, conveying to said plaintiff the parcel of land in said Exhibit A described. The evidence as to this so-called tender does not show a compliance with the provisions of the statute relating to tenders or offers of performance. Appellant went to the residence of defendant in his absence, and made the tender to his wife, and left a written notice for defendant. No attempt was made to show that defendant could not have been easily found. Appellant simply went to his residence upon one occasion, ascertained that he was not then at home, and proceeded to make the alleged tender. This was not a compliance with the law. Civ. Code, § 1489.

[4] Furthermore, it is perfectly clear from the entire record that this so-called tender was not made in good faith; that appellant was not willing to perform; that is to say, if defendant had been present, and had offerred her his deed of the land, describing it as in the agreement it is described, she would not have accepted the deed or paid the money. An offer of performance must be made in good faith (Civ. Code, § 1493), and is of no effect, unless the person offering to perform is willing to perform according to the offer. Civ. Code, § 1495. The real purpose and intent was to reject any deed, because the lot was not 49 feet in depth. It may be noted that defendant, because of this deficiency in the quantity of the land, offered deficiency to abate $100 from the price. This offer appellant refused.

The judgment must be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

18 Cal. App. 577

CARLE v. HELLER et al. (Civ. 1,079.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 26, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 24, 1912.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 262*)—COMMUNITY—SEPARATE PROPERTY.

The presumption raised by Civ. Code, § 164, providing that when property is conveyed to a married woman it is presumed to be her separate property, is applicable whether the purchase money be the separate funds of the husband or community estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 913, 914; Dec. Dig. § 262.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 131*)—SEPARATE PROPERTY—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where the purchase money of property conveyed to a wife was the separate fund of the husband, the law presumes a gift from the husband to the wife, placing the burden upon one asserting the contrary to prove it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 426, 471-483; Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 124*)—SEPARATE PROPERTY—PROCEEDS OF SALE.

The proceeds of the sale of a wife's separate property continue to be her separate estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 89, 449-452; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§§ 49¼, 49½*)—SEPARATE PROPERTY.

The mere fact that the proceeds of a sale of property belonging to a wife's separate estate was placed in a bank to the account of the husband "or" the wife, naming them, would not be evidence to rebut the presumption that the husband gave to the wife the property, from the sale of which the money deposited was derived, or show that the wife intended to give the husband any part of her interest in the fund.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 251, 256-260, 249-255; Dec. Dig. §§ 49¼, 49½.*]

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 125*)—SEPARATE ESTATE—RENTS OF SEPARATE PROPERTY.

The rents, issues, and profits of a wife's separate estate are also her separate property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 453-458; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

6. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 131*)—SEPARATE PROPERTY.

In the absence of a contrary showing, it is assumed that the money borrowed upon the separate realty of one of the spouses will be treated as the separate property of the spouse owning such realty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 426, 471-483; Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

7. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 257*)—SEPARATE PROPERTY.

Where property was purchased in a wife's name for $8,500, and thereafter a lot in the rear of such property was purchased by the husband for $1,700, and both tracts were afterwards sold for $26,000, there was not such a commingling of the proceeds as to make it impossible to segregate the wife's separate property from the community.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 904-908, 910; Dec. Dig. § 257.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Mary Louise Carle against Louise Heller and others. From a judgment for defendants and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Constan Jensen, for appellant. Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher, for respondents.

SHAW, J. One Charles Heller died intestate, leaving surviving him a daughter, the plaintiff herein, and a widow and two sons, the defendants. The widow was appointed administratrix of his estate, and the same, as inventoried, was in due course settled and distributed in accordance with the orders of court. Thereafter plaintiff filed this complaint, alleging that her mother as such administratrix had neglected and failed to account for certain property owned by deceased at the time of his death. This property, all of which defendant Louise Heller claims as her separate estate, consisted of $12,000 cash in bank, household furniture of the alleged value of $1,000, and an undivided one-half interest in certain real estate designated as the "West Sixth street property," in all of which plaintiff claimed an interest as the daughter of the deceased. The court found that all of the property involved was the separate estate of defendant Louise Heller, and gave judgment accordingly. Plaintiff appeals from this judgment, and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

While the record discloses upwards of 50 specifications of error based upon insufficiency of evidence, the only one necessary to consider in deciding the question involved is the finding that the property described in the complaint did not belong to the estate of Charles Heller, deceased, but was the separate estate of defendant Louise Heller. If this finding is supported by the evidence, other specifications of error based upon like want of evidence, and which are not discussed by appellant, are rendered harmless.

The evidence tends to establish the following facts: Charles Heller and Louise Heller were married in France in the year 1870, emigrating therefrom to Ohio, from which state they removed to California in 1896, bringing with them $6,000, the proceeds of the sale of real estate purchased in the name of the wife, out of the joint earnings of husband and wife. At the time of their removal, certain Ohio real estate, standing in the name of Louise Heller was by her deeded to plaintiff, then married and living in Ohio. The $6,000 brought with them to California was deposited in bank to the credit of Louise Heller. A piece of property located on San Julian street in the city of Los Angeles, and consisting of a lot upon which there were two storerooms, over which were rooms used as a lodging house, was purchased for $8,500, the title thereto being placed in the name of defendant Louise Heller, who paid thereon the $6,000 which she had in bank, and she and her husband jointly gave their note and mortgage for the balance of the purchase price. This property, it appears, increased rapidly in value. Later, at the request of Charles Heller, the daughter, plaintiff herein, conveyed to him the Ohio property which her mother, Louise Heller, had deeded to her, and which property Charles Heller conveyed to his wife. Louise Heller sold this property for $1,200, which sum she gave to Charles Heller with which to purchase, in his own name, a small piece of property in the rear of the lodging house on San Julian street. The reason she assigns for this act was an expressed wish on the part of Charles Heller to own the property in order to qualify himself for jury service, election officer, etc. The purchase price of this property was $1,700, and the balance thereof over and above the $1,200 was secured by mortgage thereon. Mrs. Heller conducted the lodging house in the San Julian street property for seven or eight years; the proceeds and rents derived therefrom being applied in reduction of the mortgage of $2,500 originally given to secure a part of the purchase price. On October 24, 1904, the San Julian street property, title to which stood in the name of Louise Heller, together with the small lot in the rear, the title to which stood in the name of the husband, was sold for the sum of $26,000, $18,000 of which was cash, and the balance evidenced by note and mortgage executed to Charles and Louise Heller. This money, less $500 required to pay the mortgage on the husband's lot, and a small sum still unpaid against the wife's lot, was, on the date of the sale, deposited in bank to the credit of "Charles Heller or Louise Heller." Of this sum, $13,000 was used in the purchase of the West Sixth street property, title to which was taken in the joint name of Charles Heller and Louise Heller. As administratrix, Louise Heller recognized the estate of deceased as the owner of an undivided one-half interest in this property, and the other interest therein, standing in her name, is the real estate involved in this controversy, and which plaintiff insists is not the estate of the mother, but, together with the $12,000, being the balance of the proceeds of the sale of the San Julian street property and lot in the rear thereof, constituted a part of the estate of Charles Heller.

[1] Counsel for appellant devotes much of his argument in support of the proposition that the property accumulated by the Hellers in Ohio was, under the laws of that state, the separate property of the husband. In so far as the decision of this case is affected by the question, such fact may be conceded. Section 164, Civil Code, provides that, "whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property." This presumption is indulged in whether the purchase money be the separate funds of the husband, or funds belonging to the marital relation. Funds of either character are equally the subject of a gift from husband to wife. The property having been conveyed to the wife, the law regards it as her separate estate. No duty devolved upon Louise Heller to prove that it was the subject of a gift, for since, under the provisions of said section, it is presumed to be her property, "the law, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, presumes the existence of any fact showing the property to have been acquired by her in such manner as to constitute it separate property." Killian v. Killian, 10 Cal. App. 312, 101 Pac. 806. See, also, Alferitz v. Arrivillaga, 143 Cal. 646, 77 Pac. 657; Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 104 Pac. 308.

[2] As the purchase money paid for the property was the separate funds of Charles Heller, and a gift thereof being essential to the theory that it was the separate estate of Louise Heller, the law presumes a gift thereof from the husband to the wife. The burden of overcoming such presumption devolved upon plaintiff in attacking the mother's title, and in order to divest the latter's title plaintiff was required to produce competent evidence of sufficient weight to overcome the presumption that her father intended the property as a gift to his wife, Louise Heller, defendant herein.

[3] Little or no evidence was adduced at the trial, the tendency of which was to controvert the rights of Louise Heller in the San Julian street property; and if she owned the property, it necessarily follows, in the absence of some act transmuting the same, that the proceeds of the sale thereof continued as her separate estate.

[4] The mere fact of depositing the proceeds of a subsequent sale of the property in bank to the account of "Charles Heller or Louise Heller" in itself constituted no evidence tending to disprove the presumption that the husband gave to the wife the property from the sale of which such proceeds were derived. Neither does such fact, standing alone, show that the wife intended to give to the husband any part of her interest in such fund. Denigan v. Hibernia, etc., Society, 127 Cal. 137, 59 Pac. 389; Freese v. Hibernia, etc., Society, 139 Cal. 392, 73 Pac. 172. Concededly, the husband owned a part of the deposit derived from the sale of his own lot, and as to which sum he was entitled to have it paid out on his order. The record discloses no act of either husband or wife with reference to this deposit which tends to prove that the wife intended to give the husband her separate funds in the deposit; on the contrary, the conduct of both husband and wife in dealing with the fund so deposited was consistent with a purpose other than so to do. "It should not be held that she intended to part with her title thereto by reason of an ambiguous phrase which is quite consistent with a contrary purpose." See, Denigan v. Hibernia, etc., Society, 127 Cal. 141, 59 Pac. 389, and cases cited.

[5] Of the purchase price of the San Julian street property, $2,500 thereof was evidenced by a note and mortgage, in the execution of which Charles Heller joined with his wife. Upon this fact appellant insists that an interest equivalent to the amount of said note and mortgage was community property. This contention is based upon Loring v. Stuart, 79 Cal. 202, 21 Pac. 651, and Schuyler v. Broughton, 70 Cal. 285, 11 Pac. 719. In the latter case it was decided that real property purchased by a married woman in her own name, and paid for in part with her separate funds and in part with money borrowed by her for that purpose, is in part the separate property of the wife and in part community property. In the case at bar, it appears that the husband at the time of the execution of the mortgage owned, in his own name, no property whatever. The loan was therefore made upon the faith of the existing separate estate of the wife. Except a small part thereof paid from the proceeds of the sale, it was paid from the rents, issues, and profits of defendant's separate estate, which, like the estate itself, was her separate property. Diefendorff v. Hopkins, 95 Cal. 343, 28 Pac. 265, 30 Pac. 549; Walsh v. Walsh, 84 Cal. 101, 23 Pac. 1099.

[6] Under these circumstances, the case must be deemed controlled by the later authorities of Flournoy v. Flournoy, 86 Cal. 286, 24 Pac. 1012, 21 Am. St. Rep. 39, and Heney v. Pesoli, 109 Cal. 53, 41 Pac. 819, where it is said: "It is rational to conclude that money borrowed upon the separate real estate of one of the spouses will, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, be treated as the separate property of the party owning such real estate." Here there is no showing to the contrary. In support of his contention on this point, counsel for appellant cites at great length the opinion of the Court of Appeal rendered in the Estate of Pepper, 8 Cal. App. Dec. 720. It is but fair to counsel to assume that in thus quoting from this opinion he was unaware of the fact that the case, after the rendition of such decision, was transferred to the Supreme Court, which, in deciding the case, and upon the strength of section 163, Civil Code, held that the proceeds of a nursery conducted on land which was the separate property of the husband, and which the Court of Appeal held to be community property, was likewise his separate estate. Estate of Pepper, 158 Cal. 619, 112 Pac. 62, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092.

[7] It is next insisted that the depositing of the proceeds of the sale of the wife's separate estate with the proceeds of the sale of the lot standing in the name of the husband, conceded to have been funds of the marital relation, constituted such a commingling of the same as to render it impossible to trace and segregate the separate property from that of the community. We perceive no difficulty in this regard for the reason that, upon any theory adopted, it is apparent that a part of the proceeds of the sale of the wife's separate estate was, with the wife's consent, transmuted into community property. The price paid for the property owned by the wife was $8,500. It increased in value rapidly, and several years after it was purchased, a small lot in the rear thereof was bought by the husband for $1,700, making a total of $10,200 paid for the two pieces of property. Upon no reasonable hypothesis could the husband's share in the $26,000, for which the two pieces were sold, have exceeded the proportion which $1,700 bore to $10,200, or one-sixth of the whole, amounting to $4,333, from which, however, must be deducted the mortgage of $500, leaving a balance of $3,833. Add to this the additional sum of $548, which appellant claims Charles Heller had in this deposit, and we have $4,381 to apply on the West Sixth street property purchased for $13,000, paid out of the fund, the title to an undivided one-half interest in which, representing $6,500, was vested in Charles Heller. It thus appears that at his death the $12,000 deposit left standing in the name of Louise Heller, together with $6,500 paid for her half interest in the West Sixth street property, constituted a sum much less than the amount received from the sale of her property.

Appellant lays much stress upon the case of Bekins v. Dieterle, 5 Cal. App. 690, 91 Pac. 173, wherein a creditor of Bekins sought to enforce a judgment against property which it was alleged Bekins had conveyed to his wife in fraud of such creditor. While the facts of that case bear no analogy to the case at bar, this court in its opinion said: "The presumption of a separate estate created in Kate Bekins (the wife) by the conveyance from M. Bekins is overcome by the evidence, which clearly shows the property to have been purchased with community funds." The statement was wholly unnecessary to a decision of the case; the sole question involved being whether or not Bekins had made the conveyance in fraud of creditors. It was therefore purely dictum. Such statement is not the law when applied to the facts in the case at bar, and it has been repeatedly so held. Killian v. Killian, supra; Fanning v. Green, supra. With reference to the furniture of the alleged value of $1,000, which it is claimed was owned by Charles Heller at time of his death, no evidence was adduced thereon other than a statement of defendant Louise Heller to the effect that there were a few household pieces which she herself bought for the rooming house and took with her. What they were, the value thereof, or whether or not they had any value, is not made to appear.

We are unable to perceive any merit in the appeal, and the judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

(18 Cal. App. 535)

GRIESEMER v. HAMMOND et al. (Civ. 956.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 22, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 21, 1912.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 339*)—REMEDIES OF PURCHASER—RECOVERY OF PAYMENT.

Before a purchaser of land can sue to recover back the purchase money, he must, if there is no unremovable defect in the title, pay or tender the unpaid portion and demand a performance by the vendor, though the property is incumbered with an outstanding deed of trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 994-1002; Dec. Dig. § 339.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 140*)—TITLE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where a contract for the purchase of land did not require the vendor to furnish an abstract or certificate of title, his tender of title was not insufficient, because the purchaser did not know that the taxes on the property had not been paid; it being the purchaser's duty to learn the condition of the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 262-264; Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 134*)—TITLE—SUFFICIENCY.

The tender of title by the vendor was not insufficient, because the property was incumbered with a deed of trust, where a reconveyance by the trustees was also tendered, and it was immaterial that the purchase money was relied upon and intended to be used to liquidate the indebtedness secured by the deed of trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 238, 250-254, 258; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 143*)—TITLE—SUFFICIENCY—RECORDING FEE—WAIVER.

Failure of the vendor to tender to the purchaser the fee for recording an instrument releasing an indebtedness against the property did not render insufficient a tender which was otherwise sufficient, where the purchaser did not object on such ground at the time; this objection not only being waived, but it being presumed that the vendor would have tendered the fee on request.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 267-270, 311; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by Morris A. Griesemer against William Hammond and others. From an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

George E. Lawrence and Cary Howard (Henry G. Tardy and William C. Clark, on the briefs), for appellants. Edward Hohfeld, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, in an action to recover money paid as a deposit on a contract for the purchase of land.

On the 24th day of October, 1907, Hammond & Hammond, copartners, as agents of the defendant F. S. Kelly, entered into a contract with the plaintiff, whereby the latter was to purchase a certain parcel of land, situated in Alameda county, and pay therefor the sum of $13,500. At the time of the execution of the contract, the plaintiff paid said agents the sum of $1,350 on account of and as a deposit to secure the sale of said land. The terms of sale were as follows: "Cash $6,000, balance flat loan of $7,500 at seven per cent. net. * * * 60 days are to be allowed for legal search of title. If it is not found good, the deposit * * * is to be returned; if the title is found good and the sale is not consummated in accordance with the above terms, the deposit is to be forfeited." The time allowed to plaintiff for examining title was extended, by mutual consent, up to January 29, 1908.

The contract did not call for the furnishing of an abstract of title or certificate of search. The uncontradicted testimony, however, of Mr. Hammond, Jr., shows that he procured a certificate of title for the plaintiff, without authority from the vendor; and that he expected payment therefor to be made by the plaintiff.

At about the end of the 60 days prescribed in the contract, Mr. Hammond, Jr., delivered to the plaintiff a deed of trust and two promissory notes, aggregating $7,500 (representing the "flat loan" figuring in the purchase price), for execution by plaintiff, and at the same time presented plaintiff with the certificate of title, which showed a tax lien and the existence of a deed of trust on the property securing the repayment to the Citizens' Bank of Alameda of a loan of $5,000. Plaintiff took the abstract, deed, and notes, and submitted them to his attorney for examination. As a result of the report on the title by said attorney, the plaintiff, on January 27, 1908, wrote Messrs. Hammond & Hammond a letter, wherein, after referring to the terms of the contract, he said: "I have to report to you that the title has been examined and found defective and not good in this, that the legal title to the property is vested in S. E. Biddle, Jr., and Frank V. Bordwell, as security for the payment of $5,000, and the property is subject to the lien of taxes, state, county and municipal." In this letter to the agents, plaintiff also complained that the notes and the deed of trust did not correctly embrace the terms of their oral agreement as to the time of payment of the balance of the purchase price, and the letter concluded with a demand for the return of the deposit.

Two days after receiving this letter, January 29, 1908, and within the life of the contract as extended, Mr. Hammond, Jr., called upon the plaintiff, and tendered him (1) a deed to the property from the vendor, F. S. Kelly, and Josie Kelly, his wife, (2) a deed of reconveyance thereof from Messrs. Biddle and Bordwell, as trustees, to said F. S. Kelly and wife, (3) a note for $7,500, and (4) a deed of trust to said property to secure said note, demanding that plaintiff execute said note and deed of trust. At the time of this tender, Mr. Hammond, Jr., demanded payment of the balance of the purchase price, payable in cash, to wit, $4,650. The nature of these documents was explained to the plaintiff; and, while he made no specific objection of any kind to them, still he declined to examine or accept them, and told Mr. Hammond that he would present the whole matter to his attorney.

It was admitted at the trial that the taxes mentioned in the letter of January 27th were paid on January 20th, although the record fails to show that plaintiff was informed of this fact. It was also uncontradicted that the cost of recording the deed of reconveyance from Messrs. Biddle and Bordwell, trustees, was not tendered to plaintiff. The evidence in the case also shows that said deed of reconveyance was intrusted to Mr. Hammond, Jr., by Messrs. Biddle and Bordwell, trustees, to be delivered only upon the payment to him, for their account, of the $5,000 for which it was security.

The plaintiff made at no time a tender of the money to be paid by him, or in any other manner offered to comply with the terms of the agreement, or otherwise placed the vendor in default. He contradicted the testimony introduced by the defendants to the effect that he had stated that he could not spare from his business the money necessary to carry out the transaction, and that for this reason did not want to do so.

[1] The covenants in this contract are mutual and dependent; and before the plaintiff could rescind the contract and recover the amount of his deposit he must have paid or offered to pay the unpaid portion of the purchase price due thereunder. In such a contract, the rule is plain that the vendor must be given an opportunity to perform his part of the contract, before he can be put in default and an action maintained against him to recover back the purchase money. Maupin on Marketable Title, 200 and 792; Hooe v. O'Callaghan, 10 Cal. App. 567, 103 Pac. 175. And the general rule is that a vendee cannot recover purchase money paid on his contract to purchase until after he has made a tender of the purchase money due under the contract and demanded a deed. Hanson v. Fox, 155 Cal. 106, 99 Pac. 459, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 338, 132 Am. St. Rep. 72; Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123; Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 487, 27 Pac. 429; Townsend v. Tufts, 95 Cal. 257, 30 Pac. 528, 29 Am. St. Rep. 107; North Stockton, etc., Co. v. Fischer, 138 Cal. 100, 70 Pac. 1082, 71 Pac. 438; Leach v. Rowley, 138 Cal. 709, 72 Pac. 403; Englander v. Rogers, 41 Cal. 420; Poheim v. Meyers, 9 Cal. App. 31, 98 Pac. 65.

This rule was also announced in Peckham v. Stewart, 97 Cal. 147, 31 Pac. 928; the court saying: "The plaintiffs were not, under the contract set out in the complaint, entitled to a conveyance of the lots described in the agreement until they first paid, or offered to pay, defendant the balance of the purchase price agreed upon; and, unless the complaint alleges a full performance or offer to perform their part of the contract in this respect, they are not entitled to maintain this action."

The fact that there was a deed of trust outstanding did not excuse plaintiff from the necessity of making a tender of the purchase money, in order to recover his deposit. Ziehen v. Smith, 148 N. Y. 558, 42 N. E. 1080; Campbell v. Prague, 6 App. Div. 554, 39 N. Y. Supp. 558.

The case of Higgins v. Eagleton, 155 N. Y. 466, 50 N. E. 287, is decisive of the case at bar. There, under the contract, the payment of the unpaid consideration and the transfer of title were dependent and concurrent acts; and the court, after stating that the vendee, in order to put the vendor in default, must have tendered a performance on his part and demanded a performance by the vendor, said (referring to a mortgage on the premises): "The agreement was not broken by the fact that there was a mortgage upon the property. * * * The mere existence * * * of an incumbrance on the property, which it was within the power of the vendor to remove within the time fixed for performance, did not constitute a breach of the contract on his part." Referring to the case of Ziehen v. Smith, 148 N. Y. 558, 42 N. E. 1080, the court, continuing, said: "The decision of this court in Ziehen v. Smith seems to be decisive of this question." It was there held that the mere fact that at the time fixed for the concurrent and mutual performance of an executory contract for the conveyance of real estate there existed a lien or incumbrance upon the property, which it was within the power of the vendor to remove, did not relieve the vendee from making a tender and demand of performance as a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action to recover the money paid on the contract, or for damages as for its breach on the part of the vendor." See, also, Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123; Raben v. Risnikoff, 95 App. Div. 68, 88 N. Y. Supp. 470.

A deed of trust, given as security for the repayment of money, is, under the circumstances of this case, regarded as a mortgage. Weber v. McCleverty, 149 Cal. 316, 86 Pac. 706.

There was no unremovable defect in the title to the property involved in this controversy; nor had the vendor indicated in any manner that he would not comply with the terms of the contract. Therefore, under the authorities cited, if the plaintiff desired to consummate the contract, or to recover back his deposit, he should have made a tender of the balance of the purchase price and demanded a performance by the vendor.

The vendor, through one of his agents, tendered the plaintiff a perfect title to the property; and for this additional reason the plaintiff is not entitled to the return of his deposit. Plaintiff asserts that he was not tendered a merchantable title, because (1) the taxes for the current fiscal year had not been paid, and (2) the vendor did not tender him a deed to the property free from incumbrance.

[2] As to the taxes, it appears that they were paid a week prior to the time when plaintiff wrote his letter rejecting the title, and nine days before the tender by the vendor. The contract did not require the vendor to furnish an abstract, nor did he at any time subsequent to the making of the contract, directly or through his agents, obligate himself to furnish a certificate of title; and consequently it was the duty of the vendee himself to learn the condition of the record. Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 313, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123.

[3] As to the fact that the record showed the property to be incumbered with a deed of trust in favor of Biddle and Bordwell, we are of the opinion that this defect was remedied by the tender to the plaintiff by the vendor's agents of the reconveyance by said trustees. This reconveyance was properly drawn and acknowledged; and it was handed to the vendor's agents with the understanding that upon repayment of the amount of the loan they were to take the necessary steps to release the property from the incumbrance. The vendor had a right to rely on the purchase money to liquidate the indebtedness secured by the deed of trust. Webster v. Kings County Trust Co., 80 Hun, 420, 30 N. Y. Supp. 357; Ziehen v. Smith, supra. The $4,650 due at the time of the tender, and the $1,350 already in the hands of the vendor's agents, were more than sufficient for this purpose.

[4] Plaintiff also objects that, the amount of the recorder's fee for recording the reconveyance from Biddle and Bordwell, trustees, not having been offered to him, the tender of the vendor was insufficient. No such objection to the tender was made at the time the deed was presented. Obviously the vendee, for some reason not consonant with good faith, was trying to avoid performance of the contract. On the other hand, the vendor was doing promptly everything reasonable to complete the transaction; and, if this objection had been raised, no doubt the vendor would have gladly defrayed the expense in question. Dwork v. Weinberg, 120 App. Div. 508, 105 N. Y. Supp. 504. The mere possibility that he would have failed to do so would not authorize the plaintiff to cancel the contract, on the ground that the vendor had failed to perform. Teller v. Schulz, 123 App. Div. 883, 108 N. Y. Supp. 325; Maupin, Marketable Titles (2d Ed.) 707. Moreover, the plaintiff, not having raised this objection at the time, is deemed to have waived it.

One other objection made by plaintiff remains to be noticed. In his letter of January 27th, he objected to proceed with the contract for the reason that the deed of trust, to be given by him as security for the last payment of $7,500, empowered the trustees to realize on the security in a shorter time than was agreed upon in his conversation with the vendor's agent at the time of the making of the contract. This ground of objection appears to have been abandoned by the plaintiff, and we think properly so for a number of reasons, and particularly in view of the uncontradicted evidence in the case that on the occasion of the tender of the 29th of January the agent of the vendor informed the plaintiff "that if the note and deed of trust were not to his liking he could have them drawn any way he saw fit within reason." Under the circumstances of this case, with the taxes all paid, with the offer of the vendor to release the deed of trust, and to give the plaintiff all the time to pay the balance of the purchase price that he might reasonably desire, we do not hesitate to hold that the plaintiff is not in a position to insist upon a rescission of the contract and to recover his deposit.

We conclude that the finding of the court that the intent and purpose of the agreement of sale was that plaintiff should rely upon the abstract to determine the nature and state of the title to the property is not supported by the evidence in the case. Neither does the evidence sustain the finding that the vendor failed to make a tender of a good title, nor the view that the plaintiff was not required to make a tender of the balance of the purchase price under the contract.

The order denying defendant's motion for a new trial is reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.)

imprisoned in default of payment of a fine imposed by the police court, petitioned for release upon habeas corpus. In his petition he assigned as ground thereof that the ordinance under which his conviction was had is unconstitutional and void. Although time was allowed petitioner within which to file a brief and point out wherein the provisions of the ordinance are in conflict with the Constitution, no brief has been filed and no authorities cited in support of the petition. We conceive it not to be the duty of this court to seek for some cause which shall result in nullifying the ordinance on the ground proposed by petitioner.

[1] An inspection of the ordinance does not disclose any apparent infirmity of the kind suggested and with that conclusion we shall rest content, unless differently convinced in a case where the contentions here made are supported by argument or authority.

[2] Courts will not hold statutes or ordinances unconstitutional unless it is clearly shown that they are inconsistent with the fundamental law. Deyoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 476, 74 Pac. 28, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73.

The writ is discharged and the prisoner remanded to the custody of the chief of police of the city of Pasadena.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

18 Cal. App. 593

Ex parte ANDERSON. (Cr. 233.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 1, 1912.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 46*)—CONSTITUTIONAL OBJECTION — GROUNDS FOR DISCHARGE.

The court will not seek to discover a ground for holding an ordinance under which petitioner for habeas corpus was convicted unconstitutional, if it does not so appear on its face where petitioner filed no briefs and did not undertake to point out the unconstitutional feature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 43-45; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 48*)—CONSTITUTIONAL OBJECTION.

The courts will not hold ordinances unconstitutional, unless it clearly appears that they are inconsistent with the Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 46; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

In the matter of the application of John F. Anderson for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

J. G. Rossiter, for petitioner. William J. Carr, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Petitioner herein, after having been convicted of violating an ordinance of the city of Pasadena designed to regulate the standing of public carriages on the streets of said city, and after having been

18 Cal. App. 593

MATTERN v. ALDERSON et al.

(Civ. 1,078.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 29, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1010*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Findings supported by evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3979-3982, 4024; Dec. Dig. § 1010.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 113*)—ADMISSIBILITY—VALUE OF LAND.

In an action to rescind a contract to exchange lands based on defendant's fraudulent representations, it was proper to exclude testimony by plaintiff as to what she paid for her property, since that was incompetent to prove market value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 259-296; Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 142*)—ADMISSIBILITY—VALUE OF PROPERTY.

In an action to rescind a contract to exchange lands on account of defendant's fraudulent representations as to value, testimony as to the value of property other than that involved was properly excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 416-423; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

4. NEW TRIAL (§ 102*)—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—DILIGENCE.

A new trial, asked on the ground of newly discovered evidence, is properly refused where failure to produce the evidence at the former trial is not sufficiently excused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 207, 210-214; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by Harriet O. Mattern against G. Edwin Alderson and J. C. Anderson. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendant Anderson appeals. Affirmed.

J. Vincent Hannon and Hannon & McCormick, for appellant. Murphey & Poplin, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Action to enforce rescission of a contract for an exchange of real property predicated upon alleged fraudulent representations made by defendants. In February, 1907, plaintiff was the owner of a half section of land in the county of San Bernardino of the alleged value of $8,000. Alderson was a real estate agent, and offered to secure for plaintiff in exchange for her property certain lots of land at Vineland in Los Angeles county. The exchange of properties was finally consummated, the plaintiff receiving, in addition to the Vineland lots, 37 shares of the capital stock of a corporation called the Toledo, Columbus & Cincinnati Railway Company. In her complaint she alleged that Alderson and Anderson had conspired together to cheat and defraud her, and that they had represented that the Vineland lots were of the value of $6,125, less an incumbrance of $1,825, then a lien thereon, and that the shares of stock were reasonably worth the sum of $3,700. She alleged, further, that the stock was valueless, and that the real property received by her as a part of the consideration for the exchange was not worth in excess of $1,825; that being the amount of the incumbrance against it. In the complaint it was further set forth that the fact that the representations as to the value of the Vineland lots and the shares of stock were untrue was not discovered until the 1st day of March, 1908, and that on April 1, 1908, plaintiff served a written notice rescinding the contract of exchange. The trial court found the issues generally in favor of plaintiff, and a decree was entered accordingly. From the judgment and from an order denying a motion made by him for a new trial, defendant Anderson appeals.

[1] As to many of the facts found by the court, appellant contends that there was no sufficient evidence upon which to found such findings, but, without particular reference to each specification, the objections so made may be briefly disposed of. A careful examination of the testimony as set out in the record discloses that there was some evidence before the trial judge tending to prove all of the facts found against appellant, and, this being the state of the case, this court has not the privilege of questioning the correctness of those conclusions. Counsel's argument is largely by way of contending that the preponderance of the evidence was in favor of their client. It was the duty of the trial court to determine the questions of fact, and, the evidence being conflicting, its decision thereon is conclusive upon this court. A number of exceptions were taken to the rulings of the court made during the course of the trial.

[2] In our opinion the court did not err in sustaining an objection to a question asked the plaintiff as to what she paid for her property, as that question was incompetent as tending to prove the market value of the real estate. Appellant was not hindered in any proper effort made by him to prove the value of either the property of plaintiff, or the property given in exchange therefor, and all of the questions to which objections were sustained relative to advertisements in newspapers and public report tending to show an excited condition of the real estate market at the time of the exchange as affecting the Vineland property, had for their purpose the eliciting of evidence not competent to establish market values.

[3] Neither was it competent for the defendant to prove, as he offered to prove, the value of property other than that involved in the transaction of exchange. The witness Broadwell, who was not permitted, upon an objection by plaintiff, to give his opinion as to the value of plaintiff's property, did not, as the trial court held, show that he was familiar with the market value thereof. It was therefore proper to sustain that objection on the ground that no sufficient foundation had been laid to entitle the witness to give his opinion on the question of value.

[4] The alleged newly discovered evidence, which was offered in support of one of the grounds of the motion for a new trial, was that of a witness who had testified at the trial on behalf of appellant, and who, it was alleged, had discovered some further correspondence had with the husband of plaintiff. Conceding that this testimony would have been material, and that it might have changed the conclusions of the trial court upon the issues, sufficient excuse did not appear to show why this evidence could not have been produced at the trial. In denying the motion for a new trial on this ground the trial court did not err.

Respondent objected to the consideration of the statement prepared for use on the motion for a new trial on the ground that the trial court committed error in settling a bill of exceptions of the appellant as to the proceedings had upon the hearing of that motion, which bill of exceptions was settled after the time fixed by the statute for the settlement of the same. Appellant, however, in our opinion, did present to the trial judge sufficient excuse warranting the relief afforded him under the provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, in this regard. However, upon a careful examination of the record and a close scrutiny of all of the contentions urged by appellant in his brief, we are convinced that appellant is entitled to no relief on this appeal.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

18 Cal. App. 572

GREEN v. ROGERS, Justice of the Peace.
(Civ. 924.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. March 25, 1912.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 202*)—CERTIORARI—APPLICATION—PRESUMPTION.

On application for writ to review proceedings of a justice in an action, his authority to proceed on the trial of which, without notice to defendant therein, depended on whether defendant's demurrer was filed before or after his default, it will, in the absence of allegation, be presumed in favor of the authority, that such filing was after the default.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 778-789; Dec. Dig. § 202.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 194*)—CERTIORARI—LOSS OF APPEAL BY LACHES.

Writ to review proceedings of a justice in an action will not lie where the justice's judgment was known of in time for appeal, and the right of appeal was lost by laches.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 774, 775; Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

3. CERTIORARI (§ 69*)—JUDGMENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1074, limiting the determination on writ of review to the question whether the inferior tribunal regularly pursued its authority, the judgment should be to annul the proceedings, where such tribunal had not so pursued its authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. §§ 185-194; Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; John C. Gray, Judge.

Petition by A. D. Green for writ to review proceedings of George A. Rogers, Justice of the Peace in and for Gridley Township, County of Butte. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. R. King and Lon Bond, for appellant.
R. C. Long, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff petitioned the superior court of Butte county for a writ to review the proceedings of defendant in an action entitled A. E. Cole, Plaintiff, v. A. D. Green (petitioner here), Defendant. It appears from the complaint herein that on July 11, 1911, said action was commenced in said above-entitled court for the restitution of possession of certain leasehold property held by said Green. On July 13, 1911, summons was duly served and filed commanding defendant therein to answer within three days from date of service. On July 18, 1911, defendant, by his attorney, R. C. Long, filed a demurrer to the complaint. It is then averred that about July 27, 1911, the said justice promised said attorney that he would postpone all proceedings in the case "until said attorney should return from his vacation" (no time stated); that afterwards, to wit, on August 1, 1911, the said justice, at the request of the attorney for said Cole, plaintiff in said pending action, brought the case to trial without notice to defendant or his attorney as required by section 850, Code of Civil Procedure, and, after hearing evidence, the said justice rendered judgment, as prayed for in the complaint in said action, for restitution of the premises and for treble damages; that said demurrer was never ruled upon by said justice; that on August 8, 1911, without notice to defendant or his attorney therein, said justice issued execution, to the constable of said township, on said judgment, which was by said officer executed; that "said judgment was and is illegal and void, and the said justice exceeded his jurisdiction therein, and that the said defendant cannot appeal said action for the reason that the time for appeal has expired and plaintiff herein and petitioner has no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy except by writ of review."

It appears from the return, and is shown by a copy of the justice's docket, that on July 18th, the day on which demurrer was filed in the original action, and on the motion of plaintiff's attorney, the default of defendant was entered on the ground that he had "not answered within the time provided by said summons"; that on August 1st witnesses were sworn, and the case was submitted and judgment entered for plaintiff. Other entries in the docket are: "August 8th. Execution issued. August 16th. Execution returned as served and same filed. August 31st. Notice of appeal filed. September 2nd. Undertaking on appeal filed. September 7th. Papers on appeal sent Superior Court. November 1st. Writ of Review received from Superior Court. November 3rd. Papers on appeal sent back to this court." It appears that Green, defendant in the original action, filed notice of appeal on August 31, 1911, and an undertaking on appeal on September 2, 1911, but no copy thereof was served "on the adverse party," as required by section 974, Code of Civil Procedure, nor was notice of the filing of the undertaking "given to the respondent" as required by section 978a of the same Code. It is conceded that the attempted appeal was ineffectual for any purpose. The matter stood thus when on November 1, 1911, plaintiff in the present proceeding filed his petition in the superior court for a writ of review, and on November 20, 1911, the court entered its judgment "that the defendant George A. Rogers, Justice of the Peace, * * * restore the case of Cole v. Green to his calendar, notify the parties of the time and place of hearing the demurrer, and then proceed with the usual course in disposing of the case as though nothing had been done heretofore." From this judgment defendant appeals.

The writ of review may be granted when an inferior tribunal "has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal * * * and there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy and adequate remedy." Section 1068, Code Civ. Proc. "The review upon this writ cannot be extended further than to determine whether the inferior tribunal, * * * has regularly pursued the authority of such tribunal. * * *" Section 1074, Code Civ. Proc. In Elder v. Justice's Court, 136 Cal. 364, 68 Pac. 1022, it was held that, under section 850, Code of Civil Procedure, when the party served with process has appeared, he is entitled to notice of the time fixed by the justice for the trial of the cause, and that such notice is imperative and is as essential to the authority of the justice to proceed upon the trial of the case as is the summons and return of the service thereof to his entering judgment by default. "The giving of the notice is a duty which the statute imposes upon the justice before he has any authority to proceed with the trial." In that case Elder had not received notice of the trial and the time for appeal had expired, but the court said that there was no unnecessary delay in initiating the certiorari proceedings after "the respondent had knowledge of the judgment against him." In the case here defendant in the original action had knowledge of the judgment against him, as shown by his notice of appeal filed in the case. It was three months after judgment when he commenced the present proceeding.

[1] It is not alleged nor does it appear that the demurrer was filed before the default of defendant was entered. If filed after default was entered, it conferred no right without first having the default vacated which was not asked and was not entered. The subsequent filing of the demurrer did not prevent the court from setting the case for trial and trying it without notice to defendant, for, being in default, he was not entitled to notice, and, we think, it must be assumed that the demurrer was filed after the default was entered.

[2] It is alleged that the justice verbally promised counsel "to postpone and continue all the proceedings in said case until said attorney should return from his vacation." It does not appear that plaintiff's attorney in that action had any notice or knowledge of any such arrangement, and no order or record of the court was made of such indefinite continuance. The action was summary in its nature entitling plaintiff therein to a speedy trial. We do not think the alleged verbal statement of the justice can be regarded as an order of the justice's court continuing the case to an indefinite period.

However this may be and whether the demurrer preceded the default entered, the fact is that defendant knew that the case had been tried and the judgment of the court entered, and he had an adequate remedy by appeal. No reason is shown for his not having availed himself of this remedy and the remedy by writ of review is therefore not open to him.

In Elder v. Justice's Court, the time for appeal had expired without fault of respondent, an entirely different case from the one here. It was said in Valentine v. Police Court, 141 Cal. 615, 617, 75 Pac. 336: "The writ of certiorari issues only in cases where there is no remedy by appeal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1068; White v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 54, 42 Pac. 471. And this rule applies with equal force where the right of appeal has been lost by laches. Faut v. Mason, 47 Cal. 7; Bennett v. Wallace, 43 Cal. 25." Here the right of appeal was lost by laches, and not through some condition of circumstances such as appeared in Elder v. Justice's Court, supra. It was said in Grant v. Justice's Court, 1 Cal. App. 383, 388, 82 Pac. 263, 265: "No litigant should be permitted the use of the writ of review where he has the right of appeal. Nor should he be allowed the writ where he slumbers on his right of appeal until the time in which he might take such appeal has gone by."

[3] Appellant makes the point that the judgment exceeded the powers given by section 1074, Code of Civil Procedure, and was not such determination as is therein contemplated. This section plainly limits the court to the determination of the single question—whether the inferior tribunal has regularly pursued its authority. The judgment should be to annul the proceedings where the inferior tribunal has not regularly pursued its authority.

The learned trial judge doubtless thought that defendant in the original action had suffered a wrong from which he should in some way be relieved. But established rules of procedure cannot be disregarded to meet individual cases without setting at large the rules themselves, and destroying their vitality.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

CULVER v. NEWHART. (Civ. 916.)

18 Cal. App. 614
(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 2, 1912.)

1. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 23*)—CHOSES IN ACTION—ASSIGNABILITY.

A mutual, open, and current account is a chose in action which the owner under Civ. Code, §§ 953, 954, 1458, authorizing the transfer of a thing in action, may transfer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 40, 41; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

2. ACCOUNT, ACTION ON (§ 6*)—OPEN ACCOUNTS—ISSUES, PROOF AND VARIANCE.

A complaint in an action for the balance of an open, current, and mutual account, which makes the account a part of it, and which alleges that the owner assigned the same to plaintiff, and which avers that on a designated date defendant was indebted to the owner and that on that date he assigned the account to plaintiff, is sustained by proof that plaintiff assigned his business and accounts to his wife, that the accounts included the claim against defendant, and that the wife reassigned the account on the designated date, that after the assignment and before the reassignment an account was rendered to defendant who made a cash payment and delivered materials.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account, Action on, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-12; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 388*)—ISSUES, PROOF AND VARIANCE—"MATERIAL VARIANCE."

The variance between a complaint setting forth a cause of action on an open, current, and mutual account, and the proof of a stated account, was immaterial within Code Civ. Proc. § 469, providing that no variance between the pleading and the proof shall be deemed material unless it has actually misled the adverse party, where defendant was not misled as disclosed by his answer in denying the existence of the account made a part of the complaint, but merely tendering an issue on the question whether the account was mutual, open, and current between himself and plaintiff's assignor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1305-1308; Dec. Dig. § 388.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 4408.]

4. ACCOUNT, ACTION ON (§ 2*)—"MUTUAL ACCOUNTS."

A husband transferred his business and accounts due him to his wife, who executed to him a power of attorney to manage the business for her. At the time of the transfer, a debtor was indebted to the husband for goods sold at various times. After the transfer, an account therefor was rendered the debtor, who made a cash payment, and at various times delivered materials to the husband. Subsequently the wife reassigned the account to the husband. Held, that the account was an open account as distinguished from an account stated, since mutual accounts are made up of matters of set-off, and there must be a mutual credit founded on a subsisting debt on the other side, or an express or an implied agreement for a set-off of mutual debts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account, Action on, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 2; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4646, 4647.]

5. BAILMENT (§ 31*)—RENT OF PERSONALTY—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to justify a finding of liability of defendant in favor of plaintiff for the rent of a planer for a specified period at a monthly rental.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bailment, Cent. Dig. §§ 124-131; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

6. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 123*)—EXISTENCE OF RELATION—POWER OF ATTORNEY—EVIDENCE.

Where a grantee in a power of attorney testified that he had mislaid the instrument and that he had made a thorough search of all the places where he customarily kept important documents without finding the writing, and that the power gave him authority to transact all kinds of business in the name of the grantor, and his testimony was not contradicted, there was evidence of the execution of a power of attorney authorizing the grantee therein to transact any and all business for the grantor therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 420-429; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 206*)—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE—OBJECTIONS.

Where a defendant did not make any objection to a question on the ground that the same was leading, or on any other ground, he could not object thereto on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1273, 1283-1289; Dec. Dig. § 206.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—CONCLUSION OF WITNESS.

The testimony of a grantee in a power of attorney shown to have been lost that the power vested him with authority to transact all kinds of business in the name of the grantor is not objectionable as a conclusion of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2149-2185; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

9. EVIDENCE (§ 460*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—AMBIGUOUS CONTRACTS.

Where a bill of sale of the seller's business and accounts and indebtedness due him is ambiguous, parol evidence that the bill of sale included a specified account is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2115-2128; Dec. Dig. § 460.*]

10. BAILMENT (§ 31*)—EXISTENCE OF RELATION—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in a transaction between plaintiff and defendant and a third person, a planer in the possession of the third person as tenant of plaintiff was delivered to defendant, and plaintiff sought to recover rent from defendant for its use, the testimony of the third person as to the transaction involving the transfer of the possession and as to the rental paid by the third person was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bailment, Cent. Dig. §§ 124-131; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James F. Lodge, Judge.

Action by A. E. Culver against J. W. Newhart. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Taylor & Tebbe and C. J. Luttrell, for appellant. L. F. Coburn, for respondent.

HART, J. The complaint alleges that on the 1st day of September, 1910, the defendant was indebted to Mrs. A. E. Culver, wife of the plaintiff, in the sum of $687.90, "the same being a balance of an open, current, and mutual account," etc., which said account is annexed to and made a part of the complaint; that on said 1st day of September, 1910, Mrs. Culver "sold, assigned, and set over the said account to this plaintiff."

The answer denies that the defendant was at any time indebted to Mrs. Culver in any sum or amount, and also denies the alleged assignment of the account referred to in the complaint or of any account by Mrs. Culver to the plaintiff.

The court's findings of fact were in favor of the plaintiff, and the court rendered and caused to be entered a judgment in accordance with said findings for the sum of $492.13. The defendant has appealed to this court from said judgment and from the order denying his application for a new trial. The defendant challenges all the findings, and furthermore charges that a number of rulings as to the evidence were erroneous and damaging to his rights.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The first and perhaps the most important point urged is that the evidence does not support the finding that the transactions from which this action arises "constitute an open, current, and mutual account between the defendant and the said Mrs. A. E. Culver from August 10, 1909, to September 2, 1910, of which the said $432.13 was and is the balance." In other words, the claim is that there is "not only no evidence that Mrs. A. E. Culver ever had any account whatever against defendant, but also no evidence whatever of any account that defendant, Newhart, had against Mrs. Culver at any time"; that the account put in evidence, whatever its character, was one between the plaintiff and the defendant. Hence it is argued Mrs. Culver could not assign an account which she never owned. We understand it to be also claimed that the alleged account is not a "mutual, open, and current account" within the meaning of section 344 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that therefore, by reason thereof, a variance also arises between the pleaded account and the one proved. The points as thus stated result from the defendant's construction of the several transactions from which the account pleaded in the complaint arose.

1. It appears that the plaintiff had been engaged in business in the town of Duns-muir, Siskiyou county, under the name of "Nelson Lumber Company," and that on the 10th day of August, 1908, he transferred to his wife, Mrs. A. E. Culver, said business, together with all "the accounts and indebtedness" then due him, and among the accounts so transferred was the one which the evidence discloses constitutes the subject of this action. This transfer was evidenced by a written instrument or bill of sale, executed by the plaintiff, and, with the property and accounts so sold, delivered to Mrs. Culver and recorded in the office of the county recorder of Siskiyou county on the 11th day of August, 1908.

The plaintiff testified and the court found that on the 10th day of August, 1908, Mrs. Culver, by a written power of attorney, clothed him with full authority to manage said business for her, and that, in pursuance of the authority so conferred, he continued, after the sale of the business to her, to give his personal attention to said business and to manage it for his wife in the same manner as he had prior to the transfer of the same.

At the time of the transfer of the business and book accounts to Mrs. Culver, there was due the plaintiff from the defendant on the account referred to in the complaint the sum of \$1,650, made up of the following items: April 1, 1908, one donkey engine, \$1,200; May 1, 1908, 500 feet $\frac{7}{8}$ -inch cable, \$100; May 20, 1908, 1,000 feet of $\frac{7}{8}$ cable, \$200; May 20, 1908, 4,000 feet of $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch steel cable, \$150. A short time prior to the 1st day of January, 1909, the above account was rendered to the defendant, and on the said 1st day of January there was added thereto the interest which had accrued thereon amounting to the sum of \$87.50, and bringing the total indebtedness of the defendant to the plaintiff up to the sum of \$1,737.50. On said account the defendant made one cash payment of \$100, and at various times delivered to the plaintiff lumber and orders on certain individuals; the value of said lumber and orders being credited by plaintiff on said account, the amounts so credited aggregating the sum of \$1,314.27. The last item noted on the debit side of said account is dated May 20, 1908. There were two items on that date, the others being dated April 1, 1908, and May 1, 1908, respectively. The last item on the credit side of said account is dated November 2, 1909, said credit, as well as several more, having been given and noted on said account by the plaintiff as agent of Mrs. Culver.

[1] This action was commenced on the 2d day of September, 1910, or within two years from the date of the last item noted on the credit side of the account and more than two years after the date of the last item on the debit side. But no issue as to the statute of limitations is presented here; no plea of that character having been made by the defendant. The sole contention as to the point now under consideration seems to involve the claim that there is a fatal variance between the account pleaded and the one proved. This contention is, as before suggested, based upon the proposition that the defendant never had any dealings of any kind or character with Mrs. Culver—that is to say, that the account was one entirely between the plaintiff himself and the defendant, and that Mrs. Culver was a stranger to and in no sense connected with the transactions culminating in the account; that, to quote counsel's language, "to have constituted an open, current, running account between Mrs. Culver and defendant, there must have been some sale from Mrs. Culver to defendant; that there is no proof of any such occurrence."

We see no merit in the proposition as thus laid down. To sustain it would be to hold that a mutual, open, and current account cannot be made the subject of transfer or sale or assignment, for obviously, if the contention of appellant be sound, an action on such an account could not be supported by an assignee or purchaser of the same, since it is very plain that, in the very nature of things, he could not show as to the account as assigned that he had personally made "some sale" to the debtor, or that the items on the debit side of the account involved transactions between himself personally and the debtor. This is not the law, however. No one will dispute the proposition that a mutual, open, and current account, like an ordinary account, is property—that is, a chose in action—and that therefore the plaintiff, as the original owner of the account in question, had the undoubted right to sell and transfer the same to his wife or to any other person (sections 1458, 953, and 954, Civ. Code), subject, of course, to any equities which might have existed as to said account in favor of the debtor, and that she, having legally so far as it appears here acquired ownership of said account, could likewise sell and transfer it to whomsoever she pleased, or, as in this case, resell or assign it to her husband.

[2] The complaint contains no averment that Mrs. Culver personally had anything to do with any of the several transactions from which said account arose. It merely alleges that on the 1st day of September, 1910, the defendant was indebted to Mrs. A. E. Culver on a certain "open, current, and mutual account," and that on that day she sold and assigned said account to the plaintiff. The evidence discloses, as we have shown, that Mrs. Culver was the owner of the account on the day named, and that there was due her on said account a balance of several hundred dollars, and, assuming that the account was mutual, open, and current between the defendant and the party from whom she purchased it, there is absolutely no variance between the account pleaded and the one proved.

[3] But, even conceding that the account is shown by the evidence to be a stated account and not "mutual, open, and current" within the meaning of section 344 of the Code of Civil Procedure, still the variance arising by reason thereof would be immaterial. Section 469, Code Civ. Proc. That section provides that "no variance between the allegation in a pleading and the proof is to be deemed material unless it has actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits." It cannot be said that the defendant was misled to his prejudice in maintaining his defense upon the merits. His answer does not deny the existence of the account which is made a part of the complaint, but merely tenders an issue upon the question whether said account was "mutual, open, and current" between himself and plaintiff's assignor. Had he so elected, he could have denied the existence of any open and current account against him, since the account relied upon by plaintiff was set out in hæc verba as a part of the complaint, and fully and clearly notified him of each of the transactions or items constituting the basis or gist of plaintiff's action. And it is to be noted that the answer does not deny that the account pleaded is a "mutual, open, and current" account between the defendant and Mrs. Culver. This leads to the suggestion that, since the importance of alleging and if necessary proving that the account was "mutual, open, and current" lay in the proposition that thus plaintiff's action thereon would avoid the operation of the statute of limitations, and, since the defendant did not plead the statute and therefore waived his right to rely upon that defense, the question whether the account is a "mutual, open, and current" or merely a stated account is immaterial, and consequently the questions left for determination under the issues are narrowed down to the following: (1) Was Mrs. Culver the owner of the account when the purported assignment thereof to her husband (the plaintiff) was effected? (2) Did she assign the same to plaintiff? (3) Was there a balance due from defendant on said account? But, if we deemed it important and necessary in the decision of this case to determine the question as to the nature of the account involved here, we would not hesitate to hold it to be a "mutual, open, and current account" within the contemplation of section 344 of the Code of Civil Procedure, supra.

[4] We have seen that the credit side of the account consists of credits for one cash payment, several orders on others, and for lumber sold and delivered to the plaintiff as the original owner of the account by the defendant. The last five items on the credit side were for lumber sold and delivered at various times by the defendant to the owner of the account, and the value of this lumber was credited on the account as a set-off pro tanto. This constituted the account "open as contradistinguished from an account stated." Norton v. Larco, 30 Cal. 131, 89 Am. Dec. 70. In that case which has been approved in many subsequent cases in this state, a "mutual, open, and current account" is thus defined: "Mutual accounts are made up of matters of set-off. There must be a mutual credit founded on a subsisting debt on the other side, or an express or an implied agreement for a set-off of mutual debts. A natural equity arises when there are mutual credits between the parties, or where there is an existing debt on one side which constitutes a credit on the other, or where there is an express or implied understanding that mutual debts shall be a satisfaction or set-off pro tanto between the parties. Angell on Lim., c. 14, § 7."

In Penniman v. Rotch, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 216, the plaintiff proceeded in assumpsit for provisions sold and delivered. The defendant did not plead any set-off, but interposed the plea of the six years' statute of limitations as a bar to the action. In resistance to the defendant's plea, the plaintiff stood on two items, both bearing date in excess of six years before the action was instituted. One of these items was a credit for cash, naming the sum, and the other was for a calf, with its value specified. One of the issues presented was whether the evidence disclosed a mutual and open account between the parties within the purview of the statute, which was substantially in the language of our section 344, Code of Civil Procedure. The court, speaking by Chief Justice Shaw, "held that the calf was an article of merchandise delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff in the ordinary course of business, either at the agreed price or upon an implied promise of the plaintiff to allow its value in amount, and that the evidence established that there was an open and mutual account between the parties, and that no part of the plaintiff's demand was barred by the statute of limitations." Norton v. Larco, supra.

There is absolutely no ground upon which any distinction as to the facts between the foregoing cases and the one at bar can be suggested. Whether there was or was not an express agreement between the parties here that the value of the lumber, obviously an article of merchandise, was to be credited on the account as a set-off in a ratio equal to such value, the irresistible inference from the circumstances of the transactions between the parties is nevertheless that there was an implied understanding that such was the arrangement between them. Indeed no other conclusion could with any reason follow the circumstances by which the transactions leading to the existence of the account were carried on.

[5] 2. Among the items charged in the account against the defendant was one for the rent of a "planer" for one year at the monthly rental of $20, the total sum of said item being $240. Appellant insists that the evidence does not justify the finding in favor of the plaintiff as to said item.

It appears that a planing mill, located at Dunsmuir, had been leased by the plaintiff to one George Miller. The latter was indebted to both the plaintiff's assignor, as successor to the business of plaintiff, and the defendant, and on the 14th day of January, 1909, he proposed to both the plaintiff (acting for Mrs. Culver) and the defendant that, if the latter would assume his indebtedness to Culver and cancel his (Newhart's) claim against him (Miller), the latter would turn the planing mill and the business over to the defendant. This proposition was acceded to by all the parties. Miller's lease of the planer called for the payment of rent at the rate of $20 per month. There was no definite understanding between the plaintiff, as agent of Mrs. Culver, and the defendant as to the amount which the latter would pay as rent for the planer, but the plaintiff, assuming that the transaction between himself, Miller, and the defendant amounted only to a transfer of the lease, with all its rights and burdens, from Miller to the defendant, charged the latter on the account as rent for the planer the sum specified in the lease to Miller, viz., $20 per month. As a matter of fact, so testified the plaintiff at the time of the relinquishment of the lease by Miller, the real understanding was that the defendant would buy the planer, but, not having done so, he (the plaintiff) treated the transaction as involving merely a lease of the planer. In some particulars the testimony of the plaintiff with respect to this transaction was corroborated by Miller. The point made by counsel against the finding as to the planer is twofold: (1) That there is no evidence which shows that the defendant rented the planer from Mrs. Culver for one year at the monthly rental of $20; (2) that the evidence does not show that the defendant entered into a contract for the leasing of the planer at $20 per month with anybody or at all.

As to the first of the foregoing propositions, the reply is that, while it is true that Mrs. Culver did not in person conduct the negotiations by which the possession of the planer was transferred to Newhart, in legal contemplation she did do so, for the plaintiff, in the execution of that transaction, was acting for her as her agent, under the authority of the power of attorney referred to. This also constitutes a reply to a portion of the second proposition, but by the latter we understand it to be also the contention that there is no evidence disclosing that the sum of $20 per month was the sum agreed upon as compensation for the possession and use of the planer. It is true, as before stated, that there is no evidence disclosing that any particular or definite amount as rental was expressly agreed upon by the parties; but it was indisputably shown that Newhart took possession of the planer on the 15th day of January, 1909, and that he maintained such possession for at least one year. It was further shown by uncontradicted testimony that Miller had paid for the use and occupation of the planer the monthly rental of $20. From this testimony the court was justified in finding, in the absence of evidence revealing an express agreement as to rental, the reasonable value of the possession and use of said planer, and we know of no safer standard for the fixing of such value than the rental specified in the lease to which the defendant in practical effect succeeded when he took possession of the planer. The defendant offered no testimony to show that the sum of $20 per month as rental for the use of the planer was excessive or beyond its actual value for his purposes. Indeed, the defendant offered no testimony whatsoever with regard to the transaction involving the transfer of the possession of the planer to him. We think, as stated, that the finding as to the planer transaction is sufficiently supported.

[6] 3. It is further claimed that the evidence is insufficient to uphold the finding that on the 10th day of August, 1908, Mrs. A. E. Culver "made, executed, and delivered unto this plaintiff full power of attorney to transact any and all business for her," and that during all the time from the date of the execution of said power he acted as her agent and attorney in fact in all matters appertaining to the business acquired by her from him, including some of the transactions involved in this action.

The plaintiff testified that Mrs. Culver did by writing on the date mentioned make him her attorney in fact with full power to act as her attorney or agent to collect "the accounts and dispose of the property" that had been assigned to her; that he had mislaid or lost the instrument; and that he had made a thorough but futile search before the trial of all the places where he customarily kept important documents to find the writing. He testified that, while the power did not specify the transactions upon which this action is founded, it nevertheless gave him authority to "transact all kinds of business in her name." This testimony was in our judgment sufficient to justify the finding as to the power of attorney. The defendant did not attempt to contradict this testimony in any manner. Indeed, we may add that the defendant offered no testimony whatsoever upon any of the issues presented. He did not by evidence controvert the account or attempt to overcome the force of plaintiff's testimony relative to any of the transactions giving rise to the pleaded account.

[7, 8] 4. The ruling of the court allowing the plaintiff to state the contents of the power of attorney mentioned is assigned as prejudicial error. The specific objections to the inquiry concerning said instrument were that the questions to the witness were leading and suggestive, and that his answers thereto involved his conclusions. The exceptions to the testimony upon this point appear to possess no merit. The witness was permitted, without objection, to say that his wife had executed and delivered to him a power of attorney, that he had lost it, and that he searched for and could not find it. When the witness was requested to state the contents of the instrument, one of the attorneys for the defendant interrupted by inquiring whether the power had been recorded, to which question a negative answer was given. Thereafter, on redirect, over objection by the defendant, the plaintiff was allowed to say, as before noted, that he was by said instrument clothed with full authority to transact "all kinds of business in her name." As to the first question addressed to the witness with regard to the execution of the power of attorney, it may be conceded that it was leading and suggestive in form, but, there having been no objection to the question on that or any other ground, the defendant cannot of course claim any advantage here from the question so propounded and the answer thereto. As to the objection that the answers to the questions calling for the contents of the instrument involved mere conclusions of the witness, it is to be said that we cannot see how the instrument itself could have furnished superior evidence in that respect. It is commonly known that instruments conferring general authority on a person to act as the agent of another usually set forth the terms and scope of such authority in general language or in language which may in a sense be regarded as involving the statement of a conclusion as to the proposition to which it relates. The witness declared that the power vested him with authority "to transact all kinds of business in her name," and, as stated, it is highly probable that, since he was thus clothed with general authority in that regard, the instrument itself would have disclosed such authority to have been prescribed in language no less general than that in which the witness declared his authority to have been thus defined.

[9] 5. It is argued that the bill of sale from plaintiff to Mrs. Culver was erroneously admitted in evidence. We can perceive no possible objection to said instrument as evidence of the sale of the business of plaintiff and the account in controversy to Mrs. Culver. The bill of sale, as stated, is the written evidence of the sale by the plaintiff to Mrs. Culver of all his personal property, etc., and "accounts and indebtedness due said party of the first part." The plaintiff testified, and was thus entitled to show, if the bill of sale was ambiguous in that respect, that the account concerned here was included in the "accounts" he sold and delivered to Mrs. Culver.

[10] 6. The objection that the court erred in allowing the witness Miller to testify as to the transaction involving the transfer of the possession of the planer from him to the defendant, and as to the rental paid by the witness for the use of the planer for a year and a half, is untenable. Manifestly the plaintiff had the right to show that the defendant took possession of the planer and, as evidence of the rental value thereof, to prove what the witness had paid Mrs. Culver for the use of the same for the period during which he had possession of it.

We have now reviewed all the points submitted on this appeal by the appellant. As must be apparent from the foregoing views, our opinion is that the appeal is altogether without merit.

The judgment and order are accordingly affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT J.

18 Cal. App. 595

MANNIX v. WILSON et al. (Civ. 933.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 1, 1912.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 281*)—DELAY IN PERFORMANCE OF WORK—EVIDENCE.

In a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien, evidence held not to show delay in the performance of the work by the lien claimant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 565-572; Dec. Dig. § 281.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1001*)—FINDINGS—EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

The court on appeal in determining the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a finding must give full credit to the testimony of the successful party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3922, 3928-3934; Dec. Dig. § 1001.*]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 111*)—SUBCONTRACTORS—OBLIGATIONS OF OWNER.

Under the lien law reserving for the use of lien claimants a specified percentage of the contract price, enacted pursuant to Const. art. 20, § 15, guaranteeing to laborers and materialmen a lien, an owner must apply to the satisfaction of a subcontractor's lien the specified percentage, regardless of any demand existing in his favor against the contractor by reason of the latter's failure to complete the building within the time specified in the contract, and though by the contract time is made of the essence, and the contractor is required to make good to the owner loss sustained by delay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 144-146; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

4. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 125*)—SUBCONTRACTORS—OBLIGATIONS OF OWNER.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, requiring an owner on receiving notice of a lien to withhold from the contractor sufficient money due or to become due to the contractor to answer the claim, an owner receiving a notice must sequester sufficient money to meet the demand, and, where he settles with the contractor, he does so at his peril, and his asserted claim against the contractor for damages for delay in completing the building cannot impair the availability of the sequestered fund for the payment of the subcontractor's claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 172; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

5. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 279*)—SUBCONTRACTOR—OBLIGATIONS OF OWNER.

Where an owner settled with the contractor, the court in an action to enforce a subcontractor's lien must presume that the owner was allowed what he was entitled to because of the contractor's failure to complete the contract within the time specified, and the owner could not urge an abatement therefor from the claim of the subcontractor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 555, 556; Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

6. CONTRACTS (§ 305*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS—ACCEPTANCE OF BUILDING—EFFECT.

The acceptance of a building by an owner contracting for the construction thereof implies a waiver of any claim for damages for nonperformance in any particular in the absence of fraud or mistake.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1398, 1399, 1400, 1463, 1464, 1467-1475; Dec. Dig. § 305.*]

7. GUARANTY (§ 78*)—DEFENSES—BREACH BY PRINCIPAL.

Where an owner unconditionally guaranteed the obligation of the contractor to pay for the work of subcontractors, he acquired all defenses which the contractor could assert against the subcontractor, but he could not avoid liability on the guaranty on the ground that the contractor failed to comply with the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guaranty, Cent. Dig. §§ 91, 92; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; F. J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Thomas Mannix against A. W. Wilson and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Dorn, Dorn & Savage, for appellant. Roger Johnson, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The original complaint, as stated by respondent, set forth a cause of action for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien upon the property therein described for plastering the building thereon under a contract between respondent and the original contractor, one J. W. Mitchell, and also against the owner appellant Wilson personally on a "stop notice" served upon him pursuant to section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure. By a subsequent amendment another cause of action for the same debt is alleged against appellant on a written guaranty which appellant gave respondent for the payment by said Mitchell of the contract price of said plastering. No question is raised nor indeed could be as to the sufficiency of the complaint, and the only issue presented by the answer which can be considered here is found in the averment that "plaintiff hindered and delayed the said work and did not prosecute the same with reasonable or any diligence, but unreasonably and without any valid excuse therefor did so negligently and slothfully perform the same, and so neglected the performance of and hindered and delayed the same, that the same was not completed by him until 60 days subsequent to the time when the same should have been completed by him and when the same would have been completed by him had he not delayed the work as aforesaid and had he prosecuted the same with reasonable diligence," and that thereby appellant was damaged by loss of rents to the extent of $2,840. The finding of the court directly negatives these allegations in the answer and, outside of a single ruling upon offered evidence, to be hereafter noticed, it is apparent from the record that the only matter for adjudication here is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support said finding.

[1, 2] As to this there can be no serious controversy. Indeed it is strange that the question should be raised at all. It may be said that the testimony for appellant in this respect is so equivocal and uncertain as to hardly create even a conflict. The contract involved herein was executed September 2, 1908. It is apparent that the lathing and plastering could not be done until the building was made ready for it. It does not appear definitely when the building was ready for respondent's work. Appellant testified that he thought that a month before respondent started to work he notified the latter that the building was ready for him, but furthermore he testified: "He didn't start his work before away back in September. * * * I could safely say he delayed in starting work after I had notified him that it was ready for him for 30 days. It was at least two or three weeks. It was fully a month. * * * I notified him to commence work the beginning of July, I think it was. * * * He commenced to make his mortar two or three weeks afterwards. * * * He commenced plastering about August 13th. No; I don't think he commenced plastering until about September 1st. * * * I think he started in to plaster between the 1st and 15th of September; no, between the 15th of September and the 1st of October." His other witness, the architect, also testified: "I don't remember the date when Mannix commenced the work. I should judge some time during the month of September." Furthermore he said: "A plastering contractor mixes his mortar first, which takes some time. Then that mortar must lay for 10 or 12 days so it will become aged." As to this asserted delay of 30 days in beginning the work it is therefore apparent that the question was at least left in doubt by the testimony of appellant's witnesses.

Turning, however, for support of the challenged finding to the evidence, which under the established rule requires of us full credit, we may adopt the epitome furnished by respondent as follows: Mannix says that when Wilson notified him to commence work he went to the building and found it was not ready for plastering, but he commenced to mix his mortar on the street and was stopped by a policeman, which occasioned a delay of about two days. There was not room to mix it in the basement because it was full of rubbish and carpenter stuff, and they had men there getting it ready to plaster. When the architect called on him to commence plastering the building was not ready. Neither the front nor back stairway was up; the electric wires had not been inspected, and his work went over them; the carpenters' work on the first floor was improperly done, and Wilson made him do it over afterwards. "I proceeded just as soon as the work was ready and continued it as quick as it could be done." One Ziegler did the lathing and "I started him as soon as he could get to work and followed it up with the plastering." Furthermore plaintiff testified that he talked with appellant at different times and that the latter said, "Of course he had to pay the bill, he knew he had to pay the bill, he knew he had to pay it and he did not complain about the character of the work or about any delays, and he said that he was ready to pay as soon as the affair could be settled up." The testimony of plaintiff as to the progress of the work is also corroborated by two of the lathers who made clear the fact that any unwarranted delay in the plastering was not at all the fault of respondent. It seems idle to pursue the subject any further or to argue—what certainly will not be disputed—that respondent was not responsible for delays caused by those over whom he had no control, and with whom he sustained no contractual relations.

The only ruling which is assailed is exhibited in the transcript as follows: "The defendant thereupon offered in evidence the original plans and specifications and contract between A. W. Wilson and J. W. Mitchell. * * * Counsel for defendant Wilson stated that said contract was offered in evidence to show that Mitchell was required by it to complete the building within 100 working days after June 22, 1908, and, that in case of his failure so to do, that he should be liable to the owner for all loss and damage arising by reason of such delay, to which introduction of said evidence the plaintiff objected upon the ground that the same was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent, and was a contract between Mitchell and Wilson, and not binding upon Mannix except so far as it was made so by his agreement." The objection was sustained.

[3] The question may be considered from several viewpoints, and from each we shall discover that the said ruling was either justifiable or innocuous. One of these is set forth perspicuously by Mr. Justice Henshaw in the case of Hampton v. Christensen, 148 Cal. 729, 84 Pac. 200. Therein it is said: "It is a perfectly legal contract which makes time of completion of its essence and provides that the contractor, for a failure to perform in time, shall make good to the owner such loss as the latter may sustain thereby. More than this, it is a deduction or offset which but for the lien law the owner would have the unquestioned right to claim from the amount found due the contractor under the contract. * * * But the right of materialmen, artisans, and laborers of every class is to have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed their labor or furnished their material for the full value of the same, and this right is one solemnly guaranteed them by the Constitution of the state. Article 20, § 15. The Legislature is enjoined to pass laws for the speedy and efficient enforcement of these liens. * * * It will be noted that in framing these laws, primarily designed for the protection of materialmen and laborers, the Legislature has seen fit to reserve for the use of these lien claimants but one of the payments. * * * Whatever may be said of other payments, this amount of money [the 25 per cent. to be set aside for the lien claimants] cannot lawfully be depleted or reduced to the injury of any such claimant. If it could be, it would be setting at naught the constitutional provision granting a lien for the full value of the labor done or material furnished." The opinion proceeds to point out how the owner may protect himself against the derelictions of the contractor, and it is declared that "we hold that the excess of such demand cannot be carried over and made a charge against the 25 per cent. final payment, to the injury of any lien claimant thereon; for, as has been said, since this final payment is the only fund which the Legislature has sequestered to meet the demand of the lien claimants, to permit this would be to deprive them of their constitutional right to a lien."

The application of this principle to the situation here is simple. The pleadings admit a contract between Wilson and Mitchell for $45,500, of which 25 per cent. was required to be withheld to satisfy lien claimants, viz., $11,375. The building was completed and accepted and notice of acceptance filed about February 9, 1909. This $11,375 could not lawfully be paid for any other purpose than to satisfy lien claimants for at least 35 days thereafter, which would bring it to March 16, 1909. Plaintiff's lien was filed March 5, 1909, and the evidence shows that a settlement was made with all the other claimants. It is perfectly manifest, therefore, that the necessary portion of this $11,375 must be applied to the satisfaction of respondent's claim, regardless of whatever demand might exist in favor of appellant against the contractor by reason of the latter's failure to complete the building within the time provided.

[4] Again it is admitted that respondent on February 2, 1909, served a notice upon the owner pursuant to section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and also that subsequently in the completion and acceptance of the building there was due on the completed payment from Wilson to Mitchell the sum of about $7,000. Said section provides that: "Upon such notice being given, it shall be the duty of the person who contracted with the contractor to, and he shall, withhold from his contractor, or from any other person acting under such reputed owner, and to whom by said notice the said labor or materials, or both, have been furnished, or agreed to be furnished, sufficient money due, or that may become due to such contractor, or other person, to answer such claim and any lien that may be filed therefor for record under this chapter." Therefore the owner was required to sequester this amount and hold it to meet respondent's demand; but, notwithstanding this notice, the evidence shows that appellant settled with the contractor, Mitchell. It is too plain for argument that he did so at his peril and that, under the circumstances detailed, his asserted claim for damages against Mitchell cannot be permitted to impair or offset the availability of said sequestered fund for the payment of respondent's claim. Hampton v. Christensen, supra.

[5] But the settlement with Mitchell is a complete answer to appellant's contention. The latter's testimony is: "There were other subcontractors on the building. I settled with all the rest except Mannix. Some got 60 per cent. and some got more, I think. I also settled with Mitchell." His settlement with Mitchell, of course, included whatever claim he might have for a reduction of the contract price in consequence of said delay. We must presume that appellant was allowed whatever he was entitled to. Suitable allowance having been made by the contractor, manifestly the owner could not urge an abatement therefor from the just claim of respondent.

[6] Moreover, the acceptance of the building, in the absence of fraud or mistake, neither of which is urged, implies a waiver of any claim for damages on account of non-performance in any particular. Moore v. Kerr, 65 Cal. 519, 4 Pac. 542; Baltimore, etc., Ry. Co. v. Scholes, 14 Ind. App. 524, 43 N. E. 156, 56 Am. St. Rep. 307, and cases collected in note.

[7] Finally appellant was an unconditional guarantor of the obligation of Mitchell to pay respondent for his work. His liability is therefore coextensive with that of the principal obligation. It is no doubt true, as asserted by appellant, that "Wilson, in assuming Mitchell's liability to Mannix, acquired thereby all defenses and claims which Mitchell might assert against Mannix, and it cannot be said that Wilson has waived any defenses or that he is estopped from asserting them. 1 Brandt on Suretyship & Guaranty, §§ 255, 259; 20 Cyc. 1487." But Mitchell could not urge his own failure to comply with the contract as a defense against the claim of respondent, and the court has found, as we have seen, upon sufficient evidence that there was no fault upon the part of Mannix. It follows necessarily that appellant is liable for the debt regardless of the said ruling of the court.

In any view that we may take of the case we can see no merit in the appeal, and the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(18 Cal. App. 639)

Ex parte HEMSTREET. (Cr. 234.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
California. April 4, 1912.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 222*) — COMPLAINT—NEGATIVE EXCEPTIONS.

Pen. Code, § 397b, provides that every person who sells, gives, or delivers to any minor child, under 18 years of age, any intoxicating drink, in any quantity whatsoever, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, provided that the section shall not apply to the parents of such children, or to guardians of their wards. Held, that the exception did not in any wise purport to describe the offense specified, which was the sale of intoxicating drinks to minors under 18 years; and hence it was not necessary to negative the exception in a complaint for violation of such act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 240-248; Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 977*)—JUDGMENT—PRO-
NOUNCEMENT—TIME—EFFECT OF OMISSION.

Pen. Code, § 1449, provides that after verdict against defendant the court must appoint a time for rendering judgment, not more than two days nor less than six hours after verdict, unless defendant waives the postponement. Held, that a judgment pronounced more than two days after verdict is not void for that reason, but merely erroneous, and a ground for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2482, 2483, 2488, 2489, 2492, 2499, 2502; Dec. Dig. § 977.*]

Application by C. S. Hemstreet for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ denied, and petitioner remanded.

Wallace W. Wideman and Frank Herald, for petitioner. L. A. West, Dist. Atty., and A. E. Koepsel, Deputy Dist. Atty., for respondent.

SHAW, J. Petitioner was convicted upon a complaint filed in the justice's court, charging him with selling and giving to a minor, under the age of 18 years, an intoxicating drink, in violation of section 397b of the Penal Code. The verdict of the jury finding him guilty was rendered on November 23, 1910, and the time for rendering judgment was, in the absence of any waiver on the part of petitioner, postponed to November 26th, at which time, over his objection, judgment was rendered. Petitioner appealed to the superior court, which, on account of the failure of the justice to pronounce judgment within two days after the verdict, granted a new trial, upon which he was again convicted. He bases his right to be discharged from custody upon the grounds: First, that the complaint failed to state an offense; and, second, that jurisdiction of defendant and the subject-matter of the action was lost by reason of the justice failing to pronounce judgment within the time fixed therefor by section 1449, Penal Code.

[1] The alleged vice of the complaint is due to the fact that it did not negative the exception contained in section 397. This section provides: "Every person who sells, gives or delivers to any minor child, * * * under the age of eighteen years, any intoxicating drink in any quantity whatsoever, * * * shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; * * * provided, that this section shall not apply to the parents of such children, or to guardians of their wards." The offense described in the enactment is the sale, etc., of intoxicating drinks to minors under the age of 18 years. The language of the exception, providing that the offense specified shall not apply to parents or guardians of such minors, in no wise purports to describe the offense specified. "When an exception is stated in the statute, it is not necessary to negative such exception, unless it is a constituent part of the definition of the offense. * * * When the exception is not a part of the definition of the offense, and in this way does not therefore become a part of the enacting clause, it is a matter of defense." Territory v. Burns, 6 Mont. 72, 9 Pac. 432. The offense with which petitioner was charged was selling intoxicating drinks to a minor. The fact that parents or guardians were declared not within the operation of the statute was no part of the act defining the offense. An examination of the authorities convinces us the application of the rule requiring the complaint to negative exceptions found in a statute should not be extended to include cases where it does not clearly appear that the exception constitutes a part of the enactment defining the offense. The subject is extensively discussed in Ex parte Hornef, 154 Cal. 355, 97 Pac. 891, where a number of authorities are reviewed. See, also, People v. Grinnell, 9 Cal. App. 238, 93 Pac. 681.

[2] As to the second point, the rendition of judgment after the lapse of two days succeeding the verdict was not an act in excess of jurisdiction, but merely an error in procedure, which defendant was entitled to have reviewed on appeal and a new trial granted on account of such error. Section 1449, Penal Code, applicable to justices' courts, is almost identical with section 1191, applicable to like procedure in the superior court. By the amendment of section 1202 of the Penal Code, it was provided that, in case of a failure to pronounce judgment within the time required by section 1191, the trial court should, upon application therefor, grant defendant a new trial. If denied, the remedy is an appeal from the judgment, in the absence of which, however, the judgment remains in full force and effect as though rendered within the time prescribed. So far as affecting the jurisdiction of the court, this amendment is unimportant. Such was the ruling of the court in the case of Rankin v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 189, 106 Pac. 718. In our opinion, the court had jurisdiction of the defendant and subject-matter of litigation, and therefore jurisdiction to pronounce judgment, though it might do so erroneously by failing to follow the statutory provision. Defendant availed himself of his right to appeal to the superior court, which granted him a new trial de novo, wherein judgment was properly rendered, thus protecting him in every right to which he was entitled.

The writ is denied, and petitioner remanded to custody.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

ground must show that the cruelty was wrongful; but it is not necessary that the pleader adopt the exact language of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 292-307; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2630-2634.]

2. DIVORCE (§ 101*)—COMPLAINT—CRUELTY—WRONGFULNESS.

A cross-complaint for divorce for extreme cruelty specified acts of cruelty, in that on one occasion plaintiff told cross-complainant that they would go to a dance that night; that when she started to go plaintiff seized her violently by the arm and, in an angry voice, uttered an oath, and, pushing her back into the house, seized her by the throat and choked her until their little son struck him, when he desisted, and at the same time he accused her of wanting to go to the dance to meet another man. It was further alleged that plaintiff, while away from home, on two separate occasions, contracted a venereal disease, for which he was under the care of a physician for many months, and falsely accused cross-complainant of giving it to him and with going out with B., and that in June, 1910, he further charged cross-complainant with unfaithfulness, and in his complaint charged her with conspiracy with B. against plaintiff, to humiliate and injure her good name with the general public and with her friends and neighbors. Held, that such allegations sufficiently showed that the acts of cruelty alleged were "wrongful," without being so specifically alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 322-327; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

3. DIVORCE (§ 101*)—CRUELTY—CROSS-COMPLAINT—CONSTRUCTION—"SAID ACTS AND CONDUCT."

A paragraph of a cross-complaint for divorce for cruelty alleged that for five months last past plaintiff, by a uniform course of conduct, had been cruel to defendant, and had inflicted on her, through his harsh conduct, great mental cruelty. A later paragraph alleged that, by reason of "said acts and conduct" on the part of plaintiff, defendant had suffered, and did still suffer, great physical and mental suffering. Held, that the words "said acts and conduct" comprehended the whole picture of plaintiff's dereliction as alleged in the complaint; and that the first paragraph was not objectionable, because it charged that the conduct produced "great," instead of "grievous," mental suffering.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 322-327; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

4. DIVORCE (§ 108*)—TRIAL—FINDINGS OF FACT.

Under Civ. Code, § 130, providing that no divorce can be granted on the default of the adverse party, or on the uncorroborated statement, admission, or testimony of the parties, and Code Civ. Proc. § 632, providing that on the trial of a question of fact by the court its decision must be given in writing and filed with the clerk within 30 days from submission, a fact relied on as a ground for divorce must not only be proved, but must be found by the court, though it is not denied by the adverse party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 349-352; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

5. DIVORCE (§ 150*)—TRIAL—FINDINGS OF FACT.

Findings in a suit for divorce on defendant's cross-complaint that plaintiff had treated defendant with extreme cruelty, had often applied to her opprobrious epithets and made false accusations against her morality and virtue, and for more than five years, by a uniform

18 Cal. App. 602

NELSON v. NELSON. (Civ. 926.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 2, 1912.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 93*)—GROUNDS—"EXTREME CRUELTY"—WRONGFULNESS.

While, under Civ. Code, § 94, defining "extreme cruelty" as being the "wrongful" infliction of grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering on the other by one party to the marriage, a complaint for divorce on that course of conduct, had been cruel to her, and had inflicted on her, through his harsh and ungentlemanly conduct, great mental suffering and cruelty, but not finding the specific acts of cruelty, either as alleged in the cross-complaint or otherwise, to be true, and failing to find that any act of brutality inflicted on defendant "grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering," were insufficient to sustain a decree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 499-508; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thos. C. Denny, Judge.

Action by James I. Nelson against Anna May Nelson. From an interlocutory judgment awarding defendant a divorce on her cross-complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

S. K. Dougherty, for appellant. T. J. Butts, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an interlocutory judgment of divorce awarded defendant upon her cross-complaint. Appellant declares that "whether the cross-complaint herein states a cause of action, or whether the findings made upon it support the judgment for the defendant, are the two principal points made by appellant on this appeal." The alleged insufficiency of said cross-complaint is predicated of the failure to aver that the acts of cruelty set out wrongfully inflicted upon defendant grievous mental suffering, and the findings are assailed for a similar omission.

[1, 2] Of these in the order presented by appellant in his brief. Section 94 of the Civil Code defines "extreme cruelty" as being the "wrongful infliction of grievous bodily injury, or grievous mental suffering, upon the other by one party to the marriage." Appellant is therefore right in his contention that the element of wrongfulness must appear in the complaint. It would, of course, be unreasonable to hold that every infliction of grievous bodily injury or mental suffering should be a sufficient ground for divorce. Such injury or suffering might result from the inadvertent or justifiable conduct of the other party to the marital relation. The law does not, manifestly, contemplate such a contingency, but properly demands that the deprecated act be wrongful. We do not understand, however, that the pleader is required to adopt the exact language of the statute. It is sufficient if, by appropriate averments, the said qualification appears. Here, we think, the only rational inference from the allegations of the cross-complaint is that the "infliction" was "wrongful." The acts of extreme cruelty are specified; and they are described in such terms as to carry necessarily the implication of injustice or wrongfulness on the part of plaintiff. For instance, it is averred that, on one occasion, plaintiff said to defendant, "Get supper early, and we will go to the dance to-night;" that defendant went home and, after doing her housework, got ready to go to the dance, and when she started to go he seized her violently by the arm and, in an angry voice, uttered an oath, and said to her, "You're not going to take that baby out," and shoved her back into the house and seized her by the throat and choked her until their little son struck him, when he desisted; and, at the same time, he accused her of wanting to go to the dance to meet one Bishop. It is further alleged that plaintiff, while away from home, on two separate occasions, contracted a venereal disease, for which he was under the care of a physician for many months, and that he falsely accused defendant of having given him said disease; "that in the month of June, 1910, the plaintiff told the defendant that some one had placed a deer hide in his barn, and then and there said to defendant: 'Damn you, you know more about this deer business than you have told; I will shoot Bishop and you too.'" That the charges of adultery made in plaintiff's complaint are without foundation, and were made by said plaintiff for the purpose of injuring the good name of defendant with her neighbors and friends, and that in his complaint he "has falsely and wilfully charged this defendant with the crime of conspiracy, committed with one Martin Bishop, against the said plaintiff, which said accusation is false and untrue, and was made by the said plaintiff for the purpose of humiliating and injuring the good name and reputation of this defendant with the general public and with her friends and neighbors." It seems to us apparent that the addition of the qualifying word "wrongfully" is not required in order to stamp with that characteristic the foregoing acts as thus detailed in the cross-complaint. If used, it would have constituted a mere redundancy.

[3] The criticism of the pleading as to the other point, we think, is equally destitute of merit. In paragraph 9, it is alleged "that for five years last past the said plaintiff has, by a uniform course of conduct, been cruel to defendant, and has inflicted upon her, through his harsh and ungentlemanly conduct, great mental cruelty." The contention is that "great" is not equivalent to "grievous." We may pass this, however, as, in paragraph 12, we have the following allegation: "That, by reason of said acts and conduct on the part of said plaintiff, said defendant has suffered, and still does suffer, great and grievous physical and mental suffering." Appellant seeks to limit the application of this to a portion of the asserted acts of cruelty; but no such arbitrary construction is admissible. "Said acts and conduct" grammatically comprehends the complete picture of plaintiff's dereliction that appears in the cross-complaint.

Summarizing, then, on this branch of the case, we have, in the said pleading, a general allegation that plaintiff has treated defendant "with extreme cruelty," followed by a specification of acts that necessarily imply unlawfulness, cruelty, and brutality and culminating with the positive averment that, by reason of these acts, "defendant has suffered, and still does suffer, great and grievous physical and mental suffering." If this does not present a case of "the wrongful infliction of grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering," we have totally misconceived the language employed. The cases cited by appellant are in harmony with what we have said. For instance, in Smith v. Smith, 124 Cal. 651, 57 Pac. 573, it is held that "a complaint, which merely alleges that defendant has treated the plaintiff in a cruel and inhuman manner, that he has applied coarse epithets to her, which are described, and has accused her of a want of chastity, without alleging either grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering as the result of the cruelty alleged, does not state a cause of action." It is grounded upon the position that "grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering is the ultimate fact, and should be alleged." No such omission, as we have seen, is found here.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

If there was any defect in the cross-complaint, it constituted only what could be reached by special demurrer. No demurrer however, was interposed, nor was the cross-complaint answered by plaintiff; and this latter consideration is urged by respondent as a sufficient reply to appellant's contention as to the incompleteness of the findings.

[4] It is no doubt well settled, as a general rule, that facts averred in the complaint and not denied in the answer are not required to be found by the court. Fox v. Fox, 25 Cal. 587; Grossini v. Perazzo, 66 Cal. 545, 6 Pac. 450; Walker v. Brem, 67 Cal. 599, 8 Pac. 320; Johnson v. Vance, 86 Cal. 110, 24 Pac. 862. But the reason is that there is no fact in issue, and therefore no fact to be proved. Wherever a fact is to be established by evidence, however, the rule is different. This is indicated clearly enough by section 632 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It provides that "upon the trial of a question of fact by the court, its decision must be given in writing and filed with the clerk within thirty days after the cause is submitted for decision." Ordinarily there would be no "trial of a question of fact," where the fact is admitted by the failure to deny it; but, where the asserted fact is the ground upon which a party relies for divorce, it must be established as though denied, since "no divorce can be granted upon the default of the defendant, or upon the uncorroborated statement, admission or testimony of the parties," etc. Section 130, Civ. Code. This must be taken into account in connection with section 131 et seq., providing that "in actions for divorce, the court must file its decision and conclusions of law as in other cases," etc.

It is true that the Fox Case, supra, was an action for divorce, but the allegation therein, not denied, related to the fact of marriage; and it was held that no proof was required of this, since "the marriage is in no sense a ground for the divorce," and that proof was required by the statute only "of the facts alleged as the grounds for a divorce." The court, therefore, through Mr. Justice Rhodes, said: "The fact of the marriage is fully established by the defendant's failure to deny it in her answer; and that is equivalent to the most direct proof." It was accordingly determined that there was no necessity for a finding of the fact of marriage; the court saying: "That fact was not in issue between the parties, and therefore was not required to be found by the court."

In Bennett v. Bennett, 28 Cal. 600, a question of finding was not involved; but it was claimed that it was not necessary to prove the fact of residence, since it was not denied, and the Fox Case was cited as authority for the contention. The Supreme Court held, though, that there is a marked distinction between the fact of marriage and of residence, stating that "residence, though it does not enter into the statute causes of divorce, does enter into the 'grounds' of divorce, or constitutes rather the sole ground upon which a decree dissolving the marriage relation in any given instance can be regarded otherwise than as a piece of judicial usurpation. But, over and beyond this, residence is palpably within the mischiefs against which it was the object of the statute to guard; and therefore it must be proved."

[5] We conclude that, since it was incumbent upon defendant to prove the alleged facts upon which she relied for a divorce, they should be embraced within the decision of the court. As to this, the following is the only attempted finding of fact: "That for more than 10 years last past the said plaintiff has treated the defendant with extreme cruelty and in a cruel manner, and has often applied to her opprobrious epithets, and has made false accusations against the morality and virtue of said defendant; and the said plaintiff, for more than five years last past, has, by a uniform course of conduct, been cruel to defendant, and has inflicted upon her, through his harsh and ungentlemanly conduct towards her, great mental suffering and cruelty." It is to be observed that not a single specific fact alleged in the cross-complaint is found to be true. The finding is most general in its character, and might with equal propriety be based upon evidence of facts entirely different from those alleged. We may suspect and surmise that the court intended to find that the cruel conduct of plaintiff was "as alleged in the cross-complaint"; but it is not so declared. Again, the said finding is almost entirely a conclusion of law, and is objectionable in that respect. It is obviously not sufficient to find that "the plaintiff treated the defendant with extreme cruelty," as that is a legal conclusion for the court to reach from certain facts. But another vice is the failure to find that any act of brutality inflicted upon defendant "grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering." Waiving any distinction between grievous" and "great" mental suffering, we observe that "it was through his harsh and ungentelemanly conduct" that he inflicted upon her "great mental suffering and cruelty." There is no intimation as to what facts constituted this "harsh and ungentelemanly conduct"; and it is manifest that the expression is too vague and speculative for a suitable finding.

It is stated by the Supreme Court, in Franklin v. Franklin, 140 Cal. 609, 74 Pac. 155, that "we recognize that it is the province of the trial court to find the fact as to whether or not grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering results from the acts of the defendant in a case such as this, Barnes v. Barnes, 95 Cal. 171 [30 Pac. 298, 16 L. R. A. 660]; Fleming v. Fleming, 95 Cal. 430 [30 Pac. 566, 29 Am. St. Rep. 124]; Andrews v. Andrews, 120 Cal. 184 [52 Pac. 298]; Curl v. Curl, 130 Cal. 638 [63 Pac. 65]." In brief, to satisfy the requirement of the law, there should be found at least some of the acts of cruelty embraced within the evidence, and that these acts wrongfully inflicted upon defendant grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering, or both. It is apparent, as already seen, that the findings here fall far short of this requirement.

It may be added that there is a mistake in the decree in the description of the real property which is set apart to defendant. Of course, this will be corrected in the event of a new trial and a similar decree in behalf of defendant.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(18 Cal. App. 543)

PEOPLE v. HAYDON. (Cr. 167.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 25, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 24, 1912.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 254*) — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to sustain a conviction of second-degree murder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 533-538; Dec. Dig. § 254.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 747*) — TRIAL — PROVINCE OF JURY.

The jury may upon full consideration reject testimony contradictory to that of a given witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1714, 1727; Dec. Dig. § 747.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*) — APPEAL — REVIEW — FINDINGS.

In order that evidence be improbable or unbelievable, so that a judgment of conviction based thereon will not be sustained, it must involve an assertion that something was done which would not seem possible under the circumstances, or involve conduct which only a person of seriously caltured mentality would be likely to do.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3074-3083; Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*) — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR — ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Accused and decedent's father owned adjoining cattle ranges, and the state claimed that decedent was shot while attempting to drive accused's horses off of decedent's range. The state offered evidence by decedent's brother that his father had sent him to the place where the homicide occurred a few days before it happened with a message to his brothers as to cattle which had strayed from the range, written on a post card received from the owner of an adjoining range, giving information as to the whereabouts of the cattle, on which decedent's father wrote a message that, if they saw the writer of the post card, to be sure and thank him for telling him about the cattle. Held, that any impropriety in introducing evidence as to the post card on the ground that it was introduced in anticipation of an attack by accused on the decedent's family generally, and was intended to show the family's good standing among the neighbors, was not prejudicial to accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3088, 3137-3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

5. WITNESSES (§ 280*) — ARGUMENTATIVE QUESTIONS.

In a homicide case in which the defense claimed that the first shot fired by accused at decedent missed him and struck his brother, decedent's brother was asked on cross-examination, "And as you ran anywhere from this cross [a mark referred to on a map of the surroundings used in the trial] to the point directly north of the pine tree—in fact, all of the time your left side was directed to him [accused] wasn't it?" the question being asked to show that decedent's brother was shot accidentally as claimed, and not while running away from the place where decedent was shot. Held, that the question was not objectionable as being argumentative.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 993; Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170*) — APPEAL — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR.

The exclusion of the question could not have prejudiced accused where from witness' description of the position of himself and accused at the time of the killing, taken in connection with the map used in the trial, there could be no difficulty in determining whether witness had his left or right side to accused when the latter fired at him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3145-3153; Dec. Dig. § 1170.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 404*) — EVIDENCE — DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE.

The over and undershirts which decedent wore when he was shot, though spattered with blood, were admissible in evidence to show the point of entrance of the bullet into the body, that being material, and also to show accused's intention to inflict a mortal wound.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 873, 891-893; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 661*)—SCOPE OF EVIDENCE.

In proving guilt, the people need not anticipate the contentions or admissions which accused intended to make, or assume that matters showing guilt will not be disputed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 758, 1606; Dec. Dig. § 661.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

A member of the coroner's jury testified in a homicide case, without objection, that accused did not testify at the coroner's inquest, and was then asked whether accused appeared at the scene of the homicide where the inquest was held while it was being held, and answered, "No." Held that, while it was immaterial whether accused testified at the coroner's inquest, any error in admitting evidence as to whether he was present thereat, in answer to the last question, was rather favorable to the accused than unfavorable, since it tended to explain the prior statement that he had not testified at the inquest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3088, 3137-3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

10. WITNESSES (§ 282½*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Where a witness had examined the ground around the place of the killing for empty cartridge shells, and had been asked three or four times how far he had gone from decedent's body looking for shells, and answered once that he went no further than eight or ten feet therefrom, and another time that he went ten or fifteen feet, the question was properly excluded on cross-examination as to what distance from the body he had ceased to look for cartridges.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 928, 990-992; Dec. Dig. § 282½.*]

11. WITNESSES (§ 372*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—REBUTTAL.

A witness who had testified in a homicide case that the decedent's general reputation for peace and quiet in the community where his family resided was bad could be questioned on cross-examination to show that for years the residents of the community were divided into factions, arising from controversies on local matters, and among whom the feeling of hostility was bitter, so that the witness was properly allowed to answer that the people had been divided on a fight over the liquor question, and a good deal of gossip had resulted, though the state did not directly show that decedent's family were identified with any of the hostile factions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1192-1199; Dec. Dig. § 372.*]

12. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Any error in admitting evidence as to the people being divided on a fight over the liquor question was not prejudicial to the accused, being rather favorable to him if anything, because of the district attorney's failure to affect the witness' direct testimony as to decedent's bad reputation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3088, 3137-3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

13. WITNESSES (§ 344*)—EXAMINATION—CREDIBILITY.

A witness who had testified to a material conversation occurring a few weeks before the killing was properly asked whether he had not been under the influence of intoxicants during practically the whole time of the trial; his answer admitting that he had, showing that the question was not asked merely to prejudice the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1120, 1125; Dec. Dig. § 344.*]

14. WITNESSES (§ 269*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

A witness who had testified in his direct examination that decedent's reputation for peace and quiet in the community was good could not be asked on cross-examination whether witness ever heard of decedent being accused of robbing a safe; his direct testimony not referring to the traits of character involved in a crime, such as robbery, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 949-954; Dec. Dig. § 269.*]

15. HOMICIDE (§ 163*)—EVIDENCE—CHARACTER EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for homicide, evidence of decedent having been accused of robbing a safe was not admissible; only his reputation for peace and quiet being admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 310-317; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

16. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 376*)—EVIDENCE—CHARACTER EVIDENCE.

Character evidence should be confined to the trait of character which is in issue or which bears some analogy to the nature of the act charged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 836-839, 841, 843; Dec. Dig. § 376.*]

17. WITNESSES (§ 374*)—BIAS—REBUTTAL EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for killing decedent while he was driving accused's horses off of decedent's range as claimed by the state, a witness who had given material evidence for accused admitted upon direct examination that, after his marriage with decedent's sister, his relations with her family had been unfriendly, but stated on cross-examination that his feeling toward them was not very bitter, but he merely had no use for them. When he was asked whether he did not sell the ranch adjoining defendant's ranch to accused because he believed accused would kill decedent and his brothers, and stated that he did not do so, and was then asked if he did not have a conversation with E. in which he said that he had sold to the right man because accused would shoot decedent and his brothers the first time he caught them running his horses, and witness admitted a conversation with E., but had no recollection of making such a statement, although he admitted that he might have made it. Held, that the state could show by E. that witness did make the statement claimed by him in the conversation for the purpose of showing that witness was more hostile to decedent's family than he had admitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1201, 1202; Dec. Dig. § 374.*]

18. WITNESSES (§ 370*)—BIAS.

If a witness who admits an unfriendly feeling towards the opposite party undertakes to convey the impression that such feeling is not one of deep animosity, the real extent of his enmity may be shown by the other party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1189; Dec. Dig. § 370.*]

19. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 824*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUEST—PURPOSE OF EVIDENCE.

If accused desires that evidence admitted as impeaching testimony be limited to that purpose and not be considered as substantive evidence, he should request a charge expressly limiting its consideration for the purpose for which it was admitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1996-2004; Dec. Dig. § 824.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Trinity County; James W. Bartlett, Judge.

Thomas P. Haydon was convicted of murder in the second degree, and from the judgment and an order denying a motion for new trial he appeals. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied by Supreme Court, 123 Pac. 1114.

C. Wm. White and Bush & Hall, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

HART, J. There are, generally speaking, but two points upon which reliance is based for a reversal of the judgment and order, from which the defendant, convicted of murder of the second degree, prosecutes the appeal to this court, viz.: (1) That the evidence does not justify and support the verdict; (2) that the court committed a series of serious and prejudicial errors in the allowance and disallowance of answers to certain questions propounded to the witnesses.

The defendant was prosecuted for the crime of murder on an information, filed in the superior court in and for the county of Trinity, by the district attorney of said county; it being therein alleged that he unlawfully and with malice aforethought destroyed the life of one Morris H. Norgard.

The only witness to the homicide, other than the defendant himself, was a brother of the deceased, Cervera Norgard, a lad of a little less than 13 years of age at the time of the homicide. His, therefore, was the only direct testimony received on behalf of the people. The circumstances of the killing as detailed by him do not accord, as might naturally be expected, with the circumstances of the homicide as related by the defendant, and thus there arises a sharp conflict in the evidence bearing upon the circumstances under which the act of killing was committed. But counsel for the appellant, with full appreciation of the rule which admittedly has always heretofore been applied and which we think still applies where a verdict is challenged for insufficiency of evidence to sustain it and there exists a substantial conflict in such evidence, contend, nevertheless, that the testimony of young Norgard is, upon its face, so plainly improbable or unbelievable that this court, which, so it is asserted, must, of necessity, thus view the boy's version of the homicide and its attendant circumstances, is compelled to say that there is in fact no evidence worthy of belief which is in any measure contradictory to the defendant's story of self-defense, and that, therefore, the result reached by the jury is wholly without substantial support.

[1] 1. The homicide occurred on the 21st day of December, 1910, in a region of Trinity county known as Long Ridge. The deceased, at the time of his tragic death, was about 20 years of age, and was the son of Chris. Norgard, who, with his family, resided at Covelo, in Mendocino county. The latter was, however, the owner of a stock range adjoining that of the defendant in Trinity county. The defendant, about one month previously to the day on which the killing occurred, purchased from one John D. Wathen the latter's stock range. Shortly thereafter the defendant drove his band of horses to the Wathen range, and, with his family, took up his residence on said place. At about the same time the defendant, with one J. S. Rorobough, entered into an agreement whereby the first named was permitted to graze his stock on the latter's range, comprising a large area of land situated in the neighborhood of the Norgard range, and which said land he (defendant) was making preparations to buy under his said agreement with Rorobough. Upon the Norgard range was a cabin, situated about two miles from the Wathen place, and in which the Norgard boys lived when engaged in looking after and caring for their father's stock grazing upon the latter's range. It appears that a feeling of intense hostility had developed between the Norgards and John D. Wathen, who sold, as seen, his range to the defendant. Wathen had married the daughter of Chris. Norgard against the latter's wishes, and, while this fact was the ostensible genesis of the ill feeling between them, it was the theory of the defense that the real motive for the hostility of the Norgards against Wathen was to so annoy and pester the latter as to inspire in him a desire to leave that region of country and thus, hoped the Norgards, they would be able to secure the ownership of the Wathen range, which they had for a long time coveted, for a price much below its actual value. The Norgards, so the defendant contends, therefore, kept up a persistent persecution of the Wathens by various trespasses and other annoyances up to the time that the latter sold their range to the defendant. Actuated by a similar motive, so the theory of the defense proceeded, the Norgards, after the sale of the Wathen range to the defendant, transferred their ill will and persecution to the latter, and prosecuted a systematic and relentless harassment of the defendant (by running and stampeding his horses whenever they came across them) up to the day of the homicide. The evidence discloses that up to approximately a month prior to the death of the deceased the latter had been engaged in some employment in Shasta county. His father, however, having requested him to return home and assist in looking after his stock on the Trinity county range, the deceased returned to Covelo, taking with him a new automatic "five-shot" rifle. A few days thereafter the deceased went to his father's range, and with his brother, Elmer, there took charge of affairs and remained until the day of the homicide. Cervera Norgard, the day before the homicide, went to the range, taking with him for his brothers and from his father a message, calling attention to the whereabouts of certain cattle belonging to the Norgards which had strayed from their range; information as to the whereabouts of said cattle having been communicated to Chris. Norgard by a neighboring landowner through a postal card.

As to the circumstances immediately leading to and ending in the homicide, Cervera Norgard testified, in substance, as follows: That on the afternoon of the day of the homicide he and the deceased mounted their horses and started out over the range to look after their cattle. The deceased carried the automatic rifle referred to in a scabbard attached to his saddle. After traveling about the range for some time, and just before sundown, they came across the horses of the defendant, grazing on their range. They at once proceeded to drive the horses off the range in the direction of the Wathen place. They had not gone far when they were fired upon by Haydon, who had suddenly and unexpectedly made his appearance "across the gulch," at a distance of about 100 yards from the boys. Haydon fired twice at the boys at this time, but without effect. The witness declared that neither his brother nor himself paid any attention to this circumstance, neither accelerating their speed by reason of the shooting, nor making any preparation to defend themselves, but proceeded, indifferently and leisurely, with the driving of the horses toward the Wathen place. The only comment upon the shooting at this time was made by the deceased, who remarked to the witness, "They [meaning the bullets] came close."

The witness said that they drove the horses "up the hill" to a trail leading to the Wathen range. After traveling over said trail for a short distance, they came to a "flat," where they "let the horses go," and themselves started across the flat. They had proceeded only a very short distance when they again saw Haydon, this time standing behind a pine tree, with his gun in his hand. The deceased was riding ahead of the witness, and, as they approached the pine tree, Haydon stepped out and called either the witness or his brother "a black s—n of a b—h." Haydon used some other bad language which the witness could not recall. However, neither of the boys made any reply to the defendant, and started on in the direction of a pasture on their father's range, some 200 or 300 yards from the pine tree mentioned. Haydon, although holding his gun in his hands, made no effort to use it at the pine tree. While the boys proceeded toward the pasture referred to, Haydon walked out to the edge of the flat, still holding his gun and watching the young men. After looking over the pasture from the hillside to which they had gone from the flat, the boys turned their horses and retraced their steps toward the flat and in the direction of the point at which the defendant was standing. When they had reached a point about 50 yards from the point on the hill from which they had viewed the pasture, the deceased removed his rifle from its scabbard, and delivered it over to Cervera, saying: "Here is my gun, Cervera. I ain't afraid of Haydon, and don't want any trouble with him." When the boys reached the "flat," Haydon had returned to the pine tree behind which he stood when the boys first came into the "flat," and, as they were in the act of passing him, Haydon, addressing them, said: "Are you going to keep on driving my horses?" to which the deceased answered, "Yes; I will, if you are on our land," whereupon the defendant fired at the deceased. At this time the witness was about 20 feet behind the deceased. Immediately after the first shot was fired, the deceased turned toward his brother and exclaimed, "Run, Cervera, good-bye." A second shot was fired by Haydon, immediately following which the deceased fell from his horse. A third shot was fired by Haydon, and Cervera's horse then commenced to rear. Cervera noticed blood flowing from the neck of his horse after the third shot. The witness, after the third shot, quickly dismounted, and, with the rifle previously handed him by deceased, as noted, started to run toward the trail leading to the Norgard camp. The witness testified that the defendant fired two shots at the deceased and two or three at him. One shot took effect on the body of deceased, striking him in the breast and producing immediate death. The witness was shot twice in the right arm, fracturing it. One of these shots entered the forearm and the other in the upper arm. The horse upon which the witness was riding at the time of the shooting also bore two wounds in the neck, neither, however, being of a serious nature. Cervera declared that neither he nor the deceased shot at the defendant, nor did they attempt to do so. He testified that, before meeting Haydon, the deceased fired a shot from his rifle at a quail and also one at a woodpecker.

The defendant's story of the shooting is, briefly, as follows: That at about 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the day of the homicide he left the Wathen place on horseback, taking with him a 25-35 Winchester rifle. He went "over on the ridge, west of the creek," where he could look down Eel river. After having been on the ridge a short while, he saw "somebody get around and put the dogs after" his horses, and start them in the direction of the point at which he was standing. As the horses approached him, he saw that Cervera and the deceased were driving them. When the boys came near where the defendant stood, the latter, addressing them, said, "I want you fellows to quit running my horses," to which the deceased replied: "You go to h—l, you old s—n of a b—h, I will run your horses to h—l, you old s—n of a b—h." He then accused the boys of running the horses off the Rorobough land (under lease to defendant), and the deceased made a reply in language similar to that in which he first addressed the defendant. The boys then left Haydon and went "around the hill the way the horses went," and in about five minutes thereafter returned to the point where they left Haydon. The latter was still standing at said point, holding his rifle in his hands. The deceased, so the defendant proceeded, had his rifle in his hands, and, passing Haydon a short distance, suddenly wheeled his horse so as to face the latter, and, speaking to the defendant, said: "You old s—n of a b—h, you get out of here," and then fired a shot at the defendant. Haydon attempted to return the fire, but, there being no cartridge in his rifle, his weapon did no more, as under such circumstances it could, of course, do no more than to "snap." Immediately he placed a cartridge in the rifle and fired, both he and the deceased shooting at the same time. Again Haydon shot at the deceased, and the latter thereupon fell from his horse to the ground mortally wounded. Cervera, continued the defendant, then jumped to the ground from his horse, picked up his brother's rifle, and attempted to shoot. The defendant stepped behind a tree, and, as he did so, Cervera fired a shot. The defendant then yelled to Cervera, "You go on," and the lad thereupon left the scene of the trouble in the direction of his father's cabin. The defendant then left for the Wathen place.

We have now given a synoptical statement of the testimony of Cervera Norgard, upon which the state chiefly relied for the establishment of its case and upon which the jury in the main manifestly based their verdict, and also the story of the defendant as to the circumstances directly leading to and attending the shooting.

There was, it is true, other testimony introduced on both sides relating to the number of shots fired and heard by persons who at the time of the homicide were in the vicinity of the place where it occurred, and also involving certain declarations of the parties relevant to the issues before the court. This testimony, like that of Cervera Norgard and of the defendant as to the circumstances of the shooting, was conflicting.

But, as stated, the principal contention of the appellant with regard to the evidence is that the testimony of Cervera Norgard is inherently improbable, and that the jury, therefore, were unwarranted, in believing it or basing a verdict against the accused upon it. This contention grows out of a number of apparent inconsistencies developed by the cross-examination of the witness and of certain weaknesses which appear to inhere in the very story itself, as related by the boy. For illustration, much in favor of the defendant is sought to be made out of those portions of the boy's testimony in which he declared that without warning or saying a word, the defendant first shot at them; that they (the witness and the deceased) paid no attention to those shots, but proceeded up the hill slowly and leisurely without making any reference to the incident, save the single observation by the deceased that the bullets "came close"; that neither looked back to see whether Haydon was following them, and that they did not, after that incident, cease driving the defendant's horses; that they returned from the pasture to the flat, going in the direction of the spot at which Haydon stood, whereas the evidence shows that they could then have avoided him, "either by continuing along the natural way across the flat, which would have carried them some ninety feet to the north of the tree where the defendant stood, or by going further to the north across the hill, or by going south along a good trail under the flat." It is further pointed out as indicative of the inherent weakness and unreliability of Cervera's story that he testified that when the shooting commenced and the first shot was fired by Haydon, which evidently missed the deceased, the latter turned in his saddle to the left, and, looking toward the witness (who had testified that at that time he was to the right of deceased) said, "Run, Cervera, good-bye," and then, having no weapon, turned, and, again facing the defendant, received the shot that resulted in his death. "It is a tax upon one's credulity," say counsel, "to believe that, thus being assaulted, the deceased made no effort to defend himself, but, upon being fired upon, turned his back toward his assailant and bid his brother good-bye, and then turned calmly to receive his death wound." These and many other like apparent and perhaps real contrarieties in Cervera's testimony, as well as contradictions of certain portions of his testimony by other witnesses, are set out and elaborated upon in the argument of counsel to justify a declaration by this court that the verdict of the jury is barren of a sufficient foundation to uphold it.

But, while the alleged variances or inconsistencies apparent in Cervera's testimony and the contradictions referred to undoubtedly afforded opportunity for a persuasive argument to the jury against the reliability of Cervera's testimony, we see in them nothing from which a reviewing court could justly conclude that his entire testimony is per se unbelievable, and that it was therefore the jury's duty not only to wholly disregard it, but to accept the defendant's story of self-defense or at least find that the latter's guilt had not been disclosed by the evidence to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt.

It rarely happens that a case is presented on appeal in which some inconsistencies in the testimony of certain witnesses may not be discovered. These inconsistencies may be due to various causes. It is perhaps quite true that in some instances they are occasioned by the deliberate untruthfulness of witnesses, but more often they are due, we apprehend, to the forgetfulness of witnesses or perhaps to the fact that the occurrences to which they have testified have come about under circumstances that have put the witnesses in such a state of excitement as to cause them to view the incidents which they are required to describe as occurring in a somewhat different way from that in which they may have actually occurred. It is commonly known that there seldom arises a case upon the circumstances of which the witnesses precisely agree in all respects, and yet it by no means necessarily follows that in such cases some one or more of the witnesses have willfully given false testimony relative to the matter to which they have testified. Some one or more may be mistaken, or, as often happens, some might have observed circumstances that others did not. But, whatever may be the cause of such differences, it is true that they occur in nearly every case of disputed questions of fact. If, therefore, every case taken to the appellate courts were to be reversed because of discrepancies or contradictions in the testimony of witnesses without whose testimony a verdict of a jury or the findings of a court could not be sustained, there would, indeed, be few cases in which a reversal would not be compelled upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support such verdict or findings. Reviewing judges are, obviously, in no position to determine the credit which should be accorded to witnesses or to weigh their testimony.

As has often been repeated, it is for this reason that our Constitution provides that the appellate courts are not authorized to review evidence, except where, on its face, it may justly be held that it is insufficient to support the ultimate issue involved, in which case it is not a review of a question of fact, but purely one of law. In consonance with the spirit and intent of this constitutional provision, the Legislature has ordained that the jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of witnesses (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847), and are the judges of the effect and value of evidence addressed to them, except in those instances where it is declared by the law that it shall be conclusive proof of the fact to which it relates (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061).

[2] And, as a necessary corollary of the rules above noted, the jury in this case were authorized, if they conscientiously felt warranted in so doing, after full and fair consideration thereof, to reject any testimony which might have been contradictory to that of the witness Cervera Norgard, (People v. Phelan, 123 Cal. 557, 56 Pac. 424; People v. Wright, 4 Cal. App. 706, 89 Pac. 364; People v. Turpin, 10 Cal. App. 530, 102 Pac. 680; Clark v. Tulare L. D. Co., 14 Cal. App. 414, 432, 112 Pac. 564), and therefore to disbelieve the testimony of the defendant and accept that of Cervera as to the immediate circumstances of the shooting, however weak in places the latter's testimony may have been made to appear, or however sharply his testimony on other important points might have conflicted with the testimony of other witnesses.

But counsel for the defendant declare that the recent amendment to the Constitution (section 4½, art. 6) has enlarged the power of appellate tribunals with respect to the review of evidence, and asseverate that the effect of that amendment has been (to use their language) "to revolutionize proceedings on appeal," and that "it is now the duty of appellate courts to weigh the evidence where the appellant relies upon the insufficiency of such evidence to warrant a conviction." There is nothing in this record demanding from us, even if this court were disposed to undertake the task, an interpretation of the meaning, intent, purpose, and scope of the constitutional amendment to which counsel advert, and we shall, therefore, not attempt to do so; but, if there is one proposition in connection therewith of which we entertain no feeling of uncertainty, it is that said amendment was not intended to change, nor has it changed, the very sensible rule prescribed by the Constitution, and for so many years strictly adhered to in this state, that, in the exercise of their appellate jurisdiction, the appellate courts are restricted to the consideration of questions of law alone, and that, therefore, as before stated, the matter of evidence does not constitute a subject of review by those tribunals, except where there necessarily arises from the evidence or is presented thereby, from its very nature, a question of law.

Guided by the rules as we thus understand them, we have examined the record in this case, and therefore, as to the testimony of Cervera Norgard, we are justified in saying that we perceive nothing in his statements that he and the deceased paid no special attention to the alleged first shots fired by Haydon, and that after such shots were fired they proceeded leisurely up the hill, driving Haydon's horses, without looking back to observe the defendant's movements, so starting as to render that portion of his testimony "inherently improbable," so that it may be held by an appellate court that thus, upon his evidence, upon which the verdict was chiefly founded, a question of law is presented. It may readily be conceded that it would seem unreasonable that the witness and the deceased, having been shot at twice by the defendant, made no preparation to defend or to shelter themselves against further assault by their antagonist. In other words, it would no doubt be regarded as unusual conduct upon the part of any sensible person to do and act as the witness testified that he and the deceased did and acted under the circumstances mentioned. But, on the other hand, it is not in a sense uncommon to find persons so imperturbable to physical fear that they will unflinchingly and desperately and, very often, unnecessarily, pursue a course of conduct involving the greatest physical peril to themselves and which the average person would not be guilty of. Yet we cannot see how it could be held, from the mere statement itself disclosing such conduct, that such statement is not true or is improbable upon its face.

[3] A statement, to bear upon its face the brand of improbability, or which may be said to be unbelievable per se, must involve, we think, a claim that something has been done that it would not seem possible could be done under the circumstances described, or involve conduct that no one but a person of a seriously calentured mentality would be likely to do. Again, let it be conceded that Cervera told an untruth when he said that he and his brother paid no heed to the shots first fired by Haydon; that he lied when he said that, after those shots, they proceeded up the hill without looking back to see what the defendant was doing; that he falsified when he said that, just before the fatal shooting, the deceased delivered to him the automatic rifle carried by the former in a scabbard; that it was not true that Haydon shot twice or three times at him (the witness) while the latter was fleeing over the trail leading to the Norgard camp, or that he shot at him at all; that the testimony of the witness at the trial was at variance in certain particulars with statements previously made by him or with his testimony at the preliminary hearing—yet those untruths, if untruths they were, and discrepancies between his testimony at the trial and that previously given, cannot be justly said to stamp the story of the witness as to the immediate circumstances of the fatal shooting of Morris Norgard by Haydon as improbable or inherently unbelievable. The matters referred to were, as stated, for the jury to consider in their determination of the ultimate question submitted for their decision, viz., whether the life of the deceased was taken under such circumstances as to make the act one of murder or manslaughter or whether they disclosed no crime at all. Haydon admitted shooting and mortally wounding the deceased, and the main controversy was as to the circumstances under which he did that act—whether he wantonly or without excuse shot and killed him or did the act in defense of his own person. If, therefore, the jury, as manifestly they did, believed the testimony of the witness Cervera Norgard in the main, if, indeed, they believed only that portion of his testimony bearing upon the immediate circumstances of the killing, and thus became satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, it was, of course, within their province to plant their verdict upon that particular portion of his testimony, although they might have regarded the statements of the witness on other points as of doubtful verity. Under our view of the evidence the verdict is amply supported.

[4] 2. Cervera Norgard, having been asked by the district attorney why he went to Long Ridge a few days prior to the homicide, explained, in reply, that his father had sent him there with a message to be delivered to his brothers, relating to certain of his cattle that had strayed from his range—a circumstance to which we have already adverted. This message was in the form of a postal card which had been received by Chris. Norgard at Covelo from the owner of a range situated in the neighborhood of the Norgard range, informing Norgard of the whereabouts of said cattle, and on which Chris. Norgard, addressing his sons, had written these words: "If you see Holtorf [the writer of the postal card] be sure and thank him for telling us." The postal card, in connection with Cervera's testimony, was offered by the people, and, over objection by the defendant, admitted in evidence by the court. That portion of the postal card particularly objected to involved the request by Chris. Norgard that Holtorf be thanked for giving the information concerning the strayed cattle, and the argument directed against it is that the prosecution, having anticipated an attack by the defense against the character of the Norgard family generally, hoped to impress the jury that said family maintained a good standing with their neighbors from the fact that one of such neighbors had taken the pains to notify them of the whereabouts of their strayed cattle. We have not been able to discover any particular or substantial purpose that could be subserved by the introduction of the postal card in evidence, since there is nothing in the record to indicate that Cervera went to the range for any other purpose than that stated by him, and since it is an undisputed fact that he was on the range on the day of the shooting and witnessed the fatal affray. Yet it is very clear that the mere fact that it was thus made to appear that Chris. Norgard desired that his gratitude be expressed to a neighbor for voluntarily giving him information concerning his missing cattle would not necessarily establish, nor could it even have a very strong tendency to establish in the minds of the jury, a general good reputation for the Norgard family either for honesty and integrity or peace and quiet in the neighborhood in which the latter's range was situated. In our opinion the postal card, as evidence, was without any force in any direction, except in so far as it tended to corroborate Cervera Norgard as to the purpose for which he went from Covelo to Long Ridge a day or two prior to the shooting; and for that purpose, it was, under the record, as already suggested, altogether unnecessary. There is no reference to the defendant in the postal and no language therein intimating that he was in any way concerned in the subject-matter thereof, and from whatever angle the ruling admitting the card in evidence may be viewed, we can discover no possible harm that could have resulted to the defendant therefrom.

[5] 3. To the following question, propounded on cross-examination to Cervera Norgard by one of the attorneys for the defendant, the court sustained the objection that "it is purely argumentative": "As you ran anywhere from this cross [referring to a point marked on the map used at the trial] to the point directly north of the pine tree—in fact, all of the time your left side was directed to him (defendant), wasn't it?" The evidence disclosed, it will be remembered, that Cervera received two wounds in the right arm, his testimony being, as it will also be recalled, that, after mortally wounding Morris Norgard, the defendant shot at Cervera while the latter was running from the scene of the killing. The theory of the defense at the trial was, and it is so argued here, that the first shot fired by the defendant at the deceased, having missed the latter, struck Cervera, who was near the deceased at the time of the firing of said shot and in range of the bullet from defendant's rifle. The object of the cross-examination of Cervera in that particular was therefore to show that he did not tell the truth in his recital of the circumstances under which he received his wounds; that, as a matter of fact, instead of being shot while fleeing from the spot where his brother met his death, he was accidentally shot by the defendant as above related.

[6] We do not think the question was improper or is amenable to the objection upon which the court disallowed an answer thereto, yet we think that the ruling was without prejudice for the following reasons: A map of the immediate vicinity in which the homicide occurred and on which all the important physical objects thereabouts were delineated and on which the cardinal points of direction and the distances from one to the other of the several important physical objects were noted was received in evidence and used in illustrating the testimony. By this map the witness Cervera gave his testimony, pointing out thereon the respective positions of the defendant, the deceased, and himself at the times of the firing of the several shots. He thus illustrated the position of the defendant and the direction in which he himself claimed to have been going at the time, as he testified, the defendant fired at him. He testified that he did not know whether his left side was toward defendant at the time of the firing of the shots or not, but it is very clear that, from his description of the respective positions of himself and defendant at that time, by the use of the map referred to, there could be no difficulty in determining whether his left or his right side was toward the defendant at the time the latter fired at him. Even, therefore, after showing on the map where the defendant stood and where and in what direction he was running at the time he was shot at, he should have given an answer to the disallowed question contradictory to the description of their relative positions as the same were pointed out by him on the map, the jury would have readily discovered the discrepancy, and, under the circumstances, would not necessarily have ascribed it to any intention on the part of the witness to lie about it. If, in other words, the witness, relying upon his own unaided recollection, had said that his right side was toward the defendant, and then by pointing out their respective positions on the map showed that his left side must have been toward the defendant, the jury would doubtless, under such circumstances, have conceived the discrepancy to have been the result of a mistake and not a desire on the part of the witness to lie about the matter. But, as shown, the fact is that the witness said that he was not certain whether his left or his right side was toward the defendant. The ruling was absolutely harmless.

[7] 4. The court did not err by allowing to be received in evidence the over and undershirts worn by the deceased at the time he was shot. These articles were introduced in connection with the testimony of Cervera Norgard. Counsel for the defendant complain that, since there was no dispute as to the character of the wound inflicted upon the deceased by the defendant and from which death ensued, and there being, therefore, no necessity for placing those articles, "gory and gruesome" from matted blood, before the jury, the result of the ruling allowing them to be exhibited at the trial was only to greatly prejudice the jury against the defendants. But, whatever might have been the tendency of the gruesome exhibits, apart from the legitimate purpose for which they were offered and received, it is clear that the people in making their original case were entitled to thus corroborate the testimony of the witness Cervera with regard to the manner in which his brother came to his death. People v. Hower, 151 Cal. 645, 91 Pac. 507.

[8] The people, in the maintenance of the burden cast upon them of proving the guilt of one charged with crime, are not supposed to anticipate the contentions or concessions, if any which the defendant intends to make, or, in other words, to assume that certain matters or theories supporting the hypothesis of guilt will not be disputed by the defendant. By the garments received in evidence the point of entrance of the bullet into the body of the deceased could be approximately shown, and thus would Cervera not only be corroborated as to the shooting, but (the shot having taken effect in a vital part of the body) the intention of the defendant to inflict a mortal wound to some extent disclosed. At any rate, as declared, the people had the right to establish their original case by the introduction into the record of any relevant fact, circumstance, or physical object having a tendency to prove the death of the deceased by violent means, and that the act causing death was criminal.

[9] 5. The witness Travis, who was a member of the jury summoned by the coroner to inquire into the cause of the death of the deceased, was asked by the district attorney whether the defendant testified at the inquest, and whether there was anything said about taking his testimony. No objection was interposed to these questions, and the witness answered them in the negative. He was then asked whether Haydon appeared at the scene of the homicide, where the inquest was held, while the investigation was in progress. To this question an objection on general grounds was made and overruled. The answer was that the defendant was not present at the inquest. It is here argued that the ruling was erroneous and prejudicial. It was, in our opinion, immaterial whether Haydon did or did not testify at the coroner's inquest, so far as the fact itself was concerned, but, the witness having been permitted, without objection, to say that he did not testify at that investigation, it would seem to be the more reasonable view that, if having any effect upon the jury at all, the answer to the question complained of was favorable rather than unfavorable to the accused. To be more explicit, the statement that he did not testify at the inquest, if not satisfactorily explained, as manifestly it was by the answer to the question objected to, might have been construed by the jury in a light unfavorable to the defendant—as, for illustration, the jury might and probably would have concluded, had they not been made acquainted with the fact that the defendant was not present at the inquest, that his failure to voluntarily explain or offer to explain to the coroner's jury how the homicide happened was due to a consciousness of guilt.

[10] 6. The same witness having, shortly after the homicide, appeared at the scene of the shooting and with others examined the ground thereabouts in search of empty cartridge shells, was asked on cross-examination at what distance from the point where the body of the deceased lay he ceased looking for shells. To this question an objection by the people was sustained on the ground that the same question had been asked by counsel for the defendant and answered by the witness several times previously. The ruling was proper. The witness had before been asked some three or four times how far from the body he had gone looking for shells. Once he answered that he went no further than eight or ten feet from the body. At another time he said that he went "ten, twelve, or fifteen feet." It is evident from these answers that the witness could not have given the distance any more accurately than was thereby given, and the question to which objection was sustained could, therefore, have accomplished no more in that regard than was disclosed by said answers.

[11] 7. The witness Ornbaum, testifying on behalf of the defendant, declared that the general reputation of the deceased for peace and quiet in Round Valley, Mendocino county, where the Norgard family reside, was bad. On cross-examination the district attorney sought to show by the witness that for many years the residents of Round Valley were divided into factions growing out of differences of views on matters of local concern, and between which factions intensely bitter feelings of hostility had been developed and were sustained for a long period of time, the result of which was that members of the respective factions constantly carried on a sort of warfare of criminations and recriminations. It was not directly shown that the Norgard family was identified with either of these factions, but the object of this cross-examination was presumably to show that the Norgard family, including the deceased, did belong to one of said factions, and that the adverse criticisms or derogatory statements from which the witness formed his conclusion as to the general reputation of the deceased in Round Valley were merely those that were directed generally against the faction of which the Norgard family were members rather than from anything generally said derogatory of the character of the deceased for peace and quiet. The specific objection to this line of cross-inquiry was that it had not been shown that the testimony thus sought to be brought out had any application to the deceased or his family. The objection was disallowed. We suppose the real ground of the objection counsel intended to make was that the Norgard family, more particularly the deceased, had not been shown to have belonged to one of the factions referred to. We think the cross-examination was pertinent and proper. It will not be denied that the district attorney was authorized to secure from the witness the facts constituting the basis of his statement regarding the general reputation of the deceased so as to show, if thus he could, that the witness' testimony upon that question was founded upon remarks or statements of neighbors of the deceased having no particular reference to the latter or no more reference to him than they had to others belonging to the same faction to which he belonged. The answer of the witness was that the people of Round Valley had been divided on a "wet and dry fight" (the liquor question, we apprehend), and that there had been "a good deal of gossip around there lately" growing out of that question. It is to be conceded that the district attorney did not directly show that the deceased or his family were in any manner connected with either of the factions arraying themselves against each other on the "wet and dry fight," and consequently made a very slight showing toward the establishment of the point he thus attempted to develop; yet his failure to show what he thereby sought to prove argues nothing against the propriety of such cross-examination or any cross-examination having a legitimate tendency to disclose that there existed no real foundation for the direct testimony of the witness that the general reputation of the deceased in Round Valley for the traits referred to was bad. The objection, it seems to us, is rather to the evidentiary value or weight of the testimony thus sought to be elicited than to its competency.

[12] At any rate, the answer could have resulted in no harm to the defendant. If, as the defendant insists is true, the testimony thus brought out did not tend to show that the witness had grounded his testimony as to the general reputation of the deceased upon the aspersions cast generally upon a faction to which the deceased belonged by the members of an opposing faction, it had no tendency to show anything, either favorable to the prosecution or unfavorable to the defendant. Indeed, if having any force at all, one way or the other, the effect of the failure of the district attorney to break down the force of the witness' direct testimony relative to the reputation of the deceased would be favorable rather than unfavorable to the defendant.

8. What we have said with respect to the rulings on the cross-examination of the witness Ornbaum disposes of the exceptions to the rulings of the court permitting a similar cross-examination of the witness Lacy Gray, who testified on his examination in chief that the reputation of the deceased for peace and quiet in Round Valley was bad.

[13] 9. It is contended that the court erred to the prejudice of the defendant by allowing the district attorney to go into the question, on cross-examination of the witness Palmer (stepfather of John Wathen), whether the latter had been, during practically all the time in which the trial had been in progress, greatly under the influence of intoxicating liquors. The witness in behalf of the defendant had testified that a few weeks prior to the day on which the homicide occurred and about six months previously to the trial of this case he had a conversation with Chris. Norgard, in Covelo; that he (the witness) called on Norgard for the purpose of selling or offering to sell him the Wathen place; that Norgard said that he would not buy the place, and that, if any other person bought it, he would continue to run Long Ridge, as he had "come as near" doing "as any man that has been on Long Ridge"; that he would "send the boys, my fighting men down," etc. The purpose of the questions propounded to Palmer by the district attorney was to show that, from an inordinate use of alcoholic stimulants, the memory of the witness had become unreliable, and thus it was designed to disclose either that he might not have accurately recollected what Norgard actually said to him on the occasion mentioned or that, Norgard not having then made the implied threats to which the witness testified, the latter had committed to memory, for the purpose of the trial, a fabricated story of the former's part in the conversation. There are two answers to the exceptions registered here to this line of cross-examination. In the first place, it is only the statement of an elementary proposition when it is said that a party may with perfect propriety propound any proper questions to an adverse witness for the purpose of testing his memory as to the facts or circumstances to which he testifies. Indeed, whether a witness is of good or bad memory constitutes one of the common tests by which the jury are enabled to determine the amount of weight which they should give his testimony. Therefore any legitimate line of inquiry, prosecuted in good faith, or for which there exists a reason, bearing upon the question of the witness' memory or want of memory, is eminently proper. The examination of Palmer on this line by the district attorney developed that there existed legitimate ground for the inquiry. To the first question asked him as to his conduct with regard to his condition for sobriety (or inebriety), he replied that he had been drunk "pretty near all of the time, I guess." This answer, it is true, was stricken out on motion of the defendant to give him an opportunity "to put in an objection" to that course of cross-examination of the witness. But the answer, nevertheless, disclosed that the question was asked not merely to prejudice the witness, but because there was a substantial reason for asking it. Later, however, the district attorney put to the witness this question: "You say you have been drunk about ever since you have been here?" to which the witness replied: "All the time I wanted to."

There was no objection to this question, nor was there a motion made to strike out the answer, and this suggests the second reason why the exception urged here on this line of inquiry can avail the defendant nothing. The assignment of error to which counsel excepts in his brief refers to the first question and answer relative to the condition of the witness, but, as the court struck that answer from the record, as we have shown, on the motion of the defendant, and as there appeared a reason for that line of cross-examination—that is, that there was justification for that line of inquiry and that it was not conducted for the purpose merely of degrading the witness in the estimation of the jury—there is, therefore, nothing of which the objection can be predicated or on which it can properly be pressed on this appeal.

[14, 15] 10. The witness Reid, having testified that the general reputation of the deceased for peace and quiet in the Mad river section of Trinity county was good in the years 1903, 1904, and 1905, was asked the following question on cross-examination by counsel for the defendant: "Did you hear of his being accused of robbing the Mason & Thayer safe at Douglas City?" To this question an objection by the district attorney was sustained. It is now argued with apparent earnestness that the ruling was erroneous and prejudicial. But we cannot take that view of said ruling. In the first place, the witness was asked nothing concerning the general reputation of the deceased for those traits of character essentially involved in the crime of robbery, of larceny or of burglary. In the second place, in view of the nature of the charge upon which the defendant was on trial, it would have been manifestly improper to have prosecuted an inquiry on the direct examination of the witness for the purpose of developing the general reputation of the deceased for honesty and integrity. The question was, therefore, neither proper cross-examination, nor in any sense relevant. It does not follow, as the question necessarily assumes, that, because a person may be wanting in honesty and integrity, he cannot at the same time be of a quiet and peaceable disposition in the sense in which the last-mentioned traits become important on an issue as to which of two combatants in a physical encounter was the aggressor or culpable party. Testimony relative to the reputation for peace and quiet borne by the actors in an affray leading to the prosecution of one or both for a criminal offense necessarily involving those traits is generally introduced only where the case is a close one upon the question whether the accused was or was not justified in committing the act, and the issue thus submitted is not, obviously, whether the party is honest and of integrity, but whether he is or is not of a quarrelsome and pugnacious character and readily or not readily open at all times and at any moment to a physical combat without just or any reason.

The utter untenableness of the contention of appellant may be illustrated by the absurd result to which it would logically lead, for, if testimony of the good reputation of a person for peace and quiet may properly be rebutted by testimony of his bad reputation for honesty and integrity, then, by parity of reasoning, his bad reputation for peace and quiet may properly be overcome by evidence that he bears the general reputation of being a person of honesty and integrity.

[16] But the true rule as to character evidence is that such testimony ought always to be confined to the trait of character which is in issue, or ought to bear some analogy and reference to the nature of the charge. 3 Greenl. on Ev. (12th Ed.) § 25; Phil. on Ev. p. 490; State v. Beal, 68 Ind. 345, 34 Am. Rep. 263; State v. Marks, 16 Utah, 204, 51 Pac. 1090. The question asked the witness here and disallowed by the court called for testimony, as we have shown, bearing no analogy to the charge or any of the elements thereof against the accused, and, since the party whose character was under attack was not a witness and therefore his credibility as such not put in issue, the testimony thus sought to be brought out was not relevant for any purpose. State v. Marks, supra.

[17] 11. We now come to the last point involving rulings on the evidence upon which we feel impelled to bestow special attention. The proposition thus presented is the most important of the many submitted on this appeal, and its solution will require a careful review of the circumstances giving rise to it. It will be recollected that John D. Wathen intermarried with the daughter of Chris. Norgard, and that on account of said marriage a feeling of hostility was generated between the Norgards and Wathen. The latter, while used for certain purposes as a witness for the people, was also called to testify in behalf of the defendant. Testifying for the latter, he said that he saw the deceased and his brother, Elmer, a few days before the homicide; that they passed his house at a distance of about 25 feet therefrom, and that neither addressed him; that each carried a rifle encased in a scabbard, which was strapped or attached to the stirrups of his saddle; that on the afternoon of the day of the homicide, and a short time prior to the shooting, he and his half-brother, Palmer, rode over to Bald Mountain, and that at that time they saw the defendant's horses (those driven to the flat by the deceased and his brother, Cervera) grazing on the Rorobough land, which, as shown, was under lease by Haydon; that, when he last saw the horses (about an hour and a quarter before the shooting), they were going further in on the Rorobough land. He further testified that in going in a direct line, from the Norgard pasture, to which the deceased and his brother went after driving defendant's horses to the point already referred to on "the flat," to the Norgard camp it was not necessary to go nearer than about 75 feet to the spot where the deceased's dead body lay or where the shooting occurred. In other words, he said that the natural direction from the pasture to the Norgard cabin was 75 feet distant and north of the precise spot where the shooting took place, and that there was no natural trail passing right by the body. Manifestly the purpose of all the foregoing testimony was to show that the deceased himself was seeking trouble with the defendant and that he drove Haydon's horses off the Rorobough range, on which they were entitled to graze, and unnecessarily put himself in the way of the defendant for no other reason than to precipitate a physical conflict of some character with the latter.

Wathen admitted, on his direct examination, that, although on friendly terms with the Norgard family prior to his intermarriage with Norgard's daughter, after that event his relations with his wife's family had always been unfriendly; but, on cross-examination, the district attorney asked him whether his feeling toward the Norgards was not very bitter, to which question he replied in the negative, saying, however, that he merely had "no use" for the Norgards. To show the intensity of his hostility toward the Norgards, the district attorney questioned the witness as follows: "Q. Did you send for Tom Haydon to come in there and take your property off your hands? A. No, sir; I didn't. * * * Q. Didn't you induce Mr. Haydon to come in there, and induced him to take the land off your hands because you believed he would kill the Norgard boys? A. No, sir; I did not. Q. You wanted some man to take hold of that land that you believed would kill them, didn't you? A. No. Q. That thought never entered your mind? A. No." The witness was then asked if he recalled having a conversation with one Dan English, near the post office, in Covelo, in the latter part of November, 1910, and prior to the homicide, and in the course of which he declared that he "had sold out to the right man, all right," and that "Haydon would no stand for what you (the witness) had stood for, and the first time that Haydon caught these Norgard boys running these horses he would shoot them off their horses"? The witness admitted having a conversation with English at the time and place mentioned, but said that he had no recollection of making the statement concerning Haydon and the Norgard boys embraced within the question, although he admitted that he might have made it. No objection was made by the defense to any of the foregoing questions so propounded to Wathen. In rebuttal the people called said English to the stand, and, over the objection of the defense, were permitted to ask him the following question, to which he made an affirmative answer: "I will ask you whether or not he (referring to Wathen) stated to you on that occasion (the time and place having been given) 'that he thought he had sold out to the right man, all right, and that the first time that Haydon caught the boys running his horses he would shoot them off their horses'?" The specific objection to this question was that it called for testimony relating to a collateral matter, brought out by the people themselves, and by which they were bound. The asserted theory upon which the question was propounded and an answer thereto allowed was that it was in impeachment of Wathen on a matter which was material because it affected or involved the question of his credibility as a witness.

While we think that the district attorney could perhaps have well rested this phase of his case on the statement of Wathen that, at the time of the trial and for some time before the homicide he was on unfriendly terms with the Norgards, we are of the opinion, after a careful analysis of Wathen's testimony in the particular under consideration, that the testimony of English was proper as in impeachment of Wathen on the point to which it related. It is true, ordinarily, that the admission of a witness that he was not friendly with the party against whom he had testified in chief would be a sufficient predicate for an argument or, possibly, an inference that his testimony was or might be biased or that he might have exaggerated the nature and importance of the circumstance or circumstances to which he had testified. But it will be observed that Wathen said that he was not "bitterly unfriendly against" the Norgards, but that merely he had "no use for them," that he did not "know anything against them," which statements would imply that his unfriendly feeling toward the Norgards was of an indifferent character; that is to say (to present the idea more clearly), that, while his relations with that family were not amicable, still he harbored no feeling of resentment or revenge against them and entertained no such sentiments toward them as would induce him to treat them unfairly or unjustly in this case, or, for that matter, under any circumstances. This is undoubtedly the view that the district attorney and the court took of his testimony addressed to the point under consideration.

[18] Now then, we do not think that the proposition can be doubted that, where a witness who admittedly entertains a feeling of unfriendliness toward the opposing party undertakes to convey the impression to the jury, or the judge, if the facts are so tried, that such feeling does not reach that degree of animosity or that point of violent hatred that, in view of human frailties, may safely be said will ordinarily lead a witness to color or exaggerate statements calculated to injure his adversary, the extent or degree of enmity that really exists in the breast of such witness against his opponent, or the person against whom he has testified, may properly be shown. In other words, the district attorney was not compelled to accept as conclusive what appears to be the natural and reasonable import of Wathen's testimony that, while he was unfriendly with the Norgards, his feelings in that respect were merely of an apathetic character, but was entitled to show that the witness entertained a very bitter feeling against the Norgards and thus furnish all possible aid to the jury in determining how much, if any, weight Wathen's important testimony against the theory of the defendant's guilt as contended for by the prosecution was deserving of. It may be true, as counsel for the defendant assert, that English's testimony had a much more far-reaching effect upon the jury than that of the only purpose for which it was admissible, viz., to impeach the testimony or the credibility of Wathen, yet this is not and never has been a ground on which impeaching evidence may be excluded.

[19] It is doubtless true that in very many instances impeaching testimony has brought before a jury matters which could not be made the subject of independent or substantive proof, but, in such cases, if the party against whom such testimony is received, would avoid, as far as possible, any damaging effect it might have and which it was not designed to produce, he should request an instruction expressly limiting its consideration by the jury to the purpose for which it was admitted and is admissible. People v. McCrea, 32 Cal. 98; People v. Collins, 48 Cal. 277; People v. Estrado, 49 Cal. 171; People v. Ah Yute, 53 Cal. 613.

But Wathen admitted, in answer to questions to which no objection was interposed, that he might have made the remarks which English declared that he made in the conversation mentioned, and from that admission the jury could have reasonably inferred that he at least entertained the opinion which English said he expressed as to what Haydon would do with the Norgard boys if the circumstances indicated arose. No person will, ordinarily, admit that he might have expressed an idea or an opinion to which he has no recollection of giving utterance if that idea or opinion had never entered his mind, and the average mind would so construe such an admission. Under this view, the testimony of English, even if it might correctly be held to have been improperly allowed, could not have had the effect of damaging the defendant much, if any, more than Wathen's admission that he might have made the remarks attributed to him by English.

We have now given special attention in this opinion to all the assignments of error growing out of the rulings on the admission and rejection of evidence, with the exception of those numbered 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 14, and 15 in the order in which these assignments are discussed in the defendant's opening brief. As to the last mentioned assignments, it may be remarked that we have given each of them careful consideration and have found nothing therein prejudicial to the accused, or that seems to entitle them to special notice.

We have with equal care and much patience examined the whole record, consisting of eight large volumes of the stenographer's transcription of the testimony and the voluminous briefs, exhaustively and ably treating the numerous points pressed upon us for a reversal of the judgment and the order of the trial court, but we have thus discerned no just reason for declaring that the defendant was not fairly and legally tried and justly convicted.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

I concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.

I concur in the judgment: BURNETT, J.

18 Cal. App. 543

PEOPLE v. HAYDON. (Cr. 1,738.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 24, 1912.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Trinity County; James W. Bartlett, Judge.

Thomas P. Haydon was convicted of crime, and the conviction was affirmed on appeal by the Court of Appeals (123 Pac. 1102), and he applies for a rehearing. Denied.

C. Wm. White and Bush & Hall, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

PER CURIAM. The petition of defendant for a rehearing of this cause in the Supreme Court is denied. The opinion of the district court of appeal contains the following passage concerning section 4½, art. 6, recently added to the Constitution: "But if there is one proposition in connection therewith of which we entertain no feeling of uncertainty it is that said amendment was not intended to change, nor has it changed, the very sensible rule prescribed by the Constitution and for so many years strictly adhered to in this state, that, in the exercise of their appellate jurisdiction, the appellate courts are restricted to the consideration of questions of law alone, and that, therefore, as before stated, the matter of evidence does not constitute a subject of review by those tribunals, except where there necessarily arises from the evidence or is presented thereby, from its very nature, a question of law."

This court regards this statement as wholly unnecessary to the decision of the case. The denial of the petition for a rehearing is not to be understood as an indication of approval or disapproval of said statement by the Supreme Court.

162 Cal. 621

NELSON v. KELLOGG. (L. A. 2,909.)(Supreme Court of California. May 17, 1912.
Rehearing Denied June 14, 1912.)1. ARREST (§ 9*)—CIVIL ACTIONS—PERSONS LIABLE—PRIVILEGES.

An arrest of a female on civil process is illegal under any circumstances under Code Civ. Proc. § 861, declaring that no female can be arrested in any action, and a magistrate may not on any state of facts acquire jurisdiction to issue a warrant for a female's arrest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arrest, Cent. Dig. §§ 20-32; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

2. DAMAGES (§ 46*)—FALSE IMPRISONMENT—EXPENSES INCURRED—NECESSITY OF ACTUAL PAYMENT.

One falsely imprisoned may recover as special damages, when properly pleaded, liability incurred, but not paid, for legal services to secure release from the arrest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 99, 251; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

3. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 34*)—DAMAGES—ELEMENTS—EXPENSES INCURRED.

Where a female illegally arrested on civil process was released on bail, and thereafter surrendered and finally discharged, and in the meantime an attorney had performed services in advising her concerning her discharge, the liability incurred by her to pay for such services was a loss proximately caused by the false arrest for which the wrongdoer was liable to the extent of the reasonable value of the legal services performed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Imprisonment, Cent. Dig. § 111; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

4. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 13*)—CIVIL LI-ABILITY—DEFENSES—PROBABLE CAUSE.

A defendant who procured the arrest on civil process of a female is not exonerated from liability by the fact that the magistrate issuing the warrant advised the arrest, since the defense of probable cause is inapplicable to an action for false imprisonment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Imprisonment, Cent. Dig. §§ 6, 7, 31, 59; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

5. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 4*)—GOOD FAITH OF DEFENDANT—DAMAGES.

In an action for false imprisonment, the good faith of defendant is material only on the question of punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Imprisonment, Cent. Dig. § 16; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

6. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 36*)—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

In an action by a woman for false imprisonment, based on an arrest on civil process, a recovery of $500 was not so excessive as to warrant setting it aside on appeal; she having incurred liability for legal services to the amount of $150.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Imprisonment, Cent. Dig. §§ 110, 113-115; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Edith M. Nelson against William Kellogg and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Hester, Merrill & Craig, for appellant. Bernard Potter and Adams & Mahan, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In an action for false imprisonment plaintiff recovered judgment for $500 against Wm. Kellogg and J. T. Whaley. Kellogg alone appeals.

The arrest complained of was made upon a warrant issued in a civil action instituted by Kellogg against the plaintiff. Among the errors complained of are the rulings of the court in giving instructions to the jury to the effect that the affidavit upon which the warrant was issued was defective because the allegations therein were made solely on information and belief, it being claimed by appellant that they were positive in form, and in instructing the jury that a check for $300 accepted by the justice in lieu of an undertaking was not a compliance with the law requiring an undertaking or a cash deposit, and that for these reasons the arrest was illegal.

[1] We do not find it necessary to consider either of these points. One of the grounds upon which it was alleged the arrest was illegal was that the plaintiff, Edith M. Nelson, is a woman. This fact was admitted by the answer. The arrest was made under the provisions of section 861 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the last clause of which section is as follows: "No female can be arrested in any action." Consequently the arrest was illegal under any circumstances. The court might have instructed the jury to that effect, and any instructions or rulings which it made regarding its illegality in other respects are unimportant and could not have caused prejudice to the appellant, whether erroneous or not.

[2] Plaintiff alleged as special damages that she had incurred a liability for $150 for the services of an attorney employed by her to secure her release from the arrest. The proof was that the liability was incurred, but that no payment thereof had been made. Defendant objected to the evidence on the grounds that a mere liability for services in that behalf was not an element of damage, unless the attorney's fees had been paid. He also asked an instruction to the same effect. The objection was overruled and the instruction refused. In support of this objection the appellant relies on Elder v. Kuttner, 97 Cal. 495, 32 Pac. 563, Willson v. McEvoy, 25 Cal. 169, and similar cases, holding that in suits on attachment bonds, injunction bonds and like undertakings, attorney's fees for procuring a dissolution of the attachment or injunction cannot be recovered as damages, unless they have been actually paid. This is the rule established in this state with regard to actions on contracts of that kind, although the decisions in many other cases are to the contrary. But the rule established both in this state and elsewhere in actions for damages for tortious injuries is that the recovery may include special damages properly pleaded, consisting of a liability incurred, but not paid, for reasonable and necessary expenses caused by the wrongful act complained of, such as the fees of an attorney employed to obtain a discharge from an illegal arrest, physician's bills incurred for a cure of bodily injuries, and the like. Donnelly v. Hufschmidt, 79 Cal. 74, 21 Pac. 546; McLaughlin v. San Francisco, etc., Co., 113 Cal. 590, 45 Pac. 839; Bonesteel v. Bonesteel, 30 Wis. 515; Walker v. Pittman, 108 Ind. 345, 9 N. E. 175; Minneapolis T. M. Co. v. Regier, 51 Neb. 408, 70 N. W. 934. The distinction was recognized and stated in Willson v. McEvoy, supra, 25 Cal. 173, as follows: "In actions for injuries to the person, in many decisions, it is held that the defendant is answerable, not only for the damages actually sustained by the plaintiff, but also for certain liabilities the plaintiff has incurred by reason of the wrongful acts of the defendant—such as * * * extra costs incurred in procuring a release from an arrest made without reasonable cause; and the courts hold that the plaintiff may recover a reasonable compensation for those liabilities, without proof of payment."

[3] The claim that the liability in part was for other services rendered after plaintiff's discharge from the arrest is not sustained by the facts. She was released on bail before the services were performed, but she was still answerable to the charge, and a few days afterwards she was surrendered by her bail. Thereupon she was finally discharged. In the meantime the attorney had performed services in advising her concerning her discharge. The liability incurred for such services was a loss proximately caused by the false arrest, and the defendant was liable therefor to the extent of the reasonable value of the services performed in securing the discharge. The jury was properly instructed by the court to determine from the evidence the sum to be allowed on this account.

[4] The defendant is not exonerated from liability by the fact that, before filing his affidavit for the arrest, the magistrate who issued the warrant, being informed of the facts, advised him that there was sufficient cause for the arrest. In actions for malicious prosecution, advice of counsel, given under proper circumstances, or the decision of a magistrate holding the party to answer upon a criminal charge may be sufficient evidence of probable cause for the prosecution, and may therefore serve to establish a good defense. But the defense of probable cause is not applicable in actions for false imprisonment. Neves v. Costa, 5 Cal. App. 111, 89 Pac. 860.

[5] In false imprisonment, the good faith of the defendant is material only on the question of punitive damages. Id. The case of Dusy v. Helm, 59 Cal. 189, went upon the ground that, where the affidavit for arrest contains direct statements of facts which constitute some evidence of every fact which the statute requires to be shown therein, the magistrate to whom it is presented has jurisdiction to pass upon its sufficiency, and, if he determines upon such evidence that it is sufficient and thereupon issues the warrant, the party who invokes his decision is not answerable to the defendant in damages if the magistrate errs in his judgment of such evidence. This principle can have no application to the arrest on civil process of a person shown to be a female, since such arrest is not allowed on any state of facts and the magistrate can under no circumstances acquire jurisdiction to issue the warrant. See Fkumoto v. Marsh, 130 Cal. 66, 62 Pac. 303, 509, 80 Am. St. Rep. 73, where the case of Dusy v. Helm is thus distinguished. See, also, Ex parte Fkumoto, 120 Cal. 316, 52 Pac. 726.

[6] It is claimed that the damages are excessive, but, in view of the well-established rule concerning the power of this court to review the question of excessive damages, we cannot say that the court or jury abused their discretion in that regard. Diller v. Northern C. P. Co., 123 Pac. 359; Hale v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., 156 Cal. 715, 106 Pac. 83.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

17 Cal. App. 323

Ex parte WOODS. (Cr. 224.) (District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 27, 1911.) Application of J. A. Woods for writ of habeas corpus. Denied. See, also, 118 Pac. 792. R. J. Adcock, for petitioner. J. D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., and B. C. Hanna, Chief Deputy, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The justices of this court being unable to agree upon a judgment, the application ~~is~~ denied and prisoner remanded.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

124 PACIFIC REPORTER

(18 Cal. App. 698).

S. M. BERNARD CO. et al. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (Civ. 1,127.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 2, 1912.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 513*) — ASSESSMENTS—ACTION TO ANNUL—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in an action to annul an assessment for the widening of a street held to sustain a finding that notices of the passing of an ordinance declaring an intention to make the improvements were posted pursuant to statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1188-1206; Dec. Dig. § 513.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 483*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENTS—RECORDING ASSESSMENT.

St. 1903, p. 380, § 17, provides that each parcel assessed for street improvements shall be described in the assessment and designated by an appropriate number corresponding with a like number designating upon the diagram the parcel described in the assessment. Section 20 provides that, from the date of the recording of an assessment for street improvements and the diagram thereof, all persons shall be deemed to have notice of the contents of the assessment roll, and that immediately upon such recording the several assessments shall become due and each assessment shall be a lien upon the property against which it is made. Assessment No. 160 described a parcel as the "north 86 feet of lot 4 and lot 5 except west 80 feet," but was recorded "north 86 feet of lot 4 and 5 except the west 80 feet." Held, that any error in recording assessment No. 160 in omitting the word "lot" preceding the figure 5 would not invalidate the entire assessment for the improvement; such defect not affecting the notice given by the record to other lot owners.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1133-1136; Dec. Dig. § 483.*]

3. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 186*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—RECORDING DIAGRAM—SUFFICIENCY OF RECORD.

The diagram of street improvements was recorded by binding stubs of leaves in a book kept in the office of the board of public works wherein the original assessment was copied and to which stubs the original diagram was attached by pasting, but through constant use the diagram became partially detached from the stubs and within a few days after it was detached it was wholly separated and for convenient use kept by the clerk of the board in a drawer. Held that, while such practice was not commendable, the recording of the diagram was a substantial compliance with St. 1903, p. 381, § 20, requiring the assessment and diagram to be recorded; the statute not providing how it shall be recorded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 500-504; Dec. Dig. § 186.*]

4. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 240*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — PROCEEDINGS — NOTICE OF HEARING.

Acts 1903, p. 379, § 11, as it existed on April 7, 1907, when the report of the referee was filed in proceedings to condemn land for widening a street, did not require notice of any kind to be given of the time fixed for the hearing of the report except to persons who had answered in the action, but the section was amended by Act April 21, 1909, effective June 20, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 1039, § 6), so as to provide for notice by publication of the time and place set for hearing the report, the publication of which notice should commence at least 10 days before the time appointed for hearing, and further provides that all proceedings pending when the amendment took effect should, from the stage of any such proceedings then commenced, be conducted under the amended act. Held that, where all notices of the time and place of the hearing of a referee's report were duly given before May 8, 1909, the date fixed for the hearing, so as to vest the court with jurisdiction to hear the report, it had power to continue the time for hearing which was the next stage of the proceedings without giving further notice by publication or other notice than was required by the section as it existed when jurisdiction was acquired.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 550; Dec. Dig. § 240.*]

5. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 246*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — ABANDONMENT OF PROCEEDINGS—VALIDITY OF ORDINANCE.

St. 1903, p. 379, § 14, as amended by act approved April 21, 1909, effective June 20, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 1040, § 8), provides that the city council, at any time before the entry of an interlocutory judgment in proceedings to condemn land for street improvements, may abandon the proceedings by ordinance and may cause the action to be dismissed without prejudice, and further provides that proceedings pending when the amendment of the act took effect should thereafter be conducted under it. Held that, where the interlocutory decree in proceedings to condemn land for street widening was not entered until December 22, 1909, an ordinance passed on December 27, 1910, attempting to abandon the proceedings and dismiss the action was void; the city council then not having power to abandon the proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 647-657; Dec. Dig. § 246.*]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 514*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — ASSESSMENT — REASSESSMENT—RECITING PROTESTS.

St. 1903, p. 381, § 19, provides that all objections to an assessment for street improvements shall be filed with the city clerk within the time prescribed in the notice given pursuant to section 18, and that at the next regular meeting of the council after the expiration of the time for the filing of objections the clerk shall lay the assessment and all objections before the council and, at said meeting or any time to which hearing may be adjourned, it shall pass upon such assessments and may confirm, modify, or correct the same, or may order a new assessment. Held, that the attempted enactment by the council of an ordinance abandoning proceedings for the widening of a street after protests to the assessment were filed by property owners operated to sustain the protests, so as to authorize the council to order a new assessment, even if a decision on the protests is necessary before ordering a new assessment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1207-1215; Dec. Dig. § 514.*]

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 514*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENTS — PROTESTS—DECISION ON HEARING.

While if a city council does not hear a protest to an assessment for street improvements at its regular meeting after the expiration of the time for filing objections as stated in the notice of hearing required by St. 1903, p. 380, § 18, and does not make an order postponing hearing, it loses jurisdiction to act upon the assessment except on a republication of the notice of hearing, it may render its decision on the hearing at any time without any order continuing it and order a new assessment upon sustaining the protest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1207-1215; Dec. Dig. § 514.*]

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 514*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—NEW ASSESSMENT.

Even if a city council lost jurisdiction to act on an original assessment for benefits for land condemned for widening a street, it had power to order a new assessment since St. 1903, p. 379, § 14, prohibits it from abandoning the proceedings after the entry of the interlocutory decree in the condemnation proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1207-1215; Dec. Dig. § 514.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 843*)—REVIEW—SCOPE.

Upon affirming a judgment for the city in an action to enjoin an assessment against plaintiff's property, any error in denying plaintiff's application for an injunction pendente lite became immaterial and need not be reviewed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3331-3342; Dec. Dig. § 843.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. E. Densmore, Judge.

Action by the S. M. Bernard Company and others against the City of Los Angeles and others. From a judgment for defendants and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Trippet, Chapman & Biby, Lewis Cruickshank, and Valentine & Newby, for appellants. John W. Shank and Myron Westover, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Action to have declared null and void a certain assessment levied against the property of plaintiffs to pay the cost of widening Eighth street from Main street to Central avenue in Los Angeles, and to restrain the threatened sale of such property on account of delinquency in the payment of such assessment. Judgment went for defendants, from which, and an order denying their motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal.

On March 8, 1907, the city council, pursuant to the provisions of the street opening act of 1903 (Stats. 1903, p. 376), duly adopted an ordinance declaring its intention to widen Eighth street between the points named by adding thereto a strip of land 20 feet in width on the southerly line thereof from Main street to San Pedro street, and a strip of like width on the northerly line from San Pedro street to Central avenue, held in private ownership, and at the same time fixed the exterior boundaries of an assessment district, the property included within which was declared to be benefited by the contemplated improvement and which it was proposed to assess for the expense thereof. Pursuant to ordinance authorizing the same, an action was instituted to condemn the strip of land required for the proposed improvement, and on or about December 22, 1909, an interlocutory judgment was entered therein fixing the awards of damage to those whose property was required for use in widening the street. Thereafter the cost and expense of the improvement was duly assessed upon all of the lots and lands within the assessment district, which assessment was duly filed with the city clerk on July 29, 1910, and notice of such filing given by the clerk as required by section 18 of the street opening act.

Within the time allowed therefor, protests and objections against the assessment were filed by a number of persons owning property within the district. These protests were regularly set for hearing on September 13, 1910, and continued from time to time until November 15, 1910, on which date the city council adopted an ordinance directing the abandonment of the proceedings upon condition that the property owners interested in such action should pay to the city treasurer a sum of money required to reimburse the city for expenditures theretofore made in the performance of the work. The property owners complied with this condition, and on December 27, 1910, the city adopted an ordinance whereby it declared the proceedings for widening the street abandoned. Thereafter on January 3, 1911, parties in interest applied to this court for a peremptory writ of mandate to be directed to the city council commanding it, notwithstanding the adoption of the ordinance declaring the proceedings abandoned, to proceed in said matter as required by section 19 of the act and confirm, modify, or correct the assessment filed July 29, 1910, or order a new assessment to be made. The writ was issued as prayed for, and in compliance with such mandate the city council ordered a new assessment which was made, and on April 6, 1911, filed with the city clerk, who gave the notice required by law of the filing of the same. Protests filed objecting to this new assessment were denied, and the assessment confirmed on May 23, 1911.

Appellants concede the proceedings in all respects regular and legal except as to the irregularities specifically pointed out in their briefs. These specifications are as follows: First. The alleged failure to post notices of the passage of the ordinance of intention as required by section 3 of the act. Second. Uncertainty in describing one lot or parcel of land designated on the diagram and in the assessment as No. 160. Third. The alleged failure to record the diagram and assessment as required by section 20 of the act. Fourth. Failure to publish notice of the time fixed for hearing the report of the referees appointed in the condemnation suit pursuant to section 8 of the act as required by section 11 thereof as amended in 1909. Fifth. It is claimed the adoption by the city council of the ordinance abandoning the proceedings terminated the same and rendered the subsequent assessment null and void. Sixth. Conceding the action of the city council in abandoning the proceedings was without warrant and in contravention of statutory provision, it is nevertheless claimed that no action was had upon protests to the first assessment, and the making of the new assessment was unwarranted and is illegal for the reason that it was not made at the next regular meeting of the city council after the expiration of the time for filing objections, nor at any time to which the hearing of such objections was adjourned, and by reason thereof the city lost jurisdiction to act in the matter.

[1] 1. As to the issue joined upon the alleged failure to post notices of the passage of the ordinance of intention in accordance with section 3, the court found in favor of defendants. Upon this question of fact the affidavit made March 18, 1907, by one Blanchard, showed that on said date he properly posted the notices along Eighth street between the points named, but there were a number of cross streets as to the posting of which the affidavit was silent. Thereafter on January 19, 1911, another affidavit, amendatory of the first and showing the posting on March 18, 1907, of notices upon all streets within the assessment district, as required by section 3, was made by Blanchard. In addition to the prima facie case made by these affidavits was the testimony of Blanchard which clearly tended to prove that notices were properly posted on the date named in the affidavits upon all streets within the assessment district. There was also testimony of other witnesses to the effect that they saw notices upon some at least of these side streets. As against this showing was the testimony of several witnesses on behalf of plaintiffs wherein it was stated they had opportunity to observe and did not see notices posted upon certain of the cross streets. At most there was a conflict of evidence upon which the determination of the trial court must be deemed conclusive. While it may be true, as contended by appellants, that Blanchard's testimony, in so far as it is inconsistent with the first affidavit, should be accorded little weight, nevertheless, conceding the omission to mention the cross streets not in harmony with the amended affidavit and testimony of Blanchard, it was for the trial court to determine the weight to be given the evidence. The case bears no analogy to that of Pierce v. City of Los Angeles, 15 Cal. App. 702, 115 Pac. 746, cited by appellants.

[2] 2. Section 17 of the act provides that each lot or parcel of land shall be described in the assessment and designated by an appropriate number which shall correspond with a like number designating upon the diagram the lot or parcel of land so described in the assessment. Assessment No. 160 described a parcel of land as "north 86 feet of lot 4 and lot 5 except west 80 feet." As recorded, this assessment was made to read: "North 86 feet of lot 4 and 5 except the west 80 feet." By reason of this fact, appellants insist the entire assessment is void. Clearly the property was described as required by section 17. The error, if it be such, was due to the omission of the word "lot" preceding the figure "5" in recording the assessment and diagram as required by section 20 of the act, which provides that, "from the date of such recording, all persons shall be deemed to have notice of the contents of such assessment roll. Immediately upon such recording the several assessments contained in such assessment roll shall become due and payable, and each of such assessments shall be a lien upon the property against which it is made." Under this provision, when recorded, each one of the several assessments contained in the assessment roll constitutes a lien upon the particular piece of property against which it is made. The purpose of the recording is to impart notice, by an inspection of the record, to the owners of the lots assessed, as well as to others interested in transactions concerning the property. Where the record shows such uncertainty in describing a lot that an inspection thereof fails to impart notice of the existence of the lien, it is fatal to such claim. Labs v. Cooper, 107 Cal. 656, 40 Pac. 1042; Blanchard v. Ladd, 135 Cal. 214, 67 Pac. 131. The alleged error in recording was confined to one piece of property, the assessment of which was No. 160. It does not appear that any one interested therein is contesting the validity of the alleged lien, indeed, from all that appears to the contrary, the assessment has been paid. Under these circumstances, since the property of appellants assessed for their proportionate part of the cost of the improvement is not affected by the alleged erroneous record of assessment numbered 160, they are not in a position to complain. We find no authority in the act or elsewhere which would warrant us in holding the entire assessment void upon the ground stated. The case is unlike those wherein the entire assessment is held void on account of omitting from the diagram marks or data indicating the points of the compass, or where for other reasons it is impossible to determine the land it is sought to subject to the lien.

[3] 3. It is insisted that the evidence shows a failure to record the diagram in accordance with the provisions of section 20 of the act, as found by the court, and without which the assessment would not constitute a lien upon the property. It appears that a book was prepared and kept in the office of the board of public works wherein the original assessment as made was copied; that following a number of pages, estimated to be sufficient for copying the assessment, were inserted and bound in this book stubs of leaves one and one-half to two inches in width, to which the original diagram was attached by pasting the same to these stubs; that through constant use and handling the diagram became loosened and partially detached from the stubs, and within a few days from the time it was so attached it was wholly separated therefrom, and for more convenient use was kept by the clerk of the board in a drawer until a few weeks before the trial, when it was again attached to the stubs in this book of record. The contention of appellants is that, since the statute does not prescribe the manner in which the diagram shall be recorded, it must be transcribed by copying in the book kept for such purpose the lines, figures, and other data appearing upon the original. On the other hand, respondents insist that attaching the original diagram to the stubs in the record book, thus making it a part thereof, was a sufficient recording thereof within the meaning of the statute. The question involved is not one of constructive notice to plaintiffs, but whether or not the lien was perfected by making the record. Hence, if the pasting of the document in the book kept for that purpose constituted a recording thereof, the fact that in a few days it became separated therefrom and was detached from its holdings is unimportant, for the statute provides that immediately upon such recording the lien attaches. Under the provisions of section 20, when the assessment and diagram are recorded, with the certificate of the date of the recordation, such record, not the original, constitutes the assessment roll. The street improvement act of 1885 (St. 1885, p. 147), commonly known as the Vrooman act, provides that the warrant, assessment, and diagram, after the recording thereof, shall be delivered to the contractor doing the work. Here, however, there was no contractor and, so far as we are able to perceive, the original assessment and diagram, since the record thereof constitutes the assessment roll, performed no function whatever after the recording of the same. The statute is silent as to any provision prescribing the manner in which the diagram shall be recorded. From the nature of the case, it is intended to answer a purpose speedily accomplished. Every purpose of recording is fully subserved by binding or otherwise fastening the original documents in a book kept for the purpose. In our opinion, while the practice is not to be commended, the use of the original in the manner stated constituted a substantial compliance with the provisions of section 20 requiring the assessment and diagram to be recorded. While it may be true, as claimed by appellants, that the word "recorded" in ordinary usage signifies to copy or transcribe into some permanent book (Cady v. Purser, 131 Cal. 552, 63 Pac. 844, 82 Am. St. Rep. 391), such meaning of the word, in the absence of statutory direction, should attach only in those cases where the record is intended to perform functions throughout a long period of time, such as that of a deed or judgment. In such case reason exists for requiring the record to be made in durable form.

In Hager v. Melton, 66 W. Va. 62, 66 S. E. 13, the court, in holding the pasting of the original ordinance for street improvement in the minute book to be a sufficient recording thereof, said: "Whether actual transcription is necessary to effect a recordation depends, in our judgment, upon the character of the record. There is a manifest difference between a record intended to subserve purposes or perform functions throughout a long period of time, such as that of a deed, judgment, decree, or statute, and one intended only to subserve a mere temporary purpose. In the former case there is a reason for requiring the record to be made in durable form, and hence there may be a presumption of legislative intent to require it. * * * Here the object is to put in force an ordinance for an improvement intended to be made and the cost thereof collected in a short period of time. After that has been accomplished, it performs no useful purpose. * * * We think the pasting of the ordinance and affidavit in the journal is a substantial and sufficient compliance with the requirements of the charter." In order to sustain appellants' contention, when it thus clearly appears there has been a substantial compliance with the requirement whereby every right intended to be protected is secured, we must ignore the express declaration of the Legislature that "this act shall be liberally construed to promote the objects thereof."

[4] 4. The referees in the condemnation suit, appointed by the court to ascertain the value of the property required for use in widening the street, filed their report in the action on April 7, 1909. The court appointed May 8, 1909, as the time for hearing the same, notice of which was duly given as required by section 11 of the act as it then existed. On said date the court, having acquired jurisdiction of all parties entitled to be heard, continued the hearing to May 24th, followed by orders duly and regularly made continuing the hearing from time to time until June 30, 1909, upon which date the hearing was commenced and proceeded to a conclusion. Under section 11 of the act as it existed on April 7, 1909, when the report of the referees was filed, no notice of any kind was required to be given of the time fixed for the hearing of the report other than to persons who had answered in the action. Those who had made default were not entitled to notice of any kind. This provision remained in force down to June 20, 1909, on which date section 11, as amended by act of the Legislature approved April 21, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 1035), took effect. As amended, the section, in addition to the notice prescribed by the original section, provided for notice by publication of the time and place set for hearing the report, the publication of which notice should commence at least 10 days before the time appointed for hearing the report. The amendatory act provided that all proceedings pending at the time the amendment took effect should, from the stage of any such proceedings or action then commenced and in progress at the time the act took effect, be conducted under the provisions of the act as amended. All notices of the time and place of the hearing of the report required to be given by the provisions of section 11 were duly given prior to May 8, 1909, the date fixed for the hearing, on which date the court was fully vested with jurisdiction to hear the report. The acquisition of such jurisdiction, the proceedings to obtain which were complete on May 8, 1909, marked the close of that stage thereof wherein the acts required to confer such jurisdiction were done and performed. Jurisdiction having vested, the court had the right to continue the time for hearing the report, which was the next stage in the proceedings, without further notice than that required by section 11 as it existed at the time jurisdiction was acquired.

[5] 5. It is next urged that the effect of adopting the ordinance on December 27, 1909, declaring the proceedings abandoned, was to nullify and vacate all proceedings theretofore had and taken. The ordinance of intention was adopted on March 8, 1907. Under the law as it then existed (section 14 of the act), the city was authorized to abandon the proceedings and cause a dismissal thereof at any time prior to the payment of the compensation awarded in the condemnation suit to property owners. By act of the Legislature approved April 21, 1909, said section 14 was amended so as to read as follows: "The city council may at any time prior to the entry of interlocutory judgment, abandon the proceedings by ordinance and cause such action to be dismissed without prejudice." This amendatory act took effect on June 20, 1909. It was provided therein that proceedings pending at the time when it took effect should, from such stage thereof, be conducted under the provisions of the amended act. The interlocutory decree was not entered until December 22, 1909, some six months after the amendment took effect, and during all of which time the city council might have dismissed the action prior to the entry of such decree and abandoned the proceedings. It did not avail itself of such right, but continued to prosecute the proceedings until long after the entry of the interlocutory decree was made, when on December 27, 1910, and after the making and filing of the first assessment, it attempted to abandon the proceedings and dismiss the action contrary to the provisions of section 14 as amended. The case of Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Lusk, 15 Cal. App. 358, 115 Pac. 53, is authority for holding that the ordinance providing for the abandonment of the proceedings was void and of no effect, for the reason that the council was at the time without power to abandon the same. It is unnecessary to restate the reasons for so holding set forth in that opinion; suffice it to state that we adhere to what was there said in discussing the point involved.

[6] 6. It is claimed that no action was ever had by the city council upon the protests interposed to the first assessment, and that the city council had no power to order the new assessment. This contention is based upon the provisions of section 19 of the act, which, in substance, provides that all objections to the assessment shall be filed with the city clerk within the time prescribed in the notice required to be given by section 18, and that, at the next regular meeting of the city council after the expiration of the time for filing objections, the clerk shall lay the assessment and all objections thereto before the city council, and at said meeting, or at any time to which the hearing may be adjourned, it shall hear such objections and pass upon the assessment and confirm, modify, or correct the same, or it may order a new assessment. It appears from the record that, after the original assessment was filed with the city clerk, he gave the notice thereof as required, and that within due time various protests were filed by property owners objecting to the assessment; that a time was duly appointed for hearing the same, and from time to time, to which the hearing was adjourned, such objections were heard and considered; the decision thereon being likewise from time to time postponed. On November 15, 1910, the ordinance directing the abandonment, subject to the property owners reimbursing the city for expenditures theretofore made in the matter, was adopted, and, such payment being made, the ordinance of December 27, 1910, declaring the proceeding abandoned, was passed. We find nothing in the record which shows that the city council in terms acted upon and by order formally made sustained the protests as found by the court. If such order was necessary, the action of the city council in abandoning the proceedings must be deemed a sufficient compliance with that requirement. The result of the abandonment, effective to such extent, was to sustain the protests. However, there is nothing in the act which requires the city council in terms to pass upon the objections. The section provides that, after hearing the same, it "shall pass upon such assessment and may confirm, modify, or correct said assessment, or may order a new assessment." The city council had jurisdiction to hear the protests; it did accord a full hearing and did, as it was authorized to do, order a new assessment.

[7] It is insisted, however, that, by reason of the failure of the city council to continue the hearing of the protests, it lost jurisdiction to order a new assessment. It is true, we think, that where the council fails to hear or act upon protests interposed to an assessment at its regular meeting after the expiration of the notice required by section 18, and neglects to make an order postponing such hearing, it loses jurisdiction to act upon the assessment except upon a republication of the notice. Stoner v. City Council of Los Angeles, 8 Cal. App. 607, 97 Pac. 692. The property owners filing objections must be heard at such regular meeting or at some other time to which the hearing is at such regular meeting adjourned. The law provides no other means of imparting notice of a postponement of the hearing other than knowledge of the action of the city council then had and taken. While the power of the council in hearing objections is thus limited, we do not consider the section as imposing like limitations upon it as to the time when it may render its decision upon the objections. Having accorded the protestants a full hearing, it may, in the absence of an order continuing the hearing, render its decision thereon at any time and confirm, modify, or order a new assessment.

[8] Moreover, if, as claimed by appellants, the city council had lost jurisdiction to act at all upon the original assessment, by reason whereof it was functus officio, and since it could not abandon the proceedings, it was clearly within its power to order a new assessment, "upon which order like proceedings (are) had as in the case of an original assessment." To sustain appellants' contention would permit the city council, by neglecting to perform an act enjoined upon it by law, to thus indirectly nullify the provisions of section 14 which prohibit it from abandoning the proceedings after the entry of the interlocutory decree.

[9] 7. The record includes an appeal from an order of court denying plaintiffs' application for an injunction pendente lite and dissolving a restraining order theretofore made. Under the conclusion reached upon the merits of the case, no purpose could be subserved by passing upon this alleged error. Had it been granted, its only function would have been to stay the threatened acts until a trial was had upon the merits, at which time, since the judgment therein was in favor of defendants, it would perforce of such fact have been dissolved. The sustaining of the judgment by this court renders the alleged error a moot question. The appeal from this order is therefore dismissed.

It follows that the judgment and order denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

MACMULLAN v. KELLY, County Treasurer.
(Civ. 936.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 17, 1912.)

1. TAXATION (§ 904*)—PERSONAL PROPERTY TAX—COLLECTION—EXCESS—TRUST FUND.

Pol. Code, §§ 3820, 3821, 3823, authorize the county assessors to collect taxes on personal property prior to the actual fixing of the rate of taxation for the fiscal year, when, in their opinion, such taxes will not be sufficiently secured by a lien on real property of the taxpayer; and section 3824 declares that when the rate is fixed, if a sum in excess of such rate has been collected, the excess shall remain in the county treasury and be repaid to the taxpayer or his assignee on demand. Held, that the moneys so paid into the county treasury in excess of the tax rate finally fixed do not belong to the county, but, in the aggregate, constitute a trust fund of which the county is the custodian, and the treasurer but a bailee holding the money, to be paid to the rightful owners on demand.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1727; Dec. Dig. § 904.*]

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 66*)—ACCRUAL OF CAUSE OF ACTION—TRUST—EXCESS TAXES.

Under Pol. Code, § 3824, providing that excess taxes on personal property, collected before the fixing of the rate, shall remain in the county treasury, to be repaid to the taxpayer, or his assignee, on demand, a trust of such excess so created was an express trust, continuing until the individual amounts making up the excess are called for by the taxpayers or their assignees; and hence limitations do not run against the taxpayer's right until demand, under the rule that limitations do not run in favor of a defendant chargeable as a trustee during the life of the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 353-375; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 904*)—COLLECTION OF TAXES—EXCESS.

Pol. Code, § 3824, providing that excess personal property taxes, collected before the fixing of the rate, shall remain in the county treasury and be paid by the county treasurer to the person from whom the collection was made, or his assignee, on demand, contemplates that each successive county treasurer shall account for the excess tax fund which may be accumulated in the county treasury and reported as a continuing fund, subject to depletion solely by the demands of the owners thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1727; Dec. Dig. § 904.*]

Appeal from the Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by Charles S. MacMullan against M. J. Kelly, as Treasurer of Alameda County. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Brewton A. Hayne, for appellant. Wm. H. Donohue, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. In this proceeding the petitioner sought by mandamus to compel the respondent, in his official capacity as treasurer of Alameda county, to pay to the petitioner, upon assigned claims, several amounts of money, totaling the sum of $42.09, which had been paid into the treasury of said county by various persons as taxes on unsecured personal property for the fiscal year 1902-03, and which sums of money, it is alleged, are still in said treasury, subject to the demands of the plaintiff's assignors.

Petitioner's cause of action is founded primarily upon the fact that his assignors, in the year 1902, had paid, in accordance with the provisions of chapter 8 of the Political Code, the several sums of money sued for as taxes on personal property, based upon the rate of taxation fixed for the preceding year; and that in each instance the sum so paid was in excess of the amount which subsequently actually became due for such tax.

The petition for writ of mandate was not filed in the superior court of Alameda county until February 7, 1910; and it affirmatively appears from the allegations of the petition that no demand for the return of the money paid as taxes in excess of the amount required by the rate of taxation for the fiscal year 1902-03 was made upon the treasurer of Alameda county until January 19, 1910.

Respondent interposed a demurrer to the petition for a writ of mandate, which, among other grounds, specified that the action was barred by the provisions of section 343 and subdivision 1 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The demurrer was sustained, with leave to amend, but petitioner declined to amend; and judgment was rendered and entered in favor of respondent, from which petitioner appeals upon the judgment roll.

It is conceded that the demurrer was sustained solely upon the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations; and the correctness of the court's ruling in this particular is the only point presented for decision upon this appeal.

It is the duty of county assessors to collect taxes on all personal property at the time the assessment is made, or at any time before the first Monday of the following month of August, when, in the opinion of the assessor, such taxes will not be sufficiently secured by a lien upon the real property of the taxpayer. The amount of personal property taxes which must be so collected depends upon and must be governed by the rate of taxation on personal property fixed for the previous year in the state and county and the several districts in which the personal property is taxable (Pol. Code, §§ 3820, 3821, 3823); and "when the rate is fixed for the year in which such collection is made then, if a sum in excess of the rate has been collected, such excess shall not be apportioned to the state, but the whole thereof shall remain in the county treasury, and must be repaid by the county treasurer to the person from whom the collection was made, or to his assignee, on demand therefor." Pol. Code, § 3824.

It is the duty of the county auditor to note on the assessment book, opposite the name of each taxpayer, the amount collected for taxes; and when the rate of taxation for the year has been fixed he must enter opposite the name of each taxpayer the amount of the excess or deficiency, if any, in the tax as collected by the assessor. Pol. Code, §§ 3827, 3828.

It is the contention of petitioner that the fund of excess taxes which may be accumulated in the county treasury, in accordance with the sections of the Political Code herein quoted and referred to, constitutes a continuing trust fund, against which the statute does not commence to run until there has been a demand by the owner for the return of the money, and a refusal by the treasurer to pay the same.

[1] We are of the opinion that this contention is well founded; and that the lower court erred in sustaining the respondent's demurrer, upon the ground that the cause of action stated in the petition was barred by the statute of limitations. The purpose and effect of section 3824 of the Political Code, under which county assessors are empowered to collect taxes on personal property in advance of the actual fixing of the rate of taxation for the fiscal year in which such taxes are collectible, have been distinctly defined by our Supreme Court, in the case of Corbett v. Widber, 123 Cal. 154, 55 Pac. 764. It was there said, in effect, that the moneys paid into the county treasury in excess of the tax rate finally fixed did not belong to the county, but in the aggregate constitute a trust fund of which the county is the custodian, and the treasurer but a bailee who holds the moneys so paid, subject to the demands of the rightful owners.

Subject to the provisions of section 852 of the Civil Code, an express trust is created "as to the trustor and beneficiary by any words or acts of the trustor indicating with reasonable certainty (1) an intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust; and (2) the subject, purpose and beneficiary of the trust * * * and as to the trustee, by any acts or words of his indicating with reasonable certainty (1) his acceptance of the trust, or his acknowledgment, made upon sufficient consideration, of its existence; and (2) the subject, purpose and beneficiary of the trust." Civ. Code, §§ 2221, 2222.

[2] The legislative intent to create a trust, as well as the subject-matter, purpose, and beneficiary of the trust, are clearly indicated by the terms of the several sections of the Political Code, relating to the collection of personal property taxes; and a trust created thereby is undoubtedly an express trust, which continues in existence until the individual amounts which go to make up the accumulated trust fund of excess taxes are called for by the taxpayers or their assigns. Miller & Lux v. Batz, 142 Cal. 447, 76 Pac. 42; McGuire v. Lenneus, 74 Me. 344.

It is a rule of law in this and other jurisdictions that the statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of a defendant chargeable as the trustee of an express trust during the life of the trust. In order to set the statute in motion, it is necessary that such a trustee, by some act or declaration, positively and unequivocally repudiate the trust, and that notice of such repudiation be brought to the beneficiary. This rule is so well settled and so generally recognized that no argument is necessary to support its reiteration here. There is no conflict of authority upon the subject, and of the many cases which have arisen in this jurisdiction, where the rule has been declared and applied, the following may be cited: Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 173; Ord v. De la Guerra, 18 Cal. 67; Schroeder v. Jahns, 27 Cal. 280; Miles v. Thorne, 38 Cal. 338, 99 Am. Dec. 384; Hearst v. Pujol, 44 Cal. 230; Janes v. Throckmorton, 57 Cal. 368; Zuck v. Culp, 59 Cal. 142; McClure v. Colyear, 80 Cal. 378, 22 Pac. 175; Roach v. Caroffa, 85 Cal. 436, 25 Pac. 22; Fox v. Tay, 89 Cal. 339, 24 Pac. 855, 26 Pac. 897, 23 Am. St. Rep. 474; Luco v. De Toro, 91 Cal. 417, 18 Pac. 866, 27 Pac. 1082.

[3] Section 3824 of the Political Code clearly contemplates that each successive county treasurer shall account for the fund of excess taxes which may be accumulated in the county treasury, and reported as a continuing fund, which is subject to depletion solely by the demands of the owners thereof; and as the transaction pleaded by petitioner in the present case constituted an express trust, which was not repudiated by respondent until demand was made upon him by petitioner for performance of the trust, the statute of limitations commenced to run only from the date of the demand. Miller & Lux v. Batz, 142 Cal. 447, 76 Pac. 42.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer, with leave to the respondent to answer within a designated time.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

18 Cal. App. 698

DELGER v. JACOBS. (Civ. 904.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 17, 1912.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 773*)—DISPOSITION OF CASE ON APPEAL—FAILURE TO FILE BRIEFS OR MAKE ORAL ARGUMENT—EFFECT.

Where no oral argument was made when the appeal in the case was regularly called, and no briefs were filed by either party, the judgment will be affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3104, 3108-3110; Dec. Dig. § 773.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Edward F. Delger against Abe Jacobs. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. S. Melsted, for appellant. Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. No oral argument having been made when the appeal in this case was regularly called upon the calendar of this court, and no briefs having been filed by either party, it is ordered that the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

18 Cal. App. 655

RAISCH v. WARREN et al. (Civ. 932.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 6, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 5, 1912.)

1. EQUITY (§ 44*)—STATE COURTS—SUPERIOR COURT—JURISDICTION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 76, by subdivision 1, gives the superior courts jurisdiction of all cases in equity, by subdivision 2 of all civil actions of a certain nature, by subdivision 3 of all cases at law involving the title or possession of real property, and by subdivision 4 of all matter of probate. Section 78 provides that the process of superior courts shall extend to all parts of the state, while section 1504 provides that a judgment rendered against an executor or administrator upon any claim for money against the estate of his testator only establishes the claim as if it had been allowed by the executor, administrator, and the judge, and the judgment must be that the executor or the administrator shall pay in due course of administration the amount held due. Administration was had upon the property of a decedent in the superior court of Alameda county. Held that, as the jurisdiction of the superior courts in equity was exclusive and wholly different from their probate jurisdiction, an action in equity might be begun against the administrator in the superior court of San Francisco county to compel an accounting and to enjoin the disposal of property of the decedent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 141-145; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

2. EQUITY (§ 39*)—SUBJECTS OF PROTECTION—JURISDICTION.

Though Code Civ. Proc. § 1504, provides that a judgment against an executor or administrator is only equivalent to an allowance of a claim, a court of equity of a county other than that in which administration of the estate of a decedent was being had, having taken jurisdiction of a suit against the administrator to compel an accounting and to restrain him and other heirs of the decedent from disposing of property transferred to them by gift causa mortis, has jurisdiction to give complete relief regardless of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 104-114; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

3. PARTNERSHIP (§ 244*)—SETTLEMENT OF AFFAIRS OF FIRM—STATUTES.

Under the direct provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1585, it is the duty of the surviving partner to settle the affairs of the firm.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 511; Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

4. PARTNERSHIP (§ 258*)—JURISDICTION—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Defendants' intestate, who was a member of a firm composed of plaintiff and another, attempted to transfer all of his property which was in the stock of a corporation by gift causa mortis so as to exclude the claims of his partners who were his creditors. The corporate stock was not listed as the assets of the decedent, and the administrator refused to consider it as such. Held that, it being the duty of the surviving partner under Code Civ. Proc. § 1585, to settle the partnership affairs, the surviving partner might maintain an action against the administrator to enforce an accounting and restrain the disposition of the corporate stock before bringing an action at law, for, while an action at law is usually a condition precedent to such suit, it, being useless in this case, will not be required.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 564-598; Dec. Dig. § 258.*]

5. INJUNCTION (§ 135*)—ISSUANCE—DISCRETION.

Where injunction is justifiable, the issuing of preliminary writ is largely a matter of discretion, and it should be exercised in favor of the party most likely to be injured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 304; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by A. J. Raisch against Charles A. Warren, Jr., individually and as administrator of Charles A. Warren, deceased. From an order refusing to dissolve an injunction, defendant Warren appeals. Affirmed.

Aylett R. Cotton and Aylett R. Cotton, Jr., for appellant. Peter F. Dunne and C. H. Wilson, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Injunction. Upon filing the complaint and executing a bond for $1,000, the court granted the prayer of the complaint for an injunction, further ordering that defendants show cause at a date named "why this order should not be continued in force until the further order of the court in the premises." Before the hearing thus ordered, defendant Charles A. Warren, Jr., served and filed his motion to dissolve and vacate said order of injunction based on the complaint in said action and upon the ground that "said complaint does not state or show that any ground or cause exists or has existed for the making of said order or for the granting of any injunction in this action." At the hearing the court ordered: "(1) That the demurrers to complaint be overruled 10 days to answer. (2) Motion to dissolve injunction denied. (3) Motion to appoint receiver denied without prejudice to renewal of motion." It appears from the record that "said order included the decision of said court upon motions of other parties, as well as said motion of said Charles A. Warren, Jr., and also decisions of demurrers." Defendant Charles A. Warren, Jr., excepted to the order denying his motion "to dissolve said order of injunction and refusing to dissolve said order of injunction as to him." He alone appeals "from the order made and entered * * * refusing to dissolve the injunction granted on the 27th day of January, 1910, * * * and denying said defendant's motion to dissolve said injunction."

The averments of the complaint are substantially as follows: That on March 1, 1903, Charles A. Warren, the defendant Buckman, and plaintiff formed a partnership for the purpose of securing contracts from the United States government and performing said contracts when secured, relating to what is known as the Truckee-Carson Project of Nevada, and that said partnership continued until the death of said Charles A. Warren which is alleged to have occurred on December 24, 1908; that defendant C. A. Warren Company now is and since April 2, 1903, has been a duly organized California corporation, as also is and has been the San Francisco Construction Company since January 8, 1900; that, from the beginning of said partnership to its termination aforesaid, "the two corporations last mentioned were controlled, operated, and used by such partnership to facilitate, carry on, and advance the affairs, work, and business of said partnership, and, acting for and under the direction of said copartners, did duly make to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States certain proposals for doing the construction work in connection with the aforesaid Truckee-Carson Project of Nevada"; that said proposals were accepted and pursuant thereto said corporation, C. A. Warren Company, "for the purposes aforesaid and acting for and under the direction of said copartners, and as an instrument of said partnership to facilitate and carry on its business, did duly make and enter into a certain contract with the United States," engaging to perform certain work relating to said project, for which the said United States agreed to pay said corporation certain sums of money and that said corporation fully completed said work. Then followed averments that the said corporation, the said San Francisco Construction Company, for purposes as above averred, and acting for said copartnership as above averred, entered into another contract with the United States to further prosecute the work on said project for which the said United States agreed to pay said corporation certain sums of money, and that "said copartners, doing business as such in the name of said corporation, San Francisco Construction Company, did duly * * * complete the contract last aforesaid." Then follow also averments relating to a third contract entered into by said last-named corporation for like purposes as above set forth and as in other alleged cases, "acting for and under the direction of said copartners," and "for the purpose of facilitating, carrying on, and advancing the affairs, work, and business of said partnership"; that defendant, Charles A. Warren, Jr., was duly appointed administrator of the estate of Charles A. Warren, deceased, on January 15, 1909; that defendant Buckman assigned to plaintiff all his right and interest in and to all demands against the estate of Warren, deceased, but now claims some interest in the assets of said partnership; that there has never been an accounting between said copartners as to its business, nor has there been an accounting between the surviving members and defendant Charles A. Warren, Jr., the administrator of said estate of said deceased copartner; "that, should an accounting be had of the aforesaid copartnership matters and business, it will be found and ascertained that a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of about $150,000, is due from the estate of said Charles A. Warren, deceased, on account of said copartnership matters and business to this plaintiff"; that plaintiff has demanded of defendant Warren, Jr., administrator of the estate of Warren, deceased, and of defendant Buckman, an accounting of said copartnership business, but said defendants have refused and still refuse to make such accounting; that plaintiff, within the time allowed by law therefor, prepared his contingent claim against the estate of said deceased in which was recited "substantially all the matters aforesaid and stated the particulars of said contingent claim, and demanded that an accounting be had forthwith between this plaintiff and the said administrator of the estate of Charles A. Warren, deceased, and that provision be made for the payment of such sum as may be found to be due this plaintiff on such accounting, and that such payment be made from and out of the assets of the estate of said deceased"; that said administrator rejected said contingent claim; that said administrator has duly returned an inventory of said estate showing the same to be of the value of $8,798.66; that said inventory does not show the true value and character of the entire estate left by deceased; that the said corporation, the Charles A. Warren Company, had a capital stock of $100,000 divided into 100,000 shares of the par value of $1 each, of which deceased at the time of his death was the owner of 60,416 shares; that, immediately before his death, said Warren delivered all his said shares to one Haskell with instructions that, in the event of the death of said Charles A. Warren, Haskell "should then and in that event only deliver said capital stock to the defendants herein, William T. Warren, Charles A. Warren, Jr., and Henry O. Warren in equal shares"; but, should he survive his then illness, said capital stock was to remain the property of said Charles A. Warren "who was to repossess the same and enjoy the income thereof and have all the rights and benefits arising from the ownership thereof"; that, after the death of said Warren, said capital stock was delivered by said Haskell as directed by said Warren, and the said transferees aforesaid are now the holders thereof, and that the defendants Bertha and Claudine Warren claim some interest therein; "that said capital stock is of great value, to wit, of the value of about $1,000,000, and that the same is a part of the estate of said Charles A. Warren, deceased, and is subject to the payment of the debts proven and allowed against said estate"; that said estate of Warren, deceased, and said William T., Charles A., Jr., Henry O., Bertha, and Claudine Warren "have not sufficient property out of which to pay plaintiff's claim unless resort be had to that represented by the capital stock of said Charles A. Warren Company; that, except for said shares of capital stock and the value thereof, the said Warrens (naming them) are each and all of them financially irresponsible"; that they have threatened to sell said shares, in which event "they and each of them would be wholly unable to deliver to Charles A. Warren, Jr., administrator of the estate of Charles A. Warren, deceased, sufficient of the property of said deceased or sufficient money or property of any kind to pay the amount due from said estate to this plaintiff on his aforesaid claim, and that, should said sale or disposition of said stock be made, this plaintiff "would be wholly without remedy in the premises and would suffer great or irreparable injury"; that defendant William T. Warren was by order of court duly appointed guardian of the person and estate of defendant Henry O. Warren, a minor.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Plaintiff prays for an accounting of all matters relating to said copartnership, for judgment against said administrator for the amount that may be due plaintiff on such accounting, for a writ of injunction enjoining the sale of said capital stock, for the appointment of a receiver, and such further relief as may be just.

At the hearing of the motion there were read the affidavits of plaintiff and one Church. Plaintiff's affidavit is to like effect as the complaint in the action; he also deposes that the inventory returned by said administrator does not include said shares of said capital stock; that, in the transfer of said stock to said Haskell, "the said Warren did not part with all dominion over the same or pass the same beyond his control for all time; and furthermore that said gift was subject to defeasance in favor of said Warren's creditors, and that as to this affiant, a creditor of said Warren, said gift of said capital stock is wholly void." The affidavit of Church, used at the hearing of the motion, was to the effect that he was a director of the Charles A. Warren Company from its organization to the death of Charles A. Warren; that the affairs of the corporation were "controlled, directed, and managed wholly and entirely by said Charles A. Warren"; that, with the exception of the five shares each issued to the directors, Warren controlled all the shares; that "the business, property, and affairs of said Charles A. Warren were, from the time of the incorporation of said corporation to the 24th day of December, 1908, from time to time during said period, transferred from said Charles A. Warren to said corporation"; that, "at all times from the date of the incorporation thereof to the time of his death, he, the said Charles A. Warren, received the entire income of said corporation and used and disposed of the same as his personal property and according to his personal will and wishes"; that no dividends were declared, but that all of the funds of the corporation and all its earnings were personally controlled by said Warren; that, "according to the best judgment and knowledge of this affiant, all the property owned by said corporation, and all the stock thereof were a part and portion of the estate of Charles A. Warren at the time of his death on or about December 24, 1908."

The estate of Charles A. Warren, deceased, is being administered in the superior court, sitting in probate, in Alameda county, and this action was commenced and is pending in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco.

Appellant contends that "under section 1504, C. C. P., in an action of this nature, the court has no jurisdiction to provide for the payment of any judgment, and hence no jurisdiction to make any investigation as to what property may belong to an estate, or to make an order enjoining the disposition of, or appointing a receiver of, any property." The argument seems to be that, under section 1504, supra, the judgment only establishes the claim in the same manner as if allowed by the administrator, and the judgment must be that the administrator pay in due course of administration; "that there is no administration running its course in the city and county of San Francisco, where this action is, and it is only the superior court in Alameda county, in which the estate is being administered, that can make application of the assets of the estate so as to pay in the due course of administration"; that the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco "has no jurisdiction to take action, even after judgment, to enforce payment of any judgment, and surely has no jurisdiction to issue an injunction before judgment to restrain the disposition of property"; that a judgment upon a rejected claim is no more effective than a claim allowed by an administrator or the judge—citing Hall v. Cayot, 141 Cal. 13, 16, 74 Pac. 299. Appellant then takes up the general proposition, to which the brief is mainly devoted, that "it is contrary to all the authorities to attempt to interfere by injunction or otherwise with the disposition of property before judgment is obtained, unless the plaintiff has some lien on the property or interest therein"; and none is here alleged. In support of this contention, adjudicated cases and opinions of text-writers are cited from which the general rule is deducible that a simple contract creditor, or a creditor at large, whose claims are not yet reduced to judgment, cannot maintain a creditor's bill, citing 2 High on Injunctions (4th Ed.) §§ 406, 1403; 6 Pom. Eq. Juris., § 882; Ohm v. Superior Court, 85 Cal. 545, 26 Pac. 244, 20 Am. St. Rep. 245, approved in Field, Adm'r, v. Andrada, 106 Cal. 107, 39 Pac. 323; and Shiels, Adm'r, v. Nathan, Adm'r, 12 Cal. App. 604, 108 Pac. 34.

[1] On the question of jurisdiction generally, the Code provides that superior courts "have original jurisdiction in all cases in equity" (Code of Civil Procedure, § 76) and their process extends "to all parts of the state." Id. § 78. The superior court of the city and county of San Francisco has the same jurisdiction as the superior court of Alameda county, and, if the action can be maintained in the latter court, we can see no reason why it may not be prosecuted in the former. The suggested difficulty of enforcing a judgment, should plaintiff recover in the San Francisco court is fanciful rather than real. If on the trial anything is found to be due plaintiff by the estate of Warren, deceased, it is to be presumed that the court would be guided by section 1504, Code of Civil Procedure, in formulating its judgment, whereupon "a certified transcript of the original docket of the judgment" would be "filed among the papers of the estate in court," i. e., in the Alameda county court, as the said section provides. Precisely the same course would be pursued if the action were to be tried in the superior court of Alameda county. The suggestion that there "is no administration running its course" in the San Francisco court, where this action is pending, and that it is only the Alameda court "that can make application of the assets of the estate so as to pay in due course of administration," does not, in our opinion, complicate the case or strengthen appellant's position. The superior court as now constituted has jurisdiction, as we have seen, in all cases in equity (Code Civ. Proc. subd. 1, § 76), and by the same section it is given jurisdiction in civil actions of the class therein described (subdivision 2); in all cases at law as defined (subdivision 3); of still other actions mentioned and "of all matters of probate" (subdivision 4). In exercise of its jurisdiction "in cases in equity," such as the one here, and its jurisdiction in "matters of probate," such as administering the Warren estate, the proceedings of the superior court are as distinct and as dissociated as if there were two separate and different courts exercising these powers. So far, therefore, as the question of jurisdiction is concerned, the superior courts of the two counties stand on the same footing. The right to have the case transferred for trial to the Alameda court, if such right exists, is not to be confounded with the right to bring the action in the city and county of San Francisco.

[2] In his reply brief appellant complains that respondent has not pointed out any way of escaping the supposed dilemma in which he may find himself, should he secure judgment for some amount, which, when secured, the court cannot enforce; that counsel should have explained "what would be the fate of the injunction in this case when such judgment would be made, inasmuch as the court's power to act in the case would terminate on making such judgment; and have explained what would or could have been accomplished by the issuing of an injunction restraining the disposition of the property." As these supposed difficulties are advanced in aid of the argument that the court had no power to make the order, we cannot overlook them, though unnoticed by respondent.

The action proceeds on the assumption that the estate of plaintiff's copartner Warren will be shown to be indebted to him, on a fair accounting, in a large sum of money; that the property of the estate returned by the administrator in his inventory is wholly insufficient to meet this claim; that certain of the defendants, among them the administrator himself, hold certain property, to wit, the alleged shares in the Warren corporation, which rightfully belongs to the estate and should be applied to discharge the debts of the estate and should be turned over to the estate for the benefit of its creditors, plaintiff among others. The administrator is a party defendant in the action, and also in his individual capacity; so also are all the persons having any claim upon the subject of the action—the said corporation shares. The court may or may not find it necessary to appoint a receiver, but, should such appointment be made, we can see no such dire result ensuing as appellant predicts; that, upon the court's allowing plaintiff's claim, "the whole scheme would collapse, * * * as the power of the court under section 1504, C. C. P., would thereupon be exhausted, and the receiver would be left stranded with the stock in his possession without having a court to protect him. * * * The court would be without power to make any disposition of the stock to satisfy the claim." Appellant's error is in assuming that the power of the court is limited by section 1504, Code of Civil Procedure. "When a court of equity has once obtained jurisdiction, it will do complete justice by deciding the whole case." Watson v. Sutro, 86 Cal. 500, 528, 24 Pac. 172, 25 Pac. 64; Van Zile on Eq. Pl. & Pr. § 11. Just what course the court may pursue in its disposition of the said corporation shares, after having found that they belong to the estate, need not be anticipated. It may order their sale and the proceeds to be paid to the administrator to be applied to the payment of creditors of the estate (Emmons v. Barton, 109 Cal. 662, 668, 42 Pac. 303; Shiels, Adm'r, v. Nathan, Adm'r, 12 Cal. App. 604, 108 Pac. 34), or it may direct the defendant, administrator of the estate, to take possession of them as property of the estate and dispose of them for the benefit of the creditors of the estate. We fail to see how a receiver, if appointed, is in danger of being "stranded" or the court left with its hands tied, "without power to make any disposition of the stock to satisfy the claim" of plaintiff.

[3-5] We pass to the proposition advanced by appellant, to wit, that plaintiff cannot maintain the action because he has not yet reduced his claim to judgment. It may be conceded at once that the general rule as to a creditor's bill is as claimed by appellant. But, like many other salutary rules, it has its exceptions and, we think, the present case presents an example where other rules, firmly established by the courts, come into play and remove it from the operation of the general rule. Indeed the action cannot strictly be called a creditor's bill; it is an action primarily for an accounting and incidentally to cause property belonging to a deceased partner to be subjected to administration for the benefit of creditors. The case here is that of an administrator who is administering the estate of a deceased partner of a copartnership; he has no power as such administrator to settle the affairs of the partnership; the surviving partners are charged with that duty (Code Civ. Proc. § 1585); averments in the complaint show the necessity for an accounting, a suit in equity (Smith v. Smith, 88 Cal. 572, 26 Pac. 356), and it cannot be effected by an action at law; the third partner, Buckman, has assigned to plaintiff all his interest in any claim against their copartner's estate; it is alleged that there is valuable property belonging to the estate of the deceased partner which the administrator refuses to recognize as such or to include it in his inventory—property which by gift causa mortis deceased caused to be placed in the hands of certain of the defendants—the administrator is one of the transferees of this property claiming an interest in it adversely to plaintiff and other creditors; in the very nature of the situation he cannot as administrator sue himself as such claimant, and assuredly would not, if he could, for he denies all claim of the estate to the property; he in common with his cotransferees, it is alleged, threatens to and will, if not restrained, so dispose of this property as to prevent plaintiff and other of the creditors of the deceased partner from resorting to it for the payment of their claims; that the estate, shorn of this property, is wholly insufficient to meet the demands of creditors; and finally the defendants "are each and all of them financially irresponsible except for said shares of the capital stock of said corporation, and the income and value thereof."

In Case v. Beauregard, 101 U. S. 690, 25 L. Ed. 1004, the court had the rule, contended for by appellant, under consideration. Said the court: "But after all the judgment and fruitless execution are only evidence that his legal remedies have been exhausted, or that he is without remedy at law. They are not the only possible means of proof. The necessity of resort to a court of equity may be made otherwise to appear. Accordingly the rule, though general, is not without many exceptions. Neither law nor equity requires a meaningless form, 'Bona, sed impossibilia non cogit lex.'"

"Where the claim of complaint is purely equitable and such as the chancellor will take cognizance of in the first instance, he will go the entire extent and inquire into obstructions in the road of enforcing the demand, and the complainant therefore, when he goes into equity to assert and liquidate his claim, may, in addition to the assertion of his claim, ask relief against the fraudulent acts of the debtor in attempting to place his estate beyond the reach of creditors." 5 Ency. Pl. & Pr. p. 463. The rule "is not so strict as to deny to a party the interposition of the equity power of the court when the situation is such as to render impossible the aid of a court of law in taking the preliminary steps ordinarily treated as a condition precedent to the application for equitable relief." 20 Cyc. pp. 692, 701.

The superior court, sitting in probate, cannot go into an accounting of the copartnership nor determine the ownership of the shares of the Warren corporation, for as yet they form no part of the estate, and the administrator refuses to take the steps necessary to determine their ownership. The equity court alone can and will afford relief where the powers of the probate court are inadequate to do justice. 1 Woerner Am. Law of Adm. (2d Ed.) *p. 356. Plaintiff should not be required to resort to a court at law where he could obtain no remedy. In Emmons v. Barton, 109 Cal. 662, 42 Pac. 303, it was held that "ordinarily an action to recover property fraudulently conveyed by a decedent in his lifetime should be brought by his executor or administrator, and such an action by a creditor will not lie unless he shows that he has exhausted all means to procure such an action to be brought by the proper person, but, where the alleged grantee is the executrix, a suit in equity will lie in favor of the creditor to set aside the fraudulent conveyance." Syllabus. Appellant distinguishes this case from the one here because in the case cited the creditor had an allowed claim against the estate. But plaintiff did all he could to secure the allowance of his claim, and it was rejected. The administrator here is one of the grantees of the property in question. We do not think, under the circumstances here appearing, that plaintiff was called upon to do more than he did to entitle him to bring the action, which is in fact the only adequate remedy available to him. It was held in the Emmons, Case, supra, that sections 1589 and 1590, Code of Civil Procedure, which provide for the commencement of actions by the administrator or executor, in cases such as this, do not furnish the only remedy. Said the court: "There may be cases in which the statutory proceedings would not afford an adequate remedy—'exceptional cases in which it appears that equity must be invoked because legal remedies are unavailing.' Herrlich v. Kauffman, 99 Cal. 271 [33 Pac. 857, 37 Am. St. Rep. 50]. In such case the Code provisions may be departed from, for it is the province of equity to relieve where legal remedies fail. * * * A demand upon the appellant to bring the suit would have been fruitless."

The facts, in our opinion, warranted the issuing of the injunction. By no other means could the property have been preserved to await the result of the accounting. Code Civ. Proc. § 526; Civ. Code, § 3422; 3 Pomerooy, Eq. Juris. [1st Ed.] § 1339. Where an injunction is justifiable, the issuing of the writ is, in a large degree, a matter of discretion, "and should be exercised in favor of the party most likely to be injured." Paige v. Akins, 112 Cal. 401, 412, 44 Pac. 666. The order is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

18 Cal. App. 668

OLSON, MAHONEY LUMBER CO. v. MAXWELL et al. (Civ. 954.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California, April 8, 1912.)

1. WITNESSES (§ 240*)—EXAMINATION—LEADING QUESTIONS.

The allowance of leading questions rests largely in the discretion of the trial court, and it is not such an abuse of discretion to allow a leading question, which only calls for cumulative evidence, as to require a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 795, 837-839, 841-845, 849-851; Dec. Dig. § 240.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 163*)—NONSUIT—GROUNDS.

A defendant's motion for nonsuit is properly overruled, where no grounds were stated in support thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 371; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 111*)—RIGHT TO LIEN—ABANDONMENT OF WORK.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, providing that, where a contractor abandons the work, the sum available to the liens of mechanics and materialmen is the difference between the value of the work done and payments made in accordance with the contract, a builder is not entitled to any deduction for sums advanced to the contractor, although not yet due him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 144-146; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by the Olson, Mahoney Lumber Company against William Maxwell and others. From an order granting defendants a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Order reversed.

Henry A. Jacobs, James M. Oliver, and C. W. Lynch, for appellant. T. J. Crowley, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. This action was instituted to foreclose a mechanic's lien for a balance due plaintiff for lumber delivered to the defendant Union Construction Company, to be used, and which was actually used, in the construction of a certain building which was erected upon a lot of land in the city and county of San Francisco belonging to the defendant Henrietta Steinegger. The defendants Peter B. McDonough and Thomas McDonough were copartners, doing business under the firm name of McDonough Bros. They were the lessees of the land, and the contract for the erection of the building was between them and the defendant Union Construction Company. Judgment was rendered and entered foreclosing plaintiff's lien in the sum of $1,418.61 upon the interest of the McDonough Bros. in the premises and building in question. A personal judgment for the same amount was also entered in favor of the plaintiff and against the individual members of the defendant the Union Construction Company. The defendant Henrietta Steinegger, the owner of the land, posted a notice prior to the commencement of the work that she would not be responsible for the erection of the building, and as a consequence no judgment was rendered against her. The trial court, upon motion of the defendants McDonough Bros., granted a new trial as to them. Alleged errors of law occurring during the trial, the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision, and that the decision was contrary to the evidence and the law, were the grounds urged for a new trial. From the order granting a new trial, which was general in its terms, the plaintiff has appealed upon a record composed of the pleadings in the case which were used and referred to upon the hearing of the motion, and a bill of exceptions likewise used upon the hearing of the motion, which purports to contain the proceedings and the evidence had at the trial, and in addition sets out in full the findings of fact, the conclusions of law, and the judgment based thereon, which was originally rendered and entered against the defendants McDonough Bros.

[1] It is not disputed that the order granting a new trial must be sustained if it can be justified on any of the grounds which form the basis of the motion for a new trial; but appellant in support of the appeal claims that the record does not show the existence of a single valid ground upon which the order granting a new trial can be supported. This contention, we think, must be sustained.

The first ground of defendants' motion for a new trial involves alleged errors of law occurring during the trial, and in support thereof numerous rulings of the trial court were assigned by the defendants as error in the statement used upon the hearing of the motion. Here, however, but three rulings of the court in the admission of evidence are relied upon by the defendants to justify the order granting a new trial. The first relates to the testimony of the secretary and yard foreman of the plaintiff, who, was called and sworn as a witness for the purpose of showing that the lumber ordered from the plaintiff had been delivered at the place where the building was being erected. One question, among many others, asked this witness was objected to upon the ground that it was leading and argumentative and called for incompetent evidence. The question undoubtedly suggested the answer desired, and the objection might have been properly sustained upon this ground alone. The question was not argumentative; but, in addition to being leading, it was ambiguous. The answer of the witness, however, was equally ambiguous, and had but slight, if any, tendency to establish the fact sought to be shown by the question. Moreover, the witness had been previously fully examined upon the subject of the delivery of the lumber, and even if he had answered the question as counsel for the plaintiff desired, his testimony would have been merely cumulative of that already given. Ordinarily, objections to leading questions should be sustained; but it is the established rule in this state that the allowance of such questions rests largely in the discretion of the trial court, and that a new trial will not be ordered merely because leading questions were permitted over objection, unless it plainly appears that in so doing the trial court abused its discretion. In the present case we find no abuse of discretion in permitting the question complained of to be answered. The mere fact that the evidence sought to be elicited by the question was negative in its nature did not make it incompetent.

With reference to the two remaining assignments of error in the rulings of the trial court, it appears, that the witness under examination was unable to answer one of the questions objected to; and as to the other question there is some confusion in the record, as to whether or not it was ever answered; but assuming that it was answered, the question called for relevant, material, and competent testimony, and the objection therefore was properly overruled.

[2] The trial court did not err in denying defendants' motion for a nonsuit. No grounds were stated in support of the motion, and for that reason, if for no other, a nonsuit was properly denied. The claim of counsel for defendants that he was not given an opportunity to state the grounds of the motion cannot be maintained in the face of the record, which shows that counsel "did not take the pains to trespass upon the court's time to state the grounds of the motion." Aside from this, plaintiff had introduced sufficient evidence to make out at least a prima facie case; and it would therefore have been error to have granted a nonsuit. Upon an examination of the entire record, we do not find that the court, in its rulings upon the rejection or admission of evidence, or otherwise, erred to the prejudice of the defendants, and therefore the order granting a new trial cannot be justified upon the ground that the record shows errors of law occurring during the trial.

[3] Passing from the alleged errors of law to a consideration of the second ground of the motion for a new trial, viz., that the findings are contrary to and not supported by the evidence, the record shows without conflict the following facts: The contract price was $9,100, payable in four installments, the first, second, and third each in the sum of $2,200, and the final in the sum of $2,500. The first installment, $2,200, was paid strictly in accordance with the contract. The second installment, $2,200, was not due when the contract was abandoned. In other words, at the time the contractor abandoned the contract, the work had not progressed to the point at which, under the terms of the contract, the second installment was payable. Nevertheless the owner had from time to time made payments to the contractor in such sums that, when the contract was abandoned, the sum of $2,200 had been prematurely paid to the contractor. This made a total of $4,400 paid to the contractor before the abandonment of the contract, of which sum, as above indicated, $2,200 was not yet due when the contract was abandoned. The work under the contract had not advanced to the point when the second installment of $2,200 was payable. No notice under section 1184, Code of Civil Procedure, to withhold the second payment, was ever served upon McDonough Bros. by the plaintiff, or by any other person who had supplied labor or materials to the original contractor.

The court found the value of the work done and materials furnished at the time of the abandonment of the contract by the contractor, including the materials then actually delivered and on the ground, estimated as near as may be by the standard of the whole contract price, to be the sum of $3,640. The court also found that there had been paid to the original contractor pursuant to and under the terms of the contract the sum of $2,200, and no more.

As a corollary of the two foregoing findings, the court found that there remained in the hands of the respondents the sum of $1,440 unpaid under the terms of the contract, and held the same to be applicable to the payment of appellant's lien. In other words, the court refused to give to the owner any credit against the ascertained value ($3,640) of the labor done and materials furnished up to the time of the abandonment of the contract, for the sum of $2,200 confessedly prematurely paid and not yet due or earned at the time of the abandonment of the contract.

It is contended by the respondents that in so doing the court erred; that, as no notice had been served on the owner to withhold any payment, such owner upon the abandonment of the contract was entitled to credit for any payment in fact made, whether due or not, at the time of the abandonment. It is upon this theory that respondents mainly rely to justify the action of the court in granting a new trial. The order granting the new trial cannot be sustained upon this theory.

When the contractor abandons the contract before completion of the work, the measure of the liability of the owner to laborers and materialmen is fixed by section 1200, Code of Civil Procedure, as it existed when this case was tried. Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires, 154 Cal. 111, 97 Pac. 152; McDonald v. Hayes, 132 Cal. 491, 64 Pac. 850; Golden Gate L. Co. v. Sahrbacher, 105 Cal. 114, 38 Pac. 635. In accordance with this section, the court found the value of the labor done and the materials furnished, including the materials actually delivered and on the ground, at the time of the abandonment of the contract, estimated as near as may be by the standard of the contract price, to be $3,640. By the terms of the law there should be deducted from this sum "the payments then due and actually paid, according to the terms of the contract and the provisions of section one thousand one hundred and eighty-three and one thousand one hundred and eighty-four, and the remainder shall be deemed the portion of the contract price applicable to such liens." The only deductions that can be made are for payments then due and actually paid. The sum thus ascertained is available for the payment of the liens of mechanics and materialmen, and is the only fund so available. Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires, supra.

In the case at bar the only payment that had become due before the contract was abandoned was the first payment of $2,200, and for this the court gave the owner due credit. Although the amount of the second installment had been paid to the contractor before the abandonment of the contract, it had not become due, and never did become due to the contractor, according to the terms of the contract, or at all. The work not having been performed by the contractor up to the point when the second installment was payable, no part of it ever did become due under the contract.

In the case of an abandonment of the contract, the law fixes as the basis of the liability of the owner to workmen and materialmen the value of the labor done and materials furnished estimated according to the standard of the contract price, and from this there can be deducted only such sums as are "then due and actually paid." No deduction can be made for sums then due and not actually paid, and no deduction can be made for sums actually paid but not then due.

We have been cited to the case of Sweeney v. Meyer, 124 Cal. 512, 57 Pac. 479, and the concurring opinion of Justice Shaw in Valley Lumber Co. v. Struck, 146 Cal. 272, 80 Pac. 405, as to the effect of want of notice to the owner to withhold payments. We do not think that either case controls the decision of the case at bar. In neither of the cases above mentioned was the court dealing with the case of an abandoned contract. Such a case is, as we have shown, governed by the provisions of section 1200, Code of Civil Procedure. Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires, supra. Whatever was said in the opinion of Mr. Justice Shaw in Valley Lumber Co. v. Struck, supra, as to the effect of failure to give notice to withhold a progress payment made before it becomes due, has no reference to a payment which, although made, never did become due because of abandonment of the contract. Under the law as we understand it, if an owner chooses to make payments to the contractor before they become due, he takes the risk either that he may be served with timely notice to withhold such payments, or that the contractor may abandon the contract before such payments become due—in either of which cases it is clear that the owner can have no credit for such premature payments as against lien claimants.

Inasmuch as the second payment of $2,200 had not become due before the contract was abandoned, the court correctly found that $2,200 and no more had been paid under the terms of the contract, and that there remained unpaid in the hands of the owner the sum of $1,440.

The order of the court granting a new trial cannot, therefore, be supported upon the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings attacked. No other finding was proper under the conceded facts and the law as we believe it to be.

This disposes of all the points relied on, as we understand the record, in support of the order granting the new trial.

The order is reversed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

18 Cal. App. 642

ELLIOTT v. HUDSON et al. (Civ. 917.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 4, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 1, 1912.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 150*)—RECORD—EFFECT AS NOTICE.

Although there is no provision of the Civil Code expressly providing that the record of a chattel mortgage shall constitute constructive notice, yet, under section 2963, providing for their recordation with like effect as grants of real property so long as the mortgaged property remains personal property, and is not removed from the county where the mortgage is recorded, the record is notice to all the world, and the mortgagee is protected in his lien against subsequent purchasers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 246–252; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

2. FIXTURES (§ 19*)—MORTGAGEE OF LAND AND CHATTEL MORTGAGEE.

The record of a chattel mortgage on personal property, which has been affixed to the land so as to become a part thereof, although it is of such a character that for practical purposes it was necessary to so affix it, is not constructive notice to a subsequent real estate mortgagee of the claim of the chattel mortgagee, since, being a record separate from the real estate records, it is constructive notice that the mortgages recorded therein cover only personal property and do not affect the title to real estate, and hence the subsequent real estate mortgage takes priority over the chattel mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fixtures, Cent. Dig. §§ 42, 43; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

3. MORTGAGES (§ 473*)—FORECLOSURE—RECEIVERSHIP—DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY BY RECEIVER.

After a foreclosure of a mortgage given by a corporation, a settlement was made between the corporation and its creditors by which it assigned its property to a trustee for the benefit of the creditors, the creditors also assigning their claims. The mortgagee assigned his claim under his deficiency judgment, but reserving any rights which he might have to the rents and profits collected by the receiver in the foreclosure suit, as purchaser of the mortgaged premises, and he testified that the deficiency judgment had been settled, and that he had no deficiency judgment against any one. Held, that the mortgagee had no right to the rents, issues, and profits by virtue of his deficiency judgment; his only claim thereto being as purchaser of the premises.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1384; Dec. Dig. § 473.*]

4. JUDGMENT (§ 670*)—As BAR TO NEW ACTION—IDENTITY OF PARTIES.

A judgment in favor of a receiver in his individual capacity is not a bar to an action against him in his representative capacity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1185; Dec. Dig. § 670.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by M. B. Elliott against Elbert Hudson, receiver of the Lakeport Mill & Lumber Company, and another. From a judgment for defendants and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Modified.

Rehearing denied by Supreme Court, 124 Pac. 108.

J. E. Pemberton and Preston & Preston, for appellant. C. M. Crawford and Mannon & Mannon, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. In appellant's opening brief he states that but two questions are presented:

"(1) Is a chattel mortgage regularly executed and recorded, covering property allowed by statute to be chattel mortgaged, and that still remains in the county, defeated by a real estate mortgage, subsequently executed upon property to which the chattels had become attached, the chattels being of such character as to be worthless, unless attached to real estate?

"(2) In a foreclosure case where the rents, issues, and profits are mortgaged and foreclosed, and a receiver appointed, but where there is no deficiency judgment, can the purchaser at foreclosure sale claim rents, issues and profits, by virtue of his purchase, that were collected prior to foreclosure?"

Defendant Hudson paid into court the funds held by him as receiver, and was dismissed from the action, and defendant Rice was substituted in his place. Judgment passed that plaintiff take nothing by his action, and that defendant Rice recover judgment for $458.63, being the amount of money turned over by the receiver. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. The action is for the recovery of possession or the value of certain planing mill machinery, namely, a steam engine and boiler and certain mill machinery which plaintiff claimed were the subject of a chattel mortgage executed to him by C. E. and P. M. Beach on April 29, 1905, recorded as a chattel mortgage May 23, 1905. Beach Bros. installed the property on a certain lot in the town of Lakeport. Subsequently they formed a corporation known as the Lakeport Mill & Lumber Company, the Beaches being the principal, but not all the, stockholders therein, and removed the property in question to another lot in the town, across the street from where it was first used. The title to the lot to which the property was removed stood in the name of the corporation. On February 27, 1907, after the said machinery had been installed on this other lot, the corporation mortgaged the premises to defendant Rice to secure the payment of certain money loaned to the corporation by Rice, and April 23, 1907, the corporation made a second mortgage to defendant Rice to secure a further loan of money, and on May 20, 1907, a mortgage was made by the corporation to replace the first of the above mortgages to correct some informality or defect therein. These mortgages were duly recorded shortly after their execution. The court, on sufficient evidence, made the following finding: "That at the date of each of the said mortgages all the personal property set forth and described in paragraph 6 of plaintiff's complaint herein was firmly affixed and attached to the real property described in and covered by each of said mortgages in such manner that it became and was a part of said real property and was covered and mortgaged by each of said mortgages, and was included in and covered by the judgment and decree of foreclosure and sale and the sale thereunder as hereinbefore set forth."

Defendant Rice testified that, when he took his mortgages, he was shown the property by one of the Beaches as it then stood with the machinery affixed to the land, as the property to be mortgaged; that he had no knowledge or notice or information that there was a chattel mortgage on the machinery, and that he understood he was getting, as security for his loan, the property as it then appeared with the affixed machinery. There were some loose tools to which he makes no claim, but we do not understand that any point arises as to these. The only notice or knowledge he had of the chattel mortgage was such constructive notice as was imparted by its recordation. Hence arises the first question presented by appellant. "Grants, absolute in terms, are to be recorded in one set of books, and mortgages in another." Civ. Code, § 1171. "Except as it is otherwise in this article provided, mortgages of personal property may be * * * recorded in like manner and with like effect as grants or (of) real property; but they must be recorded in books kept for personal mortgages exclusively." Id. § 2963. "A mortgage of personal property is void as against creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers of the property in good faith and for value; unless: * * * (2) It is acknowledged or proved, certified, and recorded in like manner as grants of real property." Id. § 2957. Instruments affecting the title to real property duly executed, acknowledged and recorded impart notice of their contents (Id. §§ 1207, 1213), and an "unrecorded instrument is valid between the parties thereto and those who have notice thereof" (Id. § 1217).

[1] There seems to be no provision of the Code expressly making the recordation of a chattel mortgage constructive notice of its contents. Constructive notice is that "which is imputed by law" (Id. § 18), and "every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact, has constructive notice of the fact itself in all cases in which by prosecuting such inquiries he might have learned the fact" (Id. § 19). Section 2963, Civil Code, supra, gives the recordation of a mortgage of personal property like effect with that of grants of real property, and without doubt persons about to purchase personal property which is the subject of a chattel mortgage would be charged with constructive notice of a recorded mortgage of such property if it were not at the time part of realty.

The statute enumerates certain classes or kinds of personal property, and prescribes the conditions on which it may be made the subject of lien by chattel mortgage. So long as it remains personal property, and is not removed from the county where the mortgage is recorded, the mortgage is notice to all the world, and the mortgagee is protected in his lien as against subsequent purchasers from the mortgagor, for they are charged with notice of the mortgage.

[2] But when this same property has been permanently affixed by the mortgagor to land, and its character has been changed from personalty to realty, a different situation arises. As between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, the lien might not be thus defeated. But that is not the case here. Appellant claims that because the personal property in the present case was such as required it, for practical purposes, to be affixed to land, this fact alone was sufficient to put the respondent on inquiry, and made the chattel mortgage constructive notice to him. We cannot give this fact such compelling force. We think that the purchaser of a town lot on which, at the time, there is a building containing a planing mill plant in operation, with its machinery, engines, and boilers and other equipment permanently attached to the land, would have the right to assume that he was purchasing real property regardless of the fact that this equipment was necessarily personal property before it was attached to and became part of the land. The question here must be solved in the light of the facts. Had respondent searched the records of deeds, as was his duty, he would have found, what is conceded, that title to the lot was in the corporation, and nothing more. As he was purchasing from the corporation, had he searched the records of chattel mortgages for the name of the corporation as mortgagor, he would not have discovered the mortgage, for it was not made by the corporation. The statute, as we have seen, requires mortgages of personal property to be separately recorded and in a different book from the record of deeds. The record is constructive notice of transactions authorized to be made matter of record therein but no further. That is to say, the record is constructive notice that the property mortgaged is personal property falling within the class made the subject of chattel mortgage.

In Watkins v. Wilhoit, 104 Cal. 395, 38 Pac. 53, an assignment was made for the benefit of creditors of all the assignor's real and personal property, and was filed for record and recorded in a book entitled "Book G Miscellaneous." A creditor of the assignor subsequently obtained judgment against the assignor, and his contention in the case was that, being a nonconsenting creditor, and the assignment having included real property, it was void as to him because it was not recorded in accordance with the provisions of article 4 of the Civil Code (sections 1213-1217 and section 3466). Speaking through Chief Justice Beatty, the court said: "The whole object of article 4 of the chapter on recording transfers is to prescribe the effect of failing to record upon subsequent purchasers or mortgagees. An assignment of real property for the benefit of creditors ought to be subject to these provisions as much as any other transfer of real property, because it is as much within the policy of the statute as any other transfer of such property. Subsequent purchasers and mortgagees are entitled to the same notice in one case as in the other, and have a right to rely on the same means of knowledge as to the true state of the title when parting with value on the faith of the apparent ownership. But with respect to the creditors of the assignor who do not part with anything the case is totally different and they are not within the policy of these provisions. A transfer may be valid as to them although void as to subsequent purchasers in good faith for value." It is then shown that assignments for the benefit of creditors are not required to be recorded as prescribed in chapter 4, supra, but in accordance with sections 3463 and 3464 of the Civil Code. Thus an assignment of real property for the benefit of creditors is not notice to mortgagees of such property by virtue alone of its being recorded as prescribed by the statute although it is notice as to creditors. Said the court: "To determine what will give such constructive notice [i. e., notice of the transfer of real property] we look to section 1213 et seq. of the Civil Code, but to determine what is recording without reference to the question of notice to subsequent purchasers, we look to section 1170 of the Civil Code," which requires only that the instrument, duly acknowledged, be "deposited in the recorder's office, with the proper officer."

If it be true, as said in the opinion, that "to determine what will give constructive notice" of the transfer of real property "we look to section 1213, et seq., of the Civil Code"—i. e., to the sections embraced in article 4—it must follow that the purchaser need look no further unless, as in the cases of mortgages of real property, which are “conveyances” (sec. 1215), some statute requires it, and we have no such statute. In speaking of sections 1170 and 1213, the court said, in Cady v. Purser, 131 Cal. 552, 556, 63 Pac. 844, 845 (82 Am. St. Rep. 391): “Each must be construed with reference to the purposes for which it was enacted.” That is, a conveyance of real property is deemed to be recorded where it complies with the provisions of section 1213. And, so of a chattel mortgage; and, when the statute says, as in section 2963, Civil Code, that mortgages of personal property may be acknowledged and recorded “in like manner and with like effect as grants of real property,” it means that the chattel mortgage is constructive notice of what it contains, and cannot be regarded as notice in any wise affecting the title to real property. Possession by the mortgagee of mortgaged personal property is not essential to the validity of his mortgage. In examining the record for prior incumbrances, must he look to the record of deeds of realty? We think not. And, if he looked, what would he find but evidence of the transfer of land and its improvements undescribed? Conversely, the purchaser of land need not look to the record of chattel mortgages.

Chattel mortgages are to be distinguished from conditional sales where title remains in the seller until the article is paid for. Mr. Jones gives considerable attention to the subject. Pointing out that there is some conflict of authority, he says: “The better opinion is that a purchaser of the realty is bound only to take notice of the record title of the realty, and is not in any way bound to examine the records of chattel mortgages, for he is not affected by the record of a chattel mortgage, upon fixtures of such realty.” Jones on Chattel Mortgages, § 134. In Pierce v. George, 108 Mass. 78, 11 Am. Rep. 310, the owner of a machine shop gave a chattel mortgage on the machinery therein, before it was set up, but in contemplation that it should be set up and attached to the building. He afterwards, and after it was set up, gave a mortgage on the land and building. Held, that the second mortgagee could hold the machinery against the first mortgagee (syllabus). Brennan v. Whitaker, 15 Ohio St. 446; Case Mfg. Co. v. Garven, 45 Ohio St. 289, 13 N. E. 493; Rowland v. West, 62 Hun, 583, 17 N. Y. Supp. 330. Mr. Bronson, in his work on Fixtures, at section 70a, says: “Constructive notice is not given to a mortgagee of the realty in respect to an existing chattel mortgage upon articles attached to the realty by filing and recording the same as a chattel mortgage, for a purchaser or mortgagee of real estate need only inquire for liens on real estate. The record of a chattel mortgage is constructive notice only of an incumbrance on chattels.”

The case of Tibbetts v. Moore, 23 Cal. 208, relied on by appellant, was a case where the mortgagor mortgaged a quartz mill. He afterwards purchased a steam engine and boiler and gave a chattel mortgage thereon, and so placed the machinery in the quartz mill that it became a part of the realty. It was held that the chattel mortgage took priority. The court seems to have placed its decision on the fact that the mortgage on the quartz mill was recorded before the boiler and engine were attached to the mill and formed no part of the security then looked to by the mortgagee. It further appeared as of some apparent consequence, for the court said: “Both mortgages are executed and recorded as chattel mortgages under the statute; and, treating them in that character, there can be no doubt that the Lombard mortgage (the chattel mortgage) has priority over the other so far as relates to the property included in it.”

Our conclusion is that the trial court was justified in finding that defendant Rice's mortgage took priority over plaintiff's chattel mortgage.

The rule may work hardship in some cases, but when we consider the numerous classes and kinds of personal property which, by the statute, are made the subject of chattel mortgage and the difficulty that may arise in many cases in identifying the personal property purported to be mortgaged as the same as has been affixed as part of the realty, there would seem to be much to commend the rule as Mr. Jones states it. In Brennan v. Whitaker, supra, the court said: “It devolved upon the chattel mortgagee who sought to change the legal character of the chattels after they were annexed to the realty either to pursue the mode provided by law for incumbering the kind of estate to which it appeared to the world to belong, and for giving notice of such incumbrance, or otherwise, to take the risk of a loss in case it should be sold and conveyed as a part of the real estate of a purchaser without notice.”

[3] 2. It appears from the findings that: Defendant Rice commenced his action to foreclose the mortgages executed by the Lakeport Mill & Lumber Company on October 25, 1907, in which action the Lakeport Mill & Lumber Company, M. B. Elliott, plaintiff in the present action, the Collier Bros., copartners, and George J. Foutch, were defendants. On September 16, 1908, Rice, as plaintiff, recovered judgment, and on January 9, 1908, defendant Hudson was appointed receiver in said foreclosure action. He qualified as such receiver on January 14, 1908, and acted in that capacity until April 18, 1910, and collected the rents, issues, and profits of the mortgaged premises, including the property here in dispute, amounting to the sum of $458.63 after deducting the expenses of his administration as allowed by the court, which said sum is one of the subjects of the present controversy. The court further found that on January 4, 1909, Rice became the purchaser of the mortgaged premises at sheriff's sale; that a deficiency judgment for $528.17 was docketed in his favor which remains unpaid; "that defendant Rice is entitled to have the moneys on deposit in this action applied on account of said deficiency judgment"; that since the commencement of the present action, and on the 2d day of January, 1910, the said Rice "received a sheriff's deed for the whole of the property covered by the two mortgages aforesaid; that thereupon he became the owner in fee and seized in fee, in the possession and entitled to the possession of all of the real property covered by the said two mortgages, including the property described in paragraph 6 of plaintiff's complaint, all of the latter being affixed and attached to and a part of said real property." The court also found as follows: "That the plaintiff herein was at the date of commencement of the said foreclosure action (October 25, 1907) the owner of the unexpired portion of a leasehold estate for two years from and after October 8, 1907, in the real property in the county of Lake, state of California, upon which said personal property was situated, but that said leasehold estate was subject to and subordinate to the liens of the said two mortgages hereinabove referred to, and was foreclosed in the said action brought to foreclose said mortgages." The court also found that in the decree of foreclosure was the following reservation: "All respective adverse claims of plaintiff and of defendant M. B. Elliott in and to the engine, boiler, and machinery described in the answer of said defendant are not determined or adjudicated in this action, or by this decree, but are expressly reserved. But all rights of said defendant Elliott as lessee in and to the lot described in the complaint (exclusive of said boiler, engine, and machinery) are found and adjudged to be subsequent and subject to plaintiff's mortgages, and are foreclosed hereby, while the question whether or not, as between the parties to this action, said boiler, engine, and machinery form part of the realty is also expressly reserved. The rights of said defendants Page B. Collier and William B. Collier, Jr., in and to the part of the premises described in their answer, arising out of any matter prior in date to the execution of plaintiff's mortgages (if any such rights they have), are not adjudicated or determined in this action or by this decree, but are expressly reserved."

It further appeared that on March 5, 1909, a settlement agreement was entered into between the Lakeport Mill & Lumber Company and the Beaches on the one part and the creditors of the said corporation on the other part, whereby the corporation assigned all its property to Herbert V. Keeling as trustee for the benefit of all its creditors.

Among the creditors who assigned their claims was defendant Rice in the amount of $528.17, which is the exact amount of his deficiency judgment in the foreclosure suit. Among other paragraphs in this assignment is the following: "Fourth. That no claim be made by said creditors to the rents of the mortgaged premises heretofore foreclosed in the superior court of the county of Lake, state of California, in the action of D. A. Rice v. Lakeport Mill & Lumber Company et al., and which said rents are now in the hands of, or may hereafter be received by, a receiver heretofore appointed by said superior court, saving and excepting such claim hereto as the said D. A. Rice may have by virtue of his right thereto (thereto?) as the purchaser of said mortgaged premises at the foreclosure sale."

It does not distinctly appear that defendant Rice's claim of $528.17 represented his deficiency judgment, but, as he had no other claim and as the amounts are identical, it is not to be doubted that they are the same, and this seems not to be questioned.

Some controversy has arisen over the meaning of this fourth paragraph of the assignment, respondent claiming that "it was intended by Rice to reserve all his rights to the fund now in the hands of the court, and the trial court, after hearing all of the witnesses and documentary evidence before it, found that said assignment did not prejudice Rice's right in said deficiency judgment." Rice testified as follows: "I purchased this property at a foreclosure sale, * * * and I took a deficiency judgment. * * * Since that time the deficiency judgment has been settled. I signed my rights all away to it. There is no deficiency judgment in my favor against anybody." It seems to us that Mr. Rice took the correct view of his own agreement, and that his deficiency judgment was duly transferred to trustee Keeling. Rice reserved only his rights as purchaser under the foreclosure sale, which are no greater than if a stranger to the action were the purchaser. The trial court adjudged that he was entitled to the funds turned over by the receiver, which represented the rents, issues, and profits of the property—both the lot proper and the disputed personal property—by virtue of his deficiency judgment, and not as a purchaser at the foreclosure sale. In this we think the court was in error. He no longer had any rights as a deficiency judgment creditor, for they passed to the trustee, and what, if any, rights he had to this fund as a purchaser at the foreclosure sale, are not ascertained or found by the court. Whether or not Rice's proportion of the funds as such purchaser can be ascertained from the record, as it now stands, would be difficult to determine, and, if it could be determined, we have no power to make a finding as to the amount.

[4] 3. The record contains a copy of the judgment roll in an action commenced by this plaintiff against Hudson in his individual capacity and defendant Rice. The purpose of that action seems to have been the same as in the present action. The judgment was in favor of defendant Hudson, and a judgment of nonsuit was entered as to Rice, and it is now pleaded in bar. Subsequently the court granted leave to plaintiff to bring the action against Hudson in his capacity of receiver, and that is the present action. We do not think the judgment in the former action was a bar to this action. Hudson individually is not the same person as Hudson receiver. Among other requirements of a judgment pleaded in bar is this—that the action must be between the same parties in the same capacity and the judgment must be “in respect to the matter directly adjudged.” Code Civ. Proc. subd. 2, § 1908; Laguna, etc., Dist. v. Charles Martin Co., 5 Cal. App. 172, 89 Pac. 993; Hughes v. U. S., 4 Wall. 232, 18 L. Ed. 303. That a receiver is not liable in his individual capacity was decided in Tapscott v. Lyon, 103 Cal. 305, 306, 37 Pac. 225.

The judgment is affirmed, except in so far as it adjudges the funds turned over by the receiver to belong to defendant Rice, and, as to such funds, the judgment is reversed and the trial court is directed to ascertain to what portion, if any, of such funds Rice is entitled as purchaser at the foreclosure sale and render judgment accordingly, each party to pay his own costs incurred on this appeal.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

18 Cal. App. 642

ELLIOTT v. HUDSON et al. (S. F. 6,089.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 3, 1912.)

FIXTURES (§ 19*)—RECORDING—EFFECT.

A mortgagee of land is not bound to examine chattel mortgage records to ascertain whether there is any chattel mortgage on fixtures which have been so attached to the land as to become a part thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fixtures, Cent. Dig. §§ 42, 43; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied.

For former opinion, see 124 Pac. 103.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a hearing in this court is denied. We are satisfied with the rule stated in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, to the effect that a purchaser or mortgagee of land need not examine the record of chattel mortgages, so far as it applies to chattels of the character involved in this case. Whether or not the rule applies to all property mortgageable as chattels, growing crops for example, is a question not involved in this case, and upon which we express no opinion.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

18 Cal. App. 683

KINSELL v. THOMAS et al. (Civ. 927.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 16, 1912. On Petition for Rehearing, May 15, 1912. Denied by Supreme Court June 14, 1912.)

1. HOMESTEAD (§ 124*) — CONVEYANCES—VALIDITY.

Neither spouse may alienate or encumber the homestead without the joint act of the other, and an offer so to do is a nullity, and will not be validated by the subsequent dissolution of the marriage or termination of the homestead.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 218, 219; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

2. GIFTS (§ 25*)—PAROL GIFTS OF LAND—VALIDITY.

A parol gift of land, accompanied by possession by the donee and acts by him to carry out the purpose of the gift, is enforceable in equity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. §§ 43-48; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

3. HOMESTEAD (§ 118*)—GIFTS—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to justify a finding that a gift of a homestead was the joint act of the husband and wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 203-209, 216, 217; Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

4. DEEDS (§ 96*)—CONSIDERATION—PRESUMPTIONS.

The amount recited in a deed as the consideration for the conveyance is presumptively the consideration paid, in the absence of rebutting evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 256-260; Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

5. HOMESTEAD (§ 129*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE.

Where a donee of land constituting the homestead of the donor was in the open, notorious, and exclusive possession under a parol gift in which the wife of the donor joined, a subsequent purchaser from the donor was put on inquiry as to the legal or equitable rights of the donee, and he was not a bona fide purchaser without notice, but his title was subject to the rights of the donee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 233, 234; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

On Petition for Rehearing.

6. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 85*)—CONVEYANCES—GIFTS—VALIDITY.

Notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 1242, providing that the homestead of a married person cannot be conveyed unless the conveyance is executed and acknowledged by both husband and wife, a parol gift of the homestead made by a husband and wife will be enforced in equity where the circumstances of the gift are similar to those under which a like gift of real property not a homestead will be enforced, though the homestead cannot be conveyed except by a substantially strict compliance with the statutory methods.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 219-222; Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

7. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 39*)—VERBAL CONTRACTS OF SALE—JURISDICTION OF EQUITY.

Enforcement by equity of verbal contracts for the sale of real estate rests solely on the theory that one entering into a verbal agreement to convey land to another must not be permitted in equity to refuse to execute the agreement and thereby perpetrate a fraud on the rights of the other party, and this rule applies to the transfer of a homestead of a married person notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 1091, providing that an estate in real property can be transferred only by operation of law or by an instrument in writing subscribed by the party disposing of the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 114-119; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

8. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 47*)—PAROL GIFTS OF LAND—VALIDITY.

Where a husband and wife orally agreed to give the homestead to a son on condition that he would establish a home on it, and he accepted the gift on the condition, and purchased a house, removed it to the land, made improvements thereon, and took up his residence there, claiming it as his own for a considerable period prior to the death of the wife and for a greater period before the husband conveyed the land to a third person, and the improvements placed on the land enhanced the value thereof and his claim of ownership was acquiesced in by the husband and wife, equity as against the rights of the third person would protect the title of the son.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. § 132; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Geo. H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Dudley Kinsell against Richard Thomas and another, in which Richard Thomas filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Vance McClymonds, Mastick & Partridge, for appellant. Ross & Ross, for respondents.

HART, J. This action was brought for the purpose of quieting plaintiff's title to a certain piece or parcel of land situated in the town of Spanishtown, in the county of San Mateo.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff is the owner in fee of the real property described in the complaint, and that the defendants claim some estate or interest in said property, which claim "is without right or merit, and said defendants have not, nor has either of them, any right, title, or interest in or to said property, or in or to any part thereof." The answer alleges that the property described in the complaint was a portion of a 20-acre tract of land which, for many years prior to the year of 1904, belonged to the parents of the defendant Richard Thomas, the legal title to said land standing in the name of his father, Joseph S. Thomas; that "for more than four years prior to the year 1904 the defendant Richard resided on said parcel of land with his said parents, and during the last four years of his so residing thereon with his said parents, being then of the age of 21 years and upwards, rendered and performed labor and services for his said parents in the care and cultivation of said parcel of land." The answer further avers that the parents of Richard, desiring to compensate the latter for the services so performed by him, proposed to him that they would give him the piece of land described in the complaint, and "that he might and should erect and place improvements on said last-named parcel of land and thereby increase the value thereof, and have a home for himself thereon, and requested the defendant, Richard to take possession thereof and fence the same and place a house and barn and other buildings thereon, and improve said parcel of land." It is further averred that Richard accepted the proposition thus made to him, and that, with the knowledge and consent and active assistance of his parents, he purchased a dwelling house, which was located on the opposite side of the road from the land in question, moved said house to and on said land, made additions thereto, inclosed said land with a fence, erected a stable thereon, "and filled in said lot with soil and gravel, and very largely increased the value of said parcel of land"; that at the time said land was so given to the defendant Richard the same did not exceed in value the sum of $75, but that, by reason of the improvements made thereon by said Richard, as described, and of additional improvements made thereon by him (such as filling it in, sinking a well and the planting of trees and shrubbery thereon), the said land increased in value from the said sum of $75 to the sum of $1,500 or more, that after the gift of said land under the circumstances thus disclosed the defendant Richard, for a period of more than one year, performed for his parents further and other labor and services, for which he received no compensation otherwise than through the gift of said land.

In the month of June, 1909, so the answer proceeds, the mother of Richard died, and thereafter, for a long period of time, the father of Richard went to the home of the latter and there resided, and was cared for and supported by said Richard without compensation therefor. The answer charges that on the 28th day of June, 1909, the said father of the defendant Richard (Joseph S. Thomas) conveyed the land in controversy to plaintiff, and that the last named "took and accepted said conveyance with full knowledge of all the facts hereinbefore mentioned, and then and there knew that the said defendants were in the actual possession of, and residing upon, and occupying, said land, claiming to own the same under and by reason of said gift thereof by the parents of said defendant Richard to him, said Richard." Upon the special defense thus pleaded, the defendant asks for affirmative relief, praying for a judgment and decree of the court "that plaintiff take nothing in said action; that the title of the defendants to said parcel of land be quieted as against the plaintiff in said action; that the plaintiff be enjoined and restrained from asserting any right, title, or interest therein adverse to the defendants, or either of them," etc. The defendant Richard also filed a cross-complaint, the averments of which are substantially the same as those of the answer, but, in addition to the relief prayed for in the answer, he asks for a judgment "decreeing that said plaintiff holds the legal title to said parcel of land in trust for said defendant and cross-complainant; that said plaintiff be ordered and decreed to make, execute, and deliver to said cross-complainant a good and sufficient conveyance of all of said parcel of land; that in the event said plaintiff shall fail or neglect to so execute a good and sufficient conveyance thereof that a commissioner be appointed by this court to make, execute, and deliver to cross-complainant a deed thereof." The court found the facts as alleged in the answer and the cross-complaint to be true, and rendered judgment accordingly, and therein named the clerk of said court as a commissioner for the purpose of executing a deed conveying a legal title to the disputed land to the defendant, Richard Thomas, in case the plaintiff failed to so execute a conveyance of said land. This appeal is brought here by the plaintiff from said judgment on a bill of exceptions.

The plaintiff claims title to the property described in his complaint by virtue of the deed executed by Joseph S. Thomas, the father of the defendant Richard, on the 28th day of June, 1909, conveying said property to said plaintiff. There was a homestead on all the land of which the parcel in dispute was a part, but the deed from Joseph S. Thomas to the plaintiff was executed after the death of the wife of the grantor.

The sole question presented here is whether the evidence supports the vital findings. The principal contention in this regard is founded upon the proposition that, it appearing that the land of which the property in controversy was a part was, at the time of the alleged gift, impressed with a homestead, executed and filed for record by both the parents of Richard on the 13th day of May, 1879, the evidence neither shows that the defendant's mother joined his father in the alleged gift, nor that the latter, after the death of Richard's mother, made the gift, and that, therefore, the purported transfer is absolutely void.

[1] It will, of course, not be disputed as a well-settled legal proposition in this state that "neither spouse can alienate or incur the homestead without the joint act of the other, and that the effort so to do is a nullity, and will not be validated by a subsequent dissolution of the marriage or termination of the homestead." Lange v. Geiser, 138 Cal. 682, 72 Pac. 343; Gleason v. Spray, 81 Cal. 217, 22 Pac. 551, 15 Am. St. Rep. 47; Powell v. Patison, 100 Cal. 238, 34 Pac. 677; Hart v. Church, 126 Cal. 471, 58 Pac. 910, 59 Pac. 296, 77 Am. St. Rep. 195; Freiernuth v. Steigleman, 130 Cal. 392, 62 Pac. 615, 80 Am. St. Rep. 138; Payne v. Cummings, 146 Cal. 431, 80 Pac. 620, 106 Am. St. Rep. 47.

[2] Nor will the proposition be questioned that a parol gift of real property, under certain circumstances or conditions, will be sustained by courts of equity. In Bakersfield v. Chester, 55 Cal. 102, our Supreme Court concisely states the rule as follows: "A gift of real estate may be made by parol if possession is given and taken under such gift and acts done by the donee to carry out the purpose of the gift." In Anson v. Townsend, 73 Cal. 417, 15 Pac. 49, the court says that "it is, of course, settled law that courts will compel the specific performance of parol contracts for the sale of real property where there has been a part performance of the contract, and parol gifts will be enforced under like circumstances and conditions as parol sales." In Neale v. Neale, 9 Wall. 1, 19 L. Ed. 590, the court says: "Equity protects a parol gift of land equally with a parol agreement to sell it if accompanied by possession, and the donee, induced by a promise to give it, has made valuable improvements on the property, and this is particularly true where the donor stipulates that the expenditure shall be made, and by doing this makes it the consideration or condition of the gift." See, also, Freeman v. Freeman, 43 N. Y. 34, 3 Am. Rep. 657; Burlingame v. Rowland, 77 Cal. 315, 19 Pac. 526, 1 L. R. A. 829; Riggles v. Erney, 154 U. S. 244, 14 Sup. Ct. 1083, 38

L. Ed. 97C; Townsend v. Vanderwerker, 160 U. S. 171, 16 Sup. Ct. 258, 40 L. Ed. 383; Calanchini v. Branstetter, 84 Cal. 253, 24 Pac. 149.

[3] It is manifestly true that, if the evidence in the case at bar does not show that the parents of Richard joined in the gift of the land in dispute to him, then the position of appellant is correct, since the attempted transfer of property upon which there subsists a homestead, selected by the head of the family, by one of the spouses only would be absolutely void. If, on the other hand, the evidence sustains the findings upon which the decree is planted, viz., that the transfer was by the joint act of the parents, then obviously the judgment cannot be disturbed. The only question, then, is whether the evidence supports those findings. We are of the opinion that it does, as we think must be made plainly to appear by an examination of the facts as proved.

The defendant Richard Thomas, in substance, testified that from the time he was 16 years of age up to the time he was given the land in question, and for several years after he had reached his majority, he worked and performed services for his father; that he had a number of conversations with his father and mother in reference to compensation for such services; that they often said to him, "why didn't I build a house to live in"; that, while he was living on the "Cardoza place," where he was farming seven acres of ground, his father asked him "why did I rent a place like that for? I should be home. I said, 'No; I want to be by myself. I have a horse of my own.' He said, 'You need not do that; I will give you that corner,'" referring to the land in question; that he (the father) "would give it to any one of the boys that would build there, because he wanted to have some of the boys along side of him. My father and mother told me to go ahead and do it." After some hesitation, Richard accepted the gift of the land thus proffered by his father and mother, and thereupon bought from a neighbor a house situated near the land, and moved the same to said land. The house was bought by Richard in the presence of his father, and the latter rendered him some assistance in moving it to the land in controversy. Richard thereafter put some improvements on the house, enlarging it by building an addition thereto, erected a barn on the premises, sunk a well and planted trees and shrubbery thereon, and otherwise and generally so improved the place as to bring its value up to a sum exceeding $1,500, or to a sum in excess of $1,400 more than the testimony shows the land to have been valued at when the same was given to him. The witness said that he had had many conversations with his mother concerning the land, both before and after he put the house up. On one occasion he remarked to her that, having had some angry discussion with his father, "I am kind of afraid there will be some trouble about that lot some day," to which she replied: "Don't you fear; that lot is going to be yours as long as you live, and there is no law that is going to take it away from you." The witness, in this connection, declared that "she told me that she had given me the lot." Richard further testified that, after his mother's death, his father came to his home and lived with him; that on one occasion, after his mother's death, his father said to him that the lot was his (Richard's), and that he could "do with it as you have a mind to."

One Antone Davis, an old resident of Half Moon Bay, in the vicinity of which place the land concerned here is situated, testified that both the father and mother of Richard declared to him that they had given the disputed land to Richard.

There was produced in behalf of Richard other testimony, a detailed review of which in this opinion is unnecessary, tending to sustain his claim that the property had been transferred to him by gift by his parents.

The only oral testimony offered by the plaintiff in contradiction to Richard's testimony was that given by his father, Joseph S. Thomas, who testified that, "about a month or two" after the death of his wife, he had a conversation with Richard in which he proposed that the latter buy the land described in the complaint, and that Richard replied that he would buy it. This testimony was rebutted by Richard, who testified that no such conversation as that to which his father testified ever occurred.

As before stated, in our opinion the evidence, of which the foregoing statement contains a fair conspectus, sufficiently sustains the decision of the trial court.

The testimony clearly enough shows that the parents joined in the gift of the property to Richard in consideration of services theretofore rendered by the donee for them and of an agreement on the latter's part that he would build a house on the premises and otherwise improve them, and that Richard performed his part of the convention. The only contradiction to Richard's testimony as to the gift is found in the testimony of his father, who, as we have shown, referred to a conversation occurring after the death of the latter's wife, with Richard, wherein he (Joseph) proposed that Richard buy the property, and that the latter agreed to that proposition. It will be noted in this connection that Joseph does not directly say that he and his wife did not give the land to Richard under the circumstances as detailed by the latter. His testimony, at the most, may be regarded as merely furnishing a rather remote foundation for the inference that the property had not previously been transferred to Richard. But, in any event, the evidenti-any significance of this testimony was a matter for the trial court to determine and its conclusion thereon, as evidenced by its findings, is binding upon us.

It is not disputed that Richard took possession of the property at the time it was given to him, made extensive, and, compared to its value, expensive, improvements thereon and continuously maintained possession and had possession at the time of the pretended conveyance of the land to plaintiff, and, indeed, up to the time of the trial of this action. It further stands as an undisputed fact that the improvements added to the property by Richard and which increased the value thereof from $75 to a sum exceeding $1,500 were made at his own expense or by the expenditure of his own labor and money. The father of Richard was to some extent supported and maintained by Richard at his home after his mother's death without compensation, other than that received through the gift of this land. All these circumstances seem to tend, and no doubt the trial court so viewed them, to corroborate the claim of Richard that the property was jointly given to him by his parents. But, as to the contention that the gift was not jointly made by the parents, we need only to refer to the testimony of Richard wherein he declared that both his father and mother agreed and proposed that the property should be given him, and that, when he accepted the gift and took possession, both acquiesced in it and always thereafter and until the death of his mother and the execution and delivery of the deed to plaintiff by his father treated Richard as the owner of the property. Even after the death of Richard's mother, his father assured him that the property belonged to him (Richard), and thus recognized as valid the joint transfer thereof to Richard by himself and his wife.

But we perceive no necessity for further pursuing a discussion of the facts. It is sufficient to repeat that, upon the whole record, we are persuaded that the trial court was justified in reaching the conclusion, as crystallized in its judgment, that the gift was by the joint act of Joseph S. Thomas and his wife. Moreover, it may be observed that all the equities appear to be with Richard Thomas and against the plaintiff. The consideration for the conveyance to plaintiff and all the circumstances clearly indicate that the plaintiff was not a purchaser in good faith.

[4] There is no evidence in the record rebutting the presumption that the amount recited in the deed as the consideration for the conveyance to plaintiff, viz., the sum of $10, was the sum actually paid by plaintiff to Joseph S. Thomas for the land and its improvements (13 Cyc. 613, and Devlin on Deeds, § 817), and it must, therefore, be assumed that that sum was the amount so paid for the land.

[5] Furthermore, Richard Thomas having been in open, notorious, and exclusive possession of the land at the time of the alleged purchase of the same from and conveyance thereof by Joseph S. Thomas, the plaintiff was, therefore, put upon inquiry as to the legal or equitable rights or both of Richard Thomas, and is presumed to have purchased the land and taken a conveyance thereof from the vendor with full notice of all the legal and equitable rights in the premises of said Richard and in subordination to those rights. Pell v. McElroy, 36 Cal. 271; Scheerer v. Cuddy, 85 Cal. 273, 24 Pac. 713; Security, etc., Co. v. Willamette, etc., Co., 99 Cal. 636, 34 Pac. 321; Stonesifer v. Kilbourn, 122 Cal. 659, 55 Pac. 587; Robinson v. Muir, 151 Cal. 123, 90 Pac. 521; Niles v. Cooper, 98 Minn. 39, 107 N. W. 744, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49; Lowther Co. v. Miller, 53 W. Va. 501, 44 S. E. 433, 97 A. S. R. 1039. As the court says in the Pell Case, supra: "He cannot be regarded as a purchaser in good faith who negligently and willfully closes his eyes to visible pertinent facts, indicating adverse interest in or incumbrances upon the estate he seeks to acquire, and indulges in possibilities or probabilities, and acts upon doubtful presumptions, when, by the exercise of prudent, reasonable diligence, he could fully inform himself of the real facts of the case." The plaintiff here, having purchased land in the possession of a third person, had no right to rest upon the record title alone in making the purchase, but was required to look beyond the record title for the purpose of ascertaining what rights and equities, if any, Richard Thomas, the party in possession at the time of the alleged purchase, had in the premises. Security, etc., Co. v. Willamette, etc., Co., supra. A little inquiry or the exercise of common or ordinary diligence would have readily developed to him, it seems to us, that Richard Thomas either had a valid title to the land, acquired by gift from his parents, or that he was made to believe, and therefore honestly believed, that he owned such a title, and that under such belief he made expensive improvements which, under the circumstances, vested in him an equity in the premises of which he could not wantonly be divested, or of which he could not be deprived without reimbursement or just compensation. Even, therefore, if it be conceded that Richard Thomas did not acquire a title to the land by reason of the failure of one of the spouses to join in the gift, inquiry by the plaintiff would have disclosed circumstances, as certainly such circumstances are shown here, entitling Richard to reimbursement for the improvements he put upon the land as a condition precedent to the right of plaintiff to the equitable relief demanded by his complaint. In other words, having appealed to equity for relief, he could not expect equitable aid without doing or offering to do that equity to which inquiry must have shown him that Richard was entitled.

From every viewpoint, the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

[6] The petition points out that in the original opinion herein we did not directly pass upon the contention, urged by counsel for the plaintiff in their brief, "that a homestead cannot be alienated in any manner whatsoever, except as prescribed by the Code," and that, inasmuch as the Code provides that "the homestead of a married person cannot be conveyed or encumbered unless the instrument by which it is conveyed or encumbered is executed and acknowledged by both husband and wife" (Civ. Code, § 1242), a parol gift of real property upon which the homestead of a married person subsists at the time of such gift is absolutely void, and cannot, therefore, be enforced, notwithstanding that such gift may be the result of the joint act of both spouses for whose benefit such homestead has been declared. While it is true that we did not discuss this precise question in the original opinion, the necessary effect of the decision is that a parol gift of real property by the husband and wife for whose benefit a homestead had been declared thereon and is in existence at the time of such gift may and will be enforced by a court of equity where the circumstances of such gift are similar to those under which a like gift of real property not impressed with a homestead will be so enforced. In our original investigation of the questions presented by this record we conceived the settled rule to be as above stated, and, therefore, regarded a discussion of the point pressed in the petition rather as supererogatory than necessary.

All that counsel say respecting the legal requisites which our Code prescribes shall be observed in order to legally abandon or convey or incur the homestead of a married person must be conceded to be sound. And, as counsel declare, our Supreme Court, in the cases of Matthews v. Davis, 102 Cal. 202, 36 Pac. 358, Hart v. Church, 126 Cal. 471, 58 Pac. 910, 59 Pac. 296, 77 Am. St. Rep. 195, and Freiermuth v. Steigleman, 130 Cal. 392, 62 Pac. 615, 80 Am. St. Rep. 138, has very clearly shown that the homestead of a married person cannot be abandoned, conveyed, or incumbered, except by a substantially strict compliance with the methods prescribed by the statute for the achievement of any of those ends. The absolute soundness of the conclusions arrived at in those cases cannot for a moment be questioned.

But, as we view the proposition now submitted in the case at bar, the question discussed and decided in the cited cases does not arise here. The question here is not whether the parents of Richard Thomas undertook to convey a portion of their homestead without the observance of the legal requisites essential to the conveyance of such right or title to the property involved, but whether the circumstances attending their joint gift of said property to their son are such as to justify a court of equity in denying to them the right to repudiate such gift for any legal as distinguished from equitable reason that might, in an action at law, operate to invalidate such an agreement.

[7] The doctrine that verbal contracts for the sale of land, if part performed by the party seeking the remedy, may be specifically enforced, is an elementary principle in equity jurisprudence and of universal application throughout the American states. Indeed, it had its origin in English chancery law, and merely means, where invoked, the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel to those unconscientious transactions which, though sustainable in law, courts of equity frown upon and will not uphold. In other words, the enforcement by courts of equity of verbal contracts for the sale or conveyance of land does not proceed upon the theory that the statutes requiring contracts for that purpose to be in writing are invalid or should not be strictly adhered to, but solely upon the theory that a party entering into a verbal agreement to convey his land to another should not be permitted in equity to withdraw therefrom or refuse to execute such agreement and to shield such act, if the same be unconscientious and will operate as a fraud upon the rights of the other party, behind the statute. And we have been shown no reason, and we frankly confess that we can conceive of none, why an oral agreement to sell land upon which there subsists at the time of the making of such agreement a homestead of married persons, such agreement having been jointly made by the husband and wife for whose benefit such homestead has been declared, should not as well, when the exigencies of the situation justify it, be subject to the government of equitable principles, appropriate in equity to such agreements, as are such agreements involving real property upon which there is no homestead.

The Legislature obviously conceived and evinced in the statute concerning the transfer generally of real property no less solemnity in the act of conveying such property upon which there is no homestead than in the act of transferring the homestead of a married person, for section 1091 of the Civil Code provides that "an estate in real property other than an estate at will or for a term not exceeding one year can be transferred only by operation of law, or by an instrument in writing, subscribed by the party disposing of the same, or by his agent thereunto authorized by writing." No less or no more is required for the transfer of a homestead of a married person, and if, as is admitted to be true, an oral agreement for the sale of real property not embarrassed by a homestead may, under certain conditions, be enforced in equity, upon what principle or rational course of reasoning may it be held that such an agreement involving property upon which there is a homestead of a married person may not, under similar conditions, likewise be enforced? None can, in our opinion, be suggested.

As stated, equity does not interpose relief as to such agreements upon the theory that the statutory requirement that they shall be committed to writing in order to be enforceable in law is invalid or should not be complied with. On the contrary, equity regards such statutory requirements as of binding force in law; but, acting in personam and operating directly upon the consciences of the parties to such agreements, equity merely says that a party to such an agreement will be estopped from standing on his legal rights in support of his refusal to carry out his part of the agreement where the circumstances, as here, disclose that such conduct on his part would be unconscientious and work a fraud upon the rights of the other party.

[8] As shown in the original opinion, the court found from sufficient evidence that the parents of Richard Thomas agreed to give him the land in controversy upon the condition that he would establish a home upon it; that he accepted the gift upon that condition, in execution of which he purchased a house, removed it to the land, erected a barn on said land, planted it to trees, filled it in with dirt and otherwise improved and equipped it for the purposes of a home; that he took up his residence on the place and there resided claiming it as his own, for a considerable period prior to the death of his mother and for a greater period before his father executed the conveyance of the land to the plaintiff; that his claim of ownership of the land after he had improved it as described at great expense was acquiesced in by his parents up to the time of the death of his mother; that the improvements he put upon the land so enhanced the value of the property that, whereas it was of no greater value than $75 when it was given to him, at the time of the attempted conveyance of it by his father to the plaintiff in consideration of the sum of $10, it was valued at $1,500. To say that upon these facts a court of equity is too impotent to afford relief or that the findings do not show a case for equitable interference and the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel against the claim that the gift is non-enforceable because it involved an attempt, futile in law, to transfer the homestead of the donors, would, in our judgment, be a reproach upon that branch of our system of jurisprudence justly distinguished for the efficacy of its remedial power in those cases which, like this, would, but for such interference, stand as exemplars of the rankest injustice sanctioned only by the unyielding obstinacy of legal rules.

We are unable to agree with counsel for the appellant upon the proposition herein discussed, and a rehearing is therefore denied.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

18 Cal. App. 609

STIERLEN v. STIERLEN et al.
(Civ. 1,019.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 2, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 1, 1912.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 818*)—FOREIGN JUDGMENT—ATTACK.

Where an order by a court of a sister state setting aside a judgment is void for want of jurisdiction, it may be attacked either in a direct or a collateral proceeding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1458-1481; Dec. Dig. § 818.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 386*)—SETTING ASIDE—TIMELY APPLICATION.

Rev. Code 1905, N. D. § 6884, providing that the court may in its discretion, within one year after notice thereof, relieve a party from a judgment taken against him through his "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect," does not apply to proceedings to vacate a judgment alleged to have been procured by "fraud," and courts of general jurisdiction have inherent power to vacate judgments obtained by fraud where application is made within a reasonable time, though not made within the one year provided by this statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 735-744; Dec. Dig. § 386.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 822*)—FOREIGN JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVE EFFECT.

Where a wife applied to have a divorce decree set aside which had been rendered against her in a North Dakota court, and such court decided that she was not guilty of laches in making her application, this decision was conclusive in her subsequent California suit to set aside her husband's marriage with another woman.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1454, 1488-1490, 1496-1500; Dec. Dig. § 822.*]

4. MARRIAGE (§ 60*)—ANNULMENT—LACHES.

Under Civ. Code, § 83, providing that a suit for annulment of a marriage on the ground that the defendant has a former husband or wife living may be brought at any time during their joint lives, a wife's action to annul her husband's marriage with another woman was not barred by laches, though not commenced for nearly seven years after her right to maintain the action was established by the setting aside of a divorce decree obtained by her husband.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Emma Stierlen against George Stierlen and another to annul the marriage of defendants. From judgment for defendants and order refusing new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Hearing in Supreme Court denied (124 Pac. 228).

Frank J. Hennessy, for appellant. F. V. Meyers, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendants, and from an order refusing a new trial, in an action to annul the marriage of the defendants.

In February, 1886, the plaintiff and the defendant George Stierlen were married in San Francisco. There they continuously resided from that time until the month of March, 1896, when George Stierlen left plaintiff, and, after visiting several places, arrived in the state of North Dakota in the following month, where he remained until the following November, when he returned to California and permanently resumed his residence here, having been absent from the state for not more than seven months. While in North Dakota, and in the month of July, he filed in that state a complaint in divorce against the plaintiff herein. Within the time allowed by law she filed an answer, which she subsequently withdrew; and the court, after hearing the evidence introduced on behalf of George Stierlen, on the 17th day of November, 1896, dissolved the marriage. Upon the entry of the decree George Stierlen left the state of North Dakota and returned to California, as above mentioned, where on the 27th day of November, a few days after his arrival here, he married the defendant Rosa Scott. Shortly thereafter he again visited North Dakota, remaining there about six weeks. On the 25th day of September, 1897, Emma Stierlen filed in the North Dakota court a petition to set aside said decree of divorce, whereupon an order to show cause was issued, directing George Stierlen to show cause on October 23, 1897, why the decree of divorce should not be vacated and set aside. The hearing of this motion was continued by consent from time to time until March 14, 1898, when evidence was introduced in support of the motion, which tended to show that George Stierlen was not a bona fide resident of North Dakota, that the decree was obtained on perjured testimony, that Emma Stierlen had a good defense to the action, although her attorney (who was in the employ of her husband) advised her otherwise; that an agreement entered into between herself and her husband setting their property rights, by the terms of which she agreed not to resist the proceeding for a divorce, was the result of false representations as to the merits of her defense and as to her rights, made to her by her attorney and other agents of her husband. Said petition, which was verified, embraced many additional averments of deceit, concealment, and fraud. It may also be mentioned here that at this hearing the court's attention was for the first time called to the fact that George Stierlen in his complaint alleged that he had theretofore, with intent to give his wife a ground for divorce, committed an act of adultery. On March 14, 1898, the said motion was granted, and the decree of divorce annulled. From this order George Stierlen appealed to the Supreme Court of North Dakota, which court on April 18, 1899, dismissed the appeal. Subsequently, on August 19, 1899, the attorneys for George and Emma Stierlen joined in a stipulation dismissing the action. Over three years thereafter, to wit, in January, 1903, Emma Stierlen, represented by a different attorney, brought the present action to have declared null and void the marriage between George Stierlen and Rosa Scott. Other facts pertinent to the appeal will be mentioned in the course of the opinion.

In support of the judgment in the case at bar, and the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, the respondents urge that the order of the court of North Dakota vacating the decree of divorce theretofore rendered by it was and is void, because not made within one year after the moving party in the proceeding to set aside said decree had received notice of the making thereof, and that, therefore, Stierlen's marriage to the plaintiff having been dissolved, there was no impediment to his subsequent marriage to his codefendant, Rosa Scott. The question to be determined by this court then is the validity of the said order vacating said decree of divorce. Section 6884 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of North Dakota was introduced in evidence at the trial of this cause, and the part thereof material to this inquiry reads as follows: "The court * * * may also in its discretion, and upon such terms as may be just, at any time within one year after notice thereof, relieve a party from a judgment * * * taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. * * *" As we have seen, the divorce was granted on November 17, 1896. The petition to set it aside was filed September 25, 1897, and it was set for hearing October 23, 1897, but, owing to continuances by consent of the parties, it was not heard until March 14, 1898, at which time the judgment was set aside. It is the respondents' contention that, the motion not having been submitted for decision within one year after the receipt by plaintiff of notice of the decree, the court lost jurisdiction to make its order setting aside the judgment—citing Sargent v. Kindred, 5 N. D. 474, 67 N. W. 826; Gaar, Scott

& Co. v. Collins et al., 15 N. D. 624, 110 N. W. 81. Other cases to the same effect are Knox v. Clifford, 41 Wis. 458; Nicklin v. Robertson, 28 Or. 278, 42 Pac. 993, 52 Am. St. Rep. 790.

[1] It is doubtless true, as stated by respondents, that where an order, made by a foreign court or by a court of a sister state, setting aside a judgment, is void for want of jurisdiction, it is subject to attack either in a direct or a collateral proceeding. Black on Judgments, §§ 275, 278, 289 and 818.

[2] But whether or not the motion to vacate the judgment came within the terms of section 6884, Code of Civil Procedure of North Dakota is unimportant here, for the reason that it was not claimed that the judgment of the North Dakota court was taken against Emma Stierlen by reason of any of the matters enumerated in that section. The attack upon the judgment was based upon an alleged fraud committed both upon the court rendering it and upon the defendant in the action. Hence that section is not controlling. Black on Judgments, § 297 et seq. In this state a void judgment is not governed by section 473, Code of Civil Procedure—our corresponding section to the North Dakota section above cited. Geo. Frank Co. v. Leopold & Ferron Co., 13 Cal. App. 59, 108 Pac. 878. The rule is the same in North Dakota. Freeman v. Wood, 11 N. D. 1, 88 N. W. 721; Kitzman v. Mfg. Co., 10 N. D. 26, 84 N. W. 585; Martinson v. Marzolf et al., 14 N. D. 301, 103 N. W. 937. There, as in many other states of the Union, the rule is that the power to vacate upon motion a judgment obtained by fraud is inherent in courts of general jurisdiction, and that the same may be exercised after the lapse of the statutory time which limits the entertainment of applications based upon surprise, inadvertence and so forth, provided that such motions are made within a reasonable time.

[3] What is a reasonable time is a matter of sound legal discretion in the court in which the motion is made.

In the present case the North Dakota court held that Emma Stierlen was not guilty of laches in making her application. That interpretation of their law is conclusive upon the courts of this state. McGrew v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 132 Cal. 85, 64 Pac. 103, 84 Am. St. Rep. 20; 1 Black on Judgments, §§ 329, 842, 859, 861; Black on Interpretation of Laws, p. 623.

[4] The question of the plaintiff's laches in not bringing the present action until nearly seven years after the rendition or entry of the decree of divorce was decided against the defendants on the former appeal, when it was held that, under the terms of section 83 of the Civil Code, a suit for annulment of a marriage on the ground that the defendant had a former husband or wife living might be brought at any time during their joint lives. Stierlen v. Stierlen, 6 Cal. App. 420, 92 Pac. 329.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

18 Cal. App. 609

STIERLEN v. STIERLEN et al.
(S. F. No. 5,663.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1912.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Emma Stierlen against George Stierlen and another. The District Court of Appeal for the First District reversed a judgment for defendants (124 Pac. 226), and they apply for a rehearing. Application denied.

Frank J. Hennessey, for appellant. F. V. Meyers, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In denying the application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal for the First District, it is proper to say that the following, quoted from the opinion, namely: "In this state a void judgment is not governed by section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, our corresponding section to the North Dakota section above cited. Geo. Frank Co. v. Leopold & Ferron Co., 13 Cal. App. 59, 108 Pac. 878"—is not necessary to the decision. In so far as this may be construed as applying to any judgment not void on its face, viz., on an inspection of the judgment roll, we doubt its correctness and withhold our approval therefrom.

The application for a hearing in this court is denied.

162 Cal. 722

UNION LUMBER CO. v. MORGAN et al.
KING LUMBER CO. v. WEBSTER et al.
(L. A. 2,897.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1912.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—PROCEEDINGS TO ENFORCE—ITEMIZED STATEMENT OF CLAIM—WAIVER.

Code Civ. Proc. § 454, provides that plaintiff in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien must deliver to the adverse party, after demand, a copy of the account, or be precluded from giving evidence thereof. Defendant made a single written demand for the items of three claims, and after plaintiff had delivered a bill, defendant, without applying for any further account, stipulated on the trial that the materials included in the claims were in fact delivered, and were worth the amounts charged, but reserved objection that no proof could be made for want of a bill of particulars. Held, that defendant had waived his right to assert that plaintiff was precluded from giving evidence on the claims included in his bill of particulars.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 546-554; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 96*)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—MOTION TO STRIKE OUT.

A motion to strike out all the evidence of a witness, on the ground that it was hearsay, was properly denied, where, as to a large part of the testimony, there was no basis whatever for the objection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 248; Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Department 1. Appeals from Superior Court, Kern County; Paul W. Bennett, Judge.

Actions by the Union Lumber Company and by the King Lumber Company against A. E. Morgan, Mary E. Webster, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and, from the judgment and an order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants Mary E. Webster and another appeal. Judgment and order affirmed.

See, also, 15 Cal. App. 165, 113 Pac. 891.

E. L. Foster, for appellants. W. W. Kaye and F. E. Borton, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. These are appeals by defendants Mary E. Webster and Rose E. Janes from a judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial in two actions for the foreclosure of alleged mechanics' liens on certain real property situated in the city of Bakersfield, which were consolidated in the lower court. The claims of liens were for materials furnished one A. E. Morgan, a contractor, to be used by him in the construction of a dwelling house for defendant Mary E. Webster on said land, the contract between him and said Webster being invalid, because, being for an amount exceeding $1,000, it had not been filed in the county recorder's office, as required by law. Said contractor was a party defendant in said actions, defaulted therein, and has not appealed from the judgment. The only relief granted by the judgment, so far as defendants Webster and Janes are concerned, was the making of the amount found due plaintiffs, with costs, a lien upon the property and the building constructed thereon, and the provision for the sale of such property and the application of the proceeds to the payment of such amounts. It is not questioned that the findings of the court to the effect that the defendant Janes, about the time of the making of the contract by defendant Webster with Morgan, transferred all her interest in said property to said Webster are correct, or that, as declared by the judgment, said defendant Janes "has no right, title, or interest in said premises or any part thereof."

1. The complaint of the Union Lumber Company embraced three causes of action, one being for $180.20 for lumber furnished by it to said Morgan to be used in said building, and the other two being upon claims for materials furnished by others and assigned to it. As to the lumber so furnished by plaintiff, the complaint alleged that the same was in fact used by said Morgan in the construction of said building. The trial court found this allegation to be true. It is claimed that this finding is not sufficiently supported by the evidence. We have examined the evidence upon this point. While Morgan's positive testimony on direct examination, to the effect that all of the lumber was used in the construction of the building, was somewhat shaken on cross-examination as to a portion of the materials, we think that there was enough in the testimony to legally support the conclusion of the trial court.

[1] 2. It is claimed that the trial court erred in allowing the plaintiff Union Lumber Company to introduce evidence concerning its second and third causes of action, embracing the claims of its assignors, Gus Schamblin and the Bakersfield Hardware Company, being respectively for the amounts of $236.27 and $49.15, on the ground that said plaintiff had not complied with the demand in writing of defendants for a bill of particulars. See section 454, Code Civ. Proc. It appears from the record that a single written demand for the items of all three claims was served upon said plaintiff in March, 1909, and that in response to this demand a bill of particulars of the claim of the Union Lumber Company was delivered to the attorney for the defendants. Counsel for said company asserted that the bill included the items of the other claims, and counsel for defendants asserted that he never received a statement of such other items. No application was made by defendants' counsel for any further account, and the trial of the action was not commenced until September 16, 1909. It was stipulated on the trial that the materials embraced in both the Schamblin and the Bakersfield Hardware Lumber Company claims were in fact delivered, and were reasonably worth the amounts charged; the only objection reserved being that no proof could be made of the claims for want of service of a bill of particulars.

It is manifest that no injury was suffered by defendants by reason of the failure to furnish a bill of particulars as to these claims, if there was any such failure. Defendants affirmatively stipulated on the trial that the claims were correct. Admittedly plaintiff Union Lumber Company did not refuse to furnish a bill of particulars. It served a bill which, at least, embraced the items of its own account. This bill so served purported to be in answer to defendants' demand. If it was not as complete as defendants desired it to be, or if it was objectionable in any respect, we are of the opinion that defendants waived their right to have the plaintiff precluded from giving evidence thereon by failing to ask for a further account, or to make any objection to the one delivered. See McCarthy v. Tecarte, etc., Co., 110 Cal. 693, 43 Pac. 391; Graham v. Harmon, 84 Cal. 185, 23 Pac. 1097; Silva v. Bair, 141 Cal. 602, 75 Pac. 162.

[2] 3. The motion to strike out all the evidence of Morgan, given on his direct examination, as to the use made of the lumber furnished by the Union Lumber Company, on the ground that the same was hearsay, was properly denied. As to a large portion of such lumber, at least, there was no basis at all for the contention that such testimony was open to any such objection.

4. The only objection made to certain "tags" showing lumber sold by the Union Lumber Company to Morgan was that some of them had been changed and altered. The changes and alterations were explained in a manner satisfactory to the trial court; and we cannot say that the court erred in overruling the objection.

5. We are unable to see wherein the lien of the King Lumber Company was defective. We find no other matter requiring notice.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

(162 Cal. 664)

PACIFIC SASH & DOOR CO. et al. v. BUMILLER et al. (L. A. 2,886.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 24, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1058*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

A refusal to permit defendants, in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, to prove that, after the making of the alterations for which the liens were asserted, the structures were all removed, was harmless, where the same witnesses afterwards testified to the actual date of such removal showing that it was after the liens were filed, and other evidence showed that the building as altered was used for the purposes for which it was intended for a considerable time after the completion of the alterations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4195, 4200-4206; Dec. Dig. § 1058.*]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 26*)—RIGHT TO LIEN—REMOVAL OF IMPROVEMENTS—PERMANENCY OF ATTACHMENT.

Where materials were permanently incorporated into the structure of a building without an agreement for their removal between the landlord and any lessee, and the building in its changed condition was put to the use for which it was intended, the right to a lien for the materials used could not be determined by the subsequent removal of that portion of the building comprising the alterations and its restoration to its original state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 27-29; Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 78*)—RIGHT TO LIEN—OWNER OF PREMISES—PROVISIONS OF LEASE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, which provides that an improvement constructed with the knowledge of the owner shall be deemed to have been constructed at his instance, in the absence of notice within three days after such knowledge that he will not be responsible, posted on the building or land, an owner could not escape liability to materialmen for materials furnished for alterations and repairs, where he did not comply with the statute, though his lease provided that he should not be liable for any alterations or repair made by the lessees, and that no alterations should be made without his written consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 111; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

4. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 45*)—RIGHT TO LIEN—NATURE OF IMPROVEMENTS—MATERIALS INCORPORATED IN WORK.

A mechanic's lien can be asserted for lard oil applied to the threads of joints of pipe used in a structure, insulated or covered electric wire used for drop lights attached thereto, paste for soldering joints, asbestos comprising a part of the electric switchboard, and soapstone used on the inside of pipes as a lubricant to facilitate the pulling of wires through the pipes, as they are materials used in construction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 48; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

5. TIME (§ 9*)—MECHANIC'S LIEN—PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 12, providing that the time in which any act provided for by law is to be done is computed by excluding the first day and including the last unless the last day is a holiday, and section 1190, which provides that a lien will not bind an improvement or structure for a longer period than 90 days after filing, an action begun on June 5, 1908, on a claim of lien filed on March 7, 1908, was in time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Time, Cent. Dig. §§ 11-32; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Sash & Door Company and others against A. W. Bumiller and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin, for appellants. Sheldon Borden, George H. Moore, Wesley H. Beach, and Andrew J. Copp, Jr., for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order denying the defendants' motion for a new trial. The record shows that four separate actions to enforce laborers' and materialmen's liens upon a building were consolidated and tried together, as provided in section 1195, Code of Civil Procedure. The respective plaintiffs were Pacific Sash & Door Company, Woodill-Hulse Electric Company, Union Iron Works of Los Angeles, and E. J. Johnston. The liens were asserted against the property in Los Angeles known as the Bumiller building, owned by A. W. Bumiller, Edna B. Sullivan, and Stella B. Burks. The materials and labor were furnished and performed at the instance of one Floyd Thompson, who at the time occupied the basement and first three floors of the building under a sublease from a lessee of the owners. The materials and labor were furnished and performed in the making of certain alterations in the building so as to adapt the same for use as a theater. It consisted in putting in a balcony, the front part of which was supported by an iron beam extending across the room and fixed in the walls, and the erection of a stage with the necessary fixtures and adjuncts therefor, and other structures not necessary to mention. Prior to the alterations, the first floor, in which the principal part of the alterations was made, was an open storeroom without partitions or interior walls, and with the usual columns and girders to support the building. The owners were aware of the making of the alterations and of the use of the materials and labor therein. They posted no notice disclaiming responsibility, as it is provided in section 1192, Code of Civil Procedure, that they could have done if they had wished their interest in the building to be exempted from any lien therefor.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep't Indexes

[1] 1. The defendants offered to prove that after the alterations had been made the structures composing them were all removed from the building prior to the filing of any liens against it. The court ruled, refusing to allow this evidence. This is assigned as error. The same witness, however, afterwards testified to the actual date of such removal, showing that it was after the liens were filed. The evidence further shows that the building as altered was used as a theater for a considerable time after the alterations were completed. If the ruling upon the question as to the date of removal was error, it is cured by this testimony.

[2] However, we know of no statute or decision declaring that the removal of an alteration to a building, after it is completed and used, destroys the lien which the statute gives to persons furnishing materials or labor for such alteration, even if such removal is made before the filing of the lien. If the materials are actually used in and the work is actually done upon the alteration, and the change made is of such a character that it comes within the terms of the statute giving a lien for alterations upon a building, and it is completed and put to use as altered, we are of the opinion that the lien cannot be defeated by the subsequent removal of that portion of the building comprising the alterations and the restoration of the building to its original state.

[3] 2. The lease between the owners and the original lessee provided that the owners should not be liable or responsible for any alteration or repair made in the building by the lessees, and that no alteration should be made without the written consent of the owners. Defendants claim that this exempts their interest in the property from liability for the liens. We do not so understand the law. Section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides a mode by which the owner may exempt his interest from liability for any alterations made by his lessee or any other person without his consent. This provision is for the benefit of the owner, and he must avail himself of it, or otherwise, according to its terms, his interest will be liable for the lien. No exception is made in favor of owners who have contracts that the lessee shall be responsible for alterations made and that the owner shall not be responsible therefor. Such contracts are good as between the owner and the lessee and serve to fix the liability as between them, but they do not affect the rights of lien claimants. Ah Louis v. Harwood, 140 Cal. 506, 74 Pac. 41; Hines v. Miller, 122 Cal. 521, 55 Pac. 401. If the owner neglects to post a notice, after knowledge that the work of alteration has begun, as provided in section 1192, he is deemed to consent to such alterations.

[4] 3. The claim that some of the materials for which liens were allowed did not enter into or become a part of the structure is not sustained by the facts. Lard oil applied to the threads of joints of pipe used in the structure, insulated or covered electric wire used for drop lights attached thereto, paste for soldering joints, asbestos comprising a part of the electric switchboard, all constitute parts of the structure and a lien may be asserted therefor. Some soapstone was used on the inside of pipes, as a lubricant, to facilitate the pulling of wires through the pipes. This being a part of the work of construction, we think it may also be considered as a part of the material used in construction, for which a lien may be claimed.

[5] 4. The complaints in some of the actions were filed on the ninetieth day after the filing of the claims of lien. For example, Johnston's claim of lien was filed on March 7, 1908, and his action was begun on June 5, 1908. This was within the time fixed by the Code. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1190 and 12; White v. Soto, 82 Cal. 658, 23 Pac. 210.

5. The evidence does not support the claim of the defendants that the alterations made were not a part of the building in question. The description we have already given of the character of the alterations made sufficiently shows that they became a material part of the building. It is true, they were afterwards removed and the building restored to its original condition. But it was no part of the contract with the lessee or sublessee that they should be removed, and, in any event, they were so attached to the building as to become not only fixtures, but a part of the structure of the building itself.

No other points are of sufficient importance to require notice.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

163 Cal. 565

HUSHEON v. KELLEY et al. (S. F. 5,781.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 24, 1912.)

1. ESCROWS (§ 8*)—DELIVERY IN ESCROW—EFFECT.

Where the grantor of land delivered a deed in escrow, which conveyed the estate in fee subject only to a life estate reserved to himself, retaining no power to withdraw it or exercise any control over it, the title immediately vested in the person named as grantee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Escrows, Cent. Dig. §§ 9, 10; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

2. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 63*)—CONVEYANCE OF LAND.

Under Civ. Code, § 1091, providing that an estate in real property other than one at will or a term not exceeding one year, can be transferred only by operation of law or an instrument in writing, a mere oral contract will not transfer title to real property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 83, 97-104; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

3. ESCROWS (§ 8*)—OPERATION—MODIFICATION.

A contract entered into between the grantee and grantor of land, who, by deed delivered in escrow, had conveyed the fee to the grantee, reserving a life estate to himself, whereby the grantee should have immediate possession, a stated rent being reserved, does not destroy or modify the effect of the prior delivery in escrow.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Escrows, Cent. Dig. §§ 9, 10; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 135*)—PERFORMANCE OF DECEDENT'S CONTRACT.

A contract entered into between the grantee and grantor of land who reserving a life estate to himself had conveyed a fee to the grantee, whereby the grantee was given immediate possession of the land on the payment of a reserved rent, is not a personal contract which is abrogated by the death of the grantee; the contract providing that the grantee, his heirs, and executors were to have possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 551-556; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

5. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 6*)—RIGHT TO SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Under Civ. Code, § 3386, providing that neither party to an obligation can be compelled to specifically perform unless the other party has performed or is able to specifically perform, a grantee of land who entered into a contract with the grantor who had reserved a life estate that he should take immediate possession and farm and improve the land, rendering the grantor a reserved rent during his life, is not entitled to specific performance because the grantor could not be granted specific performance; an agreement to farm and improve land not being such as can be specifically enforced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 9-11; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

6. LIFE ESTATES (§ 3*)—GRANT.

Where a grantor of land who had conveyed the fee thereof by a deed delivered in escrow, reserving a life estate to himself, entered into a contract with the grantee, whereby the latter, his heirs, executors, and administrators were to have possession and use of the same during the lifetime of the grantor, on payment of a reserved rent, such contract operates as an immediate grant of a life estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Cent. Dig. §§ 2, 3; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 89*)—RIGHT OF VENDOR TO RESCIND.

As an executed written conveyance of real estate in consideration of the promise by the grantee to perform services cannot be set aside by the grantor on the ground that the grantee's obligation is not such as to be specifically enforceable, an oral conveyance of a life estate, where the case has been taken from out the statute of frauds (Code Civ. Proc. § 1971) by partial performance, cannot be avoided for that reason.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 148, 149, 151, 156; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

8. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 137*)—CONTRACTS RELATING TO LAND—PART PERFORMANCE.

While Code Civ. Proc. § 1971, provides that no interest in real property other than leases for a term not exceeding one year can be created, assigned, or surrendered other than by operation of law, or conveyances or other instrument in writing, an oral conveyance of a life estate, where the grantee has entered on the land and performed the stipulated services and rendered the reserved rent, is without the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 301-326; Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

9. EJECTMENT (§ 116*)—JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT—PROTECTION OF PLAINTIFF.

In a suit for possession of land, where the court had sustained defendant's title and right to possession, finding that the fee had been transferred by a deed delivered in escrow, and that a present life estate had been granted under an oral contract whereby a stipulated rent was reserved, the decree should protect the right of the grantor by provisions for the continued payment of rent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. § 360; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Clifton H. Connick, Judge.

Action by Patrick Husheon against Mrs. J. W. Kelley, in which she intervened as administratrix of the estate of J. W. Kelley. From a judgment for defendant and intervener, and an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. F. Quinn and L. F. Puter, for appellant. Mahan & Mahan, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Patrick Husheon brought this action against Mrs. J. W. Kelley to recover the possession of a tract of land in Humboldt county; the plaintiff alleging that he was the owner of said land and entitled to its possession. The defendant answered and filed a cross-complaint. In the capacity of administratrix of the estate of James W. Kelley, deceased, she also filed a complaint in intervention, in which she set up the same affirmative matter theretofore alleged in the answer and cross-complaint. The nature of these allegations will sufficiently appear from the following summary of the findings, which were in accordance with the pleadings interposed by the defendant and intervener.

The court found these facts: Patrick Husheon was the uncle of James W. Kelley. In 1899 Husheon, who was then the owner of the land in controversy, in consideration of love and affection, made, signed, and acknowledged a grant, bargain, and sale deed, whereby he conveyed said lands to said James W. Kelley. In the following year,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

1900, Husheon delivered said deed to C. H. Boynton, with instructions to hold said deed until his, Husheon's, death, and then to deliver the deed to James W. Kelley. At the time of such delivery to Boynton, Husheon surrendered the absolute control and dominion over the deed, and delivered it to Boynton, without any power to withdraw the deed or exercise any control or dominion over it. Boynton accepted the deed and held it until April, 1906, when Husheon wrongfully and without the consent of Boynton or Kelley obtained possession of the deed and destroyed it.

In 1904 Husheon, who was then 71 years of age and physically weak and infirm, represented to James W. Kelley, his nephew, that the lease then covering the land would expire on January 1, 1905, and that he, Husheon, did not care to again lease said land, but, in consideration of the love and affection he bore toward said Kelley, he desired Kelley, together with his family, consisting of his wife and four children, to go upon said land, and occupy and possess the same during the remainder of the lifetime of said Husheon, and cultivate and improve said land, and pay said Husheon the sum of $500 per year as long as Husheon lived, and, upon the death of said Husheon, the absolute title to said land would, by virtue of said agreement to be entered into and said deed so delivered to Boynton, vest in said James W. Kelley, his heirs, executors, and administrators. Pursuant to said representation, Husheon agreed with said Kelley that if Kelley would enter into the possession and occupancy of said lands on or about January 1, 1905, and farm and conduct the same and improve said land and pay the said Husheon the sum of $500 per year during the lifetime of said Husheon in consideration thereof the said James W. Kelley, his heirs, executors, and administrators were to have the possession of, occupy, use, and enjoy said land, together with the profits thereof, during the lifetime of said Husheon, and on the death of said Husheon the absolute title in fee simple to said lands would vest in said James W. Kelley, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns. Said James W. Kelley accepted said agreement, and in consideration thereof and in accordance therewith he with his family entered into the possession and occupancy of said lands and made extensive permanent and valuable improvements thereon, and at all times until his death fully performed the terms of the agreement on his part to be performed. James W. Kelley died on December 26, 1907. At that date he was in possession of said lands with his wife and children, under and by virtue of said agreement. The heirs of said James W. Kelley have at all times since his death continued in possession and use of said land, and have continued to improve it, and have fully performed all the terms of said agreement on their part to be performed, except that they have not paid the said Husheon the sum of $500 for the year 1909, for the sole reason that said Husheon has at all times since January 1, 1909, refused to accept the said sum of $500, but the heirs of James W. Kelley and his administrator have at various times tendered to said Husheon $500, in accordance with the terms of said agreement. There is a further finding that James W. Kelley, at the time of his death was the owner in fee of the lands in question, "subject to a life estate of Patrick Husheon therein." The court drew conclusions of law as follows: That James W. Kelley at the time of his death was, under and by virtue of the deed delivered to Boynton, the owner in fee of the land, subject to a life estate of Patrick Husheon therein; that James W. Kelley was at the time of his death entitled to the possession of said lands during the lifetime of said Patrick Husheon upon payment to said Husheon during his lifetime of the sum of $500 per year; that Patrick Husheon has no right, title, or interest in or to said lands, except the right to the payment of $500 per year during his life, and, in default of such payment, then to the immediate possession of said lands and to the continued possession thereof during his life; that the plaintiff should be enjoined and debarred from asserting any claim to said land, except the right last stated. It is also declared that the defendant and intervener are entitled to a decree requiring plaintiff to make, sign, and acknowledge a grant, bargain, and sale deed to replace the destroyed deed heretofore deposited with Boynton, and to have such deed deposited in escrow with a bank designated by the court, to be held by said bank upon the terms and conditions governing the original deposit of the deed with Boynton.

Judgment was entered in accordance with these conclusions, and the plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] There is no attack upon the sufficiency of the evidence to support any of the findings, except the one which declares that the title in fee, subject to a life estate in Husheon, belongs to James W. Kelley. The same declaration is also found among the conclusions of law. Whether it be treated as a fact found by the court, or as a legal conclusion drawn from the other facts, we do not doubt that it correctly declares the ownership of the land. It is found, upon evidence whose sufficiency, as we have said, is unchallenged, that in 1900 Husheon deposited in escrow his deed conveying the premises, with instructions to deliver the same, upon his death, to Kelley, the grantee named. He retained no power to withdraw the deed or to exercise any control over it. Since the decision in Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 446, 33 Pac. 338, 35 Am. St. Rep. 186, it has been settled law in this state that a transaction of the kind outlined has the effect of vesting the title immediately in the person named as grantee in the deed, subject only to a life interest in the grantor. Moore v. Trott, 156 Cal. 353, 104 Pac. 578, 134 Am. St. Rep. 131.

[2] The title thus vested in Kelley was not limited or otherwise affected by the agreement made four years later. A mere oral contract cannot operate to transfer title to real property. Civ. Code, § 1091; Cranmer v. Porter, 41 Cal. 462.

[3] Furthermore, the agreement of 1904, fairly construed, was not intended to destroy or modify the effect of the prior delivery in escrow. On the contrary, the later transaction recognized the validity of what had been done, and sought to amplify it by providing for something additional; i. e., the transfer of the right of possession during the grantor's life. The case is, therefore, readily distinguishable from Keyes v. Meyers, 147 Cal. 702, 82 Pac. 304, where the later agreement was in writing, and contained provisions inconsistent with the grantee's present ownership of a remainder or other title in the land.

[4] The only other questions in the case relate to the right of possession, and the solution of these questions depends upon the effect of the agreement of 1904, and of the things occurring after the making of that agreement. We do not think the contract required the performance by James W. Kelley, personally and individually, of the obligations to occupy, farm, and improve the lands within the meaning of the rule that contracts to perform personal acts are discharged by the death or disability of the person who was to perform the acts. 9 Cyc. 631; Spalding v. Rosa, 71 N. Y. 40, 27 Am. Rep. 7. The rule does not apply where the services are of such a character that they may be as well performed by others (Janin v. Browne, 59 Cal. 37), nor where the contract, by its terms, shows that performance by others was contemplated. The ability to comply with the obligation to pay the plaintiff $500 per year was, of course, not limited to Kelley alone. And the framework of the entire agreement evidences an intent that the parties were looking to the occupancy and farming of the lands, not merely by Kelley, but by his family as well. While the agreement was made with Kelley, it seems sufficiently clear that the plaintiff desired to provide a home, not only for his nephew, but for the wife and children of the latter. Some support is afforded this construction by the circumstance that, for several years after Kelley's death, Husheon accepted annual payments of $500, and during this time made no objection to the occupancy of the lands by Kelley's heirs, or to their performance of the obligations assumed by him. We are not to be understood as saying that the occupancy, improvement, and cultivation of the lands could be turned over to strangers, but, merely that the contract would be satisfied if either Kelley or the surviving members of his family executed these functions.

[5] The case, therefore, presents this situation: The defendant is in possession under an oral agreement binding Kelley and his successors to do certain things, which they have done so long as the plaintiff would accept, and are willing to continue to do. If the relief sought by the defendant and intervener, and granted by the decree, is the specific performance of an agreement to execute a lease for the life of the plaintiff, the difficulties in the way of sustaining the granting of such relief are serious, if not insurmountable; for, even though the obligation to farm and improve the land was not personal, in the sense that it could be performed only by J. W. Kelley, yet it might be viewed as such an undertaking as a court of equity would not undertake to specifically enforce. Stanton v. Singleton, 126 Cal. 657, 59 Pac. 146, 47 L. R. A. 334; Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. Occidental Oil Co., 144 Cal. 528, 78 Pac. 25. And, if specific performance could not be decreed against the party seeking such relief, it will not be awarded in his favor. Civ. Code, § 3386; Cooper v. Pena, 21 Cal. 404; O'Brien v. Perry, 130 Cal. 526, 62 Pac. 927. This objection would not apply where the acts whose performance was not the subject of compulsion by equitable decree have been in fact fully performed. Thurber v. Meves, 119 Cal. 35, 50 Pac. 1063, 51 Pac. 536. But here there had been no such full performance. Kelley and his successors were bound to continue performance during plaintiff's life, and, of course, their obligation could not be said to be complete until his death.

[6] But we think the findings, if construed, as they should be, in support of the judgment, do not set forth a case of an executory contract which has to be enforced, but rather one of an oral present transfer of a life interest, in consideration of certain promises upon the part of the grantee. The finding is that it was agreed that, if Kelley would enter into possession of the lands with his family, and do the things agreed upon, said "Kelley, his heirs, executors and administrators were to have the possession of, occupy, use and enjoy said land, together with the profits thereof, during the lifetime of said Husheon." This was an immediate grant of a life estate. No further transfer or conveyance, whether by way of lease or otherwise, seems to have been contemplated.

[7, 8] An executed written conveyance of real estate, in consideration of the promise by the grantee to perform services, cannot be set aside by the grantor on the ground that the obligation of the grantee is not the subject of specific performance. Norris v. Lilly, 147 Cal. 754, 82 Pac. 425, 109 Am. St. Rep. 188.

Where the conveyance is oral, instead of written, the case is not different, if there has been such part performance as to take the case out of the operation of section 1971 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There can be no doubt that the taking of possession by Kelley and the performance by him and his successors of the obligations of payment and improvement of the land were sufficient to overcome the want of a written transfer. It is well settled in this state and elsewhere that "a gift of real estate may be made by parol, if possession is given and taken under such gift, and acts done by the donee to carry out the purpose of the gift." Bakersfield T. H. Ass'n v. Chester, 55 Cal. 98; Manly v. Howlett, 55 Cal. 94; Burlingame v. Rowland, 77 Cal. 315, 19 Pac. 526, 1 L. R. A. 829; Neel v. Neel, 80 Va. 584; Wamsley v. Lincicum, 68 Iowa, 556, 27 N. W. 740. If a grant of the fee may thus be effectively completed by an oral transfer, coupled with a taking of possession and the performance of other acts in reliance upon the grant, undoubtedly a life interest may be similarly transferred. In Manning v. Franklin, 81 Cal. 205, 22 Pac. 550, the court held that the defendant was entitled to retain the possession, which he had taken under an agreement that, if he would erect a house on plaintiff's land, pay certain charges, and care for the plaintiff in sickness, he might occupy said house during the natural life of the plaintiff. The defendant had, until plaintiff brought the action to oust him, complied with the terms of the contract. In answer to the objections that the contract was a lease, and that specific performance could not be enforced, the court said: "This is in no sense a lease of the property, but a sale of a life estate therein. There is no attempt to compel a specific performance of the contract, and therefore the question whether a contract, the consideration of which is personal services could be specifically enforced does not arise." Here we find the essential difference between the case at bar and that of O'Brien v. Perry, supra, where the agreement was that, if the defendant would do certain things, the plaintiff "would give and grant to her the right to live with her said family" upon his premises. This was not a present transfer, but an agreement to make one in the future, and this agreement, under the principles above discussed, could not be specifically enforced.

[9] The court, therefore, properly held that the administratrix and heirs of James W. Kelley were entitled to the possession of the property in controversy. It was further proper for the court, in its decree establishing the right of the respondents, to protect the right of the plaintiff to the continued performance of the obligations which were the consideration for the transfer of his life estate. Neel v. Neel, supra; Wamsley v. Lincicum, supra. It was to this end that the decree provided that the plaintiff was entitled to the payment of $500 per year, payable as agreed, during his life. But in this no regard was had to the agreement on Kelley's part to farm and conduct the lands. The plaintiff is entitled to insist on compliance with this obligation as well as with the agreement to pay $500 per year. This omission may, however, be remedied by a slight modification of the judgment.

It is ordered that the judgment be modified by adding thereto, after the fifth paragraph, the following: "It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, that, if the administratrix or heirs of said James W. Kelley shall, at any time during the lifetime of said Patrick Husheon, fail to occupy, farm, or conduct said lands, said Patrick Husheon shall have the same rights and remedies hereinbefore declared to belong to him upon default in the payment to him of the sum of $500 per year"; and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

The order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

162 Cal. 633

POLLARD et al. v. REBMAN et al.
(L. A. 2,862.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 18, 1912.
Rehearing Denied June 17, 1912.)

1. EASEMENTS (§ 3*)—GRANTS—VALIDITY.

Where an owner of land buys an easement over adjoining land for a way to a public street, the easement becomes at once appurtenant to his land, giving him access to the street over the way.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. EASEMENTS (§ 12*)—GRANTS—VALIDITY.

Under Civ. Code, § 1217, providing that an unrecorded instrument is valid as between the parties thereto, an unrecorded conveyance of an easement for a way to a public street is good as against the grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 35-38, 41; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 233*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE OF EASEMENTS.

Under Civ. Code, § 1214, providing that an unrecorded conveyance is void as against a subsequent purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration, a purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice of an unrecorded conveyance of an easement for a way, or of the use of the way, and without knowledge of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry, takes the land free from the easement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 563-566; Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 229*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE OF EASEMENTS.

Where a way over land to a street is in use and is marked on the land either by effects of the travel over it or by fences, or other points, so that it is plainly visible and its use obvious to one who examines the premises, a purchaser thereof is put on inquiry as to such easement, and he cannot claim as a purchaser without notice, and he takes subject to the way granted under an unrecorded conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 477-494; Dec. Dig. § 229.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 244*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE OF EASEMENTS.

Evidence held to support a finding that a purchaser from a grantor who had previously conveyed by an unrecorded conveyance a right of way over the premises to a public street had no notice of the existence of the way or knowledge of facts putting him on inquiry, so that he took the land free from the burden of the way.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 609-611; Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

6. EASEMENTS (§ 7*)—RIGHT OF WAY—PRESCRIPTION.

Where the use by an owner of land of a way over adjoining land to a street was disputed, and frequently interrupted and from time to time temporarily prevented, the use did not ripen into title by prescription.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 16-19, 27-33; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 981*)—DISCRETION OF COURT—DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL.

Denial of a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence will not be disturbed on appeal, in the absence of abuse of discretion or error on the part of the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3876; Dec. Dig. § 981.*]

8. NEW TRIAL (§ 102*)—GROUNDS—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

A party to obtain a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence must show that he used reasonable diligence to discover the evidence prior to the trial, and that he failed to do so, and did not know of it in time to produce it, or in time to apply for a continuance to enable him to produce it at the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 207, 210-214; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

9. NEW TRIAL (§ 102*)—GROUNDS—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Where alleged newly discovered witnesses were either employes of the defeated party or near neighbors and well known to him at the time of the trial, and their whereabouts were known and they were in the state at the time of the trial, a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence was properly denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 207, 210-214; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Alida A. Pollard and another against Frances M. Rebman and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. L. Murphey, for appellants. E. L. Brady and J. L. Brady, for respondents.

SHAW, J. [1] When the owner of a parcel of land buys an easement over adjoining land for a way from his land to a public street, such easement becomes at once appurtenant to his land, giving him access to the street over such way.

[2] If he fails to have the conveyance for such easement legally recorded, it remains good, nevertheless, against the grantor of the easement.

[3] But if the grantor of the easement, in such case, for a valuable consideration, afterwards unconditionally conveys the servient tenement to another, who takes without notice of the grant of the right of way, or of the use of the way, and with no knowledge of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry concerning it, he will take the land free from the burden of the easement. Civ. Code, §§ 1214, 1217; Bell v. Pleasant, 145 Cal. 413, 78 Pac. 957, 104 Am. St. Rep. 61.

[4] If the way is at the time in use, and, although not fenced, is marked on the ground either by the effects of the travel over it or by fences or other bounds, so that it is plainly visible and its use obvious to one who examines the premises, the purchaser is put on inquiry with regard to such easement and cannot claim as a purchaser without notice thereof. He cannot escape this by buying without examination. He is bound to take notice of that which a reasonably careful inspection of the land would disclose to him.

[5] These well-established principles are decisive of the present case. On June 5, 1888, I. R. Dunkelberger conveyed to John Rebman lot numbered 26 of Block A, in the Dunkelberger tract, fronting 50 feet on the south line of Ninth street in the city of Los Angeles, and extending back 200 feet. On the following day Dunkelberger, who then owned the land lying to the east and south of said lot, conveyed to Rebman a right of way 12 feet wide from the rear of said lot, and extending 100 feet east to a public blind alley opening into a public street called Sunbury street. This conveyance was not acknowledged, and was never recorded. Afterward Rebman conveyed lot 26 to his wife, Frances M. Rebman, the principal defendant herein, who has ever since remained the owner thereof. This conveyance, of course, carried with it the appurtenances, including the said right of way for access to the street from the rear of the lot. The Rebmans resided on lot 26 before the deed from Dunkelberger to Rebman in 1888, and have ever since resided there. Rebman used the rear end of the lot as a place for storing lumber and building material, and used said way as a means of ingress and egress. A barn was built by him on the southwest corner of the lot and a fence was built inclosing the lot. A gate was made in the fence at the rear, by means of which access to the way from the lot was afforded. The way was used by him whenever occasion required, from 1888 down to October 23, 1907, when this action was begun. On May 10, 1902, Dunkelberger, for a valuable consideration, conveyed to Alida A. Pollard, the principal plaintiff herein, all the land south of lot 26, including the way in question. (B. S. Pollard is joined merely because he is her husband.) The way was not excepted, and no mention of the Rebman easement was made in the deed to Mrs. Pollard. The purchase was made for Mrs. Pollard by S. B. Abbott, her father. Neither he nor his daughter knew anything of the conveyance of the right of way, or of Rebman's claim thereunder. Abbott and Mrs. Pollard both examined the premises before purchasing, but neither of them saw the gate or observed any marks on the ground indicating any use of the said way. The gate was plainly visible, and the mere fact that they did not observe it would not exempt them from its effect as notice of the existence of the easement, if it was sufficient to constitute notice thereof. If the marks of use of the way were then plainly visible, they would be chargeable with notice of them also. On this point, however, there was evidence on behalf of the plaintiff to the effect that there were at that time no marks on the ground comprising the right of way to indicate that it was or had been used as a way from Rebman's lot to the street, or at all. The defendant apparently offered no evidence as to the condition of the ground in this respect at that time. We must, therefore, since the finding of the court was adverse to defendants, assume that there were no such indications of use. The only thing to put Mrs. Pollard on notice of the easement was the gate in Rebman's back fence. It cannot be said as matter of law that this gate alone was sufficient to give notice to any one that Rebman owned or claimed an easement across the intervening land from his gate to the public street for access to and from the street from his lot, or that it was sufficient to put an intending purchaser on inquiry as to such easement. The finding of the court that Mrs. Pollard took her land free from the burden of the easement must be sustained.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[6] Defendants also claim title to the easement by adverse possession, continuing from the time of Mrs. Pollard's purchase in May, 1902, to the time the action was begun, being a few months more than the five years required to gain title by such means. The evidence shows that the use by Rebman was disputed, and that it was frequently interrupted and from time to time temporarily prevented during this period. This is sufficient to defeat this claim of title by prescription.

[7] A motion for new trial, made on the ground of newly discovered evidence, was denied by the court. We perceive in this no abuse of discretion or error on the part of the trial court. The only new evidence for the defendant, set forth in the affidavits, consisted of testimony to the effect that the roadway along the strip claimed as a way was well beaten and clearly visible from the effects of use, at and prior to the time of Mrs. Pollard's purchase.

[8] In order to obtain a new trial because of newly discovered evidence, the applicant must show that he used reasonable diligence to discover it prior to the trial, and that he failed to discover it, and did not, in fact, know of it in time to produce it, or in time to apply for a continuance in order that he might produce it, at the trial.

[9] As Rebman and his wife lived on the lot and themselves caused the use by which they claim that the roadway was made visible on the ground, they must admit that they knew, better than any one else, of the existence of such marks. The witnesses now proposed to be produced and whose testimony, it is claimed, has been discovered since the trial, were either employes of Rebman who used the way and made the marks while in his service, or persons who lived on adjoining lots and who were well known to him at the time. It is not claimed that they were out of the state or that their whereabouts was unknown at any time. No reason is given for the failure to ascertain what they would testify, or for the failure to produce them as witnesses, except that defendants did not expect that Mrs. Pollard or Mr. Abbott would deny that they saw the roadway and the marks of use thereof on the ground. Defendants heard them testify at the trial and did not then ask for a continuance to procure rebuttal testimony, nor did they themselves testify that any wheelmarks, hoof marks, or other evidence of use of the way, was visible on the ground. They cannot deny that they then had good reason to believe that the proposed new witnesses could and would testify that there were such marks, if, in fact, they existed. It is obvious that reasonable diligence was not used. This is sufficient to uphold the denial of the new trial.

The judgment for plaintiffs and the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

162 Cal 625

IN RE ALLEN'S ESTATE.
(S. F. 5,961.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 18, 1912.
Rehearing Denied June 17, 1912.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 11*)—RIGHT OF PARENT TO APPOINT.

The parents' right to appoint a guardian by will or deed is wholly statutory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 34-39; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 11*)—RIGHT OF APPOINTMENT BY WILL.

Under Civ. Code, § 138, providing that after divorce the court may make a subsequent disposition of the child, the court's decree, granting the custody of a minor child to the mother, does not terminate the father's claim to its control, but determines merely that the wife shall have the custody of the child until some later disposition is made, so that on the wife's death the husband is entitled to the custody of the minor child, the order not having undertaken to provide for its custody after the mother's death; and hence the mother could not, under Civ. Code, § 241, providing that either parent, if the other be dead or incapable of consent, may appoint a guardian by will, appoint a testamentary guardian—the father not being incapable of consent.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes
Cal. Rep. 123-126 P.—19

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 34-39; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

3. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 11*)—TESTAMENTARY GUARDIAN—STATUTE.

Under Civ. Code, § 241, providing that either parent may by will appoint a guardian of a legitimate child, if the other parent be dead or incapable of consent, a testamentary appointment by the mother during the life of the father, who was not incapable of consent, is not revived on his demise, so as to become effective.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 34-39; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

4. ADOPTION (§ 15*)—REVIEW—PERSONS ENTITLED TO ALLEGE ERROR.

One who has no actual right to the custody of a child, and has not been appointed guardian, cannot complain on appeal of the action of the court in adoption proceedings, merely because the mother of the child made an ineffectual attempt to appoint the appellant as a testamentary guardian.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. § 26; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

5. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 10*)—ELIGIBILITIES FOR APPOINTMENT.

Any competent person may petition the court to appoint her guardian of an infant, and may appeal from the denial of that petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 23-33; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

6. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 10*)—APPOINTMENT—PRIORITY.

Where a mother's attempted appointment of a guardian by will was invalid, the one whom she attempted to appoint had no right of priority over other persons, who petitioned to be appointed guardian of the minor child.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 23-33; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

7. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 13*)—APPOINTMENT—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

Where both of the parents are dead and cannot claim, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1751, their right of priority to be appointed guardian of their minor child, the trial court is, under Civ. Code, § 246, authorized to exercise its discretion in the appointment, the primary consideration being the temporal and moral welfare of the child; and its action will not be set aside on appeal, unless there is an abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 40-52; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

8. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 13*)—APPOINTMENT—PREFERENCE OF CHILD.

Under Civ. Code, § 246, the desires of a minor child, who is under the age of 14 years, may be considered in the appointment of a guardian.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 40-52; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

Department 1. Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James S. Troutt, Judge.

In the matter of the adoption and in the matter of the guardianship of the person and estate of Mavis Kathryn Allen, a minor. Jennie Allen appeals from orders granting Louisa V. Allen's petition for adoption and guardianship. Affirmed.

J. S. Reid, for appellant. D. S. Hirshberg, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The controversy embodied in these appeals turns upon the right to the custody of Mavis Kathryn Allen, a minor. The minor is the daughter of Peri E. Allen and Catherine B. Allen, who, at the date of the child's birth, August 29, 1900, were husband and wife. On October 16, 1901, in an action instituted by the wife, a decree of divorce was entered in her favor, and by the decree the care, custody, and control of the minor were awarded to the plaintiff in the action, "with the privilege given the defendant of visiting said child at all reasonable times."

The mother, to whom the custody of the child had thus been granted, died on June 2, 1903, leaving a will, which contained, among other things, a request that if the testatrix should leave issue Jennie Allen, a sister of Peri E. Allen, and appellant here, should "have the care and custody of such issue." We shall assume, for the purposes of this opinion, that the appellant is correct in construing the language quoted as equivalent to a testamentary appointment of Jennie Allen as guardian so far as the testatrix had power to make such appointment. The will was admitted to probate in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. After the death of the mother, the father applied to said court for letters of guardianship of the person and estate of said child, and such letters were issued to him on August 12, 1903. From then until August 19, 1910, when Peri E. Allen died, he remained the guardian of the person and estate of the child.

On September 15, 1910, Louisa V. Allen, with whom Peri E. Allen had contracted a second marriage, instituted a proceeding for the adoption of the minor, and on the same day the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco made an order for such adoption. At that time, and for a long period theretofore, the appellant was out of the jurisdiction. She returned to San Francisco, and on December 14, 1910, served a notice of motion to revoke the order of adoption and filed a petition for letters of guardianship of the person and estate of the minor. The respondent, Louisa V. Allen, filed an opposition and a counterpetition for her own appointment as guardian. The motion to set aside the adoption and the petitions for letters of guardianship were heard together. The court denied the motion to set aside the adoption, and in the guardianship proceeding made an order denying Jennie Allen's petition for letters of guardianship and granting Louisa V. Allen's petition for such letters.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Jennie Allen now appeals from these orders. She raises many points; but, as most of them are founded upon the assumption that the attempt of the mother to appoint a guardian by will was valid, the inquiry may be simplified by an examination of the soundness of this assumption.

[1,2] The right to appoint a guardian by will or deed is statutory. Under the law of this state (Civ. Code, § 241), a guardian of a legitimate child may be so appointed "by the father, with the written consent of the mother, or by either parent if the other be dead or incapable of consent." The father, in this case, was not dead when the will took effect. Nor was he "incapable of consent." It is argued that the decree of divorce, whereby the custody of the child was awarded to the mother, terminated the father's claims to the control of the child, and made him incapable of objecting or consenting to any disposition that the mother might see fit to make. The contention attributes a very broad meaning to the term "incapable of consent." But, even if this interpretation be adopted, the argument fails, for the reason that the father's right was not absolutely ended by the decree of divorce. The decree dealt with the situation as it stood, and merely determined that, as between the husband and the wife, the child should be placed in the custody of the latter until some other disposition should be made. Civ. Code, § 138. It did not undertake to provide for the custody of the child after the mother's death. In line with this view, it is almost universally held that, upon the death of the parent to whom is awarded the custody of a minor child by the decree divorcing the parents, the other parent becomes entitled to the custody. 14 Cyc. 809; In re Blackburn, 41 Mo. App. 622; In re Neff, 20 Wash. 653, 56 Pac. 383; In re Robinson, 17 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 399; Taylor v. Jeter, 33 Ga. 195, 81 Am. Dec. 202. And such, too, has been the ruling of this court. Schammel v. Schammel, 105 Cal. 258, 38 Pac. 729. It follows that at the time of the mother's death, when her appointment was intended to become operative (Civ. Code, § 241; Matter of Baker, 153 Cal. 537, 96 Pac. 12), she had no right of appointment, because the father was alive and entitled to the control, which he in fact assumed. The attempted appointment of appellant as testamentary guardian was therefore entirely without force or effect. See In re Neff, supra; Taylor v. Jeter, supra; McKinney v. Noble, 38 Tex. 195.

[3] It is suggested that the appointment, even if ineffectual when the mother died, became operative upon the subsequent death of the father. It is sufficient to say, with regard to this contention, that it is not consistent with the language of section 241 of the Civil Code, which authorizes an appointment by the mother in the event only that the father be dead or incapable of acting. The condition must exist at the date of the mother's death, or, at least, when her will is probated. It is also claimed that the father could give validity to the appointment by a subsequent consent. This we need not consider; for the father did not consent to the guardianship of the appellant. On the contrary, he manifested his dissent in the clearest possible way by applying for and obtaining letters of guardianship himself.

[4] If the appellant could base no valid claim on the provision of the mother's will, it follows that she is without interest or standing to attack the adoption proceedings, and cannot complain of any error, if error there was, in those proceedings. She had no natural right to the custody of the child, and had not been appointed guardian by the court.

[5-7] She was, however, entitled, as any other competent person would be, to petition the court to appoint her as guardian, and to appeal from the order denying her petition. But, on such application for letters, she had no right to preference over the respondent, who also sought to be appointed. Since the appointment sought to be made by the will of the mother was ineffectual, the court was authorized, under the provisions of section 246 of the Civil Code, to exercise its discretion in appointing one or the other of the contending parties, having due regard for the considerations set forth in that section. Where neither parent is claiming the right (Code Civ. Proc. § 1751; In re Campbell, 130 Cal. 380, 62 Pac. 613), the primary consideration for the guidance of the court is "the best interest of the child with respect to its temporal and moral welfare" (Civ. Code, § 246); and the conclusion reached will not be set aside on appeal, unless it was reached as the result of an abuse of discretion. It cannot be said that the record here discloses such abuse of discretion.

[8] At the time of the hearing, the minor was, and had for some time been, residing with the respondent. She expressed a desire to have the respondent appointed; and this preference the court had the right to take into account, even though the child was under the age of 14. Civ. Code, § 246. The contentions that the respondent had concealed property belonging to the minor, and that her own interests were adverse to those of the minor, were properly presented to the trial court; but the evidence was such as to justify the conclusion that there had been no willful concealment, and that the respondent asserted no property right as against the claims of the minor. It is unnecessary to detail the evidence relating to the respondent's ability, financially and otherwise, to care for the child. On the whole case, we are satisfied that the court was justified in determining that the interests of the child, in respect to its temporal, mental, and moral welfare, would be best served by the appointment of the respondent.

We have not discussed the question whether by the adoption the respondent had not gained the status of parent, and, as such, a preferential right to letters of guardianship. In view of the claim that the respondent sought, by adopting the child, to forestall appellant's expected assertion of a right to guardianship, we have preferred to consider the respective claims of the parties to letters as if the adoption had not preceded the rival applications to be appointed guardian. Even on this state of facts, the action of the court below should, as we have seen, be upheld.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

162 Cal. 668

HEALTON v. MORRISON et al.
(L. A. 2,731.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 24, 1912.
Rehearing Denied June 22, 1912.)

1. TAXATION (§ 679*)—TAX SALE—PURCHASE
BY STATE—RESALE—NOTICE.

Under Pol. Code, § 3897, providing that notice of sale of land purchased by the state at a tax sale shall be given by publishing the notice for three successive weeks prior to the sale and by mailing a copy of the notice to the party to whom the land was last assessed, the notice must be mailed to the person to whom the land was last assessed at least three weeks prior to the sale, and, if mailed within three weeks before the sale, the sale is void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1361, 1362; Dec. Dig. § 679.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 679*)—TAX SALE—PURCHASE
BY STATE—RESALE—NOTICE.

Under Pol. Code, § 3897, requiring notice of the resale by the state of land purchased at a tax sale to be mailed to the person to whom the land was last assessed at his last known post office address, the tax collector is not bound to look beyond or outside of the assessment roll to ascertain such person's address, and, if the roll does not furnish the address, mailing of the notice is not required.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1361, 1362; Dec. Dig. § 679.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 679*)—TAX SALE—PURCHASE
BY STATE—RESALE—NOTICE.

Under Pol. Code, § 3897, requiring notice of the resale by the state of land purchased at a tax sale to be mailed and registered to the person to whom the land was last assessed at his last known post office address, the tax collector discharges his duty by mailing and registering such notice whether it is received by the party or not, but the party is entitled to all the advantages for its delivery afforded by the postal system, and the tax collector has no right by any request for its return indorsed thereon to do anything which may prevent the party from having these advantages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1361, 1362; Dec. Dig. § 679.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. R. Hervey, Judge.

Action to quiet title by A. L. Heaton against Ada R. Morrison and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. A. Stice, for appellant. O. B. Carter and Ralph A. Chase, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This is an action to quiet title to lot 22, block S, of the Dayton Heights tract, in the county of Los Angeles; plaintiff claiming title under a tax deed from the state of California. It was stipulated on the trial that plaintiff had no other title to the lot, and that, unless the tax deed to him was valid, the title to the property is vested in the defendant, Ada R. Morrison.

The defendants had judgment, the decree requiring repayment to plaintiff (as defendants had offered in their answer) of the amount of the taxes, penalties, interests, and costs against the property, paid by plaintiff to the state on its sale of the lot to him. It is only necessary on this appeal to consider one of the many points upon which it is claimed by respondents that the deed from the state under which plaintiff claims is void, and the judgment properly rendered in their favor. The deed from the state, upon which appellant relied, was made by the tax collector of Los Angeles county on behalf of the state pursuant to a sale at public auction, noticed for and held on February 19, 1909, and the deed recited, among other things, that on February 2, 1909, the tax collector had mailed a copy of the notice of sale "postage thereon prepaid and registered, to the party to whom the lot was last assessed next before such sale."

Evidence was introduced on the part of respondents showing that the party to whom the lot was last assessed prior to the sale and her address as appeared from the assessment roll was "Mary E. Waldron, Los Angeles, Calif."; that on February 2, 1909, the said tax collector mailed a registered letter containing a copy of the notice of sale of said property addressed to "Mary C. Waldron, Los Angeles, Calif."; that the registered letter bore a notification on the envelope "Return in 5 days to W. O. Welch, County Tax Collector, Los Angeles, Cal.," and that on the 8th day of February, 1909, said registered letter was returned to the office of said tax collector by the postmaster. It was further proven that under the rules of the United States postal department governing the delivery of registered letters, if such a letter is not delivered or called for by the party to whom it is addressed, it is retained in the post office for a period of 30 days, unless instructions on the envelope call for its return to the sender at an earlier date, in which case it would be returned to the latter pursuant to the instructions.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Section 3897 of the Political Code prescribing the proceedings to be taken on the sale of property which has been purchased by the state for delinquent taxes requires that the tax collector shall cause a notice of such sale to be published for three successive weeks prior to the date fixed for the sale, and, in addition to such published notice, "that it shall be the duty of the tax collector to mail a copy of said notice, postage thereon prepaid and registered to the party to whom the land was last assessed next before the sale at his last known post office address." We held in Smith v. Furlong, 160 Cal. 522, 117 Pac. 527, that the giving of the notice by publication and the mailing of a copy of the notice to the party to whom the land was last assessed next before the sale, at his last known post office address, were both jurisdictional prerequisites to a valid sale by the state, and that a failure to give the latter notice when the condition existed requiring it, rendered the sale and the deed thereunder void; that the recital in a tax deed from the state on the matter of notice is not conclusive evidence on the subject, but prima facie evidence only and open to attack.

In making the sale in question here the tax collector in an attempt to comply with the section, in addition to publishing the notice of sale, mailed a copy of the notice. As to such mailing it is, however, insisted by respondents that the action of the tax collector in directing the letter to "Mary C. Waldron" instead of to "Mary E. Waldron," her proper name as it appeared on the assessment roll, amounted to no notice at all.

[1] We do not stop to consider this point, but address ourselves to the more serious and vital one made by respondents as to the mailing itself of said notice, namely, that within the contemplation of the section it was not mailed within the proper time; that, when the condition exists requiring the tax collector to give personal notice by mail to the person to whom the property was last assessed before the sale, it is necessary that such notice be given for at least the same period as the notice of sale is required to be published previously thereto, to wit, at least three weeks before the sale, and, as it appears here that notice by mail was not given for that period, the tax collector acquired no jurisdiction to make the sale or to execute a valid deed, and the trial court properly so held.

We are satisfied that this position of the respondent is correct. It is true that there is nothing in the section relating to the giving of personal notice by mail which specifically requires it to be given for any particular length of time, but, when we take into consideration that the giving of notice by mail is made just as essentially a jurisdictional prerequisite to a valid sale as the publication of notice and the giving of both is provided for in the same section, it is only a proper and reasonable construction to hold that, though specific direction is not given as to how long before the sale personal notice shall be mailed, the legislative intent is that it shall be given for the same period as notice by publication is required. The justness of this construction is strengthened when we consider the special purpose to be subserved by requiring personal notice. While the state might have sold the land without notice to the delinquent owner (Fox v. Wright, 152 Cal. 59, 91 Pac. 1005), it deemed it proper in the exercise of that right to provide for giving him a last opportunity to redeem before the property would be lost to him. In providing for such notice the Legislature made both publication and notice by mail, where the last post office address was known, equally essential. It realized that published notice of the sale, which is generally intended to accomplish the dual purpose of imparting notice to the delinquent owner that his property is about to be sold by the state and informing the public that they may purchase it, was not the most efficacious method of giving the delinquent owner a final opportunity to redeem, and so, in addition, personal service of notice by mail was provided for. It is quite obvious that the personal notice so required ordinarily affords a far better opportunity to the delinquent owner for obtaining notice of a contemplated sale of his property and permitting its redemption by him than is afforded by a publication, and certainly, in requiring the tax collector under certain circumstances to give both, the Legislature was providing as complete a method of protecting the delinquent owner against the loss of his property as could be reasonably devised, and undoubtedly, intended to make the method effective. No distinction, in terms, is made in the section between the period before the sale that publication shall be made and the time before the sale when the notice by mail shall be sent, and no valid reason can be suggested why a construction should be placed on the section making any such distinction. The period is fixed as to the time of publication prior to the sale. The section is silent as to the time of mailing notice prior thereto, but the subject with which the Legislature is dealing is notice to the delinquent owner and the section prescribes that both notice by publication and by mail where residence is known are essential to the validity of a sale. As the giving of both kinds of notice is equally essential, it could not be the intention of the Legislature to distinguish between the period for giving either, to fix definitely the period of publication and leave it to the discretion of the tax collector (which would be the effect of any other construction) as to the time before the sale when he should give notice by mail. So construed, the section would make a distinction between the importance and efficacy of the two essential kinds of notice provided to be given where it is certain that the Legislature intended to make none. If the section were construed as leaving it to the discretion of the tax collector to determine at what time prior to the sale he should mail notice, in many instances the attempt on his part to comply with the section would amount to practically no notice at all, as where the address of a party to whom the land was last assessed, as appearing on the assessment roll, might be in some distant part of the state, or in one of the remote states of the Union, or in some foreign country, and the notice mailed would be sent at such a time that it would render it extremely doubtful, if not impossible, that it should be received in time to act upon it. And in practically every case where the notice was given less than three weeks before the sale the question could fairly arise whether the notice was sent within a reasonable time. There would thus be no fixed standard for determining in any case whether the statute had been complied with, and in each it would be left to the court to determine whether, under the facts and circumstances disclosed, the tax collector had complied with the statute in giving the particular notice. The Legislature could not have intended in requiring the giving of the notice by mail as an additional benefit to the delinquent owner to make it of such uncertain advantage. Personal service by mail and notice by publication were deemed equally important, and the reasonable construction of the section is that, as the giving of published notice and personal notice under certain conditions are made necessary jurisdictional prerequisites to authorize a sale, it was intended that the notice required to be given to the property owner by mail should be given for the same period prior to the sale as is provided that notice by publication shall be made, namely, at least three successive weeks before the date fixed for the sale.

[2] And the duty imposed upon the tax collector of giving this personal notice is so easy of performance as to afford itself a reason why the Legislature did not specifically mention the time prior to the sale when this notice should be sent, being satisfied that as the giving of both kinds of notice was prescribed, the simplicity of the task of sending the personal notice would leave no doubt of the intention of the Legislature to require it to be given for the same period of time prior to the date of sale as publication must be had. All the tax collector has to do as to mailing notice is to look at the assessment roll and ascertain to whom the property about to be sold was last assessed, and whether the address of the party appears thereon. If it does, he must mail a notice. If it does not, no mailing of notice is required. He is not bound to look beyond or outside the assessment roll to ascertain the address of a party when the assessment roll does not furnish it. Kehlet v. Bergman, 121 Pac. 918. If, however, the address is found on the assessment, roll, all that is necessary to do is to inclose a copy of the printed notice in an envelope, address it, and register and mail it at least three weeks prior to the date set for the sale. Nor is this task made any more difficult when the notice of sale embraces a large number of pieces of property to be sold under the same notice. The tax collector himself fixes the date of sale, and can fix it sufficiently in advance so as to permit him to comply with this simple provision of the law as to personal notice.

As in the instant case the notice by mail was not given to the party to whom the land was last assessed for the period provided by the statute, the tax collector acquired no jurisdiction to make the sale in question, and the tax deed under which plaintiff claims was by the superior court properly held to be void.

It further appears in this case that the tax collector in mailing the notice on February 2, 1909, noted on the envelope a request that the registered letter, if not delivered in five days, be returned by the postmaster to him, and that, in compliance with the request, the registered letter was returned to him on February 8th. This notice by mail was sent some eleven days only before the sale, and by reason of the instructions on the letter for its return to the tax collector if not delivered in five days and a compliance therewith by the postmaster, only a period of five days was afforded the party to whom the letter was addressed within which to receive it. It further appears that a registered letter, if there is no indorsement thereon requiring an earlier return, will be retained in the post office for thirty days after its receipt.

[3] In view of the conclusion reached, that notice by mail was not given under the section because it was not sent in time, it is unnecessary to discuss what would be the effect of this procedure by the tax collector when, by reason of the indorsement on the registered letter, it is returned to him many days prior to the date of sale and during which it might have been delivered to the person to which it is addressed. In that regard it may be suggested, however, that there is no provision in the statute making it any concern of the tax collector whether, after he mails the notice, the party to whom it is mailed gets it or not. When he mails it in time, addressed, and registered, his duty is discharged. Neither is there any statutory requirement that he should put a notification on the letter calling for its return to his office at all, and certainly there is no warrant whatever for placing a notification thereon calling for such return at any time earlier than the date set for the sale. The party to whom the letter is addressed is entitled to all the advantages for its delivery which the postal system, domestic or foreign, affords, and the tax collector has no right to do anything which may prevent him from having them. If in discharging his duty in mailing the notice the tax collector desires, in aid of supporting his recital in a tax deed that notice was properly mailed, if it be questioned, to produce the registered letter sent, which has been subsequently returned to him, he can effect this very simply by having his notification call for a return of the registered letter at some date subsequent to the day set for the sale.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

102 Cal. 648

BRAMMAN v. CITY OF ALAMEDA et al.
(S. F. 5,527.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 21, 1912.)

1. LICENSES (§ 7*)—OCCUPATIONS OR PRIVILEGES—CLASSIFICATION.

A municipality cannot impose different license taxes upon persons exercising the same privilege, but it may classify occupations, distinguish between different occupations and between those engaged in similar occupations, and in classifying persons in the same general occupation may adopt any rule of gradation which is reasonable and equally affects all within the class.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-15, 19; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. LICENSES (§ 7*)—OCCUPATIONS OR PRIVILEGES—CLASSIFICATION.

The city of Alameda, pursuant to its charter (St. 1907, p. 1051) art. 2, § 17, subds. 17, 19, authorizing it to impose license taxes and to authorize the granting of licenses for revenue and regulation, adopted an ordinance imposing a license tax of $10 a year on the business of retail meat dealers, and a tax on every vehicle or wagon not otherwise specified, used in connection with any business, of $5 a year if drawn by two or more animals and $3 a year if drawn by only one. Held that, construing the provisions of the ordinance imposing the tax on vehicles in connection with the further provisions, it did not impose a tax on the business of retail meat dealer, and a further tax on a mere incident of that business, but imposed only one tax on the business and classified persons engaged therein according to the number of animals and vehicles used, and that such classification, not being unreasonable, was valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-15, 19; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. S. Wells, Judge.

Action by H. S. Bramman against the City of Alameda and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

M. W. Simpson, for appellants. Fred W. Fry, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought to restrain defendants from enforcing against plaintiff the provisions of an ordinance of the city of Alameda (No. 484) providing, among other things, for a license tax on wagons and vehicles used in connection with any business. The complaint alleges that plaintiff is a retail dealer in meats, having a shop in the city of Alameda where meats are sold and from which shop plaintiff delivers them to his customers in the city of Alameda by means of carts drawn by horses; that he has paid the license tax imposed by said ordinance for the carrying on of his general business as a retail dealer in meats, but has refused to pay a license tax assessed by said ordinance upon the wagons used by him in connection with his business, upon the ground that said wagon license tax is unconstitutional and void. The provisions of the ordinance which are attacked are set forth in the complaint, and then follow allegations of interference with the business of plaintiff and injury thereto sustained through the conduct of defendants in delaying, detaining, and harassing, upon the public streets of said city, the drivers of the delivery wagons of plaintiff in an effort to compel the payment of said wagon license tax and the threatened arrest of plaintiff and his employes if said license tax is not paid. The prayer was for a perpetual injunction restraining the enforcement or attempt to enforce the collection of said wagon license tax from plaintiff or his employes. The defendants challenged by demurrer the sufficiency of the facts set forth in the complaint to constitute a cause of action. It was stipulated on the hearing of the demurrer that the general business license tax referred to in the complaint as having been paid by the plaintiff under the same ordinance imposing the said wagon license tax was the sum of $10, and that the carts referred to in the complaint used by plaintiff in the delivery of meats to his customers consisted of two, each drawn by one horse. The demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and, the defendants declining to answer, judgment was entered against them granting plaintiff the relief prayed for, and from this judgment defendants appeal.

The only point in the case is as to the validity of the section of the ordinance dealing with the wagon license tax, it being conceded that if this section is invalid the complaint states a cause of action; if valid, the demurrer of the defendants should have been sustained.

A proper consideration of the point involved necessitates a reference to some of the provisions of the charter of the city of Alameda, as also to some of the provisions of the ordinance in question.

Since 1907 the city of Alameda has been organized and existing under a freeholders' charter (Stats. 1907, p. 1051), which provides, as to the powers and limitations of the council thereof (article 2, c. 2), that it shall have power (section 17, subd. 17) "to impose all license taxes subject to the restrictions elsewhere in this charter contained, and to provide for the collection thereof." Subdivision 19: "To authorize the granting of licenses for any lawful purpose for revenue and regulation and to fix by ordinance the amount to be paid therefor and to provide for revoking the same; provided that no license shall be granted for a longer period than one year."

In 1908 the ordinance entitled "Ordinance No. 484, providing for municipal licenses for regulation and revenue and establishing the license tax therefor," some of the provisions of which are here in question, was adopted. The opening section of the ordinance makes the usual provision declaring it unlawful to commence or carry on any "trade, calling or occupation" specified in the ordinance or to "keep, employ or use any article or thing" for which a license tax is imposed without first having procured a license from the city so to do. Section 10 of the ordinance declares: "Except as hereinafter otherwise provided, where more than one occupation or business of those upon which a license tax is hereinafter imposed is carried on or conducted by one person, firm or corporation at any one location, the license tax for such combined business or occupation shall be the tax hereinafter imposed on that one of said occupations or business which is most heavily taxed hereunder." Then follow provisions imposing a license tax upon various specified occupations and businesses in the form usually pertaining to such ordinances. On the business of a retail meat dealer is imposed a general business license of $10 a year, which is the license plaintiff paid.

Coming now to the sections of the ordinance particularly involved here: Section 85 is as follows: "For every person, firm or corporation who owns, keeps or uses any wagon or vehicle hereinafter described the license tax shall be as follows: Subdivision A. For every hack, coach, carriage, omnibus or automobile used for the carrying of passengers for hire with driver, $5.00 per year for each such vehicle. Subd. B. For every wagon or cart drawn by two or more animals and used for the hauling of rock, dirt, manure, sand, loam, gravel, lumber, coal, hay, brick, cement, ice or oil, $6.00 per year for each such vehicle. For every such wagon or cart drawn by one animal, $3.00 per year. Subd. C. For every truck or dray, express wagon, garbage wagon, or cart, vegetable garden wagon, or peddlers' wagon, $8.00 per year when drawn by two or more animals, and $5.00 per year when drawn by one animal. Subd. D. For every motor vehicle used in transporting merchandise, $15.00 per year. Subd. E. For every vehicle or wagon not hereinbefore in this section included, where used in connection with any business, $5.00 per year when drawn by two or more animals and $3.00 per year when drawn by one animal. Subd. F. The provisions of section 10 of this ordinance shall not apply to the license taxes imposed by this section."

It is asserted by the appellant, in his brief on this appeal, that the view taken by the trial court holding section 85 of the ordinance invalid was that the power conferred by the charter upon the council "to authorize the granting of licenses for any lawful purpose for revenue or regulation" extended only to the granting of licenses for the lawful purposes followed by the licensee, and that the "lawful purpose" specified in the charter means the main business, pursuit, or occupation of the licensee, and that the plaintiff is not pursuing the business of operating a horse and wagon, but the operation of a horse and wagon is merely incidental to his main pursuit, which is that of conducting the business of a retail meat market, upon which alone a license tax may be imposed.

Counsel for respondent, while insisting that this view of the trial court was correct, does not limit his attack upon the validity of the subdivision of the ordinance to that ground alone, but, in a voluminous and exhaustive brief upon the subject of the invalidity of the section, insists that it is violative of constitutional provisions, among others, that the section considered of itself, or in connection with the other provisions of the ordinance, is unreasonably discriminating, lacks uniformity in its operation, makes an arbitrary classification, and is class legislation. While, as we say, the brief of respondent discloses a careful and thorough presentation of these constitutional points, we perceive no occasion for any extended discussion of the subject.

When we come to a particular examination of the section in controversy and the ordinance of which it is a part, and apply to their consideration well settled rules governing the proper exercise by municipalities of the power to license where it is conferred both for regulation and revenue, we think this case is brought within a narrow compass, which does not involve the consideration of anything save these rules. It is to be observed that the particular provision of the ordinance which was held to be invalid by the trial court is found in a general ordinance of the municipality imposing license taxes for the purposes of both regulation and revenue. In considering the validity of the license tax here in question, it is immaterial whether the license sought to be imposed is one for regulation or for revenue, because, under the charter, the municipality has authority to impose it for both. The sole question is was there a valid exercise of power.

The principal point made by the respondent against the validity of section 85 of the ordinance is that it is an unwarranted attempt by the municipality to impose a license upon (taking his particular occupation) an incident to the business of a retail meat dealer, namely, the use of delivery wagons therein, while there has already been imposed a license tax upon the business itself to which such use is incident.

[1] It may be conceded that the municipality could not divide a single taxable privilege and impose a separate tax upon different elements which constitute it. But when the entire ordinance here in question is given proper consideration, it is evident that nothing of this kind is attempted. While, of course, the municipality in the imposing of taxes may not discriminate in doing so by imposing different license taxes upon persons similarly situated and exercising the same privilege, still it is well settled that it may classify occupations, and in doing so may distinguish between different occupations, and likewise distinguish between those engaged in similar occupations. In adopting a classification with reference to the persons engaged in the same general occupation or business for the purpose of imposing a license tax, any standard or rule of gradation may be adopted which is fair and reasonable. The license tax to be paid by those engaged in a certain business or occupation may be made to depend on the business done—the receipts, sales, or business transacted. County of San Luis Obispo v. Greenberg, 120 Cal. 300, 52 Pac. 797. The license tax of those engaged in the laundry business may be graded according to the number of persons employed there; this being one method of gauging the amount of business done in the laundry. Ex parte Li Protti, 68 Cal. 635, 10 Pac. 113. That there is no discrimination as to a license tax resulting from a lower tax upon those selling articles at a fixed place of business than is required of those otherwise selling the same articles is sustained in Ex parte Haskell, 112 Cal. 412, 44 Pac. 725, 32 L. R. A. 527. In Ex parte Lemon, 143 Cal. 558, 77 Pac. 455, 65 L. R. A. 946, in which the cases just referred to are cited, it was held that an ordinance imposing a higher license tax upon restaurants where meals are not prepared by the proprietor or members of his family and those where they are so provided was a proper classification of the occupation of keeping a restaurant. Within the rule of the authorities, as the classification may be accomplished in a variety of ways, any gradation will be sustained which is reasonable and fair and equally affects all within the class to which it is applied.

[2] And among the varying standards which may be adopted, certainly it cannot be objected to as unfair or unreasonable that as to a business class a reasonable distinction between members of the class cannot be based upon the number of vehicles and animals which are used in the prosecution of the business. This, as in the case of distinguishing a class by the number of persons engaged in the conduct of the business, is a method of gauging the amount of business done or the capital employed therein and imposing a license tax upon the occupation under such gradation. Such a classification is recognized as a proper one in Dillon on Municipal Corporations, § 1410, vol. 4 (5th Ed.) p. 2473. See, also, Wilson et al. v. City of Lexington, 105 Ky. 765, 49 S. W. 806, 50 S. W. 834. This it appears to us is just what the ordinance here in question does. We are not dealing with two distinct ordinances, nor with one ordinance imposing a tax upon the privilege of doing business in a municipality and likewise taxing vehicles, but with a single ordinance taxing occupations or business privileges and attempting to classify and license all such businesses for both regulation and revenue. Section 85 of the ordinance cannot be taken as something separate and distinct from the other provisions of the ordinance, but its provisions must be construed together and the ordinance looked to in its entirety. When this is done, no difficulty is presented in determining exactly what is provided thereby. As far as the retail butcher business is concerned, conducted as a distinct business upon which a tax may be imposed, the ordinance divides it into classes consisting of those who maintain a place of business in the conduct of which no vehicles are used, and those who in the conduct of the same business use vehicles. Classification being authorized, such a classification is fair, rational, and reasonable. The municipality is required to maintain and repair its streets. Those engaged in a business and using vehicles to transact it are doing so to the constant detriment of the street and are also in the enjoyment of a use thereof which is a use not commonly exercised by all the inhabitants of the municipality. It is therefore only proper and fair that those who make use of the streets in the conduct of a business privilege should pay therefor, and that those who use the streets most should pay more than those who use them less. This is the rule obviously adopted in the ordinance in question and upon which the classification is based. All engaged in the business of retailing meats, but who use no vehicles in transacting that business, constitute one class and for the privilege of doing business as such in the municipality are required to pay an annual license tax of $10. Another class are those engaged in such business but using vehicles in connection therewith. The license fee to be paid by this class is made dependent upon the number of animals used in the vehicles employed in the business. This is to be ascertained by the simple standard of multiplying the number of vehicles used in the business and drawn by one animal by three and those drawn by more than one animal by five, and as may be the case with each retail meat dealer using vehicles, this product added to the amount of the tax of $10 will constitute the amount which under the ordinance these latter dealers are, as a class, required to pay as an occupation tax. This is all there is to the ordinance. Section 85, as counsel for respondent assumes, is not at all a tax on vehicles as an essential incident of a business on which a license tax has by previous provisions of the ordinance been fixed. The section is a constituent part of the general ordinance fixing occupation taxes, and is to be read and construed as such, and amounts simply to a classification of retail meat dealers into those who do, and those who do not, use vehicles in following their business (a classification quite rational and fair as we have pointed out) and measuring the occupation tax to be paid by the classification. The municipality undoubtedly has a right to make reasonable classifications, and as this is clearly what was done here, and the license tax imposed as an occupation tax on the business under the classification, it was a valid exercise of municipal power and should have been so held.

Various other objections to the section are made by respondent; but, in view of the construction which we have placed upon the ordinance as an entirety, we do not perceive any necessity for discussing these other points.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

162 Cal. 638

MORRISSEY et al. v. GRAY et al.
(Sac. 1.891.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1912.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 17*)—PROCESS TO SUPPORT—SERVICE.

Where the complaint stated a cause of action against defendant individually and as administratrix, and the summons was directed to her as administratrix and individually, and the sheriff's return recited that service was made on defendant personally, the return was sufficient to support a judgment against defendant in her representative capacity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 25-33, 422; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 497*)—COLLATERAL ATTACK—SERVICE—RETURN.

Where from the judgment roll it appears that a judgment was rendered against a defendant in a representative capacity, that the action was brought against him in two capacities, representative and individual, that the summons and complaint were directed to him for service in both, and the return of the sheriff shows generally that personal service on him was made, the court to uphold the judgment may consider the matters appearing on the judgment roll in support of the judgment, and the service, when taken in connection with the complaint and summons, was a service on defendant in both capacities warranting a judgment against defendant in both.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 937, 938; Dec. Dig. § 497.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 495*)—VALIDITY—PRESUMPTIONS.

All intendments are in favor of the validity of judgments of courts of general jurisdiction, and the jurisdiction of such courts is conclusively presumed to have been acquired unless the record shows the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 549½, 933, 934; Dec. Dig. § 495.*]

4. PROCESS (§ 164*)—SERVICE—RETURN.

Where one is sued in an individual and representative capacity, and process is directed against him in both, the return of service, stating that process was served on him personally, is not conclusive that the service was on him only in his individual capacity, or that he was not served in his representative capacity, but the return is equivocal, and the court may permit an amendment by the officer, so as to show that service was made on defendant in the capacity in which the judgment against him was actually rendered, or, on the trial, in support of the judgment, allow proof of the actual capacity in which service was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. §§ 176, 239-248; Dec. Dig. § 164.*]

5. JUDGMENT (§ 495*)—PRESUMPTION—SERVICE—RETURN.

Where one is sued in his individual and representative capacity, and process is directed against him in both, and the return of service merely states that process was served on him personally, and from lapse of time, or for other reasons, it is impossible to make proof justifying the court on motion in allowing an amendment to the return to show the capacity in which service of process was made, the court must determine the validity of the judgment on the entire record, and where it appears from the record that the true nature of the action against defendant was in both capacities, and process issued directed service in both, the court, in connection with the return of the sheriff, may presume that, in whichever capacity judgment was rendered, service on defendant in that capacity was had and jurisdiction acquired.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 549½, 933, 934; Dec. Dig. § 495.*]

6. JUDGES (§ 47*)—DISQUALIFICATION.

A judge who, while a practicing attorney, acted as attorney for a widow in procuring letters of administration of the estate of her deceased husband and an order setting apart the homestead, is not thereby disqualified from sitting in a suit to foreclose a mortgage executed by the deceased husband brought against the widow and the heirs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 214-219, 222, 223; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

7. QUIETING TITLE (§ 44*)—FORECLOSURE—ACQUISITION OF TITLE.

Where a person's title is deraigned through a sheriff's sale under a judgment in a mortgage foreclosure proceeding, and the judgment is valid, any fraud on the part of such person in procuring a deed from defendants in the foreclosure action is immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 89-92; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Matthew Morrissey and others against John C. Gray and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Morrissey, for appellants. W. H. Carlin, Carleton Gray, and A. E. Boynton, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This action is brought to have declared void a certain judgment of foreclosure and deed issued upon a sale thereunder, as also a subsequent deed from plaintiffs to the defendant Gray, and for a decree that plaintiffs are the owners of the real property described in said foreclosure judgment and said deeds, and that said Gray and the other defendants hold said property in trust for plaintiffs. A demurrer to the second amended complaint was sustained, and, plaintiffs declining to amend, judgment was entered in favor of the defendants, and from the judgment plaintiffs appeal.

The complaint in this action is quite voluminous; but, for reasons hereafter to be stated, it will be necessary only to set forth the allegations upon the one legal proposition which we think it necessary to consider. With respect to it the complaint alleged that one Timothy Morrissey died intestate in July, 1887, a resident of Butte county, leaving real property therein consisting of 300 acres of land (described in the complaint) and as his heirs at law his widow and eight minor children, said widow and five of said children being the plaintiffs in this action; that said land was community property; that his widow, the plaintiff Johanna Morrissey, employed the defendant Gray, then a practicing attorney in Butte county, to represent her in procuring letters of administration upon the estate of her deceased husband; that on August 1, 1887, he having made application in her behalf, she was appointed administratrix of his estate; that upon her application, said Gray representing her, an order of court was made March 26, 1888, setting apart to said widow and her children a homestead consisting of 45 acres out of said 300 acres of land; that prior to his death said Timothy Morrissey had executed a mortgage on said 300 acres to one Mose Wick to secure an indebtedness of $1,500, and on April 15, 1892, proceedings were commenced to foreclose said mortgage, said Johanna Morrissey individually, and as administratrix of the estate of Timothy Morrissey, deceased, and all the children of said deceased, being named as defendants in the foreclosure complaint; that a return of service of summons in said action, as appears in the judgment roll in said foreclosure proceeding, is as follows: "Sheriff's service. I hereby certify that I received the within summons on the 17th day of April, A. D. 1893, and personally served the same on April 19th, A. D. 1893, by delivering to Johanna Morrissey a copy of said summons attached to a copy of the complaint personally in the county of Butte, and that by order of the plaintiff's attorney none of the other defendants were served. Dated this 19th day of April, 1893. R. A. Anderson, Sheriff, T. A. Atchinson, Deputy." That the defendant Gray became judge of the superior court of Butte county in 1891 and was such when the foreclosure proceedings were brought and thereafter; that none of the defendants named in said foreclosure proceeding appeared in said action, but on July 1, 1893, on the order of said Gray, presiding as superior judge, what purported on its face to be a judgment by default was entered therein against the plaintiff herein Johanna Morrissey in her individual capacity and not against any of the other defendants therein, and what purported to be a decree of foreclosure was made and entered by said court; that the said court never acquired jurisdiction over the subject-matter of said property or of the said estate of Timothy Morrissey, deceased, or of plaintiffs herein by service of process or otherwise; that said decree is of no validity against the said property and estate of said Timothy Morrissey, deceased, or the interests of plaintiffs therein; that on August 2, 1893, pursuant to said decree and an order of sale, the property was sold by the sheriff to one C. T. Wick, who on the same day, at the solicitation of said defendant Gray, sold and assigned to the latter all the right acquired by him under the certificate of sale without the knowledge of these plaintiffs or either of them.

The complaint contains other allegations under which it is asserted that the defendant Gray, having acted as attorney for the widow in procuring letters of administration and an order setting apart the homestead, was disqualified to act judicially in the foreclosure proceedings, and hence the judgment rendered by him was void; that a certain amended return of the service of summons was ordered by him to be made as presiding judge of the superior court after he had acquired an interest in the property, and which amended return reciting that service of summons in the foreclosure proceeding had been made upon Johanna Morrissey as administratrix of the estate of Timothy Morrissey, deceased, was also void. It was also alleged that the defendant Gray, after obtaining the assignment of the certificate of sale from Wick, had procured from plaintiffs a deed to their interest in the 300-acre tract of land in consideration of a reconveyance by him to the plaintiff Johanna Morrissey of the homestead premises embraced in the decree of foreclosure and sheriff's certificate of sale, and that said deed was obtained from plaintiffs by the exercise of undue influence proceeding from the confidence and trust they reposed in him as former attorney in the administration of the estate, and alleged misrepresentations as to their rights in the property sold under the foreclosure proceedings.

The defendants filed a disclaimer as to any interest or claim to the land referred to in the complaint as the homestead premises and embraced in this action, at the same time that they filed their demurrer—general and special—which was sustained.

The complaint in the present action was filed after trial and a judgment against the plaintiffs therein in a previous action subsequently appealed to this court and the judgment sustained in Morrissey et al. v. Gray et al., 160 Cal. 390, 117 Pac. 438. That action, which was brought by other children of Timothy Morrissey, deceased, co-heirs with these present plaintiffs in the land left by their deceased father, involved the validity of the same judgment as is attacked here; the right of recovery upon the appeal being predicated on the part of the plaintiffs therein, upon the same claim of invalidity as is now asserted in this complaint by the present plaintiffs. In the action referred to it will be observed, from an examination of the opinion of this court disposing of that appeal, that the claim of the plaintiffs there was that the judgment in the foreclosure proceeding of Wick v. Johanna Morrissey et al., which purported in terms to be a judgment of foreclosure against Johanna Morrissey as administratrix and against the estate of the deceased, was void because it appeared from the original return of service of summons in the judgment roll that the only service thereof was made on Johanna Morrissey, individually, and not in her representative capacity as administratrix of the estate, and that the only judgment which the court could render, and which it was claimed in legal effect was rendered, foreclosed only the rights in the property of Johanna Morrissey, individually, and did not affect the interests of the other plaintiffs as heirs at law of deceased, no service having been made upon them; that the validity of that judgment is to be determined solely upon an inspection of the return of service made by the sheriff (recited above) as it appeared upon the face of the judgment roll when the judgment became final; and that a certain purported amendment to this return thereafter made by order of the court—the defendant Gray presiding as judge—reciting that service was made on Johanna Morrissey as administratrix was void.

On the trial of the action referred to, the deputy sheriff who made the original return was called as a witness and testified that in fact he had made service of process upon Johanna Morrissey as administratrix. The trial court permitted him to amend the original return accordingly and then sustained the judgment theretofore rendered as one foreclosing the interest of the estate of the deceased in the property. It was held here on that appeal that the ruling of the trial court was correct, the amendment properly permitted, and the judgment valid. That decision would appear, practically, to dispose of any possible advantage which could accrue to the present plaintiffs if the order of the superior court here involved sustaining the demurrer should be reversed. Upon the trial under the amended return which has been made a part of the judgment roll, the validity of the judgment would now be beyond question on any ground urged here.

Appellants, however, who were not parties to that action, or to that appeal, and are not bound by the judgment therein, have submitted this appeal on its own record for disposition, and we are satisfied that, under the allegation in the complaint here with reference to the matters contained in the judgment roll, the judgment is valid.

In this connection, it may be observed that we are not concerned with the judgment in question as far as it purports to affect the rights of the plaintiffs, children of the deceased, in the homestead property embraced in the judgment of foreclosure and sale. The defendants have expressly disclaimed any interest or claim therein. The only question is as to the validity of the judgment foreclosing the interests of the estate in the remainder of the 300 acres.

[1] The principal contention of plaintiffs here in their attack upon the judgment is based upon the original return of service which it is claimed can alone be looked to in determining the capacity in which service upon Johanna Morrissey was made. While in Morrissey v. Gray, supra, in referring to this original return it was said that "this return, of course, afforded no evidence of service upon Johanna Morrissey as administratrix of the estate," this language had reference to the return taken in consideration by itself, and without reference to the judgment which was actually rendered or to the pleading or process to which it was addressed. What effect the return would have on the validity of the judgment actually rendered, when taken in connection with all the matters contained in the judgment roll, this court was not then considering, because the action of the trial court in permitting, on the trial, the amendment to the original return which was the principal matter discussed and sustained, made such consideration unnecessary. Here, however, the exact situation is presented, the trial court doubtless basing its conclusion that jurisdiction over the administratrix of the estate of Timothy Morrissey, deceased, was acquired and the judgment properly rendered against her in that capacity, from an inspection of the entire record as it stood when the judgment was rendered, and we think that conclusion was right.

While the allegations of the complaint are not as ample as they might be with reference to the contents of the judgment roll as recited therein, it sufficiently appears therefrom that the complaint in the foreclosure proceeding was drafted against Johanna Morrissey as administratrix to foreclose through her, as such, the interest of the estate of Timothy Morrissey, deceased, in the property and against her and the children individually to foreclose also any rights which she or they might personally have in the land. The summons was directed to her in her capacity as administratrix as well as individually, and the return of the sheriff was that he had made service thereof "by delivering to Johanna Morrissey a copy of said summons attached to a copy of the complaint, personally, in Butte county." No appearance was made by Johanna Morrissey in either capacity, and subsequently a decree was rendered foreclosing through her as administratrix the interest of the estate of Timothy Morrissey in the property. No judgment was rendered against her individually, and, of course, none against the other defendants upon whom it appears no service was had. Notwithstanding these matters appearing in the judgment roll, it is insisted by appellants that the original return (which as we say it is claimed can alone be considered) shows that the service was made upon Johanna Morrissey only in her individual capacity. But this is not true in point of fact. There is nothing in the return which declares explicitly in what capacity she was served. It is a general return that she was served with a copy of the summons and complaint and in the nature of things, the complaint being against her in her capacity as administratrix and individually, and the summons being directed to her in both capacities, a service upon her personally, which the sheriff returns he made (nothing further appearing in the return), must be taken to have been made upon her in all the capacities in which she was sued. The purpose of the service of process is to give notice to a defendant that suit had been brought against him so that he may have an opportunity to defend if he so elects. All that is necessary for a sheriff to do in making service, and his sole duty in that respect, is to deliver to the defendant a copy of the summons and a copy of the complaint and make return of that fact. It is not necessary in making service that the sheriff shall announce to a defendant the capacities in which he is sued or in what capacity he is served. He is informed of that by the receipt of the complaint and the summons.

[2] And when from the judgment roll it appears that a judgment is rendered against a defendant in a representative capacity, that the action was brought against him in two capacities, representative and individual, the summons and complaint directed to him for service in both, and the return of the sheriff shows generally that personal service upon him of the process was made, we cannot perceive upon what principle it can be claimed, simply from the general return of service, that the service was upon him in one particular capacity rather than in all the capacities in which he was sued. Counsel for appellants have cited us to no case where it has been so held. The cases to the effect that a judgment is void where one is sued in a representative capacity and judgment is rendered against him individually, or vice versa, have no application. If one is sued in a representative capacity alone, and the return of summons is, as here, a general return of personal service, and the judgment is against the defendant in a representative capacity, it could not reasonably be contended, in an attack upon the judgment, which would of course be made upon the same theory as is advanced here, namely, that the return alone can be considered in determining the validity of the judgment, that the court must be constrained to a consideration solely of the return of service in determining the validity of the judgment. It could look to the entire judgment roll; the complaint which showed an action brought solely against the defendant in a representative capacity, the summons directed to him in such capacity alone, and in support of the judgment as actually rendered, it would be held that the general return of personal service showed service upon the defendant in the capacity in which he was alone sued. No one would question the right of the court to consider all the matters appearing upon the judgment roll in support of the judgment actually rendered, nor question the validity of a determination that from such an inspection the return of service showed a service upon defendant in the capacity in which he was sued and jurisdiction acquired to render judgment against him in that capacity. The same principle applies here. Johanna Morrissey was made a defendant in two capacities, the summons was addressed to her in both, the duty of the sheriff was to serve her in both, the delivery to her of a copy of the summons and complaint was in effect a service upon her in both, and the service upon her which the sheriff returned as personally made, taken in connection with the complaint and summons, was a sufficient return of service in all capacities in which she was sued, and would have warranted a judgment against her in both, although here it was only entered against her in her representative capacity.

[3] All intendment is in favor of the validity of judgments of courts of general jurisdiction, and the jurisdiction of such courts in rendering a particular judgment is conclusively presumed to have been acquired unless the record itself shows to the contrary.

[4] And where one is sued in both an individual and representative capacity, and process is directed against him in both capacities, the return of service, which simply states that process was served upon the defendant personally, is not conclusive that such personal service was upon him only in his individual capacity, nor that he was not served in his representative capacity. The return under such circumstances becomes equivocal or of doubtful inference. In such a case, as pointed out in Morrissey v. Gray, supra, the court, in support of the judgment actually given, could under this equivocal or defective return permit an amendment by the sheriff so as to show that in fact service was made on the defendant in the capacity in which the judgment against him was actually rendered, or upon the trial in support of said judgment allow proof of the actual capacity in which the service was made.

[5] But cases may arise where from lapse of time, or for other reasons, it may be impossible to make proof justifying the court, on motion, in allowing an amendment to the return to be made, or when the judgment is attacked to supply evidence of the capacity in which service of process was in fact made in support of the judgment entered. It then becomes necessary for the court to determine the validity of a judgment on other considerations. It cannot, of course, be determined from the return itself, because that is equivocal, hence resort must be had to the entire record, and where it appears upon such resort that the true nature of the action against the defendant was in both an individual and representative capacity and process issued directed for service upon him in both capacities, these facts taken into consideration by the court, in connection with the return of the sheriff that the service was made upon the defendant personally, warrant the conclusive presumption that, in whichever capacity a judgment was rendered against him, service upon him in that capacity was had and jurisdiction to render it acquired.

[6] As to the other claim made in the complaint that the judgment is void because of the previous connection of Judge Gray with the estate of Timothy Morrissey, deceased, as one of the attorneys for the administratrix, which it is alleged disqualified him from proceeding as superior court judge in the foreclosure matter and rendering a decree of foreclosure: The facts which are stated as allegations in the complaint in this respect are no different from those considered under the evidence in the appeal heretofore referred to (Morrissey v. Gray, supra), where it was held that they constituted no disqualification.

[7] As to the further claim of fraud on the part of Gray in procuring the deed from plaintiffs: In view of the fact that the title of Gray to the property is deraigned through a sheriff's sale under the judgment in the foreclosure proceedings which we have just been considering, and which was valid as against the interest of the estate of Timothy Morrissey in the land, the deed from plaintiffs to Gray which they seek to avoid becomes of no moment. The title of Gray being valid under the judgment of foreclosure and sale, he need place no reliance on that deed. He acquired nothing under it that he did not already possess. This matter is also sufficiently treated of in the case on appeal referred to and needs no further consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

162 Cal. 630

FITZIMONS v. ATHERTON et al.

(L. A. 2,866.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 18, 1912.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 86*)—ACTS CONSTITUTING—PAYMENT OF TAXES.

One who has been in the continued adverse possession of a tract, but who has never paid any taxes, does not acquire title by adverse possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 504; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 775*)—TAX DEEDS—DESCRIPTION—EVIDENCE.

Where a tax deed described the land as the east one-half of a designated block in an addition, the recorded map of the addition and evidence of the location of the block on the ground, and the marking thereof by stakes set at each corner, were properly admitted to explain and make certain the description in the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1543; Dec. Dig. § 775.*]

3. BOUNDARIES (§ 48*)—ACQUIESCENCE—EVIDENCE.

One who proves occupancy, but who does not show that the adjacent owner ever agreed to the boundary line claimed, or that he was aware of the occupancy or that the location of the division line was a matter of dispute or agreement between the parties, does not establish a boundary by acquiescence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 232-242; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Paul W. Bennett, Judge.

Action by James Fitzimons against A. C. Atherton and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas Scott and J. R. Dorsey, for appellant. Chas. N. Sears, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an action to quiet title to a tract of land containing 4.44 acres, constituting a part of lot 2 of Kelly's addition to the town of Delano, in Kern county. The tract embraces part of the east half and part of the west half of the lot, which, according to the plat and survey thereof, contains 10 acres. The defendants answered, admitting the ownership of the west half of lot 2 by the plaintiff, denying his ownership of any part of the east half thereof, and also alleging that defendant A. C. Atherton is the owner of said east half of the lot,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes and that he makes no claim to any other part thereof. The findings are in favor of the defendant on all these issues. Judgment was given declaring that A. C. Atherton is the owner and is in possession of the east half of the lot, and quieting his title thereto. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

There is no adjudication respecting the alleged claims of defendants to the portion of the 4.44 acres described in the complaint lying within the west half of the lot. We mention this in explanation merely. The evidence shows that they never made such claim. Their pleadings do not make the claim. The failure to adjudicate all the issues is not complained of, and, under the circumstances, the plaintiff does not appear to be substantially prejudiced by the omission of a formal judgment in his favor as to that part of the premises.

[1] The proof on the part of the plaintiff showed title of record to the west half only. There was evidence of long-continued adverse possession of the other part of the tract in dispute, but there was no evidence that plaintiff had paid taxes on any part of the lot except the west half. Therefore his claim of title to a part of the east half by adverse possession was not established.

[2] The defendant A. C. Atherton, in support of his claim of title to the east half, introduced a deed by the tax collector, on behalf of the state, conveying said half to the plaintiff. The conveyance purported to be made in pursuance of a sale to the state in July, 1895, for nonpayment of taxes, a subsequent deed thereof to the state, and a subsequent sale by the state to Atherton, all in accordance with the law. The deed to Atherton described the property as "lying and being in the county of Kern, State of California and described as follows, to wit: E. ½ of block 2, Kelly's addition to Delano." Objection was made that the deed was void because of uncertainty in the description. Thereupon the recorded map of Kelly's addition to Delano was introduced in evidence, proof was made of the location of the block on the ground and that it was marked by stakes set at each corner, and that there was no other recorded map of said addition. We perceive no error in this and it was sufficient to explain and make certain the description given in the deed. Best v. Wohlford, 144 Cal. 737, 78 Pac. 293; Baird v. Monroe, 150 Cal. 569, 89 Pac. 352; Fox v. Townsend, 152 Cal. 53, 91 Pac. 1004, 1007; Chapman v. Zoberlein, 152 Cal. 218, 92 Pac. 188. No other objection is here made to the validity of the deed.

[3] It is argued on behalf of the plaintiff that the evidence shows that the boundary line between the east half and the west half of the lot was fixed by acquiescence and occupancy so as to include within the west half the land to which he claims title. There is no merit in the claim. There was evidence of occupancy and claim of title by plaintiff, but there was no evidence to show that the owner of the east half ever agreed to the line claimed, or was aware of the occupancy, or that the location of the division line was ever a matter of dispute or agreement between them. Apparently the owner of the east half was absent and had left it vacant and uninclosed. At least there is nothing to the contrary. Such evidence is not sufficient to establish a boundary by acquiescence or estoppel. So far as it shows adverse possession, it is, as stated, ineffectual because the taxes were not paid by the claimant. There are no other points worthy of notice. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

162 Cal. 675

CITY OF OAKLAND v. OAKLAND WATER FRONT CO. (S. F. 5,408.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 24, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1195*)—LAW OF THE CASE—DECISION OF SUPREME COURT.

A decision of the Supreme Court concurred in by four justices, which defined the nature and physical extent of a grant by a city to an individual, is the law of the case on a subsequent trial, but where three justices determined that the individual took title by virtue of ordinances and deeds under a compromise entered into by statutory authority, while two justices specially concurring held that the individual acquired title by virtue of earlier ordinances, deeds, and ratifying statutes, the decision is not the law of the case as to the questions when in point of time and by virtue of what acts the city parted with and the individual acquired title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4661–4665; Dec. Dig. § 1195.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1194*)—LAW OF THE CASE—DECISION OF SUPREME COURT.

Where the Supreme Court on appeal did not discuss and determine a question, the question could be litigated and determined on a subsequent trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4648–4660; Dec. Dig. § 1194.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 657*)—STREETS—DEDICATION—VACATION.

The Legislature may vacate a dedication of a street in a city, and may delegate the power so to do to the city, especially where the street has not been used by the public.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 722, 844, 1429, 1496; Dec. Dig. § 657.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 657*)—GRANTS—COMPROMISES—EFFECT.

St. 1867–68, p. 222, authorizing the city of Oakland to compromise and adjust all claims and controversies in which the city is interested, was enacted pending a controversy over the validity of streets and easements which the city contended were imposed on lands granted by the city, which the grantee insisted could not be imposed because of private ownership, and to enable the city to secure for itself the terminus of a transcontinental railroad. By the terms of the compromise, a portion of the lands in controversy should be given to the railroad. The validity of the grant to the grantee was recognized by the compromise, and the city bound itself to make good the title to the property included in the grant. The grantee conveyed to a third person in solido, and the deeds from the third person to the city and to the railroad company followed. An ordinance of the city recited that all disputes between the city and the grantee and his assigns were abandoned by the city to him and his assigns. Subsequent to the compromise, the city recognized that the streets claimed by it prior to the compromise did not exist, and made efforts to condemn for street purposes the property claimed by the city prior to the compromise to be included in streets, and it assessed and collected taxes on such property. Held, that the city, by virtue of the compromise, abandoned its claims to the streets previously claimed, and revoked any dedications previously attempted to be made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 722, 844, 1429, 1496; Dec. Dig. § 657.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 225*)—RATIFICATION OF ACTS—STATUTORY AUTHORITY.

The power of the city of Oakland to ratify an original grant to an individual is conferred by St. 1867-68, p. 222, authorizing it to compromise claims in which it is interested, and a ratification made by the authorities of the city is valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 626-643; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 225*)—RATIFICATION OF ACTS—EFFECT.

A ratification by a city of a prior grant made by it operates as of the date of the original grant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 626-643; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

7. ESTOPPEL (§ 62*)—GRANTS—RESERVATIONS—CITY.

A declaration by a city that a grant by it to an individual is binding negatives the idea, in the absence of any express reservations, of easements on the property included in the grant, and the city by the use of the word "grant" is estopped as against the grantee from asserting anything in derogation of its deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 151-153; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 1018*)—COMPROMISE OF ACTION—CONSENT JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

When the city of Oakland, authorized by St. 1867-68, p. 222, to adjust all causes of action in which it may be interested, consented to a judgment against it quieting title to lands described without any reservation as to streets, the judgment was res adjudicata, and it could not subsequently urge the existence of streets over such lands.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2191; Dec. Dig. § 1018.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Action by the City of Oakland against the Oakland Water Front Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. R. Davis, W. Lair Hill, H. A. Powell, John W. Stetson, City Atty., and Ben. F. Woolner, Ex-City Atty., for appellant. A. A. Moore, Wm. F. Herrin, Stanley Moore, W. H. Orrick, and John E. Foulds, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a second appeal, and is from the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The first appeal is reported in 118 Cal. 160, 50 Pac. 277. The history of the case will there be found set forth at length, and need not here be repeated.

[1] The nature and physical extent of the city's grant to Carpentier were there defined and delimited. That definition and delimitation have become the law of the case. In the opinion of the Chief Justice, concurred in by two of the associate justices, it was held that Carpentier took title by virtue of the ordinances and deeds under the compromise of 1868, entered into by authority of the statute of March 21, 1868 (St. 1867-68, p. 222). Two justices, specially concurring, held that Carpentier acquired title, not by virtue of this compromise, but by virtue of earlier ordinances, deeds, and ratifying statutes. It is proper to note that, as there has not been the concurrence of four justices upon the precise question as to when in point of time and by virtue of what acts the city parted with and Carpentier acquired title, it cannot be said to be the law of the case that such title was first acquired in 1868. Roche v. Baldwin, 143 Cal. 186, 76 Pac. 956; Philbrook v. Newman, 148 Cal. 172, 82 Pac. 772; Los Gatos, etc., Ry. Co. v. San Jose Ry. Co., 156 Fed. 455, 84 C. C. A. 265, 13 Ann. Cas. 571; Pollock v. Hennicke Co., 64 Ark. 180, 46 S. W. 185. Two of the justices, believing that such title had been acquired before 1868, and three believing that it had been acquired in 1868, the result was a consensus of opinion of five that at least in 1868 such title was vested in Carpentier. Two justices dissented. They held the view that the grant to Carpentier was void within the principle announced in Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 13 Sup. Ct. 110, 36 L. Ed. 1018, that the state itself could not make such a grant, and therefore it could be made by no agency of the state; that, because the grant was thus void as an abdication of a trust upon which the sovereign state held these lands, no ordinances or statutes of confirmation or ratification and no consent judgments could operate to give it validity. These dissenting justices were not called upon to express and did not express their views as to when and how title vested in Carpentier, conceding the power of the state to make the grant.

It has, however, become the settled law of the case that the state had power to make the grant; the Chief Justice expressing the following determination which was concurred in by four of his associates: "A grant by the state of California, therefore, of mud flats and shoals between high and low tide on the margin of the bay of San Francisco cannot be held to have been in excess of the legislative power, in the absence of any proof that such grant has seriously impaired the power of succeeding Legislatures to regulate, protect, improve, or develop the public rights of navigation or fishery, and in this case it does not appear that the grant to Oakland, as here construed, would have that effect if transferred to a natural person or private corporation. It is true that the private ownership of the shore may prevent access to the navigable waters of the bay, but so does the private ownership of the upland prevent access to the shore and to the navigable waters in the same sense and to the same extent. This, however, is a minor and temporary inconvenience for which our laws and the laws of all civilized states provide an ample remedy. By the exercise of the right of eminent domain all necessary means of access from the uplands to the water front may be condemned for the public use, at a cost not in excess of the reasonable value of the land taken or subjected to the servitude. And there is no injustice in requiring this compensation to be made to the grantee of shore lands when his right to such lands is in other respects valid in law; for, like other holders of title derived from the state, he is presumed to have given what, at the time of the grant, was deemed a fair equivalent for the land granted." The Chief Justice further said: "The conclusion, I think, necessarily follows that from and after the 2d day of April, 1868, the city of Oakland ceased to be the owner as trustee, or otherwise, of any portion of her water front except those portions secured to her by the compromise of that date, and such streets, thoroughfares, and other parcels as may have been previously dedicated to public use. As to all such places the transfer to the Water Front Company and its assigns was subject to the public easement, and the city as trustee for the public is no doubt entitled to a decree in this action defining her right of control over the lands so dedicated. With respect to such streets and public places, the various consent decrees, relied upon by defendant, constitute no estoppel, and the statute of limitations does not apply." This language cannot be held to embody any law of the case. It is the decision of but three justices, and is necessarily at variance with the views of the two justices especially concurring, for, by the views of those justices, Carpentier acquired title long prior to 1868, and his acquisition of title on any such earlier date would certainly render any subsequently attempted dedication by the city of streets over his land a mere nullity, yet the language quoted implies that the city of Oakland retained control of such streets and thoroughfares "as may have been previously (previous to the compromise of 1868) dedicated to public use." The dissenting justices, of course, presented no views upon this matter, and for aught that appears, or can be made to appear, if the power of the state to make such a grant were admitted, they might have concluded that the original grant to Carpentier was valid, or that it was made valid by the act of 1861 (Laws 1861, p. 387, § 3), or by one or another of the judgments given in the case. Moreover, the language quoted cannot be construed as a finding, much less a determination, that there were any such streets. Not only had no question of dedicated streets been presented in the case, but the very evidence here introduced, of the maps and dedicatory ordinances, were not in the record upon the former appeal. Nor was there determined upon that appeal the mode by which Carpentier and his successors acquired title, the court limiting its declarations in this respect to the statement that the act of 1868 contemplated and was "comprehensive enough to sustain a transfer" of all the property in controversy.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[2] Not having been called upon to discuss, and not having discussed, the specific terms of the compromise and the nature of the title taken under it, those questions are untouched and undetermined.

The town of Oakland was never a pueblo. Surrounding its uplands, which were all held in private ownership, were marsh lands which, generally speaking, extended from the line of extreme high tide, where the upland grasses and the marsh grasses came together, to the line of ordinary high tide, which marked the limit of vegetation. This land also was held in private ownership. The water front owned by the town of Oakland consisted of the mud flats lying between the line of high and low tide. Following the conveyance to Carpentier in the early 50's, the town of Oakland from time to time passed ordinances dedicatory of certain streets. In some instances maps were referred to. Some of these ordinances purported to dedicate such streets to high tide, others to low tide, still others to the southern or western boundary of the city. Because of the conditions above adverted to these attempts to dedicate streets over the uplands and marsh lands amounted to nothing, since the town and the city, its successor, had no ownership in or control over these lands, and did not undertake to perfect these incipient dedications by purchase or condemnation of such lands. The utmost result that could be claimed for such efforts is that they operated to set apart for public use the 60, or 70, or 80 foot strips projected along the line of the nonexisting streets over the mud flats between the high and low tide. We need not pause here to consider whether when a municipality makes a dedication to the public over its own lands the so-called dedication amounts to anything more than an offer, until accepted by the use of the public or by the acts of the municipal authorities in rendering the property so dedicated available to public use. It may be conceded that the dedication was complete so far as the municipality was concerned without any further act upon its part or upon the part of the public. Certain it is, however, that the town or city did nothing more than to pass these ordinances, that it never in any wise developed these so-called streets, and that the public to this day has never used them.

[3] Treating these strips across the mud flats unconnected with the high lands as dedicated though unused streets, that the Legislature had full power to vacate such dedications (even if affected by a public use, as was not the case here), or to delegate this power, as was done in the plenary act of settlement and compromise of 1868, is beyond question. Says the court in Polack v. Trustees of the S. F. Orphan Asylum, 48 Cal. 490: "That the Legislature possesses competent power to vacate a street in a city; that the Legislature may delegate or commit such power to the municipal authorities of the city; that its exercise by the municipal authorities is dependent on the will and subject to the control of the Legislature; and that, after such power has thus been committed to the municipal authorities, the Legislature may revoke it in part as well as in whole, or, without an express revocation, may itself exercise it in any particular instance, are propositions about which there can be no controversy in this state." See, also, Brook v. Horton, 68 Cal. 554, 10 Pac. 204; San Francisco v. Burr, 108 Cal. 460, 41 Pac. 482.

[4] The real question, then, is, Did the Legislature, acting through its authorized agent, the city of Oakland, revoke such offers of dedication or vacate such unused streets? To this question not only the terms of the compromise itself, but every act of the city therein and thereafter, make possible but one answer. Such dedications were unquestionably revoked. It is said in the opinion of the Chief Justice upon the former hearing, speaking of the controversy which the Legislature authorized to be compromised, that, if ever there was "a flagrant and notorious controversy over anything, there certainly was such a controversy between Carpentier and the city of Oakland over this water front." A very vital part of this controversy raged over these so-called streets and the easements which the city was contending were being imposed upon these lands, and which Carpentier was insisting could not be imposed by virtue of the fact that he held them in private ownership. The settlement of this controversy over these streets was therefore a part, and as necessary a part, of the compromise which was entered into with Carpentier as was any other term, covenant, or condition of it. The plenary power of the state to effect such revocation and its delegation of power to the city have been adverted to. The statute of 1868 itself was not a mere authorization to grant or alienate the property in controversy. It was enacted with special reference to the strife that had grown up over grants previously made, and it empowered the city "to compromise, settle and adjust any and all claims, demands, controversies and causes of action" growing out of such previous transactions and the resultant disputes which arose out of them. One of the moving impulses to the adjustment was Oakland's desire to secure for itself the terminus of the first transcontinental railroad which had proposed entering San Francisco by another route. A portion of these lands was to be given by the terms of the compromise to the railroad, and, upon this gift and the vesting in the railroad company of "a good title in fee simple" (such is the language of the compromise) of the property, the railroad company would expend at least a half a million dollars thereon, and would make Oakland a terminal point. The validity of Carpentier's title in this compromise was recognized, first, by the fact that under it he was to convey all these lands to respondent herein. The respondent was to convey certain of them to the railroad company and certain others expressly described to the city of Oakland. The city of Oakland bound itself "to the performance and execution by the municipal authorities of the city of Oakland of all instruments, ordinances and proceedings necessary to perfect, complete and make good the title" to the property conveyed by Carpentier to respondent. Carpentier conveyed to the respondent in solido, and the deeds from respondent to the city and to the railroad company of their lands followed in due course. The city is still holding the property so conveyed to it. The language of the ordinances of the city of Oakland in settlement of the controversies is set forth in full in the previous opinion in this case. That these ordinances were carefully drawn may not be doubted. Lawyers of the greatest learning were employed upon either side. The ordinances do not pretend to make a new grant of the property or of any part of it. They set forth the earlier ordinances of the city granting these lands to Carpentier, the deed of the mayor following such ordinances, and, with the declaration that all claims, demands, controversies, disputes, litigations, and causes of action heretofore existing between the city of Oakland and Carpentier and his assigns are compromised, settled, and adjusted, announce that "the said above-mentioned ordinances and conveyances are made valid, binding, and ratified and confirmed, and all disputes, litigations, controversies, and claims in and to the franchises and property described in said ordinances and deeds of conveyance and every part thereof are abandoned and released by the said city of Oakland to the said Carpentier and his assigns." Then follow specific conditions, and even reservations. The Oakland Water Front Company, respondent herein, is to make certain conveyances to the railroad company and to "other parties" which included the city of Oakland, and, as a reservation, nothing is deemed to affect the rights of the San Francisco and Oakland Railroad Company, derived under an ordinance of the city, nor the reversion of the property of the Western Pacific Railroad Company to the city of Oakland. In an ordinance passed the next day, which declared the due execution by the respondent of all which it was called upon to perform, there is a further ratification and confirmation, and another declaration that "all disputes, controversies, claims, demands and causes of action heretofore existing between the said city of Oakland on the one part and Horace W. Carpentier and his assigns on the other part relating to the force and validity of said ordinances and deed are hereby abandoned and released by the said city of Oakland to the said Carpentier and his assigns." In this agreement it has been said the city took certain of these water front lands with their streets from the respondent. It is impossible to conceive of language which more completely evinced a settlement of the controversy of streets or no streets effective dedications or ineffective dedications than that here employed and this language is susceptible of but the one construction the abandonment of the city's claims in this regard and the revocation of any dedications previously attempted to be made. This is borne out not only by the language above quoted, but by the fact that it is Carpentier's deed and not the deed of the city which, in the compromise, formed respondent's recognized muniment of title, and by the even more significant fact that the city itself deliberately ratified its original grant to Carpentier.

[5] The power to ratify was necessarily a power conferred by the state under the act of 1868 authorizing the city to settle, adjust, and compromise and the ratification is as complete when made by an authorized agent of the authority having the power to ratify as though made by that authority itself. Bissell v. City of Jeffersonville, 24 How. 287, 16 L. Ed. 664.

[6] Nor can any exposition be needed of the well-settled principle that ratification operates as of the date of the originally invalid act. 1 Abbott, Mun. Corps. § 281; Boggs v. Merced Mining Co., 14 Cal. 279; Zettman v. San Francisco, 20 Cal. 96, 81 Am. Dec. 96; City of Monterey v. Jacks, 139 Cal. 542, 73 Pac. 436.

[7] There is then a declaration by the city of Oakland that the grant by itself to Carpentier of 1852 is in all respects binding. This declaration, in the absence of express reservation, negatives the idea of any incumbrances by easements or otherwise upon the property, and by the very use of the word "grant" the city "is estopped as against its grantee to assert anything in derogation of its deed." 10 Cyc. 626. It was a covenant on the part of the city that the water front was not burdened with incumbrances by way of easements or otherwise, for that a public highway is an incumbrance which will be held to be a breach of a covenant stipulating that there are no incumbrances is well settled. Kellogg v. Ingersoll, 2 Mass. 97; Prichard v. Atkinson, 3 N. H. 335; Kellogg v. Malin, 50 Mo. 496, 11 Am. Rep. 426.

As little question can there be over the intent appearing in these compromise ordinances to revoke any such dedications. If what has already been pointed out does not make this plain, there is the added consideration that a deed in solido without reservation of easements or streets, such a deed as was here made, itself operates as a revocation. Hayward v. Manzer, 70 Cal. 476, 13 Pac. 141; Schmitt v. City and County of San Francisco, 100 Cal. 302, 34 Pac. 961; Sacramento v. Clunie, 120 Cal. 29, 52 Pac. 44; Los Angeles v. Kysor, 125 Cal. 463, 58 Pac. 90; Myers v. City of Oceanside, 7 Cal. App. 87, 93 Pac. 686; San Francisco v. Calderwood, 31 Cal. 585, 91 Am. Dec. 542; San Francisco v. Canavan, 42 Cal. 541; People v. Williams, 64 Cal. 498, 2 Pac. 393; Demartini v. San Francisco, 107 Cal. 402, 40 Pac. 496; Shulz v. Redondo Improvement Co., 156 Cal. 439, 105 Pac. 118. Instructive upon this is the case of Hoboken v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 124 U. S. 656, 8 Sup. Ct. 643, 31 L. Ed. 543, which offers some features of great similarity to those presented in this consideration. The original owner of the land upon which the city of Hoboken stands, Stevens by name, caused a plan of the city to be made and filed, which plan exhibited numbers of streets running north and south and east and west, which latter streets upon the map terminated at the eastern end of the high water mark of the Hudson river. Lots were sold in accordance with the plan. Stevens' title went to high water, and subsequently the state sold certain of the lands below high water to the Hoboken Land & Improvement Company. The latter filled in its property and claimed title in fee simple. The claim of the city was that the land lying at the extremities of the streets was subject to an easement in favor of the public for street purposes under the principle that when a street is carried to high water an easement attaches in favor of the public for wharf and similar purposes to the lands under the waters beyond, and this easement will be continued over any filled land which otherwise would cut off access from the street to the water. But the Supreme Court of the United States, all the judges concurring, declared that, if any such easements existed, they were extinguished by the action of the state in conveying the property to the Hoboken Land & Improvement Company without reservation of such easements; the court saying: "The grant, being from the state, creates an estoppel against the estoppel, for the state, in respect to the easements claimed, is the representative of the public, superior in authority and paramount in right to the city of Hoboken; and, as we have already seen, the existence of the easement defeats the grant of the state. The state, therefore, being estopped by its grant, is estopped to deny its effect to extinguish the public right to the easement claimed. The right insisted upon in these actions by the city of Hoboken is the public right, and not the right of the individual citizens, claiming by virtue of conveyances of lots abutting on streets made by Stevens or his successors in the title. The public right represented by the plaintiff is subordinate to the state, and subject to its control. The state may release the obligation to the public, may discharge the land of the burden of the easement, and extinguish the public right to its enjoyment. Whatever it may do in that behalf conclusively binds the local authorities, when, as in the present cases, the rights of action asserted are based exclusively on the public right."

[8] Again, it is to be remembered that the act of 1868 authorized the compromise, adjustment, and settlement of all "causes of action" in which the city was interested. There can be no question but that a consent judgment becomes res adjudicata between the parties. Holmes v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 191; Seiple v. Wright, 32 Cal. 659; McCreery v. Fuller, 63 Cal. 31; Crossman v. Davis, 79 Cal. 603, 21 Pac. 963; Nashville, etc., Ry. Co. v. U. S., 113 U. S. 261, 5 Sup. Ct. 460, 28 L. Ed. 971. In City of Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Company (No. 115, superior court of Alameda county), the city stipulated that the respondent herein should "have a final judgment against plaintiff quieting the title to the lands described in its cross-bill or complaint." These lands were all of the property here in controversy without reservation as to the streets.

Again, in the cases of Central Pacific Railroad Co. v. City of Oakland (No. 5330, superior court of Alameda county), Central Pacific Railroad Co. v. City of Oakland (No. 5331, superior court of Alameda county), and Huntington v. City of Oakland, no opinion filed (No. 2,209, United States Circuit Court, Ninth Circuit), under disclaimers filed by the city pursuant to an ordinance of the city council, it was adjudged and decreed that the city of Oakland had no right or title or interest in or to any of the lands there in question which are included in the property involved in the present appeal. Says the Supreme Court of Indiana (Parrish v. Ferris, 2 Blackf. 606, 17 L. Ed. 317): "If the judgment is in favor of the plaintiff and declares that he has title in fee simple, and that the defendant's claim is unjust and unfounded, every possible interest of the latter in the land is cut off. He cannot afterwards assert that he has an easement in the land."

We need not consider how far these judgments operate to estop the appellant. They are certainly strong evidence upon the matter of revocation. They show that in none of these instances was the city endeavoring to protect what it now claims to be its streets, though it is inconceivable that, if it had believed it had any streets, it would not have done so. Aside from the plain language of the ordinances and from the other considerations above discussed, the interpretation by conduct of one or the other of the parties is always of value. And so further in this connection it may be pointed out that the city repeatedly made efforts to condemn for street purposes the very property which it here claims was dedicated to street purposes. It has assessed and collected taxes upon the property claimed as streets. It has sold this property for the nonpayment of taxes assessed thereon. It has taken conveyances from respondent for street purposes of some of the property within the lines of some of the asserted streets. All these matters and things, with the language of the compromise itself and the provisions of the agreement of compromise to the effect that the city of Oakland "should perfect, complete and make good" the title of respondent to the property conveyed to it by Carpentier, make it manifest not only that the city did revoke its dedications, complete or inchoate, but that it thoroughly understood that it had done so and continuously acted upon such understanding.

For these reasons, the order appealed from is affirmed.

BEATTY, C. J., did not participate in the foregoing decision.

cretion in granting a motion to open the default.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 269, 270, 272–291; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. R. Hervey, Judge.

Action by A. T. Jergins against Samuel Schenck and another. From an order granting defendants' motion to vacate their default, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hunsaker & Britt, for appellant. Paul W. Schenck and Frederick Gros, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff took judgment by default upon the failure of the defendants to answer within the time allowed after the overruling of their demurrer to the second amended and supplemental complaints. The defendants moved to vacate the default and judgment on the ground of excusable neglect, and their motion was granted. From the order granting this relief, the plaintiff appeals.

The showing made by the defendants in support of their motion was not contradicted by any evidence on the part of the plaintiff. The only question is whether the facts set forth in the affidavits offered by the defendants were sufficient to authorize the court to find that the failure to answer had been the result of a neglect that was excusable.

[1, 2] The law governing this class of cases is so well settled, and has been so often declared in the decisions of this court, that we may dispense with the citation of authority. An application to be relieved from a default, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court; and the action of that court will not be set aside on appeal, unless an abuse of discretion clearly appears. Any doubt that may exist should be resolved in favor of the application, to the end of securing a trial upon the merits. The appellate court will therefore be less inclined to reverse an order granting, than one refusing, an application to open a default. Indeed, the cases in which this court has held that such relief was improperly granted are very rare; while in a number of instances an order refusing to open the default has been reversed.

[3] Applying these principles, we entertain no doubt whatever that the court below did not abuse its discretion in granting the application in this case. The affidavits filed justified the conclusions that the defendants at all times desired and intended to contest the suit; that the attorney in charge of the defense had reasons, not entirely without basis, for believing that the demurrer would not be acted upon as soon as it in fact was; that he was not aware that the demurrer

162 Cal. 747

JERGINS v. SCHENCK et al. (L. A. 2,914.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 3, 1912.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 139*)—APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 957*)—DEFAULT—OPENING—DISCRETION.

An application to be relieved from a default, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court; and its action will not be reversed, unless an abuse of discretion clearly appears.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 265–268; Dec. Dig. § 139;* Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3823; Dec. Dig. § 957.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 163*)—DEFAULT—OPENING—RIGHT TO RELIEF.

On an application to open a default, any doubt should be resolved in favor of the application; and hence an appellate court will be less inclined to reverse an order granting, than one refusing, such an application.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 323; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 143*)—DEFAULT—OPENING—RIGHT TO RELIEF.

Where a defendant intended to contest a case, but failed to answer after his demurrer was overruled, owing to his attorney's belief, not entirely without basis, that the demurrer would not be acted upon as soon as it was, and to his failure to learn that it had been overruled, caused in part by his reliance on the custom of the clerk of the court to give counsel notice of orders overruling demurrers, and in part to his reliance on his own clerk, who, by reason of inexperience and a pardonable inadvertence, failed to ascertain the status of the case, the trial court did not abuse its dis-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes had been overruled until after the default had been entered; and that his ignorance in this respect was due in part to his reliance upon a custom of the clerk of the court to notify counsel of orders overruling or sustaining demurrers (a custom which was not followed in this instance), and in part to reliance upon his own clerk, who, by reason of inexperience and a not unpardonable inadvertence, had failed to ascertain and to note the true status of the case. It would be useless to enter into a recital of all the details concerning these matters. It is enough to say that the neglect of defendants' representatives was not so obviously without excuse as to warrant this court in overturning the order permitting an answer and a trial upon the merits.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

162 Cal. 687

Ex parte MILLER. (Cr. 1,686.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 27, 1912.
Rehearing Denied June 26, 1912.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 208*)—DISCRIMINATION BETWEEN SEXES — EMPLOYMENT—POLICE POWER.

The guaranty against discrimination in Const. art. 20, § 18, providing that no person shall, on account of sex, be disqualified from entering on or pursuing any lawful business, vocation, or profession, is subject to reasonable regulations under the police powers, and does not prevent such reasonable restrictions on the hours of labor of women as may be necessary for the protection and preservation of the public health.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 649-677; Dec. Dig. § 208.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 89*) — RIGHT TO CONTRACT AS TO EMPLOYMENT.

The guaranty in Const. art. 1, § 1, of right to liberty and to acquire and possess property, which includes right to contract to serve and to employ, is subject to the police powers as to public health and general welfare.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 157; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 13*) — POLICE POWERS—FEMALE EMPLOYMENT — HOURS OF SERVICE.

Act March 22, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 437), limiting the time females may be employed—that is, engaged in the service of another—in certain establishments, including hotels, to eight hours a day, is not so manifestly unreasonable and unnecessary for the promotion and preservation of public health and welfare that it can be declared not to be a proper police regulation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 81*)—SPECIAL LEGISLATION—FEMALE EMPLOYMENT.

Act March 22, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 437), limiting the time females may be employed in certain establishments to eight hours a day, is not special legislation because occupations not enumerated may be equally injurious to the health of women, and because being applied to hotels, and not to boarding and lodging houses, or because excepting employment in harvesting, curing, canning, or drying perishable fruits or vegetables.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 90; Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

5. STATUTES (§ 107*) TITLE AND SUBJECT.

Act March 22, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 437), the general subject of which is the regulation of female employment, does not embrace two subjects, in contravention of Const. art. 4, § 24, because of making it a misdemeanor to require a female employé to work more hours than allowed by the act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 121-134; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

In Bank. Application by F. A. Miller for writ of habeas corpus to be directed against F. P. Wilson, Sheriff of the County of Riverside. Petitioner remanded to custody.

Flint, Gray & Barker and Gray, Barker, Bowen, Allen, Van Dyke & Jutten, for petitioner. Lyman Evans, Dist. Atty., Purrington & Adair, William Denman, amicus curiæ (G. S. Arnold, of counsel), and Thos. F. Griffin and Leon Yanckwich, as amici curiæ, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The petitioner applies for release from custody on a charge of violating the provisions of the act of March 22, 1911, forbidding the employment of women in certain establishments for more than 8 hours in one day, or more than 48 hours in one week. Stats. 1911, 437. The specific charge is that on June 12, 1911, he employed and thereupon required Emma Hunt, a female, to work during that day for nine hours in the Glenwood Hotel as an employé therein. His contention is that the act is unconstitutional and void.

Three grounds are urged in support of this claim: (1) That the restrictions imposed by the statute upon the freedom of contract are in violation of section 1, art. 1, and section 18 of article 20, of the Constitution, and that it is consequently invalid; (2) that the act is special, that it is not uniform in its operation, and that it makes arbitrary discriminations between persons and classes of persons similarly situated contrary to the limitations of sections 11 and 21, art. 1, and section 25 of article 4, of the Constitution; (3) that it embraces two distinct subjects, contrary to section 24, art. 4, of the Constitution.

The material parts of the statute are as follows:

"Section 1. No female shall be employed in any manufacturing, mechanical or mercantile establishment, laundry, hotel, or restaurant, or telegraph or telephone establishment or office, or by any express or transportation company in this state more than eight hours during any one day or more than forty-eight hours in one week. The hours of work may be so arranged as to permit the employment of females at any time so that they shall not work more than eight hours during the twenty-four hours of one day, or forty-eight hours during any one week; provided, however, that the provisions of this section in relation to the hours of employment shall not apply to nor affect the harvesting, curing, canning or drying of any variety of perishable fruit or vegetable.

"Sec. 2. Every employer in any manufacturing, mechanical or mercantile establishment, laundry, hotel, or restaurant, or other establishment employing any female, shall provide suitable seats for all female employes, and shall permit them to use such seats when they are not engaged in the active duties of their employment."

Section 3 declares it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, for any employer to require any female to work in any of the places mentioned in section 1 more than the number of hours allowed by the act during any one day of 24 hours.

[1] 1. Section 18 of article 20 of the Constitution provides that "no person shall, on account of sex, be disqualified from entering upon or pursuing any lawful business, vocation or profession." This section prohibits any discrimination of this kind based solely on distinctions of sex. But, as in case of the other constitutional guaranties, this provision is subject to such reasonable regulations as may be imposed in the exercise of police powers. It does not forbid such reasonable restrictions upon the hours of labor of women as may be necessary for the protection and preservation of the public health. Ex parte Hayes, 98 Cal. 556, 33 Pac. 337, 20 L. R. A. 701; Foster v. Commissioners, 102 Cal. 490, 37 Pac. 763, 41 Am. St. Rep. 194.

[2, 3] 2. Recognizing the importance of personal liberty, our state Constitution at the outset declares that all persons have an inalienable right to enjoy life and liberty and to acquire and possess property. Article 1, § 1. This necessarily includes liberty to work for the purpose of acquiring property, or to accomplish any desired lawful object, and liberty to continue that work each day a sufficient time to gain more than is required for the daily needs. Hence comes right to make contracts to serve and contracts to employ such service. There can be no contract by the employe to serve without a corresponding contract by the employer to hire and receive such service. Therefore, although the act in question provides a punishment only for the employer, its prohibition applies to both, and it clearly restricts the liberty of both the employer and the employed, in the specified establishments, to freely contract with each other as to the length of a day's service or to perform such contracts, when made. Consequently it does to that extent take away the liberty guaranteed by this provision of the Constitution. Although this guaranty of the Constitution is apparently absolute and unqualified, yet it is well established that it is subject to the exercise by the Legislature of what are known as the police powers of the state.

Says the Supreme Court of the United States in Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 391, 18 Sup. Ct. 388, 42 L. Ed. 780: "This right of contract, however, is in itself subject to certain limitations which the state may lawfully impose in the exercise of its police powers," a power which "may lawfully be resorted to for the purpose of preserving public health, safety, or morals, and a large discretion is necessarily vested in the Legislature to determine not only what the interests of the public require, but what measures are necessary for the protection of such interests." See, to the same effect, Ex parte Whitwell, 98 Cal. 78, 32 Pac. 870, 19 L. R. A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152; Ex parte Tuttle, 91 Cal. 591, 27 Pac. 933; In re Yick Wo, 68 Cal. 297, 9 Pac. 139, 58 Am. Rep. 12; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 136, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385.

Because of the great value to mankind and the consequent paramount importance of the preservation of individual liberty, it is universally admitted and held that the police powers of the Legislature are not absolute or unlimited. These personal rights cannot be taken away or impaired at the mere will of the Legislature, nor at all, unless the public welfare demands it. So far as the effect on himself alone is concerned, each person has the absolute right to judge for himself whether the hard labor which he voluntarily performs is for his best interest or not. The Legislature cannot judge for persons in this respect and interfere solely to prevent them from injuring themselves by excessive labor. The injury must be of such character and extent and to such a number of persons that it may be reasonably supposed that it will cause injury to others; that is, to the community in general, or, as it is expressed, to the public health and general welfare. Lawton v. Steele, supra. The means adopted to produce the public benefit intended, or to prevent the public injury, must be reasonably necessary to accomplish that purpose, and not unduly oppressive upon individuals. The determination of the Legislature as to these matters is not conclusive, but is subject to the supervision of the courts, and, if the above qualities are wanting, a law arbitrarily interfering with the right of contract, or imposing restrictions upon lawful occupations, will be held void. Ex parte Whitwell, supra; Lawton v. Steele, supra; Holden v. Hardy, supra; Tiedeman, Police Powers, p. 17; Freund, Police Powers, § 63; Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 936. In the language of Justice Harlan in Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 161, 8 Sup. Ct. 297, 31 L. Ed. 205: "If, therefore, a statute purporting to have been enacted to preserve public health, the public morals, or the public safety, has no real or substantial relation to these objects, or is a palpable invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law, it is the duty of the court so to adjudge, and thereby give effect to the Constitution." If this were not so, the constitutional guaranties of the personal right to liberty and property would be wholly subject to the will of the majority acting through the Legislature.

It is settled, however, that some occupations may have a tendency to injure the health of those engaged therein, that this injury may be so general or extensive as to affect the public health and general welfare, and that in such cases the Legislature may, in the exercise of the police power of the state, enact laws limiting the time of labor therein to eight hours a day. Thus laws have been upheld restricting to eight hours the daily labor of persons working in underground mines, or in smelters and quartz mills, and the legislative judgment on the subject of the extent and effect of the injury was considered sufficiently supported to be beyond judicial interference. Holden v. Hardy, supra; In re Martin, 157 Cal. 51, 106 Pac. 235, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242; In re Martin, 157 Cal. 60, 106 Pac. 239. So, also, it has been recognized that some occupations followed by women, though less arduous than those generally followed by men, may have such a tendency to injure their health, if unduly prolonged, that laws may be enacted restricting their time of labor therein to 10 hours a day. The application of these laws exclusively to women is justified on the ground that they are less robust in physical organization and structure than men, that they have the burden of child-bearing, and, consequently, that the health and strength of posterity and of the public in general is presumed to be enhanced by preserving and protecting women from exertion which men might bear without detriment to the general welfare. See Commonwealth v. Hamilton Mfg. Co., 120 Mass. 383; Wenham v. State, 65 Neb. 394, 91 N. W. 421, 58 L. R. A. 825; State v. Buchanan, 29 Wash. 602, 70 Pac. 52, 59 L. R. A. 342, 92 Am. St. Rep. 930; State v. Muller, 48 Or. 252, 85 Pac. 855, 120 Am. St. Rep. 805, 11 Ann. Cas. 88; Muller v. Oregon, 208 U. S. 412, 28 Sup. Ct. 324, 52 L. Ed. 551, 13 Ann. Cas. 957; Withey v. Bloem, 163 Mich. 419, 128 N. W. 913, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628; Ritchie v. Wayman, 244 Ill. 509, 91 N. E. 695, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 994; State v. Somerville, (Wash.) 122 Pac. 324.

Counsel for the respondent do not advance the proposition that a general restriction of all women to eight hours a day for all work would be a proper police regulation. This precise question is not involved. The act does not limit the time of occupation or exertion by females. It limits only the time for which a female may "be employed"; that is to say, engaged in service for another. The time of such service does not usually measure the whole time of daily toil, labor, or exertion.

The courts must always assume that the Legislature in enacting laws intended to act within its lawful powers, and not to violate the restrictions placed upon it by the Constitution. We must take this statute as a law intended for a police regulation to preserve, protect, or promote the general health and welfare. As has been already stated, a large discretion is vested in the Legislature to determine what measures are necessary for that purpose. Upon this question of fact, as also with regard to the facts upon which a lawful classification and discrimination depends, to be hereinafter discussed, the rule is well settled that the legislative determination that the facts exist which make the law necessary must not be set aside or disregarded by the courts, unless the legislative decision is clearly and palpably wrong and the error appears beyond reasonable doubt from facts or evidence which cannot be controverted, and of which the courts may properly take notice. Stockton v. Stockton, 41 Cal. 159; Ex parte Tuttle, supra; In re Spencer, 149 Cal. 400, 86 Pac. 896, 117 Am. St. Rep. 137, 9 Ann. Cas. 1105; In re King, 157 Cal. 164, 106 Pac. 578. The power of the court to declare a statute unconstitutional is "conceded to be always one of the utmost delicacy in its exercise, and never to be exerted except when the conflict between the statute and the Constitution is palpable and incapable of reconciliation." Stockton v. Stockton, supra. If reasonable men upon a consideration of the facts might rationally reach the conclusion that the enforcement of the statute would tend to promote or preserve, in some appreciable degree, the public health or general welfare, the law must be accredited as a proper exercise of the police power, although other reasonable persons might take a different view.

The reasons which justify a restriction upon the hours of employment or labor of women, as distinguished from men, are fully stated in the cases heretofore cited upon that subject, and need not be further considered here. Restrictions to 10 hours a day have always been upheld. In Illinois a restriction to eight hours in factories was declared invalid. Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 40 N. E. 454, 29 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315. In Washington, a similar law was held valid. State v. Somerville, supra. In the latter case the woman was employed in a factory for the manufacture of paper boxes.

The question of the effect of the various occupations in which women engage, upon their health, is one upon which medical men differ, and with respect to which the prevailing opinion changes from time to time. It has not been, and probably never will be, a settled question, either with respect to the deleterious effects of particular occupations, or the hours of labor which measure the limit of safety in each. Women who work for others usually have household or other domestic duties to perform which oblige them to continue at work each day for a much longer period than their time of service. Even those who live at their places of work generally have to make and mend their clothing and do other things for their personal welfare, in addition to the work done for their employers. In view of these circumstances affecting the generality of employed women, it could scarcely be claimed that a limitation to eight hours a day to the time of employment in many of the occupations mentioned in the act is unreasonable as a health regulation. The work in hotels may not be as severe as that in some of the other places covered by the law, but, considering the delicate frame of women as compared with men, we cannot perceive that the difference is so radical as to make it unreasonable to include employes in hotels among those protected by the law. Doubtless there is a limit below which the Legislature cannot go. But we cannot say that eight hours of employment in work of this character in addition to the labor necessary to be done before and afterward by the employe is unreasonably low and beyond the legislative discretion, or that, in the present condition of common knowledge on the subject, the limitation upon the time of employment of women in hotels is so manifestly unreasonable and unnecessary for the promotion and preservation of the health and welfare of the human race that the courts can declare that the Legislature had no rational ground for imposing it as a police regulation for that purpose. The responsibility, if the law is unwise, is with the Legislature.

[4] 3. The next objection is that the act is special because there are no reasons for making the restriction as to the particular employments mentioned in the act which do not apply with equal force to other similar occupations. There may be, and probably are, other occupations followed by women which are equally injurious to their health, and which should also be regulated. But, if this be true, it does not make the law invalid. If there are good grounds for the classification made by the act, it is not void because it does not include every other class needing similar protection or regulation. "The law is not rendered special by the mere fact that it does not cover every subject which the Legislature might conceivably have included in it." Ex parte Martin, 157 Cal. 57, 106 Pac. 237, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242.

The general rules governing this subject are well settled by our decisions. They may be stated as follows: A law is general and uniform in its operation when it applies equally to all persons embraced within the class to which it is addressed, provided such class is made upon some natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction between the persons composing it and others not embraced in it. It is not general or uniform, and it makes an improper discrimination if it confers particular privileges or imposes peculiar restrictions or disabilities upon a class of persons arbitrarily selected from a larger number of persons, all of whom stand in the same relation to the privileges granted or burdens imposed, and between whom and the persons not so favored or burdened no reasonable distinction or substantial difference can be found justifying the inclusion of one and the exclusion of the other from such privileges or burdens. The difference on which the classification is based must be such as, in some reasonable degree, will account for or justify the peculiar legislation. The following cases declare these rules: Smith v. Judge, 17 Cal. 555; Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 251, 27 Pac. 604; Darcy v. San Jose, 104 Cal. 645, 38 Pac. 500; Bloss v. Lewis, 109 Cal. 499, 41 Pac. 1081; Marsh v. Hanly, 111 Cal. 370, 43 Pac. 975; Ex parte Jentzsch, 112 Cal. 474, 44 Pac. 803, 32 L. R. A. 664; Ex parte Giambonini, 117 Cal. 574, 49 Pac. 732; Krause v. Durbrow, 127 Cal. 684, 60 Pac. 438; Pratt v. Browne, 135 Cal. 652, 67 Pac. 1082; Ex parte Sohncke, 148 Cal. 267, 82 Pac. 956, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 813, 113 Am. St. Rep. 236, 7 Ann. Cas. 475.

The women employed in hotels are, for the most part, chambermaids and waitresses. It is contended that the work of such persons in hotels is no more arduous or injurious to health than that in lodging houses and boarding houses, that they are all of the same class with respect to the need of such protection, and hence that there is no substantial reason or difference in conditions which can justify the protection of those employed in hotels alone. The census returns show that in this state the number of boarding houses and lodging houses combined exceeds the number of hotels by about 50 per cent. of the number of the latter. As the hotels are usually the larger institutions, it is probable that the number of women employed therein is about equal to those employed in the other places mentioned. In the matter of numbers there appears to be no ground for distinction. But there are other obvious differences. The patrons of lodging houses and boarding houses use them as places of residence. They are for the most part permanent occupants. Such places partake more of the nature of a home or residence than does a hotel. They are not accessible, as of right, to the public generally, as is the case with hotels. The occupants may be and often are selected by the proprietor, and frequently they compose a class having similar habits, tastes, and desires. An acquaintance arises between them and the servants and the servants soon become accustomed to the wants and ways of those by whom their services are required. The occupants of a hotel are of a more transient character. They come and go and change daily. They are usually entire strangers to the servants. Their habits are likely to be irregular and of great diversity as well as unfamiliar to the employés. These respective conditions must, or at least may, make the work of such employés in the other places materially different from those similarly employed in hotels. It is not unreasonable to suppose that those in the other places will be subject to less strain and tension than those who serve the more transient, varied, and indiscriminate guests of hotels, to whom they are generally entire strangers. The Legislature, in view of all the above facts, may reasonably have so determined. In support of the law, as already stated, the courts are bound to presume that it did make this decision, and, as there are sound reasons upon which it may rest, the decision must be accepted as correct. The conditions stated appear to be a sufficient basis for the classification made. In such matters the Legislature cannot deal with individual cases. It can provide only for classes, and its decision as to the line of cleavage between classes in some particulars the same and in other particulars different must be upheld where it is based on any reasonable grounds. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the law cannot be declared invalid because of this discrimination.

We cannot say that the exemption of persons employed in harvesting, curing, canning, or drying perishable fruits or vegetables from the operation of the law makes an improper discrimination. These occupations can be carried on only for a short period of each year, the time of the annual ripening of the particular fruits or vegetables. In a cannery devoted to every kind of fruit and vegetable the work may continue much longer, but even those establishments are idle for a large part of the year. There is time for those employed therein to obtain rest and recuperation. It is also to be noted that, looking to the general welfare, there is a greater necessity for facility in obtaining employés to do such work than obtains in ordinary employments, for, unless the work is done at the proper time, great loss must ensue from the perishable nature of the products to be preserved. These are all matters which the Legislature could properly take into consideration, and they constitute a sufficient justification for the exception. See State v. Somerville, supra, where it was held that a similar exception did not vitiate the women's eight hour law of the state of Washington.

[5] 4. The title embraces but one general subject—the regulation of female employment. The subdivision of this subject by the particular details stated in the title does not make it embrace two subjects. The title is sufficient in this respect. We find no ground upon which the law can be declared void or the conviction in question invalid.

Let the petitioner be remanded to the custody of the sheriff of Riverside county.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

162 Cal. 749

McCOMBER v. KELLERMAN. (Sac. 2,877.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 4, 1912.)

1. DAMAGES (§ 79*) — LIQUIDATED DAMAGES AND PENALTIES — CONSTRUCTION OF OIL LEASES.

An oil lease granted to the lessee the right to enter on the land and drill oil wells, and provided that, if he failed to commence drilling within 90 days or to diligently prosecute such drilling, he should make certain specified payments each month to the lessor for 15 months after which the lease should be void if drilling had not been commenced and diligently prosecuted. Held, that the payments provided for were not by way of penalty or liquidated damages, but compensation in the nature of rental for the privilege of preserving the lessee's unexercised right to commence drilling, and hence were recoverable without any proof of actual damage to the lessor from the failure of the lessee to commence drilling.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 164-169; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

2. DAMAGES (§ 79*)—LIQUIDATED DAMAGES—QUESTION OF FIXING ACTUAL DAMAGE.

Under Civ. Code, § 1671, authorizing parties to a contract to fix liquidated damages when from the nature of the case it would be extremely difficult to ascertain the actual damage, an oil lease providing for a royalty to the lessor and for stipulated payments to him for failure of the lessee to commence drilling shows the extreme difficulty of fixing the actual damage so as to render such stipulated payments recoverable as liquidated damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 164-169; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

3. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 78*)—CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF OIL LEASES—"SUSPEND."

An oil lease provided for stipulated payments to the lessor for the lessee's failure to commence drilling, and also provided that the lessee might "suspend" drilling operations if the price of oil went below 75 cents a barrel. When the lease was executed, the price of oil was below 75 cents a barrel, and thereafter remained below that price. Held, that the lease merely authorized a suspension of drilling operations, and did not authorize a failure on the part of the lessee to commence drilling.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 205-207; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 6833, 6834.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by C. L. McComber against J. M. Kellerman. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Weller, for appellant. John W. Kemp and John S. Mitchell, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial.

The complaint states a cause of action to recover the sum of $1,850, alleged to be due upon certain covenants for the payment of rent contained in a so-called oil lease. The appeal was taken to the District Court of Appeal for the Second District. That court, conceiving it to be a case not within its jurisdiction under the Constitution, made an order, as provided by the rules of this court, transferring the case to this court because of the fact that the appeal was supposed to be taken to the wrong court. In this the district court appears to have erred. The complaint is a simple action for a money judgment amounting to less than $2,000, and, under the Constitution, the appellate jurisdiction is in the District Court of Appeal. To set at rest all question concerning jurisdiction, we make a formal order transferring the cause from the District Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court.

The action is based upon a certain agreement executed between the plaintiff and defendant on June 20, 1908. By this agreement the plaintiff granted to the defendant the exclusive right to enter upon the land and drill wells thereon for the extraction of oil and remove the oil so extracted, paying therefor a certain specified royalty to the plaintiff. The defendant therein agreed that he would place a derrick and drilling outfit on the land and commence drilling on or before ninety days from the date of the lease, and would thereafter prosecute the work of drilling said well with reasonable diligence continuously to success or abandonment. The lease then proceeded with the following clause: "It is understood and agreed, however, that in the event of the failure of the party of the second part to place a derrick and drilling rig upon the above described premises, and commence drilling within the said ninety days and prosecute said drilling continuously and in good faith, as aforesaid, said second party agrees to pay to said first party, until drilling is so commenced and diligently prosecuted as aforesaid, the following amounts, viz.: For the first two months after the expiration of said period of ninety days, the sum of one hundred and fifty ($150.00) dollars per month; for the next four (4) months the sum of two hundred ($200.00) dollars per month, and for the next six (6) months, the sum of two hundred and fifty ($250.00) dollars per month, said payments to be made on the 20th day of each month for the preceding calendar month, but in no event shall the party of the second part be allowed more than one year and three months in which to commence drilling said first well, and if the said party of the second part shall fail to commence said drilling operations within one year and three months from the date of this lease, or fail to make any of the payments as above set forth, then this said lease shall be void and the party of the second part shall forfeit all right to the possession of any of the said premises under this agreement and shall not be entitled to commence drilling operations thereon according to the terms of this lease or otherwise." It further provided that, if oil was not found in the first well drilled, the second party would commence another well within ninety days and prosecute the same to completion, or, failing to do so, he would pay similar rent for a similar period, and that he should thereafter continue the operation of drilling wells on said land with at least one string of tools until he should have drilled at least one well on every five acres of the land.

The defendant did not enter upon the land or begin any drilling operations thereon, nor do anything whatever under the provisions of the lease. The plaintiff sued for the payments accruing under the clause of the lease above quoted for the period of nine months ending June 20, 1909. There is no allegation that the plaintiff suffered any damage by reason of the failure of the defendant to enter upon the premises and drill wells thereon.

[1, 2] The defendant contends that the effect of the above clause is to impose the payments mentioned as a penalty, or as liquidated damages for the breach of the agreement to begin the drilling of a well, and not to provide a rental for the premises during the period of delay allowed by the contract, or a price for the continuation of the right to begin during such delay; that if it is a penalty it is void under section 1670 of the Civil Code, and if liquidated damages the judgment is erroneous because it was neither alleged nor proven that the nature of the case is such that it would be extremely difficult or impracticable to fix the damages, referring to section 1671 of the Civil Code, allowing liquidated damages in such cases. In support of these contentions he cites Jack v. Sinsheimer, 125 Cal. 563, 58 Pac. 130, Long Beach v. Dodge, 135 Cal. 401, 67 Pac. 499, and other cases.

We do not think the agreement properly bears this construction. It gives the defendant the right to take possession of the land for the purpose of erecting a rig thereon and drilling wells therein and to continue such possession thereof for that purpose for the entire period of 15 months therein provided as the utmost limit of time within which the defendant must begin operations. The specified price appears to have been provided and fixed as the price which the defendant was to pay for the privilege of preserving and continuing his unexercised right to begin, in case he should see fit to or should be compelled to delay the beginning of the work for more than 90 days after the date of the lease. It was clearly in the nature of rental for the premises or compensation for the right, and not an attempt to fix a penalty or liquidated damages.

But, if it were considered as liquidated damages, the complaint and proof are sufficient to support the judgment. The nature of the case and the extreme difficulty of fixing damages arising from the breach of such a contract are fully shown by the lease itself. This was directly decided in Escondido, etc., Co. v. Glaser, 144 Cal. 500, 77 Pac. 1040.

[3] The fifth clause of the lease was as follows: "The party of the second part agrees to drill, operate and pump said wells constantly and with due diligence (holidays, Sundays and unavoidable accidents excepted) as long as the price of oil remains above seventy-five cents per barrel in that district for oil of similar quality, but should the price of oil go below seventy-five cents per barrel, then the party of the second part shall have the right to suspend all drilling operations until the market price in that district for oil of a similar quality shall have reached the price of seventy-five cents per barrel of forty-two gallons. It is understood, however, that the party of the second part shall continue to pump all of said wells until the price of oil shall go below sixty cents per barrel of forty-two gallons each, then he may cease pumping until the market price has again advanced to sixty cents per barrel." The complaint does not allege that the price of oil in the district in which the land was situated was 75 cents a barrel or more during the period in question. The defendant contends that this clause absolved him from the duty of beginning to drill the wells as long as the price of oil was less than 75 cents per barrel, and that the complaint should have alleged that it was of that market value at the time. We need not determine this question of pleading. The answer alleged the fact that the price of oil did not reach 75 cents per barrel during the entire period after the making of the lease. The court found this allegation to be true. Whatever benefit the defendant is entitled to from this fact he has secured from this finding, and the failure to state it in the complaint does not prejudice him.

His contention in this behalf is that, under the fifth clause above quoted, he was not required to begin drilling operations on the land until the price of oil in that district had reached 75 cents a barrel. We do not think the clause so provides. By the previous portions of the lease he was unconditionally required to place a derrick and drilling outfit on the land and begin drilling on or before 90 days from the date of the lease, or pay the monthly rent afterward as provided. The fifth clause did not exempt him from doing this. The price was below that sum when the lease was made. The clause provided that he should drill, operate, and pump the wells constantly as long as the price remained above 75 cents a barrel, and that, if it fell below that sum, he should "have the right to suspend all drilling operations" until the price again reached that sum. Pumping was to continue until the price fell below 60 cents. The price could not "go below" 75 cents, in the ordinary meaning of that phrase, unless it had reached that sum. The lessee could not "suspend" operations which he had not begun. The language was evidently chosen upon the theory that he should at all events begin the drilling of a well in good faith, but that, after having begun, he might be allowed to suspend such drilling until the price rose to 75 cents. The respondent contends with much force that this clause could not become operative until he had drilled a well and discovered oil therein. This argument is based upon the part of the clause which provides that the price stated should be for "oil of a similar quality"; that is to say, oil of a quality similar to that of the wells to be drilled on said land by the defendant. Obviously the quality of such oil could not be ascertained until the oil was discovered, and hence the price of such oil in the district could not be known until the oil was produced. In view of the fact that the price of oil was less than 75 cents a barrel at the time the lease was executed, there is reason for the contention of respondent that the clause was not intended to be effective until after the oil had been produced. But inasmuch as the defendant never began operations at all, and the clause clearly confers only the right to suspend drilling operations and not the right to refrain from commencing them, we do not find it necessary to determine whether it did or did not take effect before the production of oil began.

No other points are made in support of the appeal. We find no error in the record.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

163 Cal. 16

SMIDDY et al. v. GRAFTON. (L. A. 2,900.) (Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1912.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 134*)—CONTRACTS—IMPLICATION.

Where one makes a contract in writing to sell land without any exemption or reservation, the law implies an agreement to convey good title, free from incumbrances, and if one incumbrance is specifically provided for there is an implied agreement that the title shall be free from others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 250-254, 258; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 92*)—OPTION TO PURCHASE.

An owner of land executed a written lease giving the lessee an option of purchase, which provided for a cash payment and that the lessee might give a mortgage for the balance. At the time when the option was to be exercised, an unpaid mortgage remained on the land. Held that, as the agreement contained an implied covenant against incumbrances, the lessee had his election either to accept partial performance from the owner with an abatement because of the incumbrance, or to refuse to exercise the option, and so his offer to pay the amount stipulated to be paid in cash, less the amount of the incumbrance, was binding upon the owner and constituted an election to take under the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 290-294; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

3. MORTGAGES (§ 298*) — PAYMENT — DISCHARGE.

Where a mortgage is not due, the mortgagee cannot be compelled to accept payment and release it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 836-854, 864, 871; Dec. Dig. § 298.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by G. W. Smiddy and another against ²¹ H. Grafton. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Elmer R. McDowell, E. Earl Crandall, and William Hazlett, for appellant. H. F. Bridges and George E. Overmyer, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying him a new trial.

The complaint states a cause of action in unlawful detainer to obtain possession of a lot in Los Angeles. The defendant answered, admitting the execution of the lease set forth in the complaint and the expiration of the term, but claiming the right to remain in possession as a purchaser, under an agreement contained in the contract of lease, whereby the plaintiffs agreed that defendant should have the right to buy the lot at any time during the term, at a price stated. The dispute concerns only the question of the terms of the option contract and the sufficiency of an offer by the defendant to accept and perform it. The findings of the court were that the offer was not made to perform in the manner agreed upon, that it was ineffectual, and that the defendant's right of possession had terminated. Judgment for restitution to the plaintiffs was given accordingly.

The contract was in writing. The first part of it was a lease of the lot by plaintiffs to the defendant for the period of six months ending July 22, 1910, at $20 monthly rental. It then provided that during that time the defendant should have the right to buy the lot at the price of $2,500, of which $1,000 was to be paid in cash when the option was to be exercised, and that the remaining $1,500 should be paid within three years thereafter, should bear 7 per cent. interest, and should be secured by "a second mortgage." There was a further provision that, if the option was exercised, the rent previously paid should be applied to pay interest at 7 per cent. on the price of $2,500 from the date of the lease to the date of purchase, and that the excess thereof over such interest should be applied as part of the cash payment of $1,000 on the price. A deed was to be made by the plaintiffs to the defendant when the payment was made and the mortgage executed.

The offer by the defendant accepting the option and tendering performance thereof was in writing. The offer, as made, was in the alternative. In explanation it is necessary to state that there was a prior mortgage for $800 on the lot, executed by plaintiffs to one Long, which was not payable by its terms until the year 1913. The first part of the offer was to pay in cash the sum of $167.50, being the difference between Long's $800 mortgage, plus $32.50 on account of the excess of rent over interest, and the first payment of $1,000, and to make a mortgage on the lot for $1,500, the remainder of the price, leaving the Long mortgage to stand as a first lien on said lot, and demanding a grant deed conveying the lot to him in fee simple, subject to the two mortgages for $800 and $1,500, respectively.

[1-3] Under the terms of the contract and in the condition of the plaintiffs' title, this tender was good. It exacted no departure from the terms of the contract which defendant was not entitled to demand, if he chose to accept such title as he could get and demand partial performance by the vendors with abatement or compensation for lack of full performance, as he had the right to do. Where one makes a contract in writing to sell and convey land, without any exception, or reservation, or provision as to the title or incumbrances, the law implies an agreement on his part to convey a good title free of incumbrance. And if one incumbrance thereon is specifically provided for, there is an implied agreement that the title shall be conveyed free from any others. Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 314, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123; Jonghaus v. McCormick, 18 Cal. 667; Whittier v. Gormley, 3 Cal. App. 489, 86 Pac. 726; 2 Pom. Eq. Rem. § 882; Spooner v. Cross, 127 Iowa, 259, 102 N. W. 1118; Roberts v. McFadden, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 53, 74 S. W. 105; 1 Sug. on Ven. (8th Am. Ed.) pp. 24, 456, 465; 39 Cyc. 1445, 1484; 2 Warvelle on Ven. §§ 312, 921. The plaintiffs were therefore bound to remove the Long mortgage before they could require payment of the purchase money. The contract expressly bound them to convey a title in fee simple. This could not be done while the prior mortgage was outstanding. 39 Cyc. 1485. The vendee, however, is in a different position. He has his election, as above stated, either to insist on a good title and refuse to exercise the option if it is not offered, or to accept such title as the vendors have, and demand an adjustment of the payments, in such a manner as may be just, to protect him as far as may be against loss from the defects in the title. Marshall v. Caldwell, 41 Cal. 611; Grant v. Beronio, 97 Cal. 499, 32 Pac. 556; Whittier v. Gormley, supra; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 779; 2 Pom. Eq. Rem. § 831; 39 Cyc. 1578. In such cases, where the defect consists of a lien on the land, the purchaser may compel the vendor to perform upon a tender of the amount due on the price, less a sum sufficient to discharge the liens. 39 Cyc. 1564, 1578; Murphy v. Hussey, 117 La. 390, 41 South. 692. In the present case the Long mortgage was not due and Long could not be compelled to accept payment or release it. The most that defendant could do, in such circumstances, if he desired to buy the land at the price fixed and was willing to waive the defect, was to offer to assume the payment of that mortgage, pay the difference, and otherwise to comply with the agreement. This he did by the part of the offer above recited. The plaintiffs could not justly or equitably demand more. They would be in no wise prejudiced by this qualified performance, in view of their implied obligations and their liability in damages for a breach thereof, if defendant had elected that remedy. Upon the face of the contract, therefore, the defendant was entitled to insist on performance in the manner specified in his tender and to remain in possession of the lot until performance was made accordingly, provided, of course, he kept his tender good.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

In order to explain the alternative offer, it is necessary to state some additional features of the case. Defendant filed a cross-complaint asking a reformation of the contract on the ground that by mutual mistake it was so drawn that it did not express the real agreement. It was alleged that the actual agreement as to the option sale was that, if the $800 mortgage was removed at the time the option should be exercised, then defendant should pay $1,000, less the deductions for rent paid as stated, and should execute a mortgage for $1,500, the balance of the price; but that, if the $800 mortgage was not then removed, in that event the amount due upon it should be deducted from the $1,000 payment and defendant should be required to pay the balance only, and should make the $1,500 mortgage, as before. Reformation was asked to make the contract conform to this alleged agreement. The second part of the offer complied with the agreement as thus stated.

The court found that these allegations concerning the actual agreement and the mistake in drawing the writing were not true. The evidence sustains the findings in this respect. That offered by the defendant tended to support the allegations. But according to the evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs the actual agreement was that $2,500 was the full price of the land; that $1,000 in cash less the excess of rent paid over interest was to be paid without other conditions; and that, if the Long mortgage was not removed at the time the option was taken, the defendant was to assume its payment and execute a second mortgage for $700 to plaintiffs to make up the remainder of the $2,500. This was not the agreement alleged in the cross-complaint, and the court was therefore justified in finding that the allegations were not true. It is plain from this evidence that both parties signed the agreement under a mistake, but they do not agree with respect to the actual facts. This matter is not essential to our decision on this appeal. The first part of the offer complied with the requirements of equity and entitled defendant to such performance by plaintiffs as they were able to make in accordance with the demand and to hold possession in the meantime. The finding that defendant did not elect to exercise his option nor make a lawful offer to perform the agreement of sale is contrary to the evidence.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

162 Cal. 755

UNION COLLECTION CO. v. OLIVER.

(S. F. 5,769.)

(Supreme Court of California, June 4, 1912.
Rehearing Denied July 3, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 594*)—JURISDICTION—BONDS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 941b, provides for the perfecting of an appeal without the giving of a bond, and section 953a provides for the preparation of papers on appeal and for a reporter's transcript in place of a bill of exceptions. Held, that while both of these acts were approved March 20, 1907, an appeal having been duly taken under the first section, the filing of a bill of exceptions in place of the reporter's transcript does not vitiate the appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2622; Dec. Dig. § 594.*]

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 123*)—MOTION—TIME OF FILING.

A motion for new trial is in the nature of a new and independent proceeding collateral to the judgment, and so, where notice of intention to file a motion for new trial is not given within the time limited, the trial court has no power under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that it may relieve a party from the proceeding taken against him, to relieve the defeated party from his failure to promptly file his motion for new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 276-281; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

3. NEW TRIAL (§ 123*)—TIME OF FILING—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1054, authorizing the judge to extend the time for preparing and filing a statement of intention to move for a new trial, the trial judge cannot extend the time for the motion after it has once expired.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 276-281; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by the Union Collection Company against Dew R. Oliver. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and, from an order denying its motion to dismiss defendant's motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. S. Reid, for appellant. Frank H. Gould, Vincent Surr, Avery C. White, and I. F. Chapman, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff, having recovered a judgment in the court below, appeals from an order denying its motion to dismiss the defendant's motion for a new trial.

[1] At the outset it may be said, briefly, that the respondent's contention that the court is without jurisdiction of the appeal because the appellant failed to file a bond for costs on appeal is without merit. The "new and alternative method" of taking appeals provided by section 941b of the Code of Civil Procedure, enacted in 1907, dispenses with the necessity of an undertaking. Mitchell v. Cal., etc., Co., 154 Cal. 731, 99 Pac. 202; Estate of McPhee, 154 Cal. 385, 97 Pac. 878. The fact that a bill of exceptions was prepared in place of the reporter's transcript authorized by section 953a has no bearing upon this question. The latter section has to do with the preparation of a record on appeal. An appeal having been properly taken, in compliance with either the old or the alternative method, the record may be made up in any way permitted by the Code. Lang v. Lilley & Thurston Co., 119 Pac. 100.

[2] It appears that the verdict on which plaintiff's judgment is based was returned on September 7, 1905, and the time within which defendant was entitled to file and serve notice of intention to move for a new trial would, under section 659 of the Code of Civil Procedure as it then read, have expired on September 17, 1905. Code Amendments, 1873-74, p. 315. On the last-named day, plaintiff by written stipulation extended defendant's time to serve and file such notice to the 23d day of September, 1905. There was no further extension by stipulation or by order of court. The defendant served and filed his notice of intention on the 25th day of September. On October 7th the plaintiff moved to strike the notice from the files, whereupon defendant applied for, and on October 20th obtained from the court, an order relieving him from his default in the service and filing of said notice.

The principal contention of the appellant, and the only one that need be considered, is that the trial court was without power to relieve the defendant from the consequences of his failure to serve and file his notice of intention to move for a new trial within the time allowed by law. The argument is that where a party has failed to move for a new trial within the period limited by the Code, he has waived his right to make such motion, and that the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not authorize the court to revive the right which has thus been lost.

The position is sustained by the decisions of this court. It is true that a very liberal construction has been given to the terms of section 473. Thus, for example, it has been held that the trial court may relieve a party from the consequences of his failure to serve in time a proposed bill of exceptions (Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 94 Cal. 33, 29 Pac. 332; Politz v. Wickersham, 150 Cal. 238, 88 Pac. 911), or statement on motion for a new trial (Vinson v. L. A. P. Ry. Co., 147 Cal. 479, 82 Pac. 53), or from a failure to present to the judge for settlement, within the time allowed, a statement on motion for new trial with the amendments thereto (Banta v. Siller, 121 Cal. 416, 53 Pac. 935). But such rulings have never been carried so far as to authorize the service and filing of a notice of intention to move for a new trial after the lapse of the time within which such notice might have been served and filed. In Little v. Jacks, 67 Cal. 165, 7 Pac. 449, the defendant within 10 days after notice of the making and filing of findings gave notice of his intention to move the court to vacate and set aside the judgment. This, as had theretofore been held, was not sufficient as a notice of intention to move for a new trial. The court made an order allowing the defendant to amend his notice of intention. The order was reversed, the court saying: "To allow a notice filed within statutory time but which was radically defective, to be amended after the expiration of that time would be in effect to extend the time allowed by statute for the giving of such notices, which the courts have no power to do." And, similarly, in Packer v. Doray, 98 Cal. 315, 33 Pac. 118, the notice of intention to move for a new trial, served and filed within time, stated that the motion would be made upon the minutes of the court and upon the ground, among other things, of errors of law occurring at the trial. The notice contained no specifications of errors of law. The moving party, after the lapse of the time within which a notice of intention to move for a new trial could have been given, applied to the court for permission to amend his notice of intention by adding thereto a specification of errors of law. The motion was based upon an affidavit showing that such specifications had been inadvertently omitted. Upon appeal an order permitting the amendment was reversed, this court holding, upon the authority of Little v. Jacks, supra, that the court below had no power to permit an amendment which would have the effect of a new notice of intention to move for a new trial. While the opinions in these two cases do not refer to section 473, an inspection of the briefs filed in support of the orders appealed from shows that in each instance the moving party relied upon the provisions of that section.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

These decisions have never been questioned, and we see no good reason for now departing from the rule thus declared. A motion for new trial, even when prosecuted within the statutory limitations, is frequently productive of great delay in the final disposition of the cause. Opportunities for further extending the pendency of an action after judgment should not be enlarged by an overliberal construction of the Code. Section 473 permits a party to apply to the court to be relieved from a "proceeding taken against him." Whatever may be said with respect to the failure to prepare or present for settlement a proposed bill of exceptions or statement, it seems quite plain that a party who has permitted the time within which he may move for a new trial to elapse has not had any proceeding taken against him. The motion for a new trial is under our practice in the nature of a new and independent proceeding collateral to the judgment in the action. Spanagel v. Dellinger, 38 Cal. 284; Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186; Houser, etc., Co. v. Hargrove, 129 Cal. 90, 61 Pac. 660; Knowles v. Thompson, 133 Cal. 245, 65 Pac. 468. It may be availed of by the losing party on condition that he act within the time and in the manner specified by the Code. If he neglects to so act, he has simply failed to take advantage of a proceeding open to him. The case is similar to that which would be presented by his failure to take an appeal within the time allowed by law. It is not contended that either the superior court or an appellate court has power under section 473, or otherwise, to revive a right of appeal where the party has for any reason failed to serve his notice of appeal within the time allowed.

[3] The respondent suggests, however, that the rule should be different with respect to the service and filing of a notice of intention to move for a new trial, for the reason that under section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure the superior court may extend (for a limited period) the time within which such a notice may be given, while power to extend the time for giving a notice of appeal is expressly withheld. But, even in the cases to which section 1054 applies, an extension can be granted only within the period during which the right to give a notice is still alive. Clark v. Grane, 57 Cal. 639; Freese v. Freese, 134 Cal. 48, 66 Pac. 43. After this time has once elapsed, the case is just the same as if there were no statutory power to extend. No doubt the showing made in support of the motion to be relieved was sufficient to warrant the trial court in finding that any neglect on the part of the defendant was excusable, but this is of no consequence where the court has no power, upon any showing, to grant the relief.

The order is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

162 Cal. 735

BRETT v. S. H. FRANK & CO.

(S. F. 5,428.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1912.
Rehearing Denied June 28, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1195*)—REVERSAL—LAW OF CASE—AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT.

Plaintiff was injured while taking a truck load of hides from an elevator in defendant's tannery by getting his foot caught in a belt opening near the elevator. The original complaint charged negligence only in that defendant maintained the belt opening with no surrounding guard. The answer pleaded contributory negligence, and, after reversal on appeal, plaintiff amended the complaint by adding allegations that the elevator shaft was carelessly left unguarded, and that the shaft and the belt opening were carelessly placed in close proximity to each other. The additional facts so pleaded were all shown by the evidence in the first trial, and were all involved in the issue then presented. Held, that the additional allegations did not materially change the issue, so as to prevent the determination on the prior appeal from operating as the law of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4661-4665; Dec. Dig. § 1195.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1195*)—PRIOR APPEAL DECISION—LAW OF CASE.

The doctrine of the law of the case, that, the Supreme Court having once decided the law, and the case having returned to the trial court for further proceedings in accordance with the law as thus established, it will not, on a second appeal, again consider the questions determined, but, if the facts are substantially the same, will treat the former decision as settled law, regardless of its accuracy, is not limited to cases where the former decision was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4661-4665; Dec. Dig. § 1195.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Richard Brett against S. H. Frank & Co. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Reversed.

Chickering & Gregory, for appellant. Stafford & Stafford and H. J. Stafford (W. P. Caubu, of counsel), for respondent.

SHAW, J. Defendant appeals from the judgment, and also from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff's action is for damages, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. The main defense is that the injury to the plaintiff was due to his own negligence. The cause was before this court upon a former appeal from an order granting a new trial. See Brett v. Frank & Co., 153 Cal. 267, 94 Pac. 1051. The order was there affirmed. The present appeals are from the judgment and order resulting from the second trial. It is claimed by defendant's counsel that the judgment and order here in question are in direct conflict with the law applicable to the evidence as settled upon the previous appeal. They also contend that the opinion upon the former appeal accurately states the law which should control the decision, irrespective of the doctrine of the law of the case. The plaintiff claims that after the decision of the former appeal the complaint was amended by charging additional acts of negligence, not involved in that appeal; and hence that neither the doctrine of the law of the case, nor the rule of law laid down in the former opinion, applies to the case as it now stands.

The manner of the injury was as follows: The plaintiff was employed by defendant as a workman in a tannery carried on by it in a building two or more stories high. An elevator was used in carrying the hides from the rolling room, on the first floor, to the drying room on the second floor. The drying room was back of the elevator, so that, in order to go thereto from the elevator opening, it was necessary to go out of the elevator, turn around, and pass by the left side thereof and on through a door in a partition wall running across the building behind the elevator shaft. This passageway to the left of the elevator was about 9 feet wide. Across it there was a rise of some 5 inches in the floor, made to permit the operation of a pulley on a shaft beneath the floor. To allow the passage of a truck over this rise, the floor was made to slope gradually off about 5 feet each way. The crest of this rise was immediately over the shaft on which the pulley below was fixed, and was on a line which, if extended, would pass in front of the elevator entrance and about one foot therefrom. The abrupt edge of this rise was parallel to and 18 inches from the side of the elevator. It extended about 6 feet farther to the front than the elevator. To the right of the elevator entrance, and 16 inches away, there was an opening in the floor, 15 inches by 24 inches in size, through which a belt was rapidly running from the ceiling above downward through the floor. The plaintiff, when hurt, was propelling a truck loaded with hides from the rolling room below to the drying room on the second floor. It was a four-wheel truck, 8 feet long and 4 feet wide over all, the two axles being about 5 feet apart, and it was moved by means of a handle or tongue fastened with a kingbolt, so as to be turned in any direction. He had pulled the truck into the elevator, so that on arriving at the second floor it was necessary to push it off backward. To reach the drying room, he should have pushed it straight back beyond the rise in the floor and then forward over the rise past the elevator into the drying room. In pushing it out of the elevator, it swerved to one side, so that the rear wheel ran against the abrupt edge of the rise, thus making it necessary to pull it forward a little to give it a new direction and back it again beyond the rise. In doing this, he did not step back into the elevator, because he feared that some one below or above might start it. He therefore stepped back on the floor toward the right-hand side of the elevator, and, failing to observe the belt hole, he stepped into it, his leg was drawn in by the belt and broken, and the skin and flesh burned by the friction of the running belt. He had been in that work for seven weeks, and was familiar with the belt hole, the rise in the floor, the elevator, the manner of doing the work, and the entire situation and conditions.

[1] The original complaint is not in the record. According to the opinion of this court on the former appeal, to which we may look, the negligence therein charged consisted only of maintaining the belt hole, aforesaid, with no guard around it to prevent a person from stepping into it. The answer set up as a defense that the plaintiff's own negligence contributed to or caused the injury. The amendment to the complaint after the former appeal and prior to the last trial consisted in adding the allegations that the elevator shaft was carelessly left unguarded, and that said shaft and said belt hole were carelessly placed in close proximity to each other. These conditions, it is claimed, both contributed to the injury and relieved the plaintiff from the charge of negligence in failing to remember or observe the belt hole, which he well knew existed and could easily have seen.

We do not think these additional allegations materially changed the issue. The additional facts were all involved in the issue presented on the first trial, and they were all shown by the evidence, and, so far as they are material, they were all considered by this court in the former opinion. It is true that the question decided upon the former appeal was that the court, at the close of the first trial, should have granted a nonsuit. But the defendant in the answer to the original complaint had pleaded contributory negligence as a defense. This made it necessary to grant a nonsuit, if the evidence given for the plaintiff showed, as matter of law, that the plaintiff's own negligence proximately contributed to his injury. The facts above related were all shown by the evidence there given on behalf of the plaintiff. The evidence on the present trial did not materially change the facts in any respect. Upon the former appeal, the court decided that contributory negligence was shown as matter of law, and that the court upon that trial should have granted the nonsuit. The proximity of the hole and the shaft to each other was shown upon the former trial and referred to in the opinion upon the former appeal. They were there stated to be only 9 inches apart, instead of 16 inches apart as here appears. Their proximity was one of the conditions considered upon the former appeal in determining the question of the plaintiff's negligence. The unguarded condition of the elevator shaft was immaterial. It could not have contributed to the plaintiff's confusion at the time; and he does not say that it did. His fear that some one might start the elevator prevented him from stepping back into it. If it had been guarded, the guard would have prevented him. Either hindrance would have made him move in some other direction, as it appears that he did. The decision rested upon substantially the same facts that are presented by the pleadings and the evidence upon the second trial. The law of the case should have controlled.

[2] We desire to say, however, that it is not necessary to resort to the doctrine of the law of the case. It has been sometimes said that the doctrine of the law of the case is invoked only when the former decision as to the law is erroneous; that its application presupposes a previous error by which the court is bound. It does, indeed, go that far, if it becomes necessary to do so. But the last decision would be the same in a case where the first decision was not erroneous. The doctrine means simply this: That, the court having once decided the law, and the cause having gone back to the lower court for further proceedings in accordance with the law as thus established, and the parties and the lower court having acted in reliance upon that law, this court will not, upon a second appeal, again enter into a consideration of the question; but if the facts and circumstances are substantially the same, will treat it as settled law, regardless of its accuracy. See Allen v. Bryant, 155 Cal. 258, 100 Pac. 704. In the present case we are entirely satisfied with the law laid down on the former appeal. The subject is there fully and carefully considered, and it is not necessary here to repeat the argument. We refer to the opinion in that case for a further statement of the reasons which led to the conclusion that there was contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. See, also, Ergo v. Merced, etc., Co., 161 Cal. —, 119 Pac. 101. The general verdict and the answers of the jury to the special interrogatories, to the effect that there was no contributory negligence of plaintiff, were contrary to the evidence. The motion for a new trial should have been granted.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

ANGELLOTTI, J. I concur in the judgment on the first ground stated in the opinion, viz., the law of the case.

163 Cal. 1

NOLAN v. HYATT et al. (L. A. 2,906.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 4, 1912.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 743*)—CONCLUSIVENESS—TITLE TO PROPERTY.

Where a grantee of a husband brought an action against the wife to quiet title on the ground that the property was paid for out of community funds, and that the conveyance was made to the wife who received it as community property, and that subsequently the husband conveyed the property to the grantee, and the wife denied the ownership of the grantee or that the husband had conveyed the property to him, or that she had received the title as community property, and by cross-complaint alleged that she had received the title as her separate property, and held the same as such, a judgment that the grantee take nothing by his action, and that the wife take nothing under the cross-complaint, was, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1908, making a judgment conclusive as between the parties a conclusive adjudication as between the parties that the property was not the separate estate of the wife, and that the grantee was not the owner of the legal title, but the judgment did not estop the wife from showing that the grantee, in a subsequent suit to compel a conveyance of the legal title, was not the owner in equity of the community property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1275-1277; Dec. Dig. § 743.*]

2. QUIETING TITLE (§ 15*)—INTEREST OF DEFENDANT—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—LEGAL TITLE IN WIFE.

A wife to whom conveyance of real estate purchased by the husband and paid for out of community property is conveyed has sufficient interest in the community property to warrant her in opposing the claim of a grantee of the husband that he has become thereby the owner in equity, and that she be required to convey the legal title to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 47; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 267*)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—EQUITABLE TITLE—PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

Where a husband paying out of community funds for real estate which he caused to be conveyed to the wife executed a deed to a third person who paid no consideration, except handing to the husband a check for $100 on account of the agreed price of $8,000, and who never offered or tendered any further part of the price, the third person could not, on the theory that he was the equitable owner by virtue of the deed, compel the wife to convey to him the legal title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 929-932; Dec. Dig. § 267.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by M. J. Nolan against Esther L. Hyatt and another. From a judgment for defendant named and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

Avery & French, for appellant. F. S. Yager, El. W. Freeman, and A. D. Laughlin, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendant Esther L. Hyatt, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The action was one brought by plaintiff against the defendants, who are husband and wife, to obtain a decree requiring defendant Esther L. Hyatt to convey to him the legal title to certain real property standing in her name, on the theory that the same constituted community property of herself and her husband, and that he (plaintiff) is the owner in equity thereof by reason of a conveyance thereof from the husband to himself. The property consists of about five acres of land, with the improvements thereon, situate in Los Angeles county. By answers and cross-complaints the defendants severally denied various allegations of the complaint, and defendant Esther L. Hyatt set up the claim that the property was her separate property and was free of all just claims on the part of either plaintiff or her husband, while the defendant W. J. Hyatt, denying all claims of plaintiff, set up the claim that the property is the community property of himself and wife, free of all just claims by plaintiff. Plaintiff answered the cross-complaints of both Mr. and Mrs. Hyatt, denying the allegations thereof and asserting that the conveyance to Mrs. Hyatt was in trust for the marital community, and that by reason of the conveyance from Mr. Hyatt he was the equitable owner thereof. He further set up as a bar to the cross-complaint of Mrs. Hyatt the proceedings and judgment in a former action brought by him against her to quiet his title to the property, which will be referred to hereafter. The trial court found that the property was the separate property of Mrs. Hyatt from the time of its acquirement in the year 1898, that Mr. Hyatt never conveyed for a valuable consideration or any consideration the title to said property to plaintiff; that plaintiff never was the "equitable or any owner" of said property or any part thereof; and that Mrs. Hyatt was not estopped by the proceedings and judgment alleged in plaintiff's answer to her cross-complaint from asserting her claims in this regard. It further found that certain agreements were entered into between Mr. Hyatt and the plaintiff, whereby Hyatt agreed to sell the property to plaintiff for $8,000 "whenever title to the same shall be perfected in the plaintiff," the plaintiff agreeing to deed to Mrs. Hyatt a small portion thereof, and to move a house thereon and improve the same at a cost of $700 or $800; that on May 24, 1905, Mr. Hyatt, by his attorney in fact, conveyed the property to plaintiff by a bargain and sale deed, and that the plaintiff on the next day executed a memorandum acknowledging receipt of this conveyance, and "that said conveyance is received by me for the purpose of perfecting title to said premises in me"; that the plaintiff never did pay any consideration whatever for said conveyance until November, 1905, when he paid Mr. Hyatt $100, which sum was subsequently tendered back to plaintiff by Hyatt, and has been deposited in court for him.

Judgment was given to the effect that plaintiff take nothing, that defendant William J. Hyatt take nothing and that defendant Esther L. Hyatt have judgment against both plaintiff and said William J. Hyatt declaring her to be the sole owner of the property, free of "all claims, demands or pretensions of" plaintiff and said William J. Hyatt, or either of them. Mr. Hyatt did not join in the motion for a new trial, and has not appealed from the judgment.

The principal question presented by appellant's opening brief is as to the effect of the proceedings and judgment in the former action. It was not claimed that the evidence was not sufficient to support the findings above referred to, if such proceedings and judgment are excluded from consideration. The trial court sustained respondent's objection to the introduction in evidence of the judgment roll in said action. The ruling of the trial court sustaining this objection and the alleged prejudicial effect thereof are the important matters discussed in appellant's brief.

[1] The former action was an action by plaintiff against Mrs. Hyatt and her son (the husband not being made a party) to quiet his alleged title in fee to said property, instituted after he had received the conveyance from Mr. Hyatt that is relied on in this action. The complaint contained two counts, the first being in the usual form of a complaint in an action to quiet title, and the second setting up in addition to the usual allegations of ownership and adverse claim the charge that upon its purchase by Mr. Hyatt the property was paid for out of community funds; that, while the conveyance was made to Mrs. Hyatt, she received it as community property, and that subsequently Mr. Hyatt conveyed the property to him. He asked for a decree quieting his title against the defendants. By her answer in that action Mrs. Hyatt denied that plaintiff was the owner of the property, or that Mr. Hyatt had conveyed the same to him, or that she ever received the title to the same as community property. By cross-complaint she alleged that she received the title to the property as her separate property and estate, and had ever since held the same as such and was in possession thereof. She asked for a decree declaring her to be the sole owner of the property. The plaintiff answered this cross-complaint, reiterating his claim as to the community character of the property. The findings of the trial court were in favor of plaintiff upon the issues as to the character of the property. The court also found that on May 24, 1905, Mr. Hyatt "executed a deed of grant of said premises to M. J. Nolan, the plaintiff herein." The court, however, concluded upon these facts so found that the legal title was in Mrs. Hyatt "in trust for the benefit of the marital community of herself and her husband," and that plaintiff was not the owner of the legal title. Judgment was given "that plaintiff take nothing by this action, and that defendants take nothing by or under the cross-complaint filed herein," and that defendants recover their costs. Apparently no appeal was ever taken from this judgment.

We can see no reason for doubting that, as between plaintiff and Mrs. Hyatt, the proceedings and judgment in the former action estopped Mrs. Hyatt from asserting that the property was not community property of her husband and herself. By her cross-complaint in that action she sought a decree quieting her title to the property, claiming by her allegations that the same was in fact her separate property. Issue having been joined on these allegations by an answer to the cross-complaint, the trial court found against her, and by its judgment denied her any relief under her cross-complaint. It thus appears to have been directly adjudged in what was, in fact, an action by Mrs. Hyatt against plaintiff to have it determined that she was the owner of this property, free of all claim on the part of plaintiff, that the property was, in fact, community property of herself and her husband, and that she held it solely in the capacity of trustee for the marital community. Relief was denied her in the former action on that ground. It is unnecessary to cite authorities as to the conclusive effect of such proceedings and judgment in so far as this question of fact was concerned. In his written opinion, filed in deciding this case, the learned judge of the trial court, apparently conceding that the reasons actuating him in the exclusion of the judgment roll were not sound, said: "Hence it appears that the question whether or not Mrs. Hyatt held the title to the property in trust or absolutely in her own right was directly put in issue by her cross-complaint and the answer thereto. And, the judgment having been against her on this issue, none of the facts involved and necessary to support that judgment can again be the subject of litigation between the same parties or their successors in interest. The court cannot again hear evidence of the matter—it was forever settled in the former case." See, also, section 1908, Code Civ. Proc. If the judgment roll had been admitted in evidence, it would have necessitated contrary findings on the question of the character of this property, and such findings would have precluded the relief demanded by Mrs. Hyatt's cross-complaint so far as plaintiff Nolan is concerned.

But it does not follow, as we view the matter, that this conclusion requires a reversal of the judgment in so far as such judgment denies plaintiff any relief in this action against Mrs. Hyatt. The judgment roll of the former action offered by plaintiff in evidence would have undoubtedly shown him to be estopped to urge that he had acquired the legal title to the property. The judgment, following the conclusion of law that the plaintiff is not the owner of the legal title, ordered "that plaintiff take nothing by this action." Whether erroneous or not, here was clearly an adjudication as between plaintiff and Mrs. Hyatt that plaintiff did not acquire the legal title to the property by virtue of the deed from Mr. Hyatt to him or in any other way, which forever concludes that question so far as they are concerned. Recognizing the effect of this judgment, plaintiff seeks in this action a decree compelling the conveyance of the property to him upon the theory that he is the owner in equity of the property, and therefore entitled to a conveyance of the legal title. To show such ownership he alleges the same deed from the husband that was relied upon in the former action as constituting a conveyance of the legal title, alleging, further, that the same was given "for a valuable consideration" and constituted a conveyance of the property to him, and that he "now is the equitable owner of said premises." There is nothing in the record of the former action that should be held to estop Mrs. Hyatt from showing that plaintiff has not become the owner in equity of the community property here involved, notwithstanding the execution of the deed by Mr. Hyatt to him.

[2] As the wife, regardless of her adjudged capacity as trustee of the property for the benefit of the marital community, she has sufficient interest in the community property standing in her name to warrant her in opposing the claim that plaintiff has become the owner thereof in equity and that she be required to convey the legal title thereto to plaintiff.

[3] We do not see how plaintiff can be held to have become the owner in equity of this valuable property without having in fact paid some substantial consideration therefor, or at least having made a tender of such consideration. The trial court found that plaintiff did not pay any consideration whatever for said conveyance until November, 1905 (six months thereafter and long after the commencement of his original action to quiet title), when he handed to Mr. Hyatt a check for $100 on account of the $8,000 which was the agreed price. All this is shown by evidence without conflict. It does not appear that any tender of any other portion of the purchase price was ever made, and, in fact, no part of the purchase price was due under the agreements until the title should have been perfected in plaintiff. No offer was made in the complaint in this action to pay the purchase price as a condition precedent to judgment requiring a conveyance or at all. Plaintiff's theory simply was that by virtue of the deed to him and his promise to pay for the property when he should have obtained a decree perfecting his title, or other disposition of all claims of Mrs. Hyatt, he became the owner in equity of the property, entitled to compel a conveyance of the legal title by Mrs. Hyatt. If plaintiff did not obtain the legal title by virtue of the deed from Mr. Hyatt, which, as we have seen, is conclusively established against him by the judgment roll in the former action which he sought to introduce in evidence, no reason is apparent, in view of what we have said, why he can be held to have become the equitable owner of the property. The finding of the trial court that plaintiff is not the "equitable or any owner of said premises, or any part thereof," would thus be necessarily sustained by the evidence, even though the judgment roll in the former action had been admitted. If plaintiff now has any right in relation to this property, such right would appear to be at most simply that of a vendee in a contract for the sale and purchase of real estate, who has not paid the purchase price. Whether or not he has any such right it is not necessary here to determine, for no such claim was made by him in the lower court, and manifestly this is not an action for the specific performance of a contract. But certainly, in view of the adjudication in the former action as to the want of legal title in him, and his failure to show matters essential to make him the owner in equity of the property, he has no other right or claim.

In view of what we have said, we can perceive no reason why the judgment should be disturbed in so far as it simply denies plaintiff any relief, even though the findings as to the character (community or separate) of the property be erroneous, as we are satisfied is so as between plaintiff and Mrs. Hyatt. It still is true that other findings, sufficiently sustained by competent evidence, amply support the judgment that plaintiff take nothing by this action. In so far, however, as the judgment awards Mrs. Hyatt affirmative relief against plaintiff on her cross-complaint, it must be reversed, as must also the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial in so far as the issues made by such cross-complaint and the answer thereto on the part of plaintiff are concerned. This will leave the judgment in full force in so far as it denies plaintiff any relief, and in so far as it awards Mrs. Hyatt certain relief on her cross-complaint against her codefendant William J. Hyatt, who has not appealed.

The judgment is reversed in so far as it awards defendant Esther L. Hyatt affirmative relief against plaintiff on her cross-complaint. In all other respects said judgment is affirmed. The order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial is reversed in so far as it denies him a new trial of the issues made by the cross-complaint of said Esther L. Hyatt against him, and his answer thereto. In all other respects said order is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

162 Cal. 740

WALTER G. REESE CO., Inc., v. HOUSE
et al. (L. A. 2,902.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1912.
Rehearing Denied June 28, 1912.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 18*)—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION — OPTION TO PURCHASE.

An agreement, reciting that if a broker sells described property of the owner, signing the agreement, the latter will pay a commission on the sale price, and that in consideration of a specified sum, receipt of which is acknowledged, the owner grants the broker the exclusive agency of the property described for 15 days and thereafter until written withdrawal, or optional with the broker to pay the owner a net price on specified terms, provides for the employment of the broker to sell the property, and gives him an option during the term of the agency to purchase at the specified price, and is valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 23; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 18*)—OPTION—ACCEPTANCE—EFFECT.

Where one who obtains an option to purchase real estate accepts the option, a binding agreement of purchase and sale results, though the option is given without any consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 23; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 18*)—OPTION—RIGHTS OF PARTIES.

An option to purchase real estate within a specified time supported by a consideration cannot be withdrawn, but an option unsupported by any consideration may be withdrawn at any time before acceptance, though the time limited therein has not expired.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 23; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 114*) — CONTRACTS OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE — COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint which alleges that plaintiff was employed to procure a purchaser of real estate and was given an option to purchase, that while the option was in force the owner executed deeds of gift to grantees who had knowledge of the option, that plaintiff without any knowledge of the deeds went to the home of the owner, that the grantees who were present refused to allow an interview with the owner, that plaintiff insisted on seeing the owner, and informed the grantees that he offered to purchase the property and exercised the option and offered to pay the price, that plaintiff still ignorant of the deeds of gift notified the owner by registered mail of the acceptance of the option, that the grantees refused to receive the mail, that subsequently the owner died, and that the grantees refused to convey the property pursuant to the agreement, stated a cause of action within Civ. Code, § 1489, declaring that an offer of performance may be made at the residence of the other party, and because the facts showed that the grantees took with notice of the option.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 356-372; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

5. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 49*) — CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE — ADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION.

To compel the specific performance of a contract to convey real estate, it must appear affirmatively by the allegations of the complaint that the consideration is fair and adequate, and it is not enough to merely state the legal conclusion of such adequacy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 140-151; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

6. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 114*) — CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE—ADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION.

An allegation in a complaint to compel specific performance of a contract to convey real estate that the property is reasonably worth a specified sum is an averment of a fact, and, where such sum appears to be no greater than the contract price, plaintiff has sufficiently shown by averment of appropriate facts that the consideration for the contract is adequate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 356-372; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by the Walter G. Reese Company, Incorporated, against Louise C. House, formerly Louise C. Wirth, and others. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Alfred Siemon, for appellant. C. C. Hamilton, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. Demurrers to plaintiff's third amended complaint and to its supplemental complaint were sustained without leave to amend, and judgment of dismissal entered. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The plaintiff makes no point on the ruling with respect to the supplemental complaint. The only question is whether the demurrer to the third amended complaint should have been sustained.

After setting forth the corporate character of the plaintiff, the complaint in question alleges that on or about the 16th day of June, 1910, Elizabeth Wirth was the owner and in possession of three lots and of an undivided one-half interest in two other lots in the city of Bakersfield. On said day said Elizabeth Wirth, in consideration of $1 paid to her by plaintiff, and of other good and sufficient considerations, made, executed, and delivered to plaintiff an option to purchase said property, which option was in the following words: "Bakersfield, California. Walter G. Reese Co., Inc. If Walter G. Reese Co., sells said property described hereon (of which I am owner) or if it sends me a party who buys or exchanges for said property, I hereby agree to pay said Walter G. Reese Co. for its services a commission of 5 per cent of sale price. Date 6/16/10. In consideration of $1.00 receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, I hereby grant Walter G. Reese Co., the exclusive agency of property described hereon for 15 days or one-half month from this date, and thereafter until written withdrawal, and agree to deliver said premises at price at which I have listed same hereon, less the above mentioned commission; or optional with said Walter G. Reese Co., to pay me a net price of $2400.00 on same terms named hereon. I agree and will furnish certificate of title and other necessary papers to establish clear and satisfactory title. [Signed] Elizabeth Wirth." Indorsed on said agreement was a description of the property and the figures: "$2500.00." It is alleged that no written or other withdrawal of said option has been made, and the same has at all times since its execution been and now is in full force and effect; that the sum of $2,400 mentioned therein "was and is and at all times since the execution thereof has been a fair and reasonable value of said property described therein, and that said optional agreement was and is fair and reasonable in all its parts, and that said sum $2,400 is now and at all times since the execution of said agreement has been an adequate price for the said property." On or about the 21st day of June, 1910, while plaintiff's option was in force and effect, and before any withdrawal or revocation thereof and without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, said Elizabeth Wirth executed and delivered certain deeds of gift, whereby she attempted to convey the said property to the defendants (her children), that said deeds were without consideration and were made at the fraudulent instigation of defendants, with the intent to avoid and defeat plaintiff's rights under said contract or option. At the time of the execution and delivery of said deeds and prior thereto, the defendants had actual knowledge of the fact that plaintiff held an option to purchase said lands, and each of said defendants knew all the terms and conditions of said option.

On June 30, 1910, and before the plaintiff had any knowledge of the execution and delivery of said deeds, plaintiff's agent, at the instance and request of the plaintiff, went to the home of said Elizabeth Wirth to give her notice of the exercise of said option and to pay for the said property; that at such time the defendants, who were present, refused to allow said agent to interview Elizabeth Wirth, and thereupon said agent stated to defendants that he had an option to purchase the property, and desired to see said Elizabeth Wirth and to pay her therefor, and to receive a deed for the said property. The defendants refused to allow said agent to see Elizabeth Wirth. The plaintiff, it is alleged, "insisted on seeing said Elizabeth Wirth; and then and there stated to the defendants that it offered to purchase said land and exercised its option thereto and offered to pay the purchase price thereof." Thereafter, on the 1st day of July, 1910, and before any written or other withdrawal of said option, and while plaintiff was still ignorant of the execution and delivery of said deeds to the defendants, the plaintiff notified Elizabeth Wirth in writing that it accepted said option and agreed to buy said property at the sum mentioned, and offered to pay said Elizabeth Wirth the purchase price of said property. Said written acceptance and offer were sent to Elizabeth Wirth by mail, duly registered and prepaid, addressed to her at her home in the city of Bakersfield. The defendants refused to receive said mail; their said refusal being made for the purpose of preventing plaintiff from giving notice of the exercise of said option. Since the 1st day of July, 1910, Elizabeth Wirth departed this life. She was at the time of her death insolvent, and left no legal estate. No administrator has been appointed, and there is no personal representative. The plaintiff is ready, willing, and able to pay the defendants the sum of $2,400 for the property, and offers to pay the same into court to be paid to the defendants on the execution and delivery of deeds to said property, and certificate of title, according to the said option. The said defendants and each of them have refused, neglected, and failed to convey said property to the plaintiff, or to perform any of the terms of said agreement.

The prayer is for judgment that the agreements so made by the plaintiff and Elizabeth Wirth be specifically performed, and that the defendants be required to convey said premises to the plaintiff and execute a good and sufficient deed therefor on payment by the plaintiff of the purchase price.

The demurrer specified two grounds: First, that the third amended complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; second, that the complaint was uncertain, in that it did not show that there was a valuable and sufficient consideration for said supposed option, or that said alleged purchase price was or is adequate, and that the complaint was uncertain, further, in that it did not clearly show that a valid tender of the alleged purchase price or offer of performance had been made. We think these specifications were without merit, and that the demurrer should have been overruled.

[1] The agreement between the plaintiff and Mrs. Wirth was inartificially drawn, but its meaning and intent are sufficiently clear. The agreement provided in the first place for the employment of plaintiff as agent to sell the property for the sum of $2,500, of which the plaintiff was to receive, in case of sale, a commission of 5 per cent. There was a further agreement that the plaintiff should have the option, running concurrently with the agency, to purchase the property at and for the price of $2,400. The option was to last as long as the agency—that is to say, for 15 days—and thereafter until notice of withdrawal in writing should be given. That such an agreement is valid is not to be questioned.

[2] The first point urged by the respondent in support of its demurrer is that there is no allegation that the consideration for the option, as distinguished from the consideration for the conveyance of the land itself, was adequate. The adequacy of the consideration for the option is not a material question here. By the acceptance of the option (assuming that it was duly accepted, a point to which we shall refer later) a contract of purchase, binding Mrs. Wirth, or her successors, to sell and the plaintiff to buy, became complete. It is this contract which the plaintiff is seeking to enforce, not the agreement for an option, which was immediately executed. Even if an option be given without any consideration, a binding agreement of purchase and sale results from an acceptance of the option during its life.

[3] The only importance of a consideration as bearing upon an agreement giving an option is that, where there is a consideration, the option cannot be withdrawn during the time agreed upon for its duration, while, if there be no consideration, the party who has given the option may revoke it at any time before acceptance, even though the time limited has not expired. In the absence of a consideration, the option is nothing more than an offer to sell. But such offer, duly accepted, constitutes a contract binding upon both parties and enforceable by either. These matters are more fully discussed in Smith v. Bangham, 156 Cal. 359, 104 Pac. 689, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 522, and the decision in that case fully answers the points made with respect to the consideration for the option.

[4] Viewing the action, then, as one to enforce a binding agreement for the purchase and sale of the land at the price of $2,400, there is no foundation for the claim that the complaint does not sufficiently show an adequate consideration.

[5] It is, of course, established by a long line of cases that, in a case to compel the specific performance of a contract, it must be made to appear by affirmative allegation that the consideration was fair and adequate. Morrill v. Everson, 77 Cal. 116, 19 Pac. 190; Prince v. Lamb, 128 Cal. 129, 60 Pac. 689; Stiles v. Cain, 134 Cal. 171, 66 Pac. 231; White v. Sage, 149 Cal. 618, 87 Pac. 193. It is not enough to merely state the legal conclusion of such adequacy. Facts supporting the conclusion must be pleaded. But such facts are sufficiently alleged in the complaint before us, in which, as we have seen, there is a specific averment to the effect that the sum of $2,400, mentioned in the option, is and at all times since the execution of the agreement has been a fair and reasonable value of said property. Brown v. Town of Sebastopol, 153 Cal. 704, 96 Pac. 363, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 178.

[6] An allegation that property is reasonably worth a certain sum is an averment of a fact, and, where such sum appears to be no greater than the price agreed upon for the sale, the plaintiff has fully complied with his obligation to show by averment of appropriate facts that the consideration for the contract sought to be specifically enforced is adequate. See White v. Sage, supra.

We think the facts alleged in the complaint were sufficient to show an acceptance of the option by plaintiff and a tender of performance on its part. Under section 1489 of the Civil Code an offer of performance may be made at the residence or place of business of the creditor, if such creditor evades the debtor. While it is not averred in so many words that Mrs. Wirth evaded the plaintiff, still the facts set out are such as to compel the inference of such evasion. In Stein v. Leeman, 119 Pac. 663, we held, under a state of facts very similar to those here presented that there had been a sufficient tender. But, apart from all this, it is alleged that during the life of the option, and before the plaintiff had exercised it, the property had been transferred by Mrs. Wirth to the defendants, who took with notice of the plaintiff's rights. By so taking, they became bound to carry out the obligation of the contract. They were, accordingly, the persons to whom notice of acceptance could properly be given, and of whom demand for conveyance could properly be made. The complaint shows that plaintiff's agent stated to the defendants that the plaintiff "offered to purchase said land and exercised its option thereto and offered to pay the purchase price thereof." This was a sufficient acceptance of the option and offer of payment to entitle the plaintiff to enforce the agreement against the defendants, even if it could be held that there was no sufficient notice and tender to Mrs. Wirth.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer with leave to defendants to answer the third amended complaint.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

18 Cal. App. 764

KEELING v. SCHASTHEY & VOLLMER.
(Civ. 903.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District,
California. April 26, 1912.)

1. WORK AND LABOR (§ 14*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS—BUILDING DESTROYED BY FIRE.
Where a contractor agreed to alter and repair an existing building, and then contracted with a subcontractor to do part of the work and to receive payments therefor on the basis of 75 per cent. of the work done as it progressed, and 25 per cent. after the completion of the work, and where, before completion of the subcontractor's work, the building burned without the fault of either party, the subcontractor was entitled to recover from the contractor the difference between the amount paid and the reasonable value of the work done by him, and was not limited to a recovery of 75 per cent. of it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Work and Labor, Cent. Dig. §§ 29-33; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 319*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS—COMPENSATION—CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDING.

Where a builder undertakes to furnish labor and material in the building of a house for a specified sum, he cannot recover for partial construction in case the building be destroyed without fault of either party, unless he is protected against such contingency by the terms of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1458, 1476, 1477, 1479, 1493-1507; Dec. Dig. § 319.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 319*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS—COMPENSATION—"ACT OF GOD."

In order to entitle a builder to recover, full performance of the contract is necessary, unless he has been prevented by the other party, by operation of law, by the public enemy, or by the act of God; and fire is not an act of God.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1458, 1476, 1477, 1479, 1493-1507; Dec. Dig. § 319.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 118-126.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by J. G. Keeling against Schastey & Vollmer, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Louis H. Brownstone, for appellant.
Wright & Wright, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a final judgment in favor of the plaintiff, taken within 60 days after entry, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, in an action in quantum meruit for labor performed and materials furnished.

[1] Briefly, the facts are that in the month of June, 1907, the defendant entered into a contract with the Cliff House Company, a corporation, to alter and repair an existing building known as the Cliff House. Subsequently the defendant made a contract with A. C. Wocker, plaintiff's assignor, whereby certain painting and plastering work in and upon said building was to be done by the latter for a sum not exceeding $4,700, and he was to accept payments on the basis of 75 per cent. of the work done from time to time as the work progressed, the remaining 25 per cent. being payable 35 days after its completion. Prior to the time Wocker was able to complete his contract, and after he had furnished labor and materials of the reasonable value of $3,545.96, the building was destroyed by fire without the fault of either party to the contract. At this time Woker had received on account a payment of $1,800. This suit is to recover $1,745, alleged to be the difference between the amount paid and the reasonable value of the work as it had progressed up to the time of the destruction of the building.

[2] It is well settled that, where one undertakes to furnish labor and materials in the building of a house or other structure for another for a specified sum, the builder cannot recover for a partial construction in case the building be destroyed without the fault of either party, unless the builder is protected against such contingency by the terms of the contract.

[3] In order to entitle the builder to recover, full performance of the contract is necessary, unless he has been prevented by the act of the other party, or by operation of law, or by the act of God, or by the public enemy (Carlson v. Sheehan, 157 Cal. 692, 109 Pac. 29; Green v. Wells, 2 Cal. 584); and fire is not classified as an act of God. Pope v. Farmers' Union & Milling Co., 130 Cal. 139, 62 Pac. 384, 53 L. R. A. 673, 80 Am. St. Rep. 87.

It is also very well established in this country that where one, as in this case, agrees to furnish labor and materials on an existing building, the property of another, the agreement is upon the implied condition that the building shall remain in existence, and that the destruction of it without the fault of either party will excuse performance of the contract by the person performing such labor, and entitle him to recover the reasonable value of the part performance already effected. This view, it appears, is contrary to the English doctrine (Appleby v. Dodds, 8 East. 300; Appleby v. Myers, L. R. 2 Com. Pleas, 651); but it is the uniform rule in this country (30 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law [2d Ed.] p. 1251, and numerous cases cited), except in the state of Illinois (Huyett & Smith Mfg. Co. v. Chicago Edison Co., 167 Ill. 233, 47 N. E. 384, 59 Am. St. Rep. 272).

In Hollis v. Chapman, 36 Tex. 1, a carpenter contracted to furnish the materials and to do the work on the defendant's brick building, then in course of construction, for a fixed sum of money, but before the work was completed the building was destroyed by fire without the fault of either party to the contract. The action was to recover for the materials furnished and labor done, and it was held that the carpenter was entitled to recover.

So in Cleary v. Sohler, 120 Mass. 210, where the plaintiff made a contract to lath and plaster a certain building for an agreed price per square yard. When the contract was about one-half performed, the building was destroyed by fire. The plaintiff sued in assumpsit for work done and materials furnished, and it was held that he was entitled to recover.

In Niblo v. Binsse, 3 Abb. Dec. 375, 40 N. Y. 476, the plaintiff's assignor contracted to do certain plumbing work in a house owned by defendant's testator. Part of the work was to be paid as it progressed, and the final payment upon its completion. During the performance of the contract the building was burnt without fault of the parties, and the plaintiff was permitted to recover for the work performed. This case, like the others, proceeded on the theory that there was a breach of the implied undertaking by the owner of the continued existence of the building, which was necessary to enable the contractor to perform his agreement.

In the case of Butterfield v. Byrne, 153 Mass. 517, 27 N. E. 667, 12 L. R. A. 571, 25 Am. St. Rep. 654, the court says: "When work is to be done under a contract on a chattel or building which is not wholly the property of the contractor and for which he is not solely accountable, as where repairs are to be made on the property of another, the agreement on both sides is upon the implied condition that the chattel or building shall continue in existence, and the destruction of it without the fault of either of the parties will excuse performance of the contract, and leave no right of recovery of damages in favor of either against the other [citing cases]. In such cases, from the very nature of the agreement as applied to the subject-matter, it is manifest, that, while nothing is expressly said about it, the parties contemplated the continued existence of that to which the contract relates. The implied condition is a part of the contract as if it were written into it, and by its terms the contract is not to be performed if the subject-matter of it is destroyed, without the fault of either of the parties, before the time for complete performance has arrived." But says the same authority: "Where there is a bilateral contract for an entire consideration moving from each party, and the contract cannot be performed, it may be held that the consideration on each side is the performance of the contract by the other, and that a failure to completely perform it is a failure of the entire consideration, leaving each party, if there has been no breach or fault on either side, to his implied assumpsit for what he has done."

It is also contended by defendant that, if the plaintiff is entitled to recover at all, he is entitled to recover only 75 per cent. of the contract price of the work done and materials furnished up to the time of the fire. If this had been an action upon the contract, defendant's position would be sound; but this is an action for the reasonable value of the work and materials furnished, and therefore, as seen by the authorities just adverted to, the terms of the contract in this regard do not control.

The evidence is sufficient to support the findings, which cover all the material issues and support the judgment.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

18 Cal. App. 772

WEBSTER v. CARR. (Civ. 934.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 1, 1912.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 271*)—PROCEEDINGS TO ENFORCE—PETITION.

A complaint to enforce a mechanic's lien, showing the performance of the work, nonpayment, and the filing of the claim of lien, is not insufficient because the allegations as to when the work commenced and ceased were uncertain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 494-513; Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 232*)—PRESENTATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW IN COURT BELOW—NECESSITY.

Where defendant demurred to a complaint to enforce a mechanic's lien on the ground that it did not state a cause of action, he cannot on appeal assign uncertainty in the complaint as ground of objection; that ground having been waived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1351, 1368, 1426, 1430, 1431; Dec. Dig. § 232.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Paul W. Bennett, Judge.

Action by S. Webster against Chris Carr. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. R. Dorsey, for appellant. T. F. Allen, for respondent.

JAMES, J. [1] Plaintiff brought this action to enforce by foreclosure an alleged lien accruing to him as a mechanic who performed labor upon a building being constructed for defendant. It is alleged in the complaint that defendant entered into a contract with one Morgan for the construction of a five-room brick cottage; that the contract was in writing and duly recorded; that plaintiff was employed by Morgan, the contractor, to perform labor as a painter upon the cottage, for which Morgan agreed to pay him the reasonable value of his services; that pursuant to such employment plaintiff did, "between the 1st day of June, 1909, and the 21st day of July, 1909," perform 10 days' and 7 hours' labor in painting said cottage, which labor was of the reasonable value of $54.37. It was further alleged that the cottage was completed on the 6th day of July, 1909, but that no notice of completion was filed with the county recorder, and that on the 21st day of July, 1909, plaintiff filed and recorded his claim of lien. The complaint contained other appropriate allegations as to the description of the real property upon which the cottage was constructed, and set forth that the land described was necessary for the convenient use of the building. To this complaint a general demurrer was interposed, which was overruled by the court, and, defendant having failed to answer the complaint within the 10 days allowed him so to do, decree was thereupon entered in accordance with the prayer of the complaint. From that judgment the appeal is taken.

It is insisted on the part of appellant that the complaint of plaintiff failed to state a cause of action for the reason that it does not appear therefrom that the labor performed by the plaintiff was performed prior to the date of the completion of the building, which plaintiff alleged to be the 6th day of July, 1909. To give force to this contention plaintiff's allegation that the work performed by him was done between the 1st day of June and the 21st day of July is referred to, and it is argued that for aught that is disclosed by the complaint the 10 days' and 7 hours' work may have been performed after the 6th day of July. It is true that sufficient time had elapsed after the date upon which it is alleged the building was completed, and before the 21st day of July, to comprehend the entire term during which plaintiff alleged that he performed the work; but it is equally true that such labor may have been performed between the 1st day of June and the 6th day of July. The allegations of the complaint made it uncertain as to the particular time and date when the work commenced and when it ceased. However, this defect was not such as to render the complaint insufficient in its statement of a cause of action; that being the only ground assigned by the demurrer.

[2] Defendant having failed to assign uncertainty in the complaint as a ground of objection by demurrer, that objection was waived and cannot here be considered. San Joaquin Lumber Co. v. Welton et al., 115 Cal. 1, 46 Pac. 735, 1057.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

18 Cal. App. 707

ROGERS v. WEST RIVERSIDE 350-INCH WATER CO. (two cases).
(Civ. 959, 1,110.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 19, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 17, 1912.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 156*)—CONVEYANCE OF CANAL FOR IRRIGATION—RESERVATIONS.

A reservation in a deed of an irrigating canal of a right of way to carry therein a specified amount of water subject to the payment by the grantor of the proportion of the expense of maintaining and repairing the canal that 350 inches of water sustains to the entire amount of water from time to time being carried through the canal required the grantee to maintain the canal, and see to it that all of the water transported through it is delivered to the persons entitled thereto in such quantities as each is entitled to receive, and any expense incident to such oversight of the canal and distribution of the water is a part of the expense of maintenance of the canal of which the grantor must pay its proportionate part.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 158, 174-183; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 156*)—CONVEYANCE OF CANAL FOR IRRIGATION—RESERVATIONS—"FROM TIME TO TIME."

The words "from time to time" in such deed apply to the successive irrigation seasons, which may or may not be coextensive with the year, and the entire expense for such time or irrigation season is the expense incurred during the whole season, and cannot be determined, and is not payable until the close of the season, so that the average amount of water carried through the irrigating season is the proper denominator to determine the fractional amount which the grantor must pay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 158, 174-183; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, p. 2991; vol. 8, p. 7667.]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 156*)—IRRIGATING CANALS—MAINTENANCE—COST—LIABILITY.

Such reservation imposes on the grantee the duty of maintaining and repairing the canal, relying solely thereafter on his right of recovery for the proper proportion due from the grantor, and though the grantee is compelled by injunction to maintain the flow of water in the canal, and though the grantor fails to pay his part of the expense of maintenance, though requested so to do, the grantee is guilty of negligence in turning water into the canal at a time when he knew it would not stand that amount, thereby causing a break therein, and cannot compel the grantor to pay his proportionate part of the cost of repairing such break.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 158, 174-183; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

Appeals from Superior Court, Riverside County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

Actions by C. W. Rogers against the West Riverside 350-Inch Water Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Collier, Carnahan & Craig, for appellant. E. W. McGraw, Lafayette Gill, and Purington & Adair, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. No. 959 is an appeal from the judgment, while No. 1,110 is an appeal from an order denying a new trial. The two appeals by an appropriate order of the Supreme Court have been transferred to this court for hearing and decision, and both of such appeals are heard and determined upon the same transcript; the questions involved in each being identical.

Plaintiff, the owner of a canal constructed for the purpose of conveying irrigating water, brought this action against defendant, the owner of an easement in said canal, to recover an alleged proportion of the expenses due plaintiff for the maintenance and repair of such canal. The canal, as constructed and operated during all of the time mentioned in the complaint, had a carrying capacity of more than 1,000 inches of water. The eastern division thereof exceeded seven miles in length, while the entire canal exceeded ten miles in length. Plaintiff owned none of the water carried in said canal, but the same was operated entirely for the benefit of irrigators possessing rights to water carried therethrough. Defendant originally owned the canal, or that portion of it constructed prior to 1890, in February of which year it conveyed the canal so owned by it to plaintiff's predecessor in interest, in which conveyance the following reservation was made: "Hereby especially reserving, however, the perpetual right of way to carry through such canal the 350 inches of water, being the same 350 inches of water reserved by first party in its conveyance of other waters to second party by indenture dated May 23, 1888, recorded," etc., "subject, however, to first party's paying the proportion of the entire expense of maintaining and repairing such canal that 350 inches of water sustains and bears to the entire amount of water from time to time being carried through said canal." By the terms of the original reservation this 350 inches of water was to be diverted and measured at a certain ranch line. Before this conveyance was made, defendant and plaintiff's predecessor in interest had entered into an amendment to the agreement by which it was especially understood that defendant should have the right to divert and use its 350 inches of water at any point it might see fit, the water to be measured at the place of diversion under a 4-inch pressure of a continuous flow, and no more.

It is obvious from an examination of the record that all of the water so reserved by defendant, and to be by it carried through and diverted from such canal, was water to the use of which the stockholders in defendant corporation, the owners of land and irrigators under such canal, were entitled; that as a fact defendant never diverted or measured the water to which it was entitled at any point selected by it, but, on the contrary, 28 or 29 gates were maintained along the canal, at each of which gates one or more of the stockholders received water for the irrigation of their lands and plaintiff, through his servants and agents, maintained a constant supervision over such gates and the distribution of the water from the same, to the end that defendant's stockholders received their irrigating water at such times and in such volumes and heads as best suited their interest in the matter of irrigation; that, to maintain this supervision, plaintiff gave his time individually, was required to and did rent an office, where the business of the canal was conducted, hired zanjeros and other people, and actually expended a large amount of money in the maintenance and repair of the canal, including its supervision and the division of the waters carried through the same.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The court found that the amount of water from time to time carried through the canal was less than 900 inches. It is evident that the court arrived at this statement of fact in the findings through a consideration of the average amount of water carried from time to time through the irrigating season of each year, which average amount the court fixed as the denominator of the fraction which should count in fixing the proportion which defendant should pay toward the cost of maintenance and repair.

[1] The principal contention of defendant is that the maintenance charges imposed through the terms of the reservation were simply those incident to keeping the canal in condition for the transportation of water to be used in irrigation by those entitled to its use. This reservation clause was the subject of consideration in Rogers v. Riverside Land, etc., Co., 132 Cal. 9, 64 Pac. 95, where it was said by the court: "The proper construction of the terms, as used in the reservation contained in the deed to the Stearns Ranchos Company, would seem to be that the canal or ditch should be kept in such condition as to enable the owners of water, who have the right, to have the same carried or conveyed through said ditch or canal unobstructed, and with as little loss as possible, and so as to prevent others from using or appropriating the quantity to which they may be entitled." The allegations of the complaint and the findings of the court that, under the terms of the easement, defendant had the privilege of diverting the 350 inches of water at such places as it might wish to use the same, evidently refer to the division and use of the entire amount of water which defendant was entitled to have carried through the canal, not that a number of points of diversion were to be used for portions thereof by way of distribution to irrigators. But, be that as it may, the sole duty still devolved upon plaintiff, through the obligation of maintenance, to see to it that others did not use any of the quantity to which defendant was entitled. This in the very nature of things could only be accomplished through a supervision, management, and control of the water delivered to the respective users thereof. It affirmatively appears from the answer of defendant that all of the water so carried under the reservation was water owned by the irrigators. In other words, the defendant as a corporate agency of the irrigators was conveying for delivery to those who owned the water the amount to which each was entitled for use in irrigation. While the defendant had evidently parted with its ownership of the water, if such it ever possessed, nevertheless, it still was bound to cause the water to be carried to the points of diversion and there, under the maintenance clause, to be delivered by plaintiff without unnecessary loss and in such manner as to prevent appropriation thereof by those not entitled thereto. Conceding that under a strict construction of the easement clause defendant would have been entitled to divert the entire amount of water to which it was entitled at a single point, and thereby reduce to a minimum the cost and expense incident to such oversight by plaintiff with reference to preventing the misappropriation by others of such water, yet defendant did not so elect to proceed; but, on the contrary, acquiesced and presumably authorized the delivery by plaintiff at many points convenient for the use of irrigators, thereby increasing the cost of maintenance. We are of opinion, therefore, that, under a proper construction of the maintenance clause in the reservation, plaintiff was bound to see to it that all of the water so transported through the canal was delivered to the persons entitled thereto in such quantities as each was entitled to receive, and that any and all expense incident to such oversight and distribution of the water became and was a part of the maintenance of the canal, under the construction of the Supreme Court heretofore referred to. This being true, there is evidence to be found in the record sustaining the findings of the court with reference to the amount so found to be due for such maintenance. We are of opinion that the services rendered by plaintiff himself in supervision and through his zanjeros, the rent of an office, and all of the matters found by the court to be proper matters of maintenance, as set forth in the bill of particulars, were in fact proper charges of maintenance and were properly allowed by the court in that regard. Entertaining these views, it is unnecessary to pass upon many other specifications of error with reference to the introduction and exclusion of testimony, the determination of the questions involved being included within the matter hereinbefore determined.

[2] Neither do we see any error in the action of the court in its determination that the average amount of water carried during the irrigating season was the proper denominator in determining the fractional amount which defendant should pay toward the cost of maintenance. The words "from time to time," as used in the contract, were intended by the parties to apply to and mean the successive irrigation seasons, which may or may not be coextensive with the year. The "entire expense of maintaining and repairing such canal" for such time or irrigation season is the expense incurred during the whole season, and hence cannot be determined and is not payable until the close of the season. The average flow of water during this period constitutes the entire flow for such time, and defendant's proportion of the expense for repairs and maintenance during such period is such part thereof as 350 inches bears to the average number of inches, counting the 350 inches whether carried or not, conducted daily through the canal during such season. Otherwise, plaintiff might select a month when none or but little water was being carried through the canal, and during such month clean the canal and make the necessary repairs thereof required for the entire season, and thus, since no water other than that, the carrying of which is chargeable to defendant during such period, charge the whole of such expense to defendant. The complaint divides the time from November 1, 1906, to May 1, 1908, into four periods, the expenditures during each period being set forth in a separate count. As to each one of these periods, however, the court found that the average flow of water was less than 900 inches, and fixed 900 inches as the basis upon which to determine the amount due from defendant. Hence, such division of the year into periods and findings made in no wise prejudiced defendant, for the result would have been the same had it been based upon the irrigation season. Likewise with the period extending from May 1, 1908, to September 1, 1908, covered by the fifth cause of action, and wherein the court found the average flow of water to be 1,000 inches. For aught that appears in the record, this was the irrigation season.

[3] There remains, then, but one question of serious import presented by appellant, and that is with reference to plaintiff's right to recover for repairs occasioned by a break in the canal which occurred in May, 1908. The uncontradicted evidence shows that a break occurred in the canal on the 29th of May, 1908, and that the same was occasioned by plaintiff turning the water into the canal at a time when he knew from its condition that it would not sustain the weight of such water. The repair work made necessary on account of this break was shown to have been performed and expenses connected therewith incurred between the 29th of May and the 3d of June. While the record does not disclose the exact amount allowed by the court on account of the repairs occasioned by such break, plaintiff testified that the bill for $322.40 allowed by the court, generally speaking, was for repairing this break. This is the only amount which is definitely shown to have been expended in connection therewith. Appellant's contention is that this break was occasioned through the negligence of the plaintiff in turning in the water at a time when he knew disastrous results would follow, and that he should not be allowed to recover on account of such negligent management of the ditch. It is clearly established, to our minds, that prior to the break a demand was made upon defendant to pay its proportion of the expense of maintenance and repairs and that defendant refused to make such payment unless plaintiff "would accept a sum in full settlement much less than that due. It is true that among the findings of fact we find the conclusion of the court that no proper demand for the proportion of the expense of maintenance was made by plaintiff before the break occurred. It does appear, however, that demand was made, and, were it material, we should have no hesitancy in saying that this conclusion of the trial court was unfounded. But we are confronted with the decision of the Supreme Court in Smith v. Stearns Ranchos Co., 132 Cal. 180, 64 Pac. 261, 716, in which it is held, in effect, that, under the agreement connected with the operation of the ditch, the duty devolved upon plaintiff to maintain and repair the same, relying solely thereafter upon his right of recovery for the proper proportion due from the defendant. Were the question an open one, we would have no difficulty in resolving this question in harmony with the dissenting opinion of the chief justice in the case last above cited, but do not, in view of the majority opinion, feel that we are warranted in disregarding such opinion, the effect of which is to place plaintiff in a very peculiar position. An injunctive order compels him to maintain the flow of water in the canal. In obedience to this order he does so, and yet he is made chargeable with the results which follow. Regardless, however, of this apparent hardship, it seems to be written in the law that plaintiff is so obligated. Accepting, as we feel we must, the doctrine of the Smith Case, we must hold that the allowance of $$26.5807/100$ of $322.40 made by the court was an improper allowance, under the circumstances of the case.

We find in the record no other reversible error, and feel that this is a proper case in which to direct a modification of the judgment. It is therefore ordered that the judgment of the trial court be modified by deducting therefrom the sum of $116.99, and, as so modified, the judgment and order are affirmed; appellant to recover one-half of costs of appeal.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

18 Cal. App. 739

EDGINGTON v. SUPERIOR COURT OF YOLO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 968.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, April 23, 1912. Rehearing Denied May 23, 1912. Denied by Supreme Court June 22, 1912.)

1. INFANTS (§ 20*) — PROTECTION—"DEPENDENT PERSON."

Under Juvenile Court Law (St. 1911, pp. 658, 661, 666), providing in sections 1, 5, and

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

16 that the words "dependent person" shall mean any person under 21 years who has no parent or guardian willing or capable of exercising proper parental control, or who from any cause is in danger of growing up to lead an idle, dissolute, or immoral life, and section 26, making it a misdemeanor for any person to encourage, cause, or contribute to the dependency or delinquency of such person, an information in a prosecution for causing and encouraging the delinquency of a dependent child, which alleged that she was a female child of the age of 16 years or thereabouts, and had no parents or guardian willing and capable of exercising proper control, and by reason of that fact was in danger of growing up to lead an idle, dissolute, and immoral life, sufficiently charged the dependency of the minor child.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1991-1993.]

2. INFANTS (§ 20*) — PROTECTION — DELINQUENCY.

In a prosecution under Juvenile Court Law (St. 1911, p. 672) § 26, for encouraging the delinquency of a dependent minor, an adjudication of dependency prior to the prosecution is not required; it being sufficient if the information or complaint allege the dependency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

3. INFANTS (§ 20*) — PROTECTION — CRIMINAL PROSECUTION — PROCEDURE.

Juvenile Court Law (St. 1911, p. 672) § 26, making one who contributes to the delinquency of a dependent minor child guilty of a misdemeanor gives jurisdiction of such offense to the superior court, and Penal Code, § 682, as amended by Acts Feb. 21, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 68), provides that every public offense must be prosecuted by indictment or information except misdemeanors of which jurisdiction had been conferred upon the superior court sitting as juvenile court. Code Civ. Proc. § 187, provides that when jurisdiction is, by the Constitution, conferred on a court or judicial officer, all means to carry it into effect are given, whether specifically pointed out or not, and Penal Code, § 1426, providing for the commencement of prosecutions by complaint, requires them to be verified only in prosecutions before a police judge or justice of the peace. Held that, regardless of the exception as to informations in cases where the superior court was sitting as a juvenile court, a prosecution begun by an information, which was sufficient as a complaint, and a preliminary examination before a magistrate, was not erroneous, the superior court having general authority to regulate such proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

Petition by G. A. Edgington for writ of prohibition directed to the Superior Court of Yolo County and N. A. Hawkins, Judge. Writ denied.

R. Clark, for petitioner. A. G. Bailey, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court of Yolo county and Hon. N. A. Hawkins, the judge thereof, from trying petitioner on a charge of "causing, encouraging, and contributing to the delinquency of a dependent and delinquent child." A preliminary examination of the charge was held in the justice court of Woodland township in said county and the defendant was held to answer to the superior court. Therein an information was afterward filed by the district attorney, and a motion to set it aside and a demurrer were interposed by defendant. In both these matters the ruling of the court was in favor of the people and the case was set down for trial; hence this application.

[1, 2] There are two points made by petitioner that we deem worthy of consideration. The first is that the information is totally insufficient as a basis for the prosecution, in that it does not appear therein that the complaining witness had been previously adjudged a dependent child. The prosecution, it may be said, is under section 26 of what is known as the Juvenile Court Law (Stat. of 1911, p. 672), providing that "in all cases where any child shall be dependent or delinquent under the terms of this act, the parent or parents, legal guardian or person having the custody of such person or any other person who shall, by any act or omission, encourage, cause or contribute to the dependency or delinquency of such person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year or both such fine and imprisonment and the juvenile court shall have jurisdiction of all such misdemeanors." Section 1 of said act defines "a dependent person," and therein is found a catalogue of 16 different conditions according to which a person may be classified as "dependent." As far as is necessary to quote herein, the said section provides that "the words 'dependent person' shall mean any person under the age of twenty-one years * * * (5) who has no parent or guardian; or who has no parent or guardian willing to exercise or capable of exercising proper parental control * * * or (16) who from any cause is in danger of growing up to lead an idle, dissolute, or immoral life." Turning to the information herein, we find the allegation in reference to the complaining witness that at the time the offense was committed, she being "then and there a female child, under the age of eighteen years, to wit, of the age of sixteen years or thereabouts, was then and there a female dependent minor child in this, that the said Hazel Douglass had no parents or guardians, willing and capable of exercising proper parental control over the said Hazel Douglass, and that the home of said Hazel Douglass was and is, by reason of neglect on the part of her guardian, an unfit place for the said Hazel Douglass and that the said Hazel Douglass was and is in danger of growing up to lead an idle, dissolute and immoral life." It is thus to be seen that from the facts alleged the conclusion necessarily follows, under the definition given by the said statute, that the said Hazel Douglass was a "dependent person." We have found nothing in the law which requires that her status as such should be adjudicated prior to the prosecution of another person for contributing to her dependency, and we see no reason why, if properly alleged, the facts bringing her within said class may not be established at the trial of the defendant as other facts are shown tending to prove the charge. The principle would be the same if the defendant were accused of a crime against a minor or insane person. In such case no prior adjudication of the minority or insanity would be required, but, of course, the burden would be on the prosecution to establish this as other material averments of the crime. This view is entirely consistent with and is supported by the decision in People v. Pierro, 121 Pac. 689. In that case the information was fatally defective for the reason that facts were not alleged bringing the child within the definition of a "dependent," the district attorney contenting himself with the averment that she "was a minor female child under the age of 18 years, and was then and there a dependent child within the meaning of that certain act," etc. The Second District Court of Appeal very properly held, as stated by Mr. Justice James, that "defendant was entitled to have the information show the particulars in this regard for he was called upon to meet the issue, first, as to whether the child had in fact become a delinquent. * * * Had the child against whom the offense is alleged to have been committed been adjudicated to be a dependent child, then it would have been sufficient to plead such adjudication; but, when no adjudication is relied upon as showing a legal determination made of the character of the minor, the facts which make such minor a dependent must be pleaded in the information."

[3] The other contention of petitioner is that the said juvenile court law contemplates that no preliminary examination shall be held, but that the defendant must be "prosecuted on a complaint filed in the juvenile court charging him with the misdemeanor mentioned in the act and trying him for such misdemeanor in the juvenile court, without any examination or the filing of any information." In addition to the clause already quoted as to the jurisdiction of said court, attention is called to the amendment to section 682 of the Penal Code, approved February 21, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 68), providing that "every public offense must be prosecuted by indictment or information, except * * *

(4) all misdemeanors of which jurisdiction has been conferred upon superior courts sitting as juvenile courts." The word "information" in this amendment is obviously used in a technical sense, and refers to the accusation filed after a preliminary examination.

It is admitted by petitioner that no procedure is provided in said juvenile act for the prosecution of defendant for the crime charged, but it is contended that "where power is given a court to do a thing, that it may adopt any lawful method to carry that power into effect, and that when no method is provided by law, it can adopt any suitable method." This is in accordance with the provision of section 187 of the Code of Civil Procedure that "when jurisdiction is, by the Constitution or this Code, or by any other statute, conferred on a court or judicial officer, all the means necessary to carry it into effect are also given; and in the exercise of this jurisdiction, if the course of proceeding be not specifically pointed out by this Code or the statute, any suitable process or mode of proceeding may be adopted which may appear most conformable to the spirit of this Code." But, as we view it, this concession yields the point as far as this application is concerned. It may be admitted that the preliminary examination was not required, and it may be treated as a nullity, but we still have this situation: The superior court has jurisdiction to try the offense charged. The said "Juvenile Court Law" is declared in its title to be an act providing, among other things, "for the punishment of persons responsible for, or contributing to, the dependency or delinquency of children; and giving to the superior court jurisdiction of such offenses." It is true that the court is known as the "Juvenile Court," but it is unquestionably the superior court, exercising jurisdiction over a peculiar class of offenses. There is furthermore, no question that the defendant is charged in apt language with an offense defined in said law and within the jurisdiction of said court.

The only objection of any moment is to the form of procedure, but there is nothing in the statute, confessedly, to preclude the district attorney from making the technical accusation against the defendant in the form of an information. It contains every element of a sufficient complaint. By his signature the prosecuting officer of the court has given it his sanction and the defendant's right to a fair trial has not been impaired. It is not verified, but verification is required only of the complaint filed in a justice or police court. Section 1426, Pen. Code. If it be admitted that the prosecution should be entitled in the "Juvenile Court" instead of the "Superior Court," it is sufficient to say that this is a mere irregularity, and does not affect the jurisdiction of the court. It does, however, appear in the information, as we have already suggested, that the prosecution is undertaken in the superior court acting under the provisions of said juvenile court law and as contemplated by its terms.

We think it cannot be said that there is shown to be such lack of authority in the court to try the cause as to justify the issuance of the writ. We need not, therefore, consider the question whether there is a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal.

The order to show cause is discharged and the writ denied.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

18 Cal. App. 774

SEARS v. DOUTHITT et al. (Civ. 1,088.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 1, 1912.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 226*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—UNRECORDED DEED—AGENCY.

A deed was given to one member of a law firm in payment of a fee due the firm, and he executed a reconveyance to be delivered if the fee should be paid within a certain time. The fee was paid and the reconveyance delivered by his partner without his knowledge. Subsequently he sold the property, delivered a deed, and received payment at a bank designated by the purchaser. Upon learning of the delivery of the reconveyance, and before the bank delivered his deed to the purchaser, he requested the bank not to make such delivery, but the bank disregarded his request and delivered the deed, and it was recorded. Held that the bank, being the agent of the purchaser, properly disregarded the request, and that the purchaser, having no knowledge of the reconveyance, acquired title as a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice of adverse claims.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 475, 476; Dec. Dig. § 226.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by Ed. A. Sears against John F. Douthitt and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. N. Andrews, for appellants. Chas. S. Conner, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Action brought to determine conflicting claims to real property. Plaintiff and defendants deraign their asserted title from one Elgin L. McBurney as a common grantor. In July, 1898, James Story was indebted to the law firm of McBurney & McBurney, all of the parties being residents of New York City, on account of legal services rendered to him by said firm. Not being able to satisfy the debt in cash at that time, Story stated to the McBurneys that he owned some lots in California valued at about $100, and that he would give a deed to that property in payment for the services, which he did. It was agreed between the parties that, if Story should pay the amount due from him on account of attorney's fees within a year, the real estate would be deeded back to him, and a deed of reconveyance was then prepared and placed among the office files of McBurney & McBurney to be delivered to Story within a year if he should satisfy the condition of payment. The deed from Story was made to Elgin L. McBurney as grantee. In the month of September, 1900, Story paid the amount which had been owing from him to the firm of McBurney & McBurney to H. D. McBurney, a member of the firm, who thereupon delivered the deed of reconveyance heretofore mentioned. The deed from Story to Elgin L. McBurney had been duly recorded in San Diego county, where the real property was located, but the deed of reconveyance was not recorded until December 11, 1908. Meanwhile Elgin L. McBurney was not informed that his brother had delivered the deed of reconveyance, and in 1908, assuming that he held title to the real property, he negotiated with plaintiff for the sale of his interest therein. After some correspondence had passed between the parties Elgin L. McBurney wrote to the plaintiff as follows: "I will give you a quitclaim deed for whatever interest might appear to be in my name for the sum of seventy-five dollars. If you care for such a deed upon this basis, prepare the same and send to me for execution." Plaintiff made out a deed agreeable to this offer and delivered it to the cashier of the San Diego Savings Bank with instructions to send the same, together with a draft for $75, to the Fourth National Bank in New York City, with instructions to the latter to deliver the draft to McBurney when he should sign the deed. On or about the 3d day of September, 1908, McBurney went to the Fourth National Bank in New York City, signed the deed, and received the draft for $75. This deed was returned to San Diego and delivered to plaintiff, who caused the same to be recorded on September 11, 1908, in the office of the county recorder at San Diego. Meanwhile Elgin L. McBurney discovered by an examination of memoranda in his office, and consultation with his brother that a deed had been delivered to Story in the year 1900. He thereupon wired to plaintiff, directing him not to record the deed last given, as a prior deed had been discovered, and also notified the San Diego Savings Bank to hold the same deed and not to deliver it to plaintiff. This telegram to the San Diego bank was received there before the bank had delivered the deed to the plaintiff, and consequently before that deed had been recorded. The trial court found that plaintiff was the owner in fee of the real property; that he was a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of any outstanding claims arising from any previous deed from Elgin L. McBurney, or otherwise. If the San Diego Savings Bank and its correspondent, the Fourth National Bank of New York City, acted as the agents of plaintiff in receiving the deed and transmitting and paying over the $75 paid as the purchase price of the interest of McBurney in the real property, then delivery of the deed from McBurney to the plaintiff was complete when McBurney executed the same at the Fourth National Bank in New York City, and received the $75 sent to him by plaintiff. Assuming the relation of principal and agents to have existed as just mentioned, then the moment McBurney executed the deed and received the money in New York City he became divested of any title or interest held by him in the real property and plaintiff became the owner thereof. It is conceded by counsel for appellant that such would be the legal situation resulting from the facts just assumed, and it is conceded that the conveyance of the interest of McBurney to the plaintiff under such conditions would be superior to the title attempted to be conveyed by the unrecorded deed delivered in the year 1900 by the McBurneys to Story. There was no evidence heard, so far as the bill of exceptions discloses, which would indicate that plaintiff at the time the deed from McBurney was signed and delivered at the Fourth National Bank in New York City, had any knowledge or information as to the unrecorded deed to Story having been made, and he in his testimony affirmatively asserted that he had no such knowledge or information.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The evidence was amply sufficient to justify the finding of the trial court that plaintiff was the bona fide purchaser without notice of the adverse claims of these defendants. And it must be said, too, that the Fourth National Bank in New York City and the San Diego Savings Bank acted together as the agents of the plaintiff, and not as the agents of Elgin L. McBurney. In a letter dated August 24, 1908, the plaintiff wrote to McBurney that he was sending the deed and draft for $75 as required. He then added: "You will find them the Fourth National Bank of N. Y. Sign deed and draw your money." After having delivered the $75 to McBurney, and having received the deed duly executed by the latter, the Fourth National Bank of New York City could not have relinquished the deed upon request of McBurney without rendering itself liable to any damage sustained by this plaintiff because of such act. When McBurney delivered his deed to the bank in New York, he delivered it just as effectually as though he had then handed it to plaintiff himself, or any other person authorized by plaintiff to receive it. Therefore any notices given by McBurney to either of the banks acting as transfer agents for plaintiff after the deed had been delivered in New York were ineffectual to prevent the passing of title to the property from McBurney to the plaintiff. The evidence does sustain all of the findings made by the trial court and the judgment which followed them.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

18 Cal. App. 704

EBERLE et al. v. HUBBARD et al. (LUDWIG et al., Interveners). (Civ. 1074.)
(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 18, 1912.)

MANDAMUS (§ 111*)—ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR WIDENING STREET—COMPELLING PAYMENT OF AWARDS.

Where property owners were awarded damages in a proceeding by a city to acquire land for a street, and the judgment of condemnation became final, they could by mandamus compel the city to pay the awards from a fund collected for that purpose, notwithstanding an appeal to the Supreme Court by owners assessed to pay the cost seeking to have the proceedings declared void and injunctive relief preventing a sale for delinquent assessments; the city not being restrained from proceeding to adjust the awards.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 231, 232, 234; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

Application for writ of mandate by F. X. Eberle and others against A. A. Hubbard and others, constituting the Board of Public Works of the City of Los Angeles and another, in which Henry Ludwig and others intervened. Peremptory writ issued.

Thomas C. Ridgway and Hatch, Lloyd & Hunt, for petitioners. John W. Shenk, City Atty., and Myron Westover, Deputy City Atty., for respondents. Trippet, Chapman & Biby and Valentine & Newby, for interveners.

PER CURIAM. An opinion herein was filed in this court on January 15, 1912, wherein, upon application of petitioners, a peremptory writ of mandate was ordered to be issued as prayed for. Thereafter, upon application of respondents and interveners, a rehearing of said matter was ordered. In view of the fact that this court has filed an opinion affirming the judgment of the trial court in the case of S. M. Bernard Co. et al. v. City of Los Angeles et al. (Civil No. 1127) 124 Pac. 88, wherein this proceeding originated, and, upon further consideration of the matter, being fully satisfied with the opinion heretofore filed herein, we readopt the same as the opinion of the court. The opinion referred to follows:

"After due proceedings had preliminary thereto, the city of Los Angeles, on July 3, 1907, brought an action to condemn certain lands for the purpose of adding to the width of Eighth street in said city. Interlocutory judgment was thereafter entered, determining the amount of damages to be paid for the taking of the land. Assessments were then levied upon the property of a benefited district duly described by ordinance, and subsequent thereto the sum of $161,454.48 was collected on these assessments for the purpose of paying the damages fixed by the court in the condemnation proceeding. This money was placed in a special fund in the city treasury where it has since remained. All the petitioners, except Sarah M. Ham-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

ble, are property owners who were awarded damages. No appeal was taken from the judgment of condemnation, and that judgment has become final. The defendants constituting the board of public works of the city of Los Angeles refuse to order warrants to be issued in favor of petitioners and the defendant treasurer refuses to pay to petitioners the amounts severally awarded to them by the court. For answer to the alternative writ issued herein, the defendants set up that an action is now pending on appeal in the Supreme Court, wherein the validity and regularity of the proceedings had and taken in the matter of the widening of Eighth street are brought into question, and that the city of Los Angeles has withheld payment of the awards for damages pending final decision in the case mentioned. The suit referred to was one in which one Bernard and others, owners of property which was assessed to pay the cost of the street improvement, sought to have the proceedings declared void and to have injunctive relief preventing a sale of their properties on account of delinquent assessments. The trial court refused the relief asked for and decreed that the proceedings for the widening of Eighth street were regular and valid. An application, made after judgment, for an injunction staying proceedings pending appeal, was also denied. An appeal was then taken from the judgment and from the order so made after judgment. A number of the plaintiffs who appeared in that action had filed here a complaint in intervention opposing the petitioners in this suit. It is alleged in this complaint, after setting up the facts relative to the action last referred to, that the interveners have since paid the amounts assessed against their property, but under protest and because only of the threat of the board of public works to sell their property to satisfy the amounts levied against it; and that they have notified the city of Los Angeles that they will look to it for the return of the money so paid in the event it shall finally be held that the street proceedings are invalid. The defendants, representing the city of Los Angeles, do not offer as a reason why refusal is made to disburse the fund collected for the benefit of the property owners whose property was adjudged to be damaged by reason of the proceedings, that any irregularity or informality exists in such proceedings, such as might render title to the money constituting this fund questionable, and, moreover, all of those matters have been properly submitted to a trial court which has made its determination of the issues so presented adverse to the interveners who appear here. It is not proper, in our opinion, to make this proceeding in mandamus serve to review the correctness of the conclusions reached by the trial judge in the action which is now pending in the Supreme Court. The trial court not only passed upon the issues presented, which were all resolved in favor of the city, but considered and refused an application made on the part of the interveners for an injunction to stay proceedings pending appeal. The hands of the officers of the city were left untied, and it became their plain duty under the law to proceed with the adjustment of the judgment claims of petitioners. In its practical effect, the contention of the interveners is that the trial court should have granted an order staying proceedings, and, having failed to do so, that this court should now review that action and withhold a mandate requiring the city officials to proceed in accordance with law. No doubt had the city consented to the granting of an injunction, to operate as a supersedeas pending appeal, an order providing for such stay would have been made by the trial court. Having insisted, as we may presume defendants did insist, that they be left free to act and bring to a close the proceedings for the opening of Eighth street, complaint cannot now be heard on their behalf because such action may be compelled to be taken on their part as the law requires them to take.

"We think that neither the defendants nor the interveners have shown sufficient cause why the judgment of this court, exercised within the limits of a reasonable and just discretion, should deny the relief sought by petitioners.

"A peremptory writ of mandate is ordered to be issued."

18 Cal. App. 778

R. H. HERRON CO. v. WESTSIDE ELECTRIC CO. et al. (Civ. 1,107.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 1, 1912. On Petition for Rehearing, May 31, 1912. Denied by Supreme Court June 28, 1912.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 668*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—JURISDICTION—SERVICE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 411, subd. 2, provides that, if suit is brought against a foreign corporation doing business and having a managing or business agent, cashier, or secretary within the state, summons may be served on such agent, cashier, or secretary. Held, that where it did not appear either in plaintiff's complaint or in the affidavit of service on a foreign corporation that it was doing any business in California, or that it had therein a managing or business agent, cashier, or secretary on whom service of summons could be made, an affidavit showing service by delivery of a copy to the president of the corporation personally within the state was insufficient to confer jurisdiction over the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2603, 2627; Dec. Dig. § 668.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 668*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—ACTIONS—SERVICE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 411, subd. 2, authorizing service of summons on a foreign corporation, in order that the court may get jurisdiction over such a corporation, it is requisite that it shall be doing business within the state at the time the summons is served and that the service shall be made on its agent who is managing that business, or on its cashier or secretary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2603, 2627; Dec. Dig. § 668.*]

On Rehearing.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 934*) — PRESUMPTIONS—DEFAULT.

Since the clerk's duty to enter a default judgment is ministerial and not judicial, where the judgment roll showed that the clerk entered judgment by default on an insufficient affidavit of service of summons, it would not be presumed on appeal that all the necessary jurisdictional facts were made to appear before the judgment was rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3777-3781, 3782; Dec. Dig. § 934.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by the R. H. Herron Company against the Westside Electric Company and the Kern River Mining & Power Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Kern River Mining & Power Company appeals. Reversed.

S. S. Sanders, for appellant. O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin and Walter K. Tuller, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This is an appeal taken by defendant Kern River Mining & Power Company from a judgment entered against it by default. Plaintiff instituted the action to recover against the Westside Electric Company various sums of money for merchandise sold by it and several other vendors whose claims were assigned to plaintiff prior to the commencement of the action. Judgment was sought against appellant upon its statutory liability as a holder of shares of stock of the Westside Electric Company. In the complaint it was alleged that appellant was a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the territory of Arizona and authorized by its articles of incorporation to subscribe for, own, and hold stock in other corporations. It was not alleged that appellant was doing business in the state of California at the time of the service of summons, or at all, or that it had a managing agent, cashier, or secretary within this state.

[1] The affidavit purporting to show service of summons recited that the person making the service had "on the 29th day of August, 1910, personally served summons in said action upon defendant Kern River Mining & Power Company, in said county of Los Angeles, state of California, by then and there delivering to and leaving with H. C. Shippe, an officer of said defendant, to wit, the president thereof, personally, another and separate copy of said summons annexed to another and separate copy of the complaint in said action." Among other contentions made by appellant on this appeal, it is urged that the affidavit was insufficient to confer jurisdiction to enter the judgment. Section 411, Code of Civil Procedure, provides how summons must be served in order that jurisdiction be acquired against a foreign corporation. Subdivision 2 of that section reads as follows: "(2) If the suit is against a foreign corporation, or a nonresident joint-stock company or association, doing business and having a managing or business agent, cashier, or secretary within this state: to such agent, cashier, or secretary." It was not made to appear either in the complaint of plaintiff or the affidavit of the person making the service of summons that the appellant, at the time such summons was served upon its president, was engaged in any business in the state of California, or that it had in this state a managing or business agent, cashier, or secretary upon whom service of summons could be made.

[2] In Jameson v. Simonds Saw Co., 2 Cal. App. 582, 84 Pac. 289, where a like question was under consideration, the court said: "Under the provisions of this section, in order that the court may get jurisdiction over a foreign corporation, it is requisite that such corporation shall be 'doing business' within the state at the time the summons is served, and that the service shall be made upon its agent who is managing that business, or upon its cashier or secretary." Even though it might here be said that because the appellant was at the time of the attempted service of summons the holder of a large number of shares of stock of the Westside Electric Company, a California corporation, it was then "doing business" within the meaning of the section of the Code referred to, still it does not by any means follow that the president of a foreign corporation who is served with process within this state shall be presumed to be the managing or business agent of such foreign corporation. In our opinion, the affidavit of service was insufficient to show that the requisite jurisdiction had been acquired to authorize the entry of the default judgment.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [3] The argument made by respondent in its petition for rehearing would be pertinent had the default judgment appealed from been one which was entered by the court. In that case it would be presumed that all of the necessary facts as to the service of summons had been made to appear. The judgment roll here exhibited shows that the clerk entered judgment upon an insufficient affidavit of service of summons, and we cannot assume that there was any other proof made of such service. The clerk's duty of entering a default judgment is a ministerial one and not judicial in its nature. The supple-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes mental affidavit filed long after the perfecting of this appeal can constitute no proper part of the record to which we are entitled to look in determining the question presented.

Rehearing is denied.

163 Cal. 8

BUCKEYE REFINING CO. v. KELLY et al.
(L. A. 2.879.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1912.
Rehearing Denied July 6, 1912.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 897*) — SATISFACTION — ENTRY.

Where, pending the defendants' appeal from an adverse judgment in an action for wrongful attachment, payment of the judgment was enforced under an execution of judgment creditors of the plaintiff, the plaintiff could not object merely because defendants had taken an appeal to a satisfaction of the judgment being entered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1713; Dec. Dig. § 897.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 158*)—RIGHT OF REVIEW—PAYMENT OF JUDGMENT.

The compulsory payment of a judgment pending appeal does not deprive the defendant of his right to have the judgment reviewed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 973-977; Dec. Dig. § 158.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 848*)—ASSIGNMENT OF PART —PAYMENT.

The fact that the plaintiff corporation assigned a part of its judgment did not make it improper for defendants to pay the entire judgment on execution issued by judgment creditors of the plaintiff, where they had no notice of the assignment, and did not consent thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1556-1558; Dec. Dig. § 848.*]

4. JUDGMENT (§ 848*)—ASSIGNMENT—NOTICE.

The filing of the assignment of a judgment was not constructive notice, in the absence of a statute providing that it should have that effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1556-1558; Dec. Dig. § 848.*]

5. JUDGMENT (§ 848*)—ASSIGNMENT—NOTICE —BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where the assignee of a judgment has only an equitable interest, he has the burden of proving that the judgment debtor had notice of the equitable interest before paying to the party holding the legal title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1556-1558; Dec. Dig. § 848.*]

6. JUDGMENT (§ 505*)—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A judgment cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground that it should have been for sale of the mortgaged property with provision

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes for recovery of deficiency, instead of for recovery of money outright, not being void even if erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 948; Dec. Dig. § 505.*]

7. NAMES (§ 18*)—IDENTITY—PRESUMPTION.

Where collateral attack is made on a judgment rendered in an action wherein the plaintiff and defendant had the same name, it will be presumed that they were different persons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Names, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

8. ACTION (§ 15*)—SAME PERSON PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT.

The same person cannot be both plaintiff and defendant in the same action, even though he sue in one capacity and defend in another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Cent. Dig. § 84; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

9. EXECUTION (§ 123*)—LEVY—QUALIFICATION OF OFFICER.

Where a judgment creditor of a corporation caused an execution to be issued and levied on the corporation's judgment against the sheriff and others, the sheriff, not being a party to the action in which the execution was issued, was not disqualified under Pol. Code, § 4172, providing that, when a sheriff is a party to an action, all process therein must be executed by the coroner, although on general principles the execution should have been levied by another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 278; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

10. JUDGMENT (§ 897*)—ENTRY OF SATISFACTION—INVALID LEVY OF EXECUTION.

Where, pending the defendants' appeal from a judgment against them, payment of the judgment is enforced under a valid execution of judgment creditors of plaintiff, the fact that the levy is invalid because of the disqualification of the levying officer does not deprive the defendants of their right to have satisfaction of the judgment entered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1713; Dec. Dig. § 897.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by the Buckeye Refining Company against John W. Kelly and others. Judgment was for plaintiff, and pending appeal by defendants an order was made directing entry of satisfaction of judgment, and plaintiff appeals. Order affirmed.

E. L. Foster, for appellant. W. W. Kaye, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. Appeal by plaintiff from an order directing entry of satisfaction of judgment.

The action was commenced in September, 1906, to recover damages against Kelly, the sheriff of Kern county, and the sureties on his official bond, for the wrongful seizure by said Kelly, under a writ of attachment against the property of third persons, of personal property belonging to the plaintiff. On February 9, 1909, a judgment for $3,000, with interest and costs, was entered in favor of the plaintiff and against the sheriff and his sureties. On April 9, 1909, the defendants appealed from the judgment, and on April 25, 1910, they appealed from an order denying their motion for a new trial. These appeals are still pending.

In the meanwhile the plaintiff, by reason of its failure to pay the corporation license tax imposed by the act of March 20, 1905, and its amendments (Stats. 1905, p. 493; Stats. 1906, p. 22), had forfeited its corporate charter, and the power to settle its affairs and to maintain or defend any action pending in its favor or against it had, under section 10a of said act, become vested in its directors as trustees. The directors upon whom this trust devolved were the five following named persons: W. E. Pettibone, John Mitchell, J. F. McVean, Jennie McVean, and I. J. McVean. On March 29, 1909, three of said persons, to wit, J. F., Jennie, and I. J. McVean, as trustees of the Buckeye Refining Company, signed a paper whereby they undertook to sell and assign to E. L. Foster one-third of the judgment recovered by the plaintiff in this action. Said paper was filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court on March 31, 1909.

In August, 1909, John Mitchell, as trustee under a mortgage or deed of trust executed by the Buckeye Refining Company to secure an issue of corporate bonds, filed his amended and supplemental complaint in an action against the directors and trustees of the defunct corporation, and in said complaint prayed judgment "that there is due the plaintiff, on the bonds issued, sold and delivered under the terms of said trust deed, the sum of $11,219.85," with interest and attorney's fees; that plaintiff's title to the premises covered by the instrument be quieted, and for "other and further relief." The complaint alleged, among other things, that the property thus securing the bonds issued by the corporation had been sold under a decree foreclosing the lien of a prior mortgage, and that the plaintiff, as trustee for the bondholders, had redeemed said property from the sale. Some of the defendants having defaulted, and others having answered admitting the allegations of the complaint, the court on November 27, 1909, entered its judgment that the plaintiff, as trustee, have and recover from the defendants Pettibone, Mitchell, J. F., Jennie, and I. J. McVean as directors and trustees of the Buckeye Refining Company the sum of $12,255.55 and costs. Execution was issued and was levied on November 29, 1909, on the judgment owing by the defendants in this action of Buckeye Refining Company v. Kelly et al. Upon such execution the sheriff collected from the defendant sureties the sum of $4,050.85, and, after deducting his fees, commissions, and expenses, paid the balance, $4,024.35, to the attorney for plaintiff in the action in which the execution had issued. The sheriff's return, showing these facts, was duly filed. Thereupon the defendants in this action moved the court to direct the clerk to enter satisfaction upon the ground that the judgment had been fully satisfied by payment to the sheriff on execution in the action brought by Mitchell, and the court granted the motion. The plaintiff appeals from the order so made.

It may be questioned whether the plaintiff corporation, having ceased to have any corporate existence, is in a position to take an appeal or to maintain any other proceeding in its own name. But, as no point is made on this, we pass to a consideration of the appeal on the merits.

The right of the defendants, as persons indebted to the judgment debtors in Mitchell v. Pettibone, to pay to the sheriff holding an execution in that action the amount of their debt, is not, as a general proposition, questioned. Code Civ. Proc. § 716. Nor can there be any doubt of the power and duty of the court to order the entry of satisfaction of the judgment in the case of Buckeye Refining Company v. Kelly, if that judgment had been in fact satisfied. Code Civ. Proc. § 675. The appellant, however, raises the following objections to the validity of the proceedings here taken:

[1, 2] 1. It is urged that the appeals from the judgment against Kelly and his sureties, and from the order denying their motion for a new trial, removed jurisdiction of the case to the Supreme Court, and ousted the superior court of future jurisdiction pending the appeal. There is no merit in this contention. It is true that the compulsory payment of a judgment pending appeal does not deprive the defendant of his right to have the judgment reviewed. Warner Bros. Co. v. Freud, 131 Cal. 639, 63 Cal. 1017, 82 Am. St. Rep. 400. Perhaps, therefore, satisfaction should not be entered over the defendant's objection. But the right to prosecute the appeal, notwithstanding payment, is a right of the appellant, not of the respondent. If the judgment debtor elects to have the judgment satisfied, and to waive his appeal, it is no concern of the judgment creditor. Here the defendants moved to have satisfaction entered. They may thereby have opened the door to a dismissal of their appeal, but the plaintiff certainly cannot object to their satisfying its judgment merely because they have taken an appeal. This would be true even if execution had been stayed by an undertaking, which does not appear to have been done.

[3] 2. The claim is made that the money was improperly paid to the judgment creditor of the trustees of the plaintiff corporation, because there had been a prior assignment of one-third of such judgment to E. L. Foster. Irrespective of any other consideration, we think the court below properly disregarded this assignment because it covered only a part of the judgment. An assignment of a portion of a judgment, according to most of the authorities, has no effect against the judgment debtor unless made with his consent or ratified by him. 23 Cyc. 1418; Thomas v. R. S., etc., Co., 54 Cal. 578; Loomis v. Robinson, 76 Mo. 488; Burnett v. Crandall, 63 Mo. 410; Hopkins v. Stockdale, 117 Pa. 365, 11 Atl. 368; Lewis v. Third St. R. Co., 26 Wash. 28, 66 Pac. 150; McMurray v. Marsh, 12 Colo. App. 95, 54 Pac. 852. This is in accord with the general rule governing partial assignments of choses in action. The creditor cannot split his demand, and by assignment of a portion thereof impose upon the debtor the legal obligation of paying the assignee. Clancy v. Plover, 107 Cal. 272, 275, 40 Pac. 394. There is no evidence in the record that the judgment debtors in the case at bar ever consented to the assignment of one-third of the judgment to Foster. Indeed, the fact that they paid the entire judgment on an execution against the trustees of the original plaintiff tends, rather, to show affirmatively a want of such consent.

Some of the cases hold, however, that a partial assignment of a chose in action is not entirely ineffectual, even though it be without the assent of the debtor. While it is universally conceded that such assignment vests in the assignee no legal title to any part of the demand, these cases declare that an equitable interest is thereby created. 23 Cyc. 1418. Such was the ruling of this court in Grain v. Aldrich, 38 Cal. 514, 99 Am. Dec. 423.

But the fact that an equitable interest in the judgment had been transferred to Foster would not affect the rights of the parties here. Even if there had been a valid legal assignment, the judgment debtors would be protected if, without notice of the assignment, they had paid the judgment to the assignor. Hogan v. Black, 66 Cal. 41, 4 Pac. 943; Dodd v. Brott, 1 Minn. 270 (Gil. 205), 66 Am. Dec. 541; Frissell v. Haile, 18 Mo. 18; Chic. C. Ry. Co. v. Blanchard, 37 Ill. App. 391; McCarver v. Nealey, 1 G. Greene [Iowa] 360; Vance v. Hickman, 95 Ill. App. 554. There is nothing in the bill of exceptions to show that Kelly or his sureties (the judgment debtors) had actual notice of the assignment in this case.

[4] All that appears is that the assignment was filed, and this filing cannot operate as constructive notice in the absence of a statute providing that it shall have that effect.

[5] The only question, then, is whether the judgment debtor has the burden of showing that he had no notice when he made the payment, or whether the burden of showing notice before payment is on the assignee. Whatever might be said in the case of a valid legal transfer of the judgment, it is clear that, where the assignee has only an equitable interest, he is bound to show affirmatively that the judgment debtor had notice of the equitable interest before paying to the party holding the legal title. Bell v. Pleasant, 145 Cal. 410, 78 Pac. 957, 104 Am. St. Rep. 61.

[6] 3. An attack upon the validity of the judgment and execution in Mitchell v. Pettibone is made on the ground that the action was for the foreclosure of a mortgage, and that, therefore, a judgment for the recovery of money outright should not have been given, but only a judgment for a sale of the mortgaged property, with provision for the recovery of such deficiency as might remain after sale. Code Civ. Proc. § 726. We need not inquire whether, as is claimed by the respondents, certain facts shown by the record take the case out of the operation of the rule relied on. Assuming that Mitchell v. Pettibone was an ordinary action for the foreclosure of a mortgage, the complaint prayed for general relief, and the court, at most, committed error in giving the judgment which was given. Such judgment was not void, and its validity could not be questioned, as is attempted here, on collateral attack.

[7] 4. It is suggested that the judgment in Mitchell v. Pettibone is invalid for the reason that the action was instituted by John Mitchell, as trustee under the mortgage or deed of trust, against John Mitchell and others, as trustees of the defunct corporation.

[8] It is no doubt the established rule that the same person cannot be both plaintiff and defendant in an action, even though he sue in one capacity and defend in another. Brown v. Mann, 71 Cal. 192, 12 Pac. 51; Byrne v. Byrne, 94 Cal. 576, 29 Pac. 1115, 30 Pac. 196. But where the action has gone to judgment and the judgment is made the subject of collateral attack, mere identity of name, which is all that appears here, will not be taken to establish that plaintiff and defendant are one and the same person. On the contrary, as every presumption is in favor of the judgment, it will be presumed that the plaintiff and the defendant, although bearing the same name, were different persons. Bryan v. Kales, 3 Ariz. 423, 31 Pac. 517; Allen v. Evans, 7 Ariz. 354, 64 Pac. 414. See, also, Dorente v. Sullivan, 7 Cal. 279; Wilson v. Benedict, 90 Mo. 208, 2 S. W. 283.

[9] 5. It is claimed that the sheriff was disqualified under section 4172 of the Political Code to levy the execution because he was himself a defendant in Buckeye Refining Company v. Kelly. The case does not come within the terms of the statute cited. Section 4172 provides that "when the sheriff is a party to an action or proceeding, the process and orders therein * * * must be executed by the coroner." The statutory disqualification goes only to the execution of process in the action to which the sheriff is a party. The writ here in question was issued in the action of Mitchell v. Pettibone, to which the sheriff, Kelly, was not a party.

[10] But, without regard to the Code provision, it may well be claimed, on general principles, that the sheriff should not act when, for any reason, he is personally interested in the matter of the enforcement of process. Freeman on Execution, § 99a. The levy of execution upon a judgment against himself (and others) is no doubt such a matter. But, conceding the invalidity of the levy, we think the order directing entry of satisfaction of judgment should still be sustained. The issuing of execution in Mitchell v. Pettibone was perfectly regular. The sheriff had a right to take the writ, and could lawfully have enforced it against any property of the defendants other than their judgment against him and his sureties. If, then, he held a valid execution, the other defendants and judgment debtors in Buckeye Refining Company v. Kelly had the right, under section 716 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to pay the amount of their debt without any levy of the execution. Skelly v. School Dist., 103 Cal. 652, 37 Pac. 643. Having so paid, and the money having gone to the party entitled to receive it, they were entitled to have satisfaction entered.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

162 Cal. 714

SALA v. CITY OF PASADENA.
(L. A. 2,873.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1912.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 74*)—COMPENSATION—NECESSITY OF PAYMENT BEFORE TAKING.

Under Const. art. 1, § 14, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation, an owner whose property is damaged by a change of the grade of a street is entitled in the absence of a waiver by, or an estoppel on him, to recover from the city compensation for the injury done and to prevent the doing of the work until the amount of the damages has been ascertained and paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 188-197; Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§§ 79, 80*)—COMPENSATION—WAIVER.

The constitutional right of an owner of property damaged by the change of a street grade to recover compensation, and to prevent the doing of the work before compensation is paid, may be waived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 205-214; Dec. Dig. §§ 79, 80.*]

3. EMINENT DOMAIN (§§ 79, 80*)—COMPENSATION—BAR OF RIGHT—LEGISLATIVE REGULATION.

The state Legislature in matters concerning public improvements may require a property owner to assert his claim for compensation for the taking of his property or injury thereto, before the commencement of the improvement, on reasonable notice, either actual or constructive, as by advertising or posting, and may provide that his failure to assert such claim within a prescribed reasonable time shall bar any subsequent action to prevent the doing of the work or to recover compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 205-214; Dec. Dig. §§ 79, 80.*]

4. EMINENT DOMAIN (§§ 79, 80*)—COMPENSATION—WAIVER OF RIGHT—CITY CHARTER.

Where a city charter authorized the changing of street grades on public notice, and provided that within 10 days of the first publication of the ordinance any property owner might file a claim for damages, but did not contain any provision as to the effect of a property owner's failure to file such claim with reference to his right to receive compensation for injury to his property, his failure to do so was not a waiver of his constitutional right to compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 205-214; Dec. Dig. §§ 79, 80.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1177*)—REVERSAL—NEW TRIAL.

Where, in an action to recover damages for injury to plaintiff's property by a change in a street grade, the court found that the property had been damaged in the sum of $800, but erroneously determined that plaintiff had waived his right to compensation, the court on appeal will reverse without directing a new trial, notwithstanding the city's counsel claimed that the evidence was not sufficient to support the finding of damage; the city being entitled to present its showing on that question on appeal from the judgment entered after remand by bill of exceptions containing the matters affecting the findings of fact on which the judgment rested.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4597-4620; Dec. Dig. § 1177.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by Frank D. Sala against the City of Pasadena. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and rendered.

J. H. Merriam, for appellant. J. P. Wood and William J. Carr, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action by plaintiff against the city of Pasadena to obtain judgment for $2,000, in which amount he alleges that his real property fronting on Lake avenue in said city has been damaged by the city by excavating and removing earth in said avenue along the frontage of said property. The trial court found that on July 2, 1907, the city council of defendant, in response to a petition signed by the owners of a majority of the frontage upon a portion of said avenue, duly passed and adopted an ordinance declaring its intention "to change and establish the grade" of said portion of said avenue; that said ordinance was duly published in the Pasadena Star, a daily newspaper published in said city, for 10 days, commencing July 3, 1907; that no objection, remonstrance, or petition or claim for damages or compensation on account of said proposed change of grade was made or filed with defendant city or any of its officers within 10 or 30 days, after the first publication of said ordinance, by plaintiff, or any other owner of property, or until September 27, 1909, when a claim for $2,000 damages was presented by plaintiff to said city council; that on August 13, 1907, said city council duly passed and adopted an ordinance changing and re-establishing the grade of said portion of said avenue in accord with the terms of said resolution of intention; that in December, 1907, defendant regularly contracted with one Schilling to grade said portion of said avenue to such official grade as so changed and re-established; that said contractor did grade such portion of the avenue to such established grade; that this was the only interference with the earth on Lake avenue in front of plaintiff's premises; that no objection, remonstrance, or petition against the grading of said portion of Lake avenue to such new grade was ever made by plaintiff; that such changing and re-establishment of the grade and the grading of such portion of Lake avenue to the grade so established damaged plaintiff's property in the sum of $800, and no more. Upon these facts the trial court concluded as matter of law that the grade was lawfully changed, and that plaintiff "has waived any and all his right or claim against the defendant for damages or compensation to his said property" on account of such change of grade, and gave judgment that plaintiff take nothing, and that defendant recover its costs. This is an appeal by plaintiff from said judgment, and it is claimed that upon the facts found judgment should have gone for the plaintiff, in the sum of $800.

The freeholders' charter of the city of Pasadena, approved by the Legislature January 29, 1901, contains certain provisions relative to the matter of change of grade of the streets of the city. Sections 2 and 3 of article 9 of the charter (Stats. 1901, p. 910) are as follows:

"Sec. 2. Whenever the city council shall deem it expedient to alter the established grade of the whole or any part of any street, avenue, lane, alley, court, or place in said city, said council shall by ordinance declare its intention to alter such established grade, in which ordinance must be specified the grade that is proposed to be established; and shall publish such ordinance at least ten days in a daily newspaper published and circulated in the city of Pasadena.

"Sec. 3. Within ten days after the first publication of such ordinance, any owner of property fronting on such street, or part thereof whereon said change is proposed, may make and file with the city clerk a written remonstrance against the proposed change of grade, setting forth in detail the damage which will arise to him by reason of the proposed change of grade, and thereupon the same shall not be further proceeded with or made without compensation to such owner for any damage which may be occasioned to him by said change. The said damage shall be ascertained, if possible, by agreement between such owner and the council, and in case such agreement cannot be reached with such owner, the amount of damage justly payable to such owner shall be determined by an action in the name of the city against him, and in case there is remonstrance from more than one, all said remonstrants may be joined as defendants in said action and all of their damages determined therein."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes.

It is not questioned that the changing of street grades is essentially a municipal affair, and the provisions of the charter that are set forth above undoubtedly establish the procedure for changing grades of streets in the city of Pasadena. We are of the opinion that both the answer of defendant and the findings sufficiently show to support the judgment, both that there was an established grade of Lake avenue, and that there was a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the charter provisions in the matter of the change of such grade.

[1] Plaintiff's claim for recovery is based on section 14 of article 1 of our state Constitution, which provides that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to, or paid into court for, the owner." In view of the decisions relative to this constitutional provision, it is not to be doubted that plaintiff was entitled, in the absence of waiver by or estoppel on him, to recover from the city compensation for the injury done to his property by the grading of the street to the new grade, indeed to prevent the doing of the grading work until the amount thereof had been ascertained and paid. See Reardon v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. 492, 6 Pac. 317, 56 Am. Rep. 109; Eachus v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 103 Cal. 614, 37 Pac. 750, 42 Am. St. Rep. 149; Eachus v. City of Los Angeles, 130 Cal. 492, 62 Pac. 829, 80 Am. St. Rep. 147; Tyler v. Tehama County, 109 Cal. 618, 42 Pac. 240; Wilcox v. Engbretsen, 160 Cal. 288, 298, et seq., 116 Pac. 750; Sievers v. Root, 10 Cal. App. 337, 101 Pac. 925.

[2] The material question is, then, whether plaintiff was properly held to have waived his constitutional right to damages for the injury done to his property. His rights under this provision of the Constitution, as said in Bigelow v. Ballerino, 111 Cal. 559, 44 Pac. 307, were two: "(1) The right to compensation; and (2) the right to have that compensation made or paid into court before his property is taken or injuriously affected." It was further said therein: "Either or both these rights he may waive; that is to say, he may waive his right to any compensation, or he may waive his right to prepayment of compensation. But where there is no such waiver, the property owner may rest secure in the protection which the Constitution affords him that his property shall not be taken or damaged without compensation first made."

[3] It is well settled, however, that the state Legislature, in the matter of public improvements concerning which they are authorized to legislate, may require the property owner to assert his claim for compensation for the taking of his property or injury thereto before the commencement of the improvement, upon reasonable notice of the proposed taking or injury, may prescribe in what manner and within what time he shall do this, and further provide that his failure to assert a claim within the prescribed time shall operate as a waiver of all claims and constitute a bar to any subsequent action looking either to a prevention of the work or the making of compensation. It is further settled that the notice in such cases need not be personal, but may be constructive, as by advertising or posting. It is sufficient that the notice provided is such as may reasonably be held to afford adequate opportunity for knowledge of the designed improvement by the property owner who exercises reasonable care in the matter of his property. See Wabash R. R. Co. v. Defiance, 52 Ohio St. 262, 40 Pac. 89; Id., 167 U. S. 88, 103, 17 Sup. Ct. 748, 42 L. Ed. 87; Cupp v. Seneca Co., 19 Ohio St. 173, 182, 183; Kansas City v. Duncan, 135 Mo. 571, 37 S. W. 513. This was expressly held in Potter v. Ames, 43 Cal. 75, where a statute relating to the alteration of highways provided that notice should be given by posting, that any person owning lands to be affected by the proposed alteration and who desires to apply for damages in consequence thereof shall make application therefor to the board of supervisors at a prescribed time, and that, failing to present such application at the time and in the manner prescribed, he shall be considered as waiving all right to damages, and as dedicating the lands affected by the proposed alteration to the public use as a highway. This court, after stating that the right of the property owner to receive compensation for his property is undoubted under the provisions of the Constitution, said: "While it is unquestionably competent to the Legislature to provide the several steps to be pursued in the assertion of his claim for compensation, the prescribed procedure must not destroy or substantially impair the right itself. A reasonable opportunity must be afforded him to claim and receive his damages; then if, being so afforded, it be not availed of, the statute may provide that such failure should constitute a bar to his claim." The statute was held to be free from constitutional objection. Undoubtedly, similar provision may be made in a freeholders' charter.

[4] The question here is whether any such effect can reasonably be given to the sections of the charter of defendant city that we have heretofore quoted. These are the only provisions relied upon by learned counsel for defendant. It will be observed that there is no provision therein as to the effect of a property owner's failure to present his remonstrance and claim of damages to the council, on his right to receive compensation for injury to his property, nothing by way of express provision to the effect that, unless he does this, he shall be presumed to have waived all claim of damage or shall be barred from a recovery of any damage. He is simply given the opportunity, "within ten days after the first publication of such ordinance," to make and file his written remonstrance against the proposed change of grade, with a statement of the damage which will arise to him by reason of the proposed change. Such a remonstrance and statement he may make and file, and the expressed effect of such filing is that "the same shall not be further proceeded with or made without compensation to such owner for any damage which may be occasioned to him by said change." This damage is to be ascertained, if possible, by agreement, and if an agreement cannot be reached, by an action in the nature of eminent domain. And there the provision ends. There is not one word to indicate to the owner that his failure to make such written remonstrance and filing shall operate as a waiver of his constitutional right to compensation for any injury that may be done his property in the event that the street is subsequently graded to the proposed new grade, or that he must pursue this course in order to preserve his constitutional right to compensation for such injury as may be subsequently done to his property by the actual grading. However desirable it may be that the aggregate amount of damages that must be paid to property owners in the matter of the change of grade of a street should be known before the change in grade is made, we are of the opinion that no statute or charter provision looking to that end should be held effectual to bar the property owner, who has not presented his claim in accord with its terms, from an assertion of his claim for compensation for the injury actually done, in the absence of clear provision therein that such shall be the effect. In the absence of clear notice to the contrary, contained in the statutory or charter provision, he should be held to have the right to assume, in view of the constitutional provision, that he will be entitled to compensation for any injury that may be inflicted on his property. In Wabash R. R. Co. v. Defiance, supra, the statute expressly provided that a person failing to make his claim in the manner provided thereby "shall be deemed to have waived the same, and shall be barred from filing a claim or receiving damages." In Cupp v. Seneca Co., supra, there was a substantially similar provision in the statute. The same is true of Kansas City v. Duncan, supra. As we have seen, there was a substantially similar provision in the statute involved in Potter v. Ames, supra. There is no decision of this court that can reasonably be construed as making the failure of the property owner to assert his claim for damages in advance of the doing of the work, under such a statutory or charter provision as the one before us, a waiver of his constitutional right to compensation for such injury as may be inflicted by the doing of the work. The distinction between the case presented in Matter of Beale Street, 39 Cal. 495, and this case is obvious. At the time of that decision, our Constitution did not give a property owner the right to damages for injury to property done by the grading of a street adjoining the same. The only right of the owner in that regard was the right given him by a statute which also provided the manner in which and the time at which he should assert his claim, and the effect of the decision practically was, as stated by counsel for appellant, "that, in order to claim the benefits which were granted by the terms and conditions of that act, they must comply with the requirements and conditions imposed by the provisions of the act, before such damages could be awarded." No such question was presented in German Savings, etc., Society v. Ramish, 138 Cal. 120, 69 Pac. 89, 70 Pac. 1067, and the portion of the opinion in that case relied upon by learned counsel for the city in this regard is mere obiter dictum. That was an action to enjoin the execution of a deed to land sold because of the nonpayment of certain bonds issued for street improvements, and the question was as to the validity of the proceedings resulting in the issuance of the bonds; no question of right to damage for injury to property by reason of the work or of waiver of that right being involved. It is well settled that the fact that the property owner "may have some cause of action founded upon rights reserved by that part of the Constitution which deals with the exercise of the power of eminent domain does not make the assessment void." Hornung v. McCarthy, 126 Cal. 17, 58 Pac. 303; Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 686, 76 Pac. 661. In the case last cited it was said, substantially, that where the owner fails to claim any damage for a proposed change of grade, the law affording him proper opportunity to do so, he must be held to have waived "any right to object on that ground to the proceedings for the change of grade," and that while it may be that he still has a right of action against the city for any damage in fact suffered by reason of the change, a question not decided, he cannot defeat the assessment for the improvement by showing such damage. It was also said: "It is clear that the nonpayment of any such damages does not affect the assessment to pay the cost of the work of grading, graveling, and curbing. The two are entirely distinct and independent."

[5] We are satisfied that the facts found by the trial court should not be held to show a waiver by the plaintiff of his constitutional right to be reimbursed for the damage done to his property by the grading of the street, that the findings of fact were such as to require judgment in favor of plaintiff for $800, and that the judgment appealed from should be reversed with directions to the lower court to enter such judgment. We can see no good reason for requiring a new trial of the issue made by the pleadings as to the amount of damage done plaintiff's property, as is requested by defendant's counsel in the event of a reversal of the judgment. If, as is suggested by him, he may desire an opportunity to show that the evidence given on the trial was not sufficient to support a finding of $800 damage, he may present such showing on an appeal from the judgment entered under our direction, on which appeal he is entitled to "a bill of exceptions containing matters directly affecting the findings of fact upon which the judgment rests." Klauber v. San Diego, etc., Co., 98 Cal. 105, 32 Pac. 876; Tuffree v. Stearns Ranchos Co., 124 Cal. 306, 310, 57 Pac. 69.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions to the lower court to enter judgment upon the findings in favor of plaintiff and against defendant for the sum of $800 and his costs of suit.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

162 Cal. 701

Ex parte BECK. (Cr. 1,723.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 27, 1912.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 65*) — LEGISLATIVE POWERS—DELEGATION OF POWERS.

The constitutional prohibition of the delegation of legislative powers does not necessarily prohibit a conditional statute, the taking effect of which may be made to depend upon its approval by the electors of the locality specially interested.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 116; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 65*) — LEGISLATIVE POWERS—DELEGATION—LOCAL OPTION.

The Local Option Act (St. 1911, p. 599), relating to the licensing of the sale of intoxicating liquors, and making its taking effect in any particular locality depend upon a vote of the electors therein, relates to a subject as to which legislative powers may be constitutionally delegated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 116; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 14*)—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ACTS—LOCAL OPTION.

St. 1911, p. 599, known as the "Local Option Act," which prohibits the sale of alcoholic liquor in any incorporated city, town, or the portion of any supervisorial district not included within any such city or town, in which at least 25 per cent. of the electors petition for an election on the question, unless a majority of the electors voting declare in favor of such sale, was a legislative determination that it was inexpedient to allow the licensed sale of liquor in any territory where the inhabitants were opposed thereto and a reasonable exercise of the police power.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 16; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 30*)—LOCAL OPTION—SUBMISSION TO POPULAR VOTE—TERRITORY IN WHICH ELECTION ORDERED—SUPERVISOR DISTRICTS.

The Legislature, in enacting a local option act in force over all the state, and making its adoption dependent upon a petition and a majority vote of the electors in certain territory, had the entire right of determining what subdivision of the state should be defined as an election unit; and hence might make a supervisor district, though not a political division of the state, a unit for the adoption of the act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

5. STATUTES (§ 77*)—GRANT OF POLICE POWERS—GENERAL LAWS.

The Local Option Act (St. 1911, p. 599) does not violate Const. art. 11, § 11, which grants to counties, cities, and towns power to make and enforce "local, police, sanitary, and other regulations" not in conflict with general laws, since the act is a general law applicable to all parts of the state as to which the Legislature is empowered to enact laws relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors, including cities and towns not having freeholders' characters.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 79-82; Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

6. STATUTES (§ 73*)—DELEGATED POLICE POWER—UNIFORMITY OF OPERATION.

It is no objection to St. 1911, p. 599, which makes the licensed sale of liquor dependent upon a favorable vote of electors in certain subdivisions of the state, that the law prevailing in one locality might be different from that in another, since as to all parts of the state as to which the Legislature has the authority to legislate on the subject the law is uniform in its operation, the sale in each district being forbidden or not as the electors may determine; and since, even as to a permissible delegation of power to counties or cities, the constitutional provision that the Legislature shall not pass private, local, or special laws regulating the internal affairs of towns and counties is not intended to secure uniformity in the exercise of such delegated police powers, but to forbid the passage of a law vesting in one town or county a power of local government not granted to another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 73, 74, 75; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

7. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 14*)—LOCAL OPTION—SUBMISSION TO POPULAR VOTE.

It is no objection to the Local Option Law (St. 1911, p. 599) that a majority of the votes cast must be in favor of license in order to authorize licensed sale of liquor, since the determination of the vote necessary to adopt the act is purely a question of policy for the determination of the Legislature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 16; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

8. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 14*)—POLICE POWER—SUSPENSION.

St. 1911, p. 599, known as the "Local Option Act," does not violate the constitutional provision that the police power is a continuous one, reposed somewhere, and one that cannot be barred or suspended by contract or irrepealable law.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 16; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

In Bank. Application by C. A. Beck for writ of habeas corpus directed to the Sheriff of San Luis Obispo County. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded to custody.

Carlton W. Greene (Herbert Chohnski, of counsel), for petitioner. Charles Palmer (J. W. Joos, of counsel), for respondent. J. E. White, amicus curiæ.

ANGELOTTI, J. The petitioner is held in custody for examination under a complaint charging him with keeping and conducting a retail liquor saloon in the city of Paso Robles, where alcoholic liquors are sold, served, and distributed in quantities of less than two gallons; said city being an incorporated city and "no-license territory," and he not being a licensed pharmacist.

The question presented by this proceeding is the constitutionality of an act of the Legislature generally known as the "Local Option Act," approved April 4, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 599), with reference specially to cities and towns organized and existing under the general municipal corporation act, of which the city of Paso Robles is one. It is not questioned that an election has been regularly held in such city in the manner provided by such act, that a majority of four votes was given at such election in favor of "no license," and that the complaint states a public offense if such act is a valid exercise of legislative power.

Substantially the act provides as follows in respect to all matters material here: Qualified electors of any incorporated city or town, or of that portion of any supervisorial district not included within the boundaries of any such city or town, numbering not less than 25 per cent. of the number of votes cast for all candidates for Governor in such territory at the last preceding election for that office, may petition the proper legislative authority, in the one case the city council or other similar body of the city or town, in the other the board of supervisors of the county, for an election on the question whether the sale of alcoholic liquors shall be licensed in such territory. Upon the certification of the petition by the proper officer as sufficient, such legislative body shall submit the question to the electors, either at a general state or municipal election within said territory, or at a special election, dependent upon the time after such certification within which such a general election is to be held within such territory, "provided, that no election under this act shall be held within two years of any previous election held under this act within the same territory." Any such special election is to be called and held in accordance with all the provisions of law respectively applicable to general state elections and municipal elections, according as it is within territory outside of or within an incorporated city or town. "Unless a majority of the votes cast on this question at such election are in favor of license, the territory described in the petition shall be no-license territory on and after ninety days from the date of said election," and "shall remain such until at a subsequent election, called, as herein provided, to vote on the question of whether the sale of alcoholic liquors shall be licensed therein, a majority of the votes cast on that question are in favor of license. It shall thereupon cease to be no-license territory within the meaning of this act." No license to sell or distribute alcoholic liquors in no-license territory shall be issued except to registered pharmacists and manufacturers of said liquors, and all such existing licenses, with the exceptions above stated, shall immediately become void when the territory becomes no-license territory; all holders of such licenses being entitled to a rebate of the proportion of the license fee paid for the unexpired term thereof. It is declared to be unlawful for any persons, etc., "within the boundaries of any no-license territory," to sell, furnish, distribute, or give away any alcoholic liquor, to keep, conduct, or establish, as principal or agent, any place where alcoholic liquors are sold, served, or distributed, or are kept for any of such purposes, or to solicit orders, take orders, or make agreements for the sale or delivery of alcoholic liquors, except as provided in section 16 of the act, which allows some of the prohibited acts under certain prescribed circumstances and for certain specified purposes. It is declared that any person violating any of the provisions of the act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable in the first instance by a fine not exceeding $600, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding seven months. All places where alcoholic liquors are sold or distributed, or are kept for sale or distribution, in violation of any of the provisions of the act, are declared to be common nuisances and abatable as such. The term "alcoholic liquors" is declared to include spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors, and any other liquor or mixture which contains 1 per cent., by volume, or more, of alcohol, and which is not so mixed with other drugs as to prevent its use as a beverage.

The principal objection made to this act is that it is an attempted delegation by the Legislature to the electors of its power to make laws, a delegation of its legislative power which is not warranted by our Constitution. It is elementary, of course, as said in Ex parte Wall, 48 Cal. 279, 313, 17 Am. Rep. 425, that "the power to make laws conferred by the Constitution on the Legislature cannot be delegated by the Legislature to the people of the state or to any portion of the people." And if the act before us must be considered as doing this it must be held void.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Reliance is naturally placed by petitioner for his claim that such is the nature of the act here involved upon the opinion of the court in Ex parte Wall, 48 Cal. 279, 17 Am. Rep. 425, where an act differing from this in no respect material to the determination of this particular question was held void upon this ground. It is to be observed, however, that there was then a general law of the state authorizing the selling, etc., of intoxicating liquors upon the payment of a license fee prescribed by the Legislature, a system abolished by the Constitution of 1879. While it was recognized by the opinion that a statute may be conditional and its taking effect sometimes be made to depend upon a subsequent event, it was squarely held that an approval by popular vote could not be an event having such effect. It was said that: "The event must be one which shall produce such a change of circumstances as that the lawmakers—in the exercise of their own judgment—can declare it to be wise and expedient that the law shall take effect when the event shall occur. * * * If it (the law) can be made to take effect on the occurrence of an event, the Legislature must declare the law expedient if the event shall happen, but inexpedient if it shall not happen. They can appeal to no other man or men to judge for them in relation to its present or future propriety or necessity; they must exercise that power themselves, and thus perform the duty imposed by the Constitution. But in case of a law to take effect, if it shall be approved by a popular vote, no event affecting the expediency of the law is expected to happen. The expediency or wisdom of the law, abstractly considered, does not depend upon a vote of the people. If it is unwise before the vote is taken, it is equally unwise afterward."

The opinion in Ex parte Wall, supra, was concurred in by but three justices; Justices Rhodes and Crockett dissenting. In its conclusion that such an act as was there and is here under consideration is void as an unwarranted delegation of legislative power, it is now opposed to the overwhelming weight of authority in other states, as we shall show hereafter. Subsequent decisions of this court have been such, we think, as to practically overrule it as an authority upon the question we are considering.

In People v. Nally, 49 Cal. 478, the legislative act under consideration was one providing for an election in Siskiyou county on the question of the annexation to Siskiyou county of a portion of Klamath county, described in the act, and that, if a majority voted for annexation, statements of the result should be forwarded to the boards of supervisors of Klamath and Humboldt counties, and that 30 days thereafter the organization and government of Klamath county must be abandoned, and the described portion thereof annexed to Siskiyou county, and the remainder to Humboldt county. The election was held in Siskiyou county as ordered, and a majority of the votes were in favor of the annexation. The subsequent proceedings were as required by the act. Thereafter, Nally, the assessor of Klamath county, refused to prepare an assessment book for that county, claiming that it was no longer a county. The proceeding was in mandamus to compel him to prepare such a book. The writ was denied. The principal opinion in the case, that of Justice Crockett, concurred in by Justice Rhodes, declared that the act related to a matter of "purely local concern, in which the people of the district to be affected by it were alone concerned." Ex parte Wall, supra, was referred to as a case wherein the question was whether a statute authorizing a general law to be suspended in certain political subdivisions of the state, by a vote of the people of the district, was a delegation of legislative power; the basis of this statement probably being the fact that there was then a general law of the state providing for the licensing of the sale of intoxicating liquors and fixing the amount of license, which we have before referred to. The court said: "However the rule may be in that class of cases, it is settled, I think, by an overwhelming weight of authority in this and many other states, that in matters of purely local concern, it is competent for the Legislature to enact that a statute affecting only a particular locality shall take effect only upon condition that it is approved by a vote of the majority of the people whom the Legislature shall decide are those who are interested in the question." In People v. McFadden, 81 Cal. 489, 22 Pac. 851, 15 Am. St. Rep. 66, an act providing for the formation of a new county, upon the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof voting at an election to be held for that purpose, was declared by the court in bank to be constitutional and not a delegation of legislative authority. It is squarely held that, as to such a question, the same being primarily one of local concern, the subsequent event upon which the taking effect of the legislative act might be made to depend could be a favorable vote of the electors primarily interested. Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, p. 141 et seq. (4th Ed.), was quoted approvingly as follows: "But it is not always essential that a legislative act should be a completed statute which must in any event take effect as a law, at the time it leaves the hands of the legislative department. A statute may be conditional, and its taking effect may be made to depend upon some subsequent event. Affirmative legislation may in some cases be adopted, of which the parties interested are at liberty to avail themselves or not, at their option." In holding that such event might, as to certain questions, be a favorable vote of the electors, the decision in People v. McFadden, supra, was squarely opposed to material portions of the majority opinion in Ex parte Wall, supra. Board of Law Library Trustees v. Board of Supervisors, 99 Cal. 571, 34 Pac. 244, is still more in point. The act there involved was one providing for the establishment of county law libraries in the counties of the state, and it contained a proviso as follows: "And provided further that it shall be discretionary with the board of supervisors of any county to provide by ordinance for the application of the provisions of this act to such county." The court in bank said: "We think the Legislature had the power to provide in the act that counties might come within or remain without the provisions of the act, as the boards of supervisors of the respective counties might determine. It is not necessary to enter into a discussion of the constitutionality of this law in that regard, for in the recent case of People v. McFadden, 81 Cal. 489, 22 Pac. 851, 15 Am. St. Rep. 66, involving the constitutionality of the act creating the county of Orange, there is found an exhaustive discussion of the same principle, with the citation of many cases bearing upon the question." And finally, in Wheeler v. Herbert, 152 Cal. 224, 234, 92 Pac. 353, 357, it was declared as follows: "That it is competent for the Legislature to pass a law which shall be executed only in the event that a majority of a certain class of persons shall declare in favor of it is a principle too well settled to require discussion"—citing People v. McFadden, supra, and other cases.

[1] It thus appears that it is now settled in this state, as it is generally elsewhere, that the rule prohibiting the delegation of its legislative powers by a state Legislature does not necessarily prohibit a conditional statute, the taking effect of which may be made to depend upon such a subsequent event as its approval by the electors of the locality specially interested. See Cooley's Const. Lim. pp. 163-165, and 171, 172. It is said on the pages last referred to: "It would seem, however, that if a legislative act is, by its terms, to take effect in any contingency, it is not unconstitutional to make the time when it shall take effect depend upon the event of a popular vote being for or against it; the time of its going into operation being postponed to a later day in the latter contingency. It would also seem that, if the question of the acceptance or rejection of a municipal charter can be referred to the voters of the locality specially interested, it would be equally competent to refer to them the question whether a state law establishing a particular police regulation should be of force in such locality or not. Municipal charters refer most questions of local government, including police regulations, to the local authorities, on the supposition that they are better able to decide for themselves upon the needs, as well as the sentiments, of their constituents, than the Legislature possibly can be, and are therefore more competent to judge what local regulations are important, and also how far the local sentiment will assist in their enforcement. The same reasons would apply in favor of permitting the people of the locality to accept or reject for themselves a particular police regulation, since this is only allowing them less extensive powers of local government than a municipal charter would confer, and the fact that the rule of law on that subject might be different in different localities, according as the people accepted or rejected the regulation, would not seem to affect the principle, when the same result is brought about by the different regulations which municipal corporations establish for themselves in the exercise of an undisputed authority." And on pages 173 and 174, while admitting that there have been some decisions to the contrary, the learned author says: "Such laws are known, in common parlance, as local option laws. They relate to subjects which, like the retailing of intoxicating drinks, or the running at large of cattle in the highways, may be differently regarded in different localities, and they are sustained on what seems to us the impregnable ground, that the subject, though not embraced within the ordinary power of the municipalities to make by-laws and ordinances, is nevertheless within the class of police regulations, in respect to which it is proper that the local judgment should control."

[2] On the question whether a law relating to the retailing of intoxicating liquors relates to such a subject that its taking effect in any particular locality of the state may be made to depend upon a favorable vote of the electors, without involving a forbidden delegation of legislative power, the decisions are practically unanimous. This is so declared in Joyce on Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 368, 371. The following decisions sustain this view, viz.: State v. Wilcox, 42 Conn. 364, 19 Am. Rep. 536; McPherson v. State, 174 Ind. 60, 90 N. E. 610, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 188; State v. Forkner, 94 Iowa, 16, 62 N. W. 772, 28 L. R. A. 206; Stickrod v. Com., 86 Ky. 285, 290, 5 S. W. 540; Fell v. State, 42 Md. 71, 20 Am. Rep. 83; Com. v. Bennett, 108 Mass. 27; State v. Pond, 93 Mo. 606, 621, 6 S. W. 469; In re O'Brien, 29 Mont. 530, 75 Pac. 196, 1 Ann. Cas. 373; Paul v. Gloucester Co., 50 N. J. Law, 585, 15 Atl. 272, 1 L. R. A. 86; Gordon v. State, 46 Ohio St. 607, 23 N. E. 63, 6 L. R. A. 749; Fouts v. City of Hood River, 46 Or. 492, 81 Pac. 370, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483, 7 Ann. Cas. 1160; Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. 491, 13 Am. Rep. 716; State v. Barber, 19 S. D. 1, 101 N. W. 1078; State v. Scampini, 77 Vt. 92, 59 Atl. 829; State v. Donovan, 61 Wash. 209, 112 Pac. 260. Without any discussion of this particular question, local option laws of a similar character were sustained in Ladson v. State, 56 Fla. 54, 47 South. 517; City of Barnesville v. Means, 128 Ga. 197, 57 S. E. 422; Garrett v. Mayor, 47 La. Ann. 618, 17 South. 238; Feek v. Township Board, 82 Mich. 393, 47 N. W. 37, 10 L. R. A. 69; State v. Johnson, 86 Minn. 121, 90 N. W. 161; Hoover v. Thomas, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 535, 80 S. W. 859; and Willis v. Kalmbach, 109 Va. 475, 64 S. E. 342, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1009. There is now practically no state holding to the contrary with the possible exception of Tennessee (see Wright v. Cunningham, 115 Tenn. 445, 91 S. W. 293); a few earlier decisions in Pennsylvania, Iowa, and Indiana having been practically overruled by later decisions, as above shown.

[3] The act involved in this proceeding is practically one prohibiting the sale, etc., of alcoholic liquor in any incorporated city or town of the state, or the portion of any supervisorial district not included within the boundaries of any such city or town, in which at least 25 per cent. of the electors petition for an election on the question, unless a majority of the electors voting on the question declare themselves in favor of such sale, etc. By it, the Legislature practically determined that it is inexpedient to allow the sale of such liquor in any such territory when the sentiment of the inhabitants thereof, as shown by the expression of its electorate, is to so large an extent opposed thereto, and denounced the sale under such circumstances as a crime. In view of what we have said on the question of delegation of power and in view of the undoubted power of the state in the matter of the regulation of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, we are satisfied that the act before us, enacted by the Legislature in the exercise of its police powers, cannot be held to be in excess of its authority either on the ground of unreasonableness or on the ground that it involves the delegation of its power by the Legislature.

[4] In the light of what we have said, there is no force in the claim that the act is void as to supervisor districts because a supervisor district is not a political subdivision of the state having powers of local government like a city or town, and has no power to enact legislation. The act calls for no legislation on the part of the supervisor district, and the vote of the electors thereof does not make the law at all. The electors thereof perform no legislative function whatever. The act is wholly one of the state Legislature, in force all over the state so far as the right of the people of the respective localities mentioned to avail themselves thereof is concerned; the only thing left to the electors of each such locality to determine being whether they will avail themselves of the prohibitions contained therein. This, as we have seen, involves no delegation by the Legislature or exercise by the electors of legislative power, or the exercise of any power of local government by the districts specified. Under these circumstances, the determination as to what subdivision of the state should be defined as the unit is entirely for the Legislature, which could prescribe such subdivisions as it saw fit. It might have prescribed election precincts, instead of supervisor districts, as has been done in some states, and as was done by the board of supervisors of Colusa county in the county ordinance considered in Denton v. Vann, 8 Cal. App. 677, 97 Pac. 675. It might even have created new subdivisions of its own for all the purposes of the act. It once being established that there is no delegation of legislative power by the Legislature, and that the act authorizes no exercise of legislative power or any power of local government by the districts specified, the result we have stated as to the power of the Legislature in the matter of prescribing the unit necessarily follows. What we have said on this point is fully sustained by some of the authorities already cited.

In view of what we have said, the other objections to the act here involved do not require very extended notice.

[5] We have seen that the act is clearly a general law, purporting to be applicable everywhere in the state, and, as a matter of fact, applicable everywhere in the state except possibly in cities having freeholders' charters. If not applicable in such cities—a question we have not considered and on which we express no opinion—such result is due entirely to certain provisions of our Constitution making such charters paramount to certain general laws. But such a result would not impair the character of the law as a general law. It is certainly applicable to all parts of the state as to which the Legislature is empowered to enact legislation relative to the sale or distribution of alcoholic liquors, including all cities and towns not having freeholders' charters.

The power granted to counties and to cities and towns by the provisions of section 11, article 11, of the Constitution, to make and enforce "local, police, sanitary and other regulations," is expressly limited by said section to such regulations "as are not in conflict with general laws." So far, therefore, as any authority of counties, cities, and towns in the matter of such regulations is based on the provisions of this constitutional grant, it is subject at all times to such general laws, and such local regulations must give way to such general laws so far as they are in conflict therewith.

It is claimed that the act gives the electors of the specified districts the power to suspend provisions of general laws of the state, such as, in the case of cities and towns organized and existing under the general municipal corporation act, provisions authorizing the licensing of the traffic in alcoholic liquors for purposes of revenue and regulation, and, in the case of portions of supervisor districts outside of cities and towns, provisions of the county government act of the same character. This claim rests on the same basis as that of there being a delegation by the Legislature of its legislative power.

As we have shown, there is no delegation of legislative power to the electors. It is the act enacted by the state Legislature that suspends the provisions referred to, and not the vote of the electors. As we have seen, the Legislature has simply enacted a law applicable to the whole state, which in substance and effect prohibits the sale or distribution of alcoholic liquor in any of the districts created by the act where, 25 per cent. of the electors insisting on an official expression of opinion thereon, a majority of the electors are not in favor of such traffic. The act constitutes a declaration by the state Legislature that such traffic is inexpedient in any such district where such a large proportion of the people are opposed thereto, and denounces such traffic under such circumstances as a crime.

[6] There is nothing in the point that by virtue of the law a different rule may prevail in one locality than prevails in another, in regard to the traffic in intoxicating liquors. As to all parts of the state as to which the Legislature has the authority to legislate on this subject, the law is uniform in its operation; the traffic in each district being forbidden or not forbidden as the electors may indicate their desire in the matter. Even as to permissible delegation of power to municipalities or counties, "a constitutional provision that 'the Legislature shall not pass private, local or special laws regulating the internal affairs of towns and counties' is not intended to secure uniformity in the exercise of delegated police powers, but to forbid the passage of a law vesting in one town or county a power of local government not granted to another." Joyce on Intoxicating Liquors, § 370. And as a matter of fact, we know that there are almost as many differences in the regulations relating to the traffic in intoxicating liquors adopted by different cities and towns of the state, as there are cities and towns, running from the imposition of a very small license fee in some cases to absolute prohibition of the traffic in others.

[7] That a majority of the votes cast must be in favor of the traffic in order to authorize the traffic is no legal objection to the validity of the act. It was purely a question of policy for the Legislature to determine on what conditions and under what circumstances such traffic shall be allowed at all. They concluded that it should not be allowed in any district where, under the circumstances stated, a majority of the electors expressing their opinion on the question should not express themselves in favor of such allowance. Undoubtedly, as learned counsel for petitioner suggest, if they can legally do this, they could have gone further, and prohibited such sale or distribution in any district unless much more than a mere majority of such electors expressed themselves in favor thereof. The difficulty with petitioner's claim in this regard is the same as in reference to the other points we have discussed. It is based on the theory that it is the people of the respective districts or the districts themselves that are exercising legislative power, which as we have seen, is not well founded.

[8] There is in the act no forbidden suspension of the police power granted by the Constitution to counties, cities, and towns. As we have seen, this grant is expressly declared by the Constitution to be subject to general laws of the state. And, of course, there is no violation of the general rule to the effect that the police power "is a continuous one, reposed somewhere, and one that cannot be barred or suspended by contract or irrepealable law." See In re Pfahler, 150 Cal. 84, 85, 88 Pac. 276, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092, 11 Ann. Cas. 911.

There is no other point made that, to our minds, requires notice here. We are satisfied that the act here involved cannot properly be held violative of any provision of our Constitution that has been called to our attention, and we see no reason to doubt its validity. This being so, we are bound to uphold it as a valid enactment of the state Legislature.

The writ is discharged and the petitioner remanded to custody.

We concur: SHAW, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.

18 Cal.App. 675

CONE v. KEIL et al. (Civ. 930.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 16, 1912.)

1. BROKERS (§ 48*)—RIGHT TO COMMISSIONS—PERFORMANCE OF ENGAGEMENT.

A broker is entitled to commissions for effecting a sale only when the purchaser, as the result of the broker's efforts, was induced to buy the property, or a prospective purchaser found was ready, able, and willing to buy on the terms and at the price specified by the owner, the broker being required to show that he procured from the prospective purchaser a valid contract, binding him to purchase the property at the price and on the terms specified, which could be enforced if his title to the property be perfect, or, in the absence thereof, by proof that the broker brought the owner and prospective purchaser together with the object in view of effecting a sale at the price and on the terms proposed by the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 65; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. BROKERS (§ 52*)—RIGHT TO COMMISSIONS—PERFORMANCE OF ENGAGEMENT.

Merely putting a prospective purchaser on the track of property which is on the market will not suffice to entitle a broker to commissions contracted for, even though he opens negotiations for the sale, if he finally fails in his efforts, without fault or interference of the owner, to induce the prospective purchaser to buy, or make an offer to purchase, though the owner may subsequently, either personally or through other brokers, sell the property to the same individual at the price and on the terms for which it was originally offered for sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 73; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

3. BROKERS (§ 57*)—SALE OF PROPERTY—COMPLIANCE WITH ENGAGEMENT—RIGHT TO COMMISSIONS.

Where a broker was employed to sell two tracts of land containing 13.98 acres for $45,000 cash, or for such other price and on such other terms as the owners might thereafter agree in writing for a commission of 5 per cent., the fact that he procured a purchaser who purchased part of the tract on terms acceptable to the owners did not show a performance of his contract which was indivisible, and was therefore insufficient to entitle him to commissions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 66, 67, 72; Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

4. BROKERS (§ 82*)—COMPENSATION—ISSUES.

Where a broker's suit for commissions was founded exclusively on the theory that plaintiff was the sole procuring cause of a sale to H. of a part of the tract plaintiff was employed to sell, and it was neither alleged in the complaint nor claimed at the trial that plaintiff was instrumental in making a subsequent sale to H. of any other lands belonging to defendants, H. having testified that he had purchased from defendants subsequent to the sale of the first tract another piece or parcel of the larger tract of land which plaintiff was originally authorized to sell, plaintiff was not entitled on redirect examination to prove by him how much more of the entire tract he had purchased than the original portion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 101-103; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 900*)—RECORD—SHOWING ERROR—PRESUMPTIONS.

The record on appeal must disclose affirmative error in order to justify a reversal, and, in the absence of such a showing, the presumption prevails that the rulings of the trial court were correct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3667-3669; Dec. Dig. § 900.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by W. H. Cone against Serena T. Keil and another. Judgment for defendants; and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial he appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Cobb, for appellant. Goodfellow, Eells & Orrick, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. This action was instituted to recover the sum of $1,375, alleged to be due as a broker's commission in negotiating a sale of certain real estate which belonged to the defendants. Plaintiff has appealed from a judgment of nonsuit and an order denying a new trial. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and the record before us consists of the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions which purports to set out the evidence had in the lower court.

In substance the undisputed facts of the case, as they appear from the evidence offered upon behalf of the plaintiff, are these: On November 15, 1907, the defendants, by an instrument in writing, authorized one Edgar C. Humphrey, plaintiff's assignor, to offer for sale a tract of land in Menlo Park, San Mateo county, containing 13.98 acres, and known as "Petit Forest." This tract of land consisted of two smaller parcels, designated in the authority sued upon as subdivision A, containing 6.25 acres, and subdivision B, containing 7.73 acres. By the terms of the authorization Humphrey was empowered to offer the entire tract for sale for the sum of $45,000 cash, or for such other price and upon such other terms as the defendants might thereafter agree to in writing. Humphrey's compensation in the event of his procuring a purchaser was to be a commission of 5 per cent. upon the amount of the purchase price. Exclusive authority to offer the property for sale was not conferred upon Humphrey, and the defendants never agreed, in writing or otherwise, upon any different price or terms at which the property might be offered for sale.

In October, 1908, almost a year after the authorization was given, Mr. Albert G. C. Hahn went to Menlo Park for the purpose of looking at places which were for rent. Humphrey met him at the station, and took him at once to the defendants' property, and offered the entire tract for sale for the sum of $50,000. Hahn declined to entertain the offer for the reason, as he said, that he "was seeking to rent a house, not to purchase one." Later on, in the spring of 1909, Humphrey endeavored to and did interest Hahn in the tract comprising 7.73 acres, designated in the authorization as subdivision B, and offered it for sale for the sum of $35,000. Hahn liked this particular piece of property, and felt inclined to buy it, but not at the price fixed by Humphrey. After looking at the property several times in company with Humphrey, Hahn concluded that the price asked was prohibitive, and so told Humphrey. Thereupon Hahn dropped the matter, and had no further dealings with Humphrey; but shortly thereafter an agent of the real estate firm of Baldwin & Howell approached Hahn, and offered him the identical tract of 7.73 acres for the sum of $30,000. This offer was considered by Hahn, and the property was sold to him for $27,500, but, before the negotiations for the sale were commenced, Hahn met Humphrey, and told him of the offer made by Baldwin & Howell, whereupon Humphrey requested that Hahn purchase the property at the price of $30,000 through him. Hahn declined to have any further dealings in the matter through Humphrey; and told him that, inasmuch as the firm of Baldwin & Howell had offered the property for sale for $5,000 less, the purchase would be made through them. In reply Humphrey said: "I have nothing further to say. All that I can do is to submit the bid that you offer. If you wish to make an offer for the property I will be glad to submit it for you." This ended all negotiations for the sale of the property between Hahn and Humphrey. Hahn subsequently made an offer in writing, through Baldwin & Howell, for the purchase of the property, which was accompanied by a deposit of $275.

It is conceded that Hahn became interested in the property in the first instance solely through the efforts of Humphrey, and that, when the other brokers appeared in the transaction, Hahn, as the result of Humphrey's efforts, was fully informed concerning the property. Either on the day or the day after Hahn had made an offer for the property through Baldwin & Howell, Humphrey informed the defendants that he had been endeavoring to induce Hahn to buy the property. Hahn and the defendants, however, were never introduced, and Hahn did not meet or communicate directly or indirectly with either of the defendants prior to the time that the offer to purchase was made through Baldwin & Howell. It is an admitted fact in the case that Hahn never made through Humphrey, in writing or otherwise, an offer to purchase the property in question either as a whole or in part, and Hahn's testimony that he flatly refused to make an offer for the property through Humphrey stands uncontradicted.

Excepting minor details, the foregoing statement constitutes a fair résumé of the facts of the transaction upon which plaintiff relies for a recovery of the commission sued for.

The defendants' motion for a nonsuit was based upon the grounds (1) that the evidence failed to show that Humphrey ever procured a purchaser for the entire tract for the sum of $45,000; and (2) that the evidence shows that Humphrey was not the proximate and efficient cause of procuring and securing Hahn as a purchaser of the smaller tract of land.

We are of the opinion that the motion for a nonsuit was properly granted upon both of the grounds stated.

[1] A broker is entitled to his commission for effecting a sale of real or personal property only when it affirmatively appears that the purchaser, as the result of the broker's efforts, was induced to buy the property, or that a prospective purchaser was ready, able, and willing to buy upon the terms and at the price specified by the owner. In other words, the obligation of the broker under his contract to procure a purchaser is to bring about a meeting of minds between the owner and a prospective purchaser for a sale of the property at the price and upon the terms at which the property is offered for sale. Before the broker's right to a commission can accrue, he must first show that he found and secured a purchaser ready, willing, and able to buy the property offered for sale upon the terms and at the price fixed by the owner. Such a showing can be made only by proof of the fact that the broker procured from the prospective purchaser a valid contract, binding him to purchase the property at the price and upon the terms specified, which could be enforced by the owner if his title to the property be perfect, or, in the absence of such a contract, by proof that the broker brought the owner and prospective purchaser together with the object in view of effecting and securing a contract of sale at the price and upon the terms proposed by the owner. Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349, 33 Pac. 1105; Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 514, 39 Pac. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 87; Brown v. Mason, 155 Cal. 158, 99 Pac. 867, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 328.

[2] Merely putting a prospective purchaser on the track of property which is on the market will not suffice to entitle the broker to the commission contracted for, and, even though a broker opens negotiations for the sale of the property, he will not be entitled to a commission if he finally fails in his efforts, without fault or interference of the owner, to induce a prospective purchaser to buy or make an offer to buy, notwithstanding that the owner may subsequently, either personally or through the instrumentality of other brokers, sell the same property to the same individual at the price and upon the terms for which the property was originally offered for sale. Markus v. Kenneally, 19 Misc. Rep. 517, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1056; Willard v. Ferguson, 125 App. Div. 868, 110 N. Y. Supp. 909. Although in the present case Humphrey was the first person to arouse Hahn's interest in the property, nevertheless he failed ultimately in his efforts to induce Hahn to buy or offer to buy, and therefore it cannot be said that Humphrey's efforts were the procuring cause of the sale subsequently made to Hahn. As was said in Sibbald v. Iron Co., 83 N. Y. 378, 38 Am. Rep. 441: "A broker may have created impressions which under later and more favorable circumstances naturally lead to and materially assist in the consummation of a sale. He may have planted the very seeds from which others reap the harvest. But all that gives him no claim. It was part of his risk that failing himself, not successful in fulfilling his obligations, others might be left to some extent to avail themselves of the fruits of his labors." At no time did Humphrey obtain from Hahn a valid or any contract to purchase the property in question. Humphrey did not succeed even in procuring an offer for the property from Hahn, and at no time did Humphrey bring or attempt to bring the owners and Hahn together, so that the owners, if they had desired, might have negotiated a sale. Moreover, Hahn testified positively and without contradiction that prior to making an offer for the property through Baldwin & Howell he had absolutely refused to deal with Humphrey or make an offer through him. In short, it is a fair inference from the evidence offered in support of plaintiff's case that in all probability the sale never would have been made without the intervention and subsequent efforts of Baldwin & Howell.

[3] Aside from these considerations, the plaintiff's complaint sets out the written contract of the defendants authorizing a sale of the entire tract, and alleges that in accordance with the terms thereof, and while the same was in full force and effect, Humphrey procured Hahn as a purchaser for subdivision B, containing 7.73 acres of the property described in said contract. Plaintiff's complaint does not allege, and his evidence does not show, any other employment of Humphrey with relation to a sale of defendants' property. No other agreement is pleaded, and there is no evidence of any agreement to compensate Humphrey for any service which he might render to the defendants other than that contained in the original written authorization, by which he was employed and authorized to sell the defendants' property as a whole. Not having been otherwise specially authorized Humphrey's agency was limited to the particular purpose of his original employment, and his compensation depended upon his accomplishment of that purpose in accordance with the terms of his contract. It was not pleaded by the plaintiff that the original authorization was ever modified either expressly or by implication, and therefore it is apparent that the plaintiff's cause of action, if any he has, must rest upon proof of compliance with the terms of his actual contract; that, as we read and understand it, required Humphrey to procure a purchaser for the entire tract before he would be entitled to the stipulated commission. Clearly the contract in question did not authorize Humphrey to offer for sale separately either subdivision of the entire tract nor contemplate that the defendants could be required to pay a commission for the procurement of a purchaser for anything less than the entire tract.

This being so the contract was indivisible; and, before the plaintiff will be permitted to recover thereon, he must plead and prove the performance of the entire contract. For this reason, if for no other, a nonsuit was properly granted. Wittie v. Taylor, 110 Cal. 225, 42 Pac. 807; Carpenter et al. v. Atlas Imp. Co., 123 App. Div. 706, 108 N. Y. Supp. 547; 3 Devlin on Real Est. § 1536. In support of the appeal from the order denying a new trial plaintiff assigns as error two of the trial court's rulings upon questions of evidence, but we do not think the record shows that the trial court erred in either instance.

[4] The first ruling complained of arose out of the cross-examination of Hahn, the purchaser and a witness for the plaintiff, who testified that he had purchased from the defendants subsequently to the sale of the 7.73-acre tract another piece or parcel of the larger tract of land which Humphrey was originally authorized to sell. Upon re-direct examination, counsel for plaintiff endeavored to show how much more of the entire tract Hahn had purchased in addition to the 7.73-acre tract. This was objected to by counsel for the defendant upon the ground that it was immaterial and not within the issues raised by the pleadings in the case.

The objection we think was well taken and rightfully sustained. If the plaintiff had pleaded a full performance of Humphrey's contract with the defendants, and had relied upon a sale of the entire tract for a recovery of the commission claimed to be due, it would have been material and relevant for the plaintiff to show, if he could, that as the result of his efforts Hahn had bought not only subdivision B, but all of subdivision A as well. Plaintiff's cause of action, however, was founded exclusively upon the theory that Humphrey was the sole procuring cause of the sale to Hahn of the 7.73-acre tract, and it was not alleged in plaintiff's complaint nor claimed at the trial that Humphrey was instrumental in making a subsequent sale to Hahn of any other lands belonging to defendants. In brief, the plaintiff's cause of action was based solely upon an assigned claim for the commission alleged to be due and owing to Humphrey for the sale of subdivision B, and therefore it was not material to know under the issues raised by the pleadings whether or not Hahn had subsequently purchased from defendants another portion of the entire tract. The fact that upon cross-examination Hahn had testified without objection to an immaterial matter did not entitle the plaintiff in the face of defendants' objection to examine further into the details of a transaction which was wholly foreign to the issues.

With reference to the second assignment of error, it will suffice to say that it does not appear from the record before us that the trial court erred in sustaining an objection to a question put to the defendant Hugo D. Keil, whereby the plaintiff attempted to show that Keil represented his wife in the sale of property which was referred to in a certain letter written by him. It does not appear to whom the letter was written, nor to what property it referred; and, as the letter was not made part of the record upon appeal, we are unable to determine whether or not the court erred in its ruling.

[5] Error must be affirmatively shown, and, in the absence of such a showing, the presumption prevails that the ruling of the trial court was correct. Marshall v. Hancock, 80 Cal. 82, 22 Pac. 61; Barrell v. Lake View Land Co., 122 Cal. 133, 54 Pac. 594.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

18 Cal. App. 745

CHURCH v. COLLINS. (Civ. 921.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 24, 1912.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 116*)—REAL ESTATE BROKERS—AUTHORITY—CONTRACT TO CONVEY.

Under the express terms of Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5, and section 2309, and under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1971, 1973, a broker is without power to contract to sell land, unless so authorized by his principal in writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 251-260; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

2. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 116*)—REAL ESTATE—AUTHORITY—CONTRACT TO CONVEY.

Under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5, and section 2309, and under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1971, 1973, which require an agreement authorizing a broker to sell land to be in writing, the language conferring such authority should be certain, and a contract whereby real estate brokers were appointed "to act as agents for the sale" of property on specified terms, reserving to the principal the right to sell the property himself, was insufficient to show authority in the firm to contract to convey.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 251-260; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Action by Robert A. Church against John Collins. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. G. Scott, for appellant. Jos. P. Berry and H. W. A. Weske, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for the breach of an alleged agreement for the sale of certain real property.

A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and this appeal is by the plaintiff from the judgment entered after and upon the order sustaining the demurrer.

It appears that on January 17, 1911, the defendant and the firm of Lyman & Briggs, real estate brokers at Sebastopol, in Sonoma county, entered into a written agreement by the terms of which the former constituted the latter as his agents for the sale of the property described in said agreement. Acting under what they conceived to be authority so to do as conferred upon them by said agreement, Lyman & Briggs on the 9th day of May, 1911, for the defendant, entered into a written contract with the plaintiff for the sale of said property to the latter, and the main question arising upon said transactions and presented here is whether said real estate brokers were authorized or empowered by their agreement with the defendant to make such or any contract, for the latter, for the sale of said property.

Although the defendant addresses some criticism to the complaint generally, his principal contention seems to be that his agreement with Lyman & Briggs merely conferred upon them the right, exercisable for a limited period and for specified compensation, to secure for him a purchaser of said property ready, willing, and able to buy the property on the terms embodied in said agreement, and, having obtained such a purchaser, their authority as thus established or conferred was completely exhausted. Upon the construction of the agreement between the defendant and the real estate brokers, it is manifest the decision of this question must depend.

The parts of the agreement between the defendant and the real estate brokers important or necessary to the consideration of the question as to the extent of the authority thereby vested in the latter read as follows: "In consideration of their efforts to sell the within described property, I hereby appoint Lyman & Briggs, of Sebastopol, California, to act as agents for the sale of said property for the sum of $6,000.00, and I agree not to offer the same for a less price before the expiration of this contract without the consent of said parties. * * * It is further agreed that any deposit which may be paid on the purchase price of said property shall be paid to Lyman & Briggs, and in the event of forfeiture by the purchaser one half of said deposit shall be paid to me, and the remaining one half shall be retained by said agents in consideration of their services. This agreement shall be binding on me for a period of 6 (six) months from the date hereof and thereafter until canceled by a written notice of at least ten days. If sale is made within ninety days after the legal expiration of this contract, by or through me, to any one to whom said property has been submitted by said agents during the term of this agreement, I agree to pay said agents a commission of 2 per cent. on sale price. I reserve the right to sell said property myself, or to sell said property through the agency of any one else, but I hereby agree that in case such sale be made by myself, or through any other agency, in consideration of their services to pay said Lyman & Briggs a commission of two (2) per cent. on sale price." The contract of sale entered into between the brokers and the plaintiff contained, substantially, the terms upon which the defendant authorized the agents to sell the property. The only difference between the two as to the terms or conditions is purely technical as distinguished from substantial, but under our conception of the transactions it is not necessary in any event to notice the alleged variance as to the conditions of the sale between the two instruments. At the time, however, of the execution of said contract of sale, the plaintiff deposited with Lyman & Briggs, as "earnest" money, or as a payment on the price at which the property was to be sold to him in the event of the consummation of the sale, the sum of $230. The agreement between the defendant and the real estate brokers and the contract of sale above referred to were annexed to and made a part of the complaint, as was also a letter, dated June 7, 1911, addressed by the plaintiff to the defendant, tendering a payment of $3,000 in coin to the latter, offering to execute a mortgage for the remainder of the purchase price, and demanding from the defendant a conveyance of the property "free and clear from all liens and incumbrances." We are of opinion that the agreement between the defendant and the real estate brokers conferred no authority upon the latter to execute a contract for the sale of the property involved here to the plaintiff or to any other party, and that, therefore, the court properly sustained the demurrer to the complaint. An agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to sell real estate for compensation or a commission must be committed to writing (section 1624, subd. 5, Civ. Code; sections 1971 and 1973, Code Civ. Proc.), and "an authority to enter into a contract required by law to be in writing can only be given by an instrument in writing" (section 2309, Civ. Code).

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] The result of the foregoing provisions of our law is that an agent is without power to execute an agreement for the sale of real estate, unless he is authorized by the principal, in writing, to execute such agreement for and in the latter's behalf.

[2] The rule deduced from the authorities with regard to the power or right of agents to execute contracts of sale of real property for the owners thereof is and ought to be that, if such authority is intended to be conferred, the language used in conferring it should be so clear, distinct, and certain in its meaning to that end as to leave no room for doubting that such is its purpose. "The ordinary authority of a real estate agent deputed to sell real estate," says the Supreme Court in Stenler v. Bass, 153 Cal. 791, 795, 96 Pac. 809, "is simply to find a purchaser, and he has no power to bind his principal by a contract of sale unless it appears that it was intended to confer such additional authority." And it has often been held that the construction put upon the employment of brokers "to sell" or to "close a bargain" concerning real estate conferred no more than a mere authority upon the broker to find for the principal or owner of the property a purchaser at the price specified. Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 241, 244, 6

Am. Rep. 617; Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 213, 219. Giving some of the reasons why the intention to confer authority upon a broker to sell the real estate of another should be manifested by the use of clear and distinct language, the court, in Duffy v. Hobson, supra, says: "A sale of real estate involves the adjustment of many matters in addition to fixing the price at which the property is to be sold. * * * The vendor may be unwilling to deal with a particular proposed purchaser on any terms. He may consider him pecuniarily unable to comply with the contract even if the title prove satisfactory, and he may decline to bind himself to convey to such purchaser at the end of the time necessary to examine the title, because he might thereby in the meantime have an opportunity to sell to some other person who might desire to purchase, and in whose good faith and ability to pay he reposed entire confidence. All these considerations might, and usually do, arise in the mind of the vendor."

The only covenant or provision contained in the agreement between the defendant and Lyman & Briggs which could by any possibility be made to bear the construction that the former intended by said agreement to clothe the latter with power to enter into a contract for the sale of said property is that by which the brokers were in effect authorized to receive a deposit from a proposed purchaser; but, when considered in connection with other parts of the agreement, that provision cannot reasonably be so construed or held to import an intention in the vendor to confer such authority upon the brokers. The agreement, it will be noted, merely constitutes Lyman & Briggs as the agents of the defendant "for the sale" of the property therein described, and makes other provisions usual in such agreements with brokers whose employment is limited to the securing of a purchaser, ready, willing, and able to purchase. For instance, it reserves to the owner the right "to sell said property"—that is, to find a purchaser—within the time within which the brokers are authorized "to sell" or find a purchaser, stipulating in such case, if the proposed buyer has not previously had the matter submitted to him by the brokers, to pay the latter, nevertheless, 2 per cent. on the purchase price. And the agreement contains a like provision as to compensation to the brokers in the event that the property is sold by the owner after the expiration of the time within which the brokers were authorized to procure a purchaser to a party to whom the proposition as to such sale has been previously submitted by said brokers.

In fine, the general tenor of the whole agreement is clearly demonstrative of an intention on the part of the owner to limit the authority of the brokers merely to the procurement of a purchaser, or, to state the proposition the other way, not to confer upon the brokers, the right or power to execute for him a contract of sale. Indeed, we can perceive no substantial distinction between the agreement here and the one involved in the case of Armstrong v. Lowe, 76 Cal. 616, 18 Pac. 758. There the agreement read as follows: "You are hereby authorized to sell my property, and receive deposit on same, situated * * * and described as follows: * * * for the sum of two hundred dollars per acre, cash. I hereby agree to pay you the sum of five per cent. for your services in case you effect a sale, or find a purchaser for the same, or will pay you two and a half per cent. of above commission should I sell the same myself, or through another agent. This authority to remain in full force for the term of three months, or until canceled by," signed by the owner. The court held that that agreement did not confer upon the real estate brokers with whom it was made the authority to execute a contract to convey, citing in support of its conclusion Duffy v. Jabson, supra.

The case here is radically different from the case of Bacon v. Davis, 9 Cal. App. 84, 98 Pac. 71. The agreement in that case expressly and specifically conferred upon the agent "the exclusive right to sell for me, in my name and receipt for deposit thereon" the land described in said agreement. After an exhaustive examination of the question whether the contract to convey executed by the agent was authorized by said agreement and binding on the principal, this court, referring to numerous authorities construing such agreements, held that the agent was vested by the agreement with plenary power to make the contract of sale, and that the contract was valid and binding on the owner of the property involved.

A comparison of the agreement in the case at bar with the one in the Bacon Case will readily disclose a radical distinction between the two. Here there is no such authority given the brokers as is necessarily implied from the language in the Bacon agreement, "to sell for me, in my name"—language that can import nothing short of an intention in the vendor to bestow upon his agent the right and the power to execute in his (the vendor's) name a contract to convey.

But there is no necessity for prolonging the discussion. It is very clear to our minds that the limit of the authority the defendant intended to confer upon Lyman & Briggs was to procure for him a purchaser of the property ready, willing, and able to buy the same, and that consequently any act on their part relative to said property beyond such authority was a nullity, so far as any effect it was designed to have on the defendant was concerned.

The view thus taken of the transactions eventuating in this action renders it unnecessary to notice other less important points urged against the validity of the alleged contract of sale and the sufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

✓18 Cal. App. 715)

BIGELOW v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF SONOMA COUNTY et al. (Civ. 977.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 19, 1912.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 34*)—LOCAL OPTION—SUBMISSION TO VOTE—"GENERAL ELECTION."

Local Option Law (St. 1911, p. 601) § 6, provides that if a petition for an election is certified within six months, and not less than 40 days before the holding of the next general state or general municipal election, the question shall be submitted at said "general election" otherwise at a special election held within a certain time, and Primary Election Law (St. 1911, p. 769), as amended by St. 1911, Ex. Sess. p. 66, designates May 14, 1912, as the day on which the electors qualified to vote thereat shall select delegates to the national convention, and section 1, subd. 1, thereof, defines "primary election" as any and every primary nominating primary election provided for by this act, and subdivision 4 defines "election" as the general, or city, or city and county election as distinguished from a "primary election," and subdivision 5 defines "November election" as the presidential election. Held, that to be general, in the sense implied by the Legislature, the election must be one where every qualified voter of the state or district or division of the state where required by law to be held has the right to vote for whomsoever he pleased, and that the presidential primary election was not a "general election" within the meaning of that term as used in the local option law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 42; Dec. Dig. § 34.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3062-3063; vol. 8, p. 7669.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thos. C. Denny, Judge.

Mandamus by Guy J. K. Bigelow against the Board of Supervisors of Sonoma County and others. Writ issued, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Clarence F. Lea, G. W. Hoyle, and J. W. Ford, for appellants. Ross Campbell and R. L. Thompson, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. It appears from the complaint: That a petition was filed with defendant board, signed by the requisite number of qualified electors of the First Supervisorial district of Sonoma county, praying that the said board call an election at which should be submitted to the electors of said district the following proposition: "Shall the sale of alcoholic liquors be licensed in this supervisorial district outside of incorporated cities and towns?" That thereafter, to wit, on March 7, 1912, the county clerk and ex officio clerk of said board duly certified said petition as sufficient and presented the same to the said board as required by law. That in violation of law the said board did, on March 8, 1912, at a regular session thereof, "call a pretended election for May 14, 1912, and at a time more than sixty days from the time said petition was certified as aforesaid, and upon which said last named date there is no general election to be held in said district, county or state."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The cause came on to be heard on March 16, 1912, and the court ordered the said board "to meet forthwith in legal session and rescind the order of said board made on March 8, 1912, setting an election to determine the question whether the sale of alcoholic liquors shall be licensed in the territory described in the petition for May 14, 1912, and that they do forthwith make and enter an order of said board of supervisors setting a date for the holding of said election on a legal day not less than 30 days nor more than 60 days from the 7th day of March, 1912, and do and perform all necessary duties to call and hold a special election for the purposes aforesaid according to law."

Defendants appeal from this order and all parties have stipulated that, upon the decision of this court, remittitur issue forthwith.

The local option law (section 6, Statutes 1911, p. 601) provides that, if the petition for an election is certified within six months and not less than 40 days before the holding of "the next general state or general municipal election within the territory described, such question shall be submitted at said general election; otherwise a special election shall be held for such purpose within not less than thirty or more than sixty days after the petition has been certified." Pursuant to the primary election law, approved April 9, 1911 (Statutes 1911, p. 769, as amended December 24, 1911, Statutes 1911 [Extra Sessions], p. 66), May 14, 1912, has been designated as the day on which the electors qualified to vote thereat are authorized to select delegates "to the national convention to nominate candidates for President and Vice President of the United States."

The sole question, therefore, is this: Is the presidential primary election a "general election" within the meaning of those terms as used in the local option law?

The Honorable Thomas C. Denny, trial judge, filed a written opinion in the case, which, we think, satisfactorily supports the order. We quote, in part, as follows:

"Section 1 of the 'Direct Primary Law' provides that: 'The words and phrases in this act shall, unless such construction be inconsistent with the context, be construed as follows: (1) The words "primary election," any and every primary nominating primary election provided for by this act. (2) The words "September primary election," the primary election held in September to nominate candidates to be voted for at the ensuing November election. (3) The words "May presidential primary election," any such primary election, held in May of a bissextile or leap year, as shall provide for the expression of preference in the several political parties for party candidates for president and vice-president of the United States and for the election of delegates to national party conventions. (4) The word "election," a general or city or county election as distinguished from a primary election. (5) The words "November election," the presidential election, the general state election, county, city or county election held in November.' It has been generally held that elections are either general or special, general elections being held at stated intervals upon specified dates, and special elections being those held at a time specified in the call for the election. But it seems to me that by the above-quoted section the Legislature has recognized a third election in this state, viz., a primary election. This distinction seems, also, to have been recognized by all of the courts of last resort, as in none of the cases in which the primary election is under discussion is it ever referred to as a 'general' or a 'special' election, but always as a 'primary' election. See State v. Nichols, 50 Wash. 508, 97 Pac. 728. It is true, as counsel for defendant states, that section 1 of the 'direct primary law' merely defines the use of certain words as used in that act. But it seems to me that the Legislature could not have intended that the words as defined therein should have a different meaning from that used in other acts. Thus, in subdivision 1 of section 1, they define the words 'primary election' as any and every primary election provided for by that act; in subdivision 4, that the word 'election' means a general election as distinguished from a primary election; subdivision 5, that the words 'November election' means, among other things, the general state election. Can it be that we must take from these definitions the meaning that, in primary acts, these words have a distinct and different meaning from that used in the local option act passed at the same session as the presidential primary act? That the words 'November election' in one act means the general state election and that the words 'the general state election' as used in the local option act can mean anything else than the November election? It seems to me that the question must answer itself. And the primary act differentiates and distinguishes a general election from a primary election in such a distinct way that there can be no mistake in the matter.

"Counsel for the defendants also insist that it must have been the intention of the Legislature that the presidential primary election should be a general election so far as the local option act is concerned, inasmuch as it is held generally throughout the state and it would get the voters out as a body. But is this position tenable? Would it not have the opposite effect? The primary act provides that only those may vote who have at the time of their registration designated the party with which they intend to affiliate. By this provision all those who at the time they register refuse to give their party affiliation and all those who register as independents are precluded from voting. It also provides that no political party that failed to poll at least 3 per cent. of the entire vote of the state at the last general election may be represented on the ballot.

"There can be no question but that these provisions would prevent a large percentage of the voters in this state from participating in this election, who in consequence would not attend the primary. While the local option act is a special election, and if held on the date of the presidential primary those who could not vote at the primary could vote on the local option matter, it is a probability that those who could not vote at the primary would be of the opinion that they could not vote on the local option question, and so would not attend. Thus the privileged class of voters, who alone would be entitled to vote at the primaries, would be the only ones who would vote on the local option question. The Legislature could not have had any such absurd condition of affairs in their minds when they passed the local option act.

"Chief Justice Beatty must have had in mind the fact that there is a distinction between a general election and a primary election when he said, in Schostag v. Cator, 151 Cal. 604 [91 Pac. 502]: 'It is therefore as reasonable to require the elector to range himself with some particular party for the purpose of the primary election, as it is to require registration of all electors who desire to vote at the general election. By one registration is secured the right to vote at an election open to all registered voters; by the other is secured the right to vote at an election open to those only who belong to a particular party.' Can it be possible that an election that is open only to a select coterie of voters instead of to 'all the registered electors' can be called a general election? Black, in defining 'general,' says: 'Open or available to all; opposed to select; universal, not particularized; as opposed to special, obtaining commonly, or recognized universally; as opposed to particular; universal or unbounded; as opposed to limited.' Here we have an election open only to a select, special, particular and limited number of voters, as opposed to a general election which is open to all.

"Is this presidential primary act an election at all in the sense of a general election; and, if it is, what officers are elected, and to what office? In a general election it must be true that all of the voters can vote for any one whom they desire for any office, and that all of the candidates on all of the tickets would be under one ballot. That is what makes it general as opposed to special. But in this presidential primary we find but a part of the voters able to vote at all, and each voters ticketed and confined to the ballot of one party. * * *

"For the foregoing reasons, I am entirely satisfied that the presidential primary election to be held on May 14, 1912, is not a general election as contemplated by section 6 of the local option act, and that the writ of mandate should issue as prayed for by plaintiff."

The direct primary law, by its designation, by the definitions found in section 1, as well as by its distinguishing characteristics, would seem to be placed out of the category of general elections. The only election denominated a general election by law is the election occurring biennially the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November. Section 1041, Pol. Code. Special elections are defined by section 1043 of the same Code. Kenfield v. Irwin, 52 Cal. 164; People v. Col, 132 Cal. 334, 64 Pac. 477. We have no statutory definition of a primary election except as found in subdivision 1 of section 1 of the act, and there we have the words "primary election" merely construed as referring to "any and every primary nominating election provided for by this act." Subdivision 5 of section 1 defines the words "political party" to be an organization "of electors which at the last general election before the holding of the primary election, polled at least three per cent. of the entire vote of the state or of the county, city and county, district, or other political division for which nominations are to be made." Here we have, as well as in subdivision 3, the general election distinguished from the primary election. It is too much to say that a primary election "is no election at all," as some of the cases hold and as contended by respondent. Like any other election, it is the act of choosing a person for the performance of some office or duty and may be even by show of hands. In a sense, too, it is general, for it relates to the whole state geographically. But in its operation it is far from embracing the entire electorate.

In the sense of the elections held in November to choose officers to serve the state, it falls short of measuring up to what is commonly understood by a general election, or what we think our law regards as a general election. In Kenfield v. Irwin, supra, it was pointed out that the time for holding general elections is fixed by the statute, and hence no proclamation is necessary, but that the time at which special elections were to be held must be previously designated, without which being done the election would be void. It is urged that the primary election law requires no proclamation of the election, and fixes the time at which primary elections are to be held, and hence gives to them the character of a general election. The "Presidential Primary Act," so denominated, fixes the time for the first election on May 14, 1912, "and on the second Tuesday in May of every fourth year thereafter." Stats. 1911, Extra Sessions, p. 85. But we do not think that these elections must be held to be general elections because a time is fixed by law for holding them. That is an element entering into the true definition, but it is not in itself enough. To be general in the true sense, and in the sense employed by the Legislature, the election must be one where every qualified voter of the state or district or division of the state, where required by law to be held, shall have the right to cast his ballot for whomsoever he pleases. The general election law gives this right, but the primary election law not only places limitations upon its exercise, but withholds it altogether in some instances. The term "election" was held, in Wickersham v. Brittan, 93 Cal. 34, 28 Pac. 792, 29 Pac. 51, 15 L. R. A. 106, to carry "with it the idea of a choice, in which all who are affected with the choice participate," thereby distinguishing between an election and an appointment. If this be true, it must follow that a general election carries with it the idea of a choice in which all the electors who are affected participate. Here we have lacking this indispensable requisite of a general election. In fact, the May primaries do not make the selection of candidates, but they merely give an expression of preference of certain electors, by no means all of them, for their candidates for the presidency. Appellants cite numerous cases showing the distinction between general and special elections, but they do not aid in classifying primary elections which are of recent origin and designed to meet the demand for a reform method of nominating candidates for office. Appellants cite Marsden v. Herlocker, 48 Or. 93, 85 Pac. 329, 120 Am. St. Rep. 786, where it is said: "If by operation of law the election invariably occurs at stated intervals, without any super-inducing cause, except the efflux of time, the election is general." The court was discussing the distinction between general and special elections with reference to the necessity for giving notice of the election by proclamation or otherwise. It said: "The reason for this rule [i. e., dispensing with notice where the time for holding the election is fixed by law] rests upon the doctrine that suffrage is a valuable civil right, to the exercise of which each qualified person is entitled, and he must be given or charged with notice as to when, where, and for what purpose he is to vote." Then follows the statement quoted in appellants' brief. The Oregon act casts upon the county court the duty of ordering "an election to be held at the time mentioned in such petition." All qualified voters could vote at said election and its time being fixed by the county court the opinion spoke of the election as general, but appellants did not complete the paragraph in which, continuing, the court said: "In which case all qualified persons are presumed to have knowledge thereof, and hence the failure of any officer or person upon whom the duty devolves to give a prescribed notice does not invalidate the votes cast thereat." The case throws no light on the question here.

If we were to hold that the primary election law may respond to the numerous statutes where the terms "general election" or "next general election" are used, it would introduce great confusion in our laws, for it will be found that in many statutes the "general election" is mentioned as determining when some act is to be done or some event is to transpire. By the Political Code one definite time has been fixed as answering to these terms, and we think we are unwarranted in holding that the Legislature has established a new rule as to what constitutes a general election when referred to in those terms. The case of Socialist Party v. Uhl, 155 Cal. 776, 788, 103 Pac. 181, 186, is cited and reliance is placed upon the statement in the opinion: "It is obvious from its terms that the law which the Legislature was called upon to enact was a law applying to general elections." It certainly does apply to general elections as a sort of forerunner and preparatory step, but this does not imply, and the case did not require the court to decide whether or not, the primary election is a general election in the sense used in the local option law. Some force to the argument of counsel for appellants is claimed from expressions in the opinion in Spier v. Baker, 120 Cal. 370, 378, 52 Pac. 659, 663 (41 L. R. A. 196): "The Legislature, believing a sound public policy demanded such a course, has made these elections a state institution. By the whole tenor of the act they are placed upon the same plane of the state elections, and in the consideration of the law bearing upon them must be so recognized." The law was held to be unconstitutional because of its state wide application and its inherent violations of constitutional rights as the Constitution then stood. Since then the Constitution has been amended and primary elections are now sustained. But a primary law may "apply to general elections," as was said in the Spier Case and is now insisted as true, and yet not be a "general election" law as contemplated by the Legislature in so using the terms in the local option law.

Appellants have ably presented the argument in support of their contention, but its force, strong as it is, fails to shake our convictions.

The order is affirmed. Remittitur forthwith.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

18 Cal. App. 732

PEOPLE v. CALIFORNIA SAFE DEPOSIT & TRUST CO. et al. (Civ. 948.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 23, 1912.)

1. PLEADING (§ 214*)—DEMURRER—ADMISSIONS.

A demurrer admits the truth of the allegations of the pleading against which it is directed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 525-534; Dec. Dig. § 214.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 131*)—STOCK—ASSIGNMENT.

Under Civ. Code, § 324, providing that shares of stock in a corporation are personal property and may be transferred, one to whom the stock of an insolvent corporation was assigned, after it had been enjoined from carrying on the business, takes all the beneficial interest of the stock, and is entitled to have it entered in his name, though the former shareholders could not thereby avoid their liability under Const. art. 12, § 3, and Civ. Code, § 322, for debts and liabilities contracted while they were stockholders.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 490; Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 133*)—ACTIONS AGAINST—PARTIES.

In a proceeding against an insolvent corporation and its receiver to compel the entering of petitioner's name as a stockholder, it is unnecessary to make the directors parties, for, being mere agents of the corporation, their acts are only the acts of the corporation, which was properly made a party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 513-520; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 560*)—STOCKHOLDERS—ENTERING OF NAME.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 568, providing that a receiver of the corporation has power to bring and defend actions, to take and keep possession of the property, to receive rents, collect debts, and generally to do such acts respecting the property as the court may authorize, the court may require a receiver, who has possession of the corporate books, the directors having absconded, to enter the name of an assignee of stock as a stockholder, of record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2253-2260, 2262; Dec. Dig. § 560.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Proceeding by the People against the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company in which Arthur Crane petitions for an order directing the corporation and Frank J. Symmes, as receiver, to enter his name as stockholder. From an order dismissing the petition, petitioner appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 160 Cal. 374, 117 Pac. 321.

Arthur Crane, in pro. per. J. V. De La-veaga and E. D. Los Magee, for respondents. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

HART, J. This is an appeal from an order denying and dismissing petitioner's application for an order permitting or instructing the defendant corporation or the petitioner or the receiver of said corporation to enter the petitioner's name "as a stockholder of record in the stock book of the defendant corporation." The facts as shown by the petition may be summarized as follows: That "the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company," a corporation, is "now in the course of liquidation and of judgment and decree" of the superior court in and for the city of San Francisco. On the 29th day of January, 1908, said court issued a "permanent injunction against the defendant corporation and the officers thereof, enjoining them from further carrying on the business for which the said corporation was organized," and at the same time appointed as receiver of said corporation one Edward J. Le Breton, who accepted said appointment, qualified as such receiver, and entered upon the discharge of his duties as such, and took possession of all the books, papers, records, and properties of said corporation. Le Breton continued to act as such receiver until the date of his death, which occurred on the 19th day of March, 1910. On the 24th day of March, 1910, said superior court, after due proceedings, appointed Frank J. Symmes as the successor of said Le Breton, and said Symmes has since then been, and is now, the receiver of said corporation. The petition alleges that, "on or about September 20, 1909, the board of directors of said the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company obtained permission of the said court to levy an assessment upon all of the capital stock of said corporation, on the representation and promise to the court that 'no one would buy in any of the stock which would be sold for the said assessment.'" It is alleged that, in pursuance of the permission so obtained, an assessment of $10 per share was, on the 20th day of December, 1909, levied by said corporation upon all the capital stock of said corporation; that the owners of said stock having defaulted in the payment of said assessment, an order was duly made by said corporation, on the 8th day of February, 1910, that the said stock of said corporation should be sold on March 10, 1910, to pay the assessment so made; that the assessment sale was duly advertised and regularly held at room No. 801, in the Kohl building, in said city and county of San Francisco, on said 10th day of March, 1910; that the petitioner attended said sale and bid the sum of $50.25 for five shares of said stock, said sum representing the amount of said assessment and costs; and that "said five shares were thereupon knocked down, struck off, sold, and delivered to the said plaintiff, the said plaintiff then and there paying the sum of $50.25 to the said corporation." It is further alleged that the respective owners of the several shares so purchased by the petitioner each consented to and authorized the sale of said shares to the petitioner, and each signed and executed an assignment thereof to petitioner, and that by reason thereof the latter became and is the assignee by purchase of said shares of stock. It is alleged, upon information and belief, that the petitioner is the only stockholder of the defendant corporation now in existence; that all the directors and officers of the defendant corporation have disqualified themselves from holding office as such and have abandoned such offices as directors and officers; that the petitioner is the only person in existence entitled to act for the said corporation other than the receiver of said corporation, appointed by said court as heretofore explained. The petitioner declares that, when he bid in and purchased said shares, he had no knowledge of the promise made to the court, at the time permission was thereby granted to levy the assessment referred to, that "no one would buy in any of the stock which would be sold for the said assessment." It is alleged "that said receiver at all times since his said appointment has refused, and still refuses, to allow said petitioner, or the defendant corporation, to enter petitioner's name as a stockholder in the said books, or as sole stockholder, or to himself enter said name as a stockholder, although many times requested so to do." A general and special demurrer was interposed to the petition, and, while there is no showing that the demurrer was directly passed upon, the order denying and dismissing the petition may be regarded as amounting to the same thing; that is, a ruling that the averments of the petition are not sufficient to entitle the petitioner to the relief prayed for.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] The effect of the demurrer is, of course, to admit the truth of the allegations of the petition.

The respondent contends, in support of the order appealed from, that there are two reasons which justified the trial court in denying the relief asked for by the petition, viz.: (1) That the appellant was and is not a legal stockholder of the corporation; and (2) that, assuming that he is a legal stockholder, he cannot compel the receiver to enter his name as such stockholder on the books of the corporation.

[2] The argument advanced in support of the first of the foregoing points is this: That the order authorizing or permitting the directors to levy an assessment on the stock of the corporation was made after the time within which an appeal might have been taken from the order granting the injunction enjoining the directors from further transacting or conducting any of the business of said corporation; that the judgment entered upon the order granting the injunction had therefore become permanent before the making of the order permitting the assessment of the stock by the directors; and that the court was consequently without jurisdiction to make the latter order, or, as counsel put the proposition, "the lower court had no power to modify or set aside this permanent injunction to permit the directors of the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company to levy an assessment." It is therefore contended that both the assessment and the sale were absolutely void, and that the petitioner thus legally acquired no stock in the corporation.

The contention with respect to the second point is that the receiver is without authority to enter the petitioner's name in the books of the corporation as a stockholder, as such act would be in excess of his powers as such receiver.

